As to defences see: s. 16, insanity; s. 17, compulsion by threats; s. 25, use of force in enforcement of law; s. 27, use of force to prevent commission of certain offences; ss. 34 to 37, self defence and defence of person under accused's protection; ss. 38 to 41, defence of property; s. 43, use of force by way of correction; s. 44, use of force by master of vessel.

As to notes respecting the intoxication and necessity defences see s. 8. These latter defences, especially intoxication are of limited application since most of the assault offences are general intent offences.

Section 273.1 defines consent for the sexual offences in ss. 271, 272 and 273 and, in particular, defines circumstances additional to those set out in s. 265(3) in which no consent is obtained. For the same group of offences, s. 273.2 sets out circumstances where belief in consent is not a defence. For notes concerning the defence of honest belief in consent, see the notes following s. 273.2.

As to mode of trial and punishment, see the cross-references under particular assault offence.

SYNOPSIS

This section describes what an assault is, when an assault is aggravated, and the extent to which consent can be used as a defence to a charge of assault. A person who directly or indirectly applies force intentionally to another person, or who attempts or threatens to do so, has committed an assault. If a person stops another person while openly wearing a weapon or an imitation weapon, he is also guilty of assault. All forms of assault, including sexual assault are covered by this section, but now see also s. 273.1. Consent may constitute a defence to a charge of assault but it cannot be invoked if the victim submits because force has been applied to, or is threatened to be applied to, the victim or another person. Furthermore, the defence of consent will not apply if a person has submitted as a result of fraud or the exercise of authority by the accused.

Section 265(4) requires that the jury in a case in which the defence of consent is raised, and which would be effective if accepted, be instructed by the judge to consider whether the accused had reasonable grounds for an honest belief that there was consent.

ANNOTATIONS

Elements of offence other than consent – Where the application of force is the result of carelessness, as in R. v. Starratt (1971), 5 C.C.C. (2d) 32, [1972] 1 O.R. 227 (C.A.) or through a reflex action as in R. v. Wolfe (1974), 20 C.C.C. (2d) 382 (Ont. C.A.), the essential element of intent is lacking and the accused must be acquitted.

An accused may commit an assault although he exerts no degree of strength or power when touching the victim: R. v. Burden (1981), 64 C.C.C. (2d) 68, 25 C.R. (3d) 283 (B.C.C.A.).

In R. v. Byrne, [1968] 3 C.C.C. 179, 3 C.R.N.S. 190 (B.C.C.A.), it was held that words alone unaccompanied by any gesture do not constitute the act of assault.

Whether or not there has been an assault as defined by para. (1)(b) depends on the facts of a particular case. Thus, where the accused school teacher, by acts and gestures, directed his pupils to perform various sexual acts upon him, the trier of fact could find that there were not mere invitations but threats to apply force, coupled with a present ability to effect that purpose and thus an assault, or, as here, a sexual assault: R. v. Cadden (1989), 48 C.C.C. (3d) 122, 70 C.R. (3d) 340 (B.C.C.A.).

An assault is committed when a person threatens to apply force and has the ability to do so: R. v. Horncastle (1972), 8 C.C.C. (2d) 253, 19 C.R.N.S. 362 (N.B.C.A.).

An assault is committed within the meaning of subsec. (1)(b) where the accused fires a gun at someone who was within range, even if the shot missed and the victim had no idea that he was being shot at: R. v. Melaragni (1992), 75 C.C.C. (3d) 546 (Ont. Ct. (Gen. Div.)).

Meaning of consent – To be effective the consent to the assault must be freely given with appreciation of all the risks and not merely submission to an apparently inevitable situation: R. v. Stanley (1977), 36 C.C.C. (2d) 216, [1977] 4 W.W.R. 578 (B.C.C.A.).

In R. v. Cey (1989), 48 C.C.C. (3d) 480, [1989] 5 W.W.R. 169, 75 Sask. R. 53 (C.A.), the court had to consider the scope of consent as a result of a charge of assault causing bodily harm, arising out of events in the course of an amateur hockey game. By agreeing to play the game, a hockey player consents to some forms of intentional bodily contact and to the risk of injury therefrom. Those forms of bodily contact sanctioned by the rules are the clearest examples but, as well, even those forms denounced by the rules, but falling within the accepted standards by which the game is played, may also come within the scope of the implied consent. While ordinarily, consent, being a state of mind, is a wholly subjective matter to be determined accordingly, when it comes to implied consent in the context of a team sport such as hockey, the scope of the implied consent must be determined by reference to objective criteria, at least in respect of those forms of conduct covered by the initial general consent. In determining the scope of the implied consent, the court will have regard to the conditions under which the game is played and the risk and degree of injury. Some forms of bodily contact carry with them such a high risk of injury and such a distinct probability of serious harm as to go beyond what, in fact, the players commonly consent to or what, in law, they are capable of consenting to.

In determining the scope of implied consent, the court must employ objective criteria and have regard to a number of factors, including the setting of the game, the extent of the force employed, the degree of risk of injury, the probabilities of serious harm and whether or not the rules of the game contemplate contact. Contact which evinces a deliberate purpose to inflict injury will generally be held to be outside of the immunity provided by implied consent in sporting events, but this does not mean that the prosecution must in all cases prove such deliberate purpose. Conversely, the fact that the rules do not allow for bodily contact is not itself determinative, especially where the ideal of non-contact is frequently breached in a spirited hockey game: R. v. Leclerc (1991), 67 C.C.C. (3d) 563, 7 C.R. (4th) 282, 4 O.R. (3d) 788 (C.A.).

In R. v. M. (M.L.), [1994] 2 S.C.R. 3n, 89 C.C.C. (3d) 96n, 30 C.R. (4th) 153, it was held that the court of appeal erred in holding that the 16-year-old complainant, who was the accused's step-daughter, had to have offered some minimal word or gesture of objection in order for there to be proof that she did not consent and erred in holding that lack of resistance could be equated with consent.

Consensual fights – The common law limits on consent imposed for policy reasons apply to assaults as defined by this section and, thus, consent is vitiated where adults intentionally apply force causing serious hurt or non-trivial bodily harm to each other in the course of a fist fight or brawl. These limits do not, however, affect the validity or effectiveness of freely given consent to participate in rough sporting activities, so long as the intentional application of force to which one consents is within the customary norms and rules of the game. This limitation on consent would also not apply to medical treatment or appropriate surgical intervention nor would it necessarily nullify consent between stuntmen engaged in the creation of a socially valuable cultural product. Finally, these limits do not apply to ordinary school yard scuffles between children who immaturely seek to resolve differences through fighting: R. v. Jobidon (1991), 66 C.C.C. (3d) 454, 7 C.R. (4th) 233, 49 O.A.C. 83 (S.C.C.) (7:0).

In view of the 16-year-old offender's intention to cause serious harm to the complainant who was of the same age, the nature of the force applied, and the serious consequences of those actions, the complainant's consent could not nullify the offender's culpability on a charge of assault causing bodily harm notwithstanding the young age of both the accused and the complainant. The offender's actions were more than socially useless, they were dangerous and intended to be dangerous. It was unnecessary to decide in this case whether the consent could operate as a defence where a young person engages in a consensual fight, not intending to cause serious harm: R. v. W. (G.) (1994), 90 C.C.C. (3d) 139, 30 C.R. (4th) 393, 18 O.R. (3d) 321 (C.A.).

However, where the 15-year-old offender did not intend to cause the victim more than trivial bodily harm, the consent was not vitiated notwithstanding that more serious harm may have been caused: R. v. B. (T.B.) (1994), 93 C.C.C. (3d) 191, 34 C.R. (4th) 241, 124 Nfld. & P.E.I.R. 328 (P.E.I.C.A.).

Similarly, where the 16-year-old offender did not intend to cause the victim harm and only minor bodily harm resulted, the offender's honest belief that the victim consented to the fight was a defence: R. v. M. (S.) (1995), 97 C.C.C. (3d) 281, 39 C.R. (4th) 60, 22 O.R. (3d) 605 (C.A.).

Mistaken belief in consent [subsec. (4)] – This subsection which is consistent with the common law applicable to all defences does not infringe either s. 11(d) or (f) of the Charter. The accused who seeks to rely upon the defence of mistaken belief only bears a tactical evidentiary burden: R. v. Osolin, [1993] 4 S.C.R. 595, 86 C.C.C. (3d) 481, 26 C.R. (4th) 1. [Also see s. 273.2.]

Consent obtained by threats or fear of use of force [subsec. (3)(b)] – The threats referred to in this paragraph are threats of the application of force. A threat made by the accused to expose certain pictures of the complainant was not the type of threat contemplated. As the conduct did not otherwise fall within this subsection, which is exhaustive of the circumstances vitiating consent, then no assault was committed: R. v. Guerrero (1988), 64 C.R. (3d) 65 (Ont. C.A.).

Consent obtained by fraud [subsec. (3)(c)] – The type of fraud referred to in this paragraph is limited to fraud as to the nature and quality of the act or to the identity of the offender and would not include the accused's false representation that he intended to pay the victim, a prostitute, for the sexual services: R. v. Petrozzi (1987), 35 C.C.C. (3d) 528, 58 C.R. (3d) 320, [1987] 5 W.W.R. 71 (B.C.C.A.).

Consent obtained by exercise of authority [subsec. (3)(d)] – Exercise of authority in this paragraph is not limited to relationships where there is a right to issue orders and to enforce obedience. Consent in the context of sexual relationships implies a reasonably informed choice, freely exercised. No such choice has been exercised where a person engages in sexual activity if, because of her mental state, she is incapable of understanding the sexual nature of the act or of realizing that she may choose to decline participation. Where there is a significant power imbalance between the accused and the complainant, this can have an effect on the apparent consent. It would be open to the court to find that there was no consent by reason of the overwhelming imbalance of power in the relationship between the accused psychiatrist and the particular patients: R. v. Saint-Laurent (1994), 90 C.C.C. (3d) 291, [1994] R.J.Q. 69 (C.A.), leave to appeal to S.C.C. refused 66 Q.A.C. 160n, 175 N.R. 240n.

ASSAULT.

266. Every one who commits an assault is guilty of

- (a) an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding five years; or
- (b) an offence punishable on summary conviction. R.S., c. C-34, s. 245; 1972, c. 13, s. 21; 1974-75-76, c. 93, s. 22; 1980-81-82-83, c. 125, s. 19.

CROSS-REFERENCES

Assault is defined in s. 265. For cases respecting consent, especially assaults in course of a “consensual fight”, see notes under s. 265. Where the prosecution elects to proceed by indictment on this offence, then the accused may elect his mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2). Where the prosecution elects to proceed by way of summary conviction, then the trial of this offence is conducted by a summary conviction court pursuant to Part XXVII. The punishment for the offence is then as set out in s. 787 and the limitation period is set out in s. 786(2). In either case, release pending trial is determined by s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by a peace officer under s. 496, 497 or by the officer in charge under s. 498.

A person, found guilty of the offence in this section, will be liable to the discretionary prohibition order prescribed by s. 100(2), for possession of firearms, ammunition and explosives.

Section 7(3) enacts special jurisdictional rules for commission of this offence outside Canada when the offence is in relation to an internationally protected person or property referred to in s. 431 (official premises, etc.). A threat to commit an offence under this section against an internationally protected person (defined in s. 2) is an offence under s. 424.

The accused's spouse is a competent and compellable witness at the instance of the Crown by virtue of s. 4(4) of the Canada Evidence Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. C-5 where the complainant is under the age of 14 years. Age is determined by reference to s. 30 of the Interpretation Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. I-21.

ANNOTATIONS

The conduct of the accused in pushing the complainant aside in order to leave his office, even if it amounted to an assault, was of such a trifling nature that the maxim de minimis non curat lex applied, and the accused was acquitted: R. v. Lepage (1989), 74 C.R. (3d) 368 (Sask. Q.B.).

The double jeopardy guarantee in s. 11(h) of the Charter of Rights is not a bar to the trial of an officer for an offence under this section notwithstanding his previous conviction for a major service offence under the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Act, R.S.C. 1970, c. R-9, as a result of that assault: R. v. Wigglesworth (1987), 37 C.C.C. (3d) 385, 60 C.R. (3d) 193, [1987] 2 S.C.R. 541 (6:1). Also see R. v. Shubley (1990), 52 C.C.C. (3d) 481, 65 D.L.R. (4th) 193, 71 O.R. (2d) 63n (S.C.C.) (3:2) noted under s. 267.

ASSAULT WITH A WEAPON OR CAUSING BODILY HARM.

267. Every one who, in committing an assault,

(a) carries, uses or threatens to use a weapon or an imitation thereof, or

(b) causes bodily harm to the complainant, is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding ten years or an offence punishable on summary conviction and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding eighteen months. 1980-81-82-83, c. 125, s. 19; 1994, c. 44, s. 17.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms "bodily harm", "complainant" and "weapon" are defined in s. 2. Assault is defined in s. 265.

For cases respecting consent, especially assaults in the course of a "consensual fight", see notes under s. 265.

This offence may be the basis for an application for an authorization to intercept private communications by reason of s. 183.

Section 7(3) enacts special jurisdictional rules for commission of this offence outside Canada when the offence is in relation to an internationally protected person or property referred to in s. 431 (official premises, etc.).

Where the Crown elects to proceed by indictment, the accused's spouse is a competent and compellable witness at the instance of the Crown by virtue of s. 4(4) of the Canada Evidence Act, where the complainant is under the age of 14 years. Age is determined by reference to s. 30 of the Interpretation Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. I-21.

The accused may elect the mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2). Release pending trial is determined by s. 515. A person, found guilty of the offence in this section, will be liable to the mandatory prohibition order in s. 100(1) for possession of firearms, ammunition and explosives where the Crown proceeds by indictment. Otherwise, the accused may be subject to an order under s. 100(2). A person found guilty of this offence may be subject to a dangerous offender application under Part XXIV.

Where the acts described in this section also involve a sexual assault, see s. 272. Using a firearm in commission of an indictable offence is an offence under s. 85. Unlawfully causing bodily harm is an offence under s. 269.

ANNOTATIONS

Assault with weapon [para. (a)] – The offence under subsec. (1)(a) of this section or s. 272(a) may be committed although the accused did not in fact have possession of the weapon at the time of the threat: R. v. Kelly (1983), 37 C.R. (3d) 190 (B.C.Co.Ct.).

Provided the instrument used by the accused in the course of the assault falls within the definition of weapon, then this offence is made out. It is not necessary to show that the weapon also caused injuries to the complainant: R. v. Richard (1992), 72 C.C.C. (3d) 349, 110 N.S.R. (2d) 345 (C.A.).

The term “weapon” is not limited to inanimate objects and can include a dog which the accused ordered to attack the complainant: R. v. McLeod (1993), 84 C.C.C. (3d) 336 (Y.T.C.A.).

Assault causing bodily harm – Reasonable foreseeability that harm will occur as a result of the assault is not a necessary element of this offence: R. v. Brooks, infra. Similarly, R. v. Swenson (1994), 91 C.C.C. (3d) 541, [1994] 9 W.W.R. 124, 74 W.A.C. 106 (Sask. C.A.).

Where the evidence fails to show whether the bruising caused by the accused’s acts was more than merely transient or trifling in nature the element of “bodily harm” as defined in subsec. (2) is not made out: R. v. Dupperon (1984), 16 C.C.C. (3d) 453, 43 C.R. (3d) 70, [1985] 2 W.W.R. 369 (Sask. C.A.).

In R. v. Dixon (1988), 42 C.C.C. (3d) 318, 64 C.R. (3d) 372, [1988] 5 W.W.R. 577 (Yukon Terr. C.A.), only Esson J.A. discussed at length the definition of bodily harm in subsec. (2) and considered that the words “transient or trifling in nature” import a very short period of time and an injury of a very minor degree which results in a very minor degree of distress.

As to the consent defence, also see cases noted under s. 265(1), supra.

Constitutional considerations – The offence created by para. (1)(b) does not violate the principles of fundamental justice as guaranteed by s. 7 of the Charter of Rights although there is no requirement of objective foreseeability that the consequences of the assault would be bodily harm: R. v. Brooks (1988), 41 C.C.C. (3d) 157, 64 C.R. (3d) 322 (B.C.C.A.).

Section 11(h) of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms (the double jeopardy provision) does not prevent the trial of an accused for an offence of assault causing bodily harm arising out of an assault by the accused, an inmate of a provincial correctional institution, on a fellow inmate, notwithstanding that the accused had previously been punished for the same conduct by the authorities within the institution. These prison disciplinary proceedings did not result in the accused being punished for an “offence” within the meaning of s. 11(h): R. v. Shubley (1990), 52 C.C.C. (3d) 481, 65 D.L.R. (4th) 193, 71 O.R. (2d) 63n (S.C.C.) (3:2).

AGGRAVATED ASSAULT / Punishment.

268. (1) Every one commits an aggravated assault who wounds, maims, disfigures or endangers the life of the complainant.

(2) Every one who commits an aggravated assault is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding fourteen years. 1980-81-82-83, c. 125, s. 19.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term “complainant” is defined in s. 2. Assault is defined in s. 265.

This offence may be the basis for an application for an authorization to intercept private communications by reason of s. 183.

Section 7(3) enacts special jurisdictional rules for commission of this offence outside Canada when the offence is in relation to an internationally protected person or property referred to in s. 431 (official premises, etc.).

The accused’s spouse is a competent and compellable witness at the instance of the Crown by virtue of s. 4(4) of the Canada Evidence Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. C-5 where the complainant is under the age of 14 years. Age is determined by reference to s. 30 of the Interpretation Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. I-21.

The accuseds may elect his mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2). Release pending trial is determined by s. 515. A person, found guilty of the offence in this section, will be liable to the mandatory prohibition order in s. 100(1) for possession of firearms, ammunition and explosives. A person found guilty of this offence may be subject to a dangerous offender application under Part XXIV.

Where the acts described in this section also involve a sexual assault, see s. 273.

ANNOTATIONS

The element of wounding requires a breaking of the skin but is satisfied by proof that the blows of the accused led to a perforation of the victim's ear-drum: R. v. Littlelet (1985), 17 C.C.C. (3d) 520 (Alta. C.A.).

Consent is no defence to this offence where the injuries were caused by use of a weapon such as a knife: R. v. Carriere (1987), 35 C.C.C. (3d) 276, 56 C.R. (3d) 257, 76 A.R. 151 (C.A.).

This section creates a form of assault offence and the offence of assault causing bodily harm in s. 267(b) is an included offence: R. v. Lucas (1987), 34 C.C.C. (3d) 28 (Que. C.A.).

The commission of common assault is a necessary ingredient of the offence of aggravated assault. Where, however, the Crown relies upon a charge of aggravated assault based upon endangerment to life, the Crown need not prove that the endangerment was caused by bodily harm. The Crown must simply prove that the life of the complainant was in fact endangered as a result of an assault. R. v. Melaragni (1992), 75 C.C.C. (3d) 546 (Ont. Ct. (Gen. Div.)).

The mens rea of this offence is objective foresight of bodily harm and does not require proof of an intent to maim, wound or disfigure: R. v. Godin, [1994] 2 S.C.R. 484, 89 C.C.C. (3d) 574n, 31 C.R. (4th) 33.

UNLAWFULLY CAUSING BODILY HARM.

- 269. Every one who unlawfully causes bodily harm to any person is guilty of
 (a) an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding ten years; or
 (b) an offence punishable on summary conviction and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding eighteen months.
1980-81-82-83, c. 125, s. 19; 1994, c. 44, s. 18.

CROSS-REFERENCES

"Bodily harm" is defined in s. 2.

This offence may be the basis for an application for an authorization to intercept private communications by reason of s. 183.

Section 7(3) enacts special jurisdictional rules for commission of this offence outside Canada when the offence is in relation to an internationally protected person or property referred to in s. 431 (official premises, etc.).

The accused's spouse is a competent and compellable witness at the instance of the Crown by virtue of s. 4(4) of the Canada Evidence Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. C-5 where the complainant is under the age of 14 years. Age is determined by reference to s. 30 of the Interpretation Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. I-21.

The accused may elect the mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2) where the Crown proceeds by indictment. Release pending trial is determined by s. 515. A person found guilty of the offence in this section will be liable to the mandatory prohibition order in s. 100(1) for possession of firearms, ammunition and explosives in such a case. Otherwise, the accused may be subject to an order under s. 100(2). A person found guilty of this offence may be subject to a dangerous offender application under Part XXIV.

The offence of assault causing bodily harm is found in s. 276(1)(b).

ANNOTATIONS

The term “unlawfully” in this section refers only to provincial or federal offences and would not include any underlying offence of absolute liability. As well, the unlawful act must be at least objectively dangerous, an act that a reasonable person would inevitably realize would subject another person to the risk of bodily harm. This bodily harm must be more than merely trivial or transitory in nature and will, in most cases, involve an act of violence done deliberately to another person. So interpreted, this section does not violate s. 7 of the Charter, even though neither an intention to cause bodily harm nor subjective foresight of bodily harm is an element of the offence: R. v. DeSousa (1992), 76 C.C.C. (3d) 124, [1992] 2 S.C.R. 944, 15 C.R. (4th) 66 (5:0).

An accused may be convicted of the offence under this section although the bodily harm was caused by an assault and a charge under s. 267(1)(b) could have been laid: R. v. Glowacki (1984), 16 C.C.C. (3d) 575 (B.C.C.A.).

Consent is no defence to the charge under this section. However the accused’s good faith belief as to the effectiveness of the treatment that he as a “healer” was providing the victim was evidence which could negative the mens rea of the offence. The fact that the treatment was not authorized by provincial legislation regulating treatment of illness did not fully determine the accused’s guilt for this offence even though the treatment caused bodily harm: R. v. Daigle (1987), 39 C.C.C. (3d) 542, [1987] R.J.Q. 2374 (C.A.).

Although this offence is one of general intent and thus voluntary intoxication is no defence, an attempt to unlawfully cause bodily harm is an offence of specific intent and intoxication is a defence: R. v. Colburne (1991), 66 C.C.C. (3d) 235, [1991] R.J.Q. 1199 (C.A.).

TORTURE / definitions / “official” / “torture” / no defence / evidence.

269.1. (1) Every official, or every person acting at the instigation of or with the consent or acquiescence of an official, who inflicts torture on any other person is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding fourteen years.

(2) For the purposes of this section, “official” means

- (a) a peace officer,
- (b) a public officer,
- (c) a member of the Canadian Forces, or
- (d) any person who may exercise powers, pursuant to a law in force in a foreign state, that would, in Canada, be exercised by a person referred to in paragraph (a), (b), or (c), whether the person exercises powers in Canada or outside Canada;

“torture” means any act or omission by which severe pain or suffering, whether physical or mental, is intentionally inflicted on a person

- (a) for a purpose including
  - (i) obtaining from the person or from a third person information or a statement,
  - (ii) punishing the person for an act that the person or a third person has committed or is suspected of having committed, and
  - (iii) intimidating or coercing the person or a third person, or
- (b) for any reason based on discrimination of any kind, but does not include any act or omission arising only from, inherent in or incidental to lawful sanctions.

(3) It is no defence to a charge under this section that the accused was ordered by a superior or a public authority to perform the act or omission that forms the subject-matter of the charge or that the act or omission is alleged to have been justified by exceptional circumstances, including a state of war, a threat of war, internal political instability or any other public emergency.

(4) In any proceedings over which Parliament has jurisdiction, any statement obtained as a result of the commission of an offence under this section is inadmissible in evidence, except as evidence that the statement was so obtained. R.S.C. 1985, c. 10 (3rd Supp.), s. 2.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms "peace officer", "public officer", "Canadian Forces" are defined in s. 2.

Section 7(3.7) enacts special jurisdictional rules where commission of this offence was outside Canada.

The accused may elect his mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2). Release pending trial is determined by s. 515. A person, found guilty of the offence in this section, will be liable to the mandatory prohibition order in s. 100(1) for possession of firearms, ammunition and explosives. A person found guilty of this offence may be subject to a dangerous offender application under Part XXIV.

In light of subsec. (3), the scope of the defence of obedience to de facto law in s. 15 is uncertain.

SYNOPSIS

This section makes it an offence for any person, either acting in an official capacity or acting at the instigation or acquiescence of an official, to inflict torture on another person. This is an indictable offence punishable by a maximum term of imprisonment of 14 years. The section contains complete definitions of the terms "official" and "torture". A person accused of an offence under this section may not escape criminal liability as a result of the fact that he was following the orders of a superior or a public authority, or that exceptional circumstances justified the action.

The contents of any statement obtained as a result of the commission of an offence under this section is inadmissible in evidence in any proceedings over which Parliament has jurisdiction.

ASSAULTING A PEACE OFFICER / Punishment.

270. (1) Every one commits an offence who

- (a) assaults a public officer or peace officer engaged in the execution of his duty or a person acting in aid of such an officer;
- (b) assaults a person with intent to resist or prevent the lawful arrest or detention of himself or another person; or
- (c) assaults a person
  - (i) who is engaged in the lawful execution of a process against lands or goods or in making a lawful distress or seizure, or
  - (ii) with intent to rescue anything taken under lawful process, distress or seizure.

(2) Every one who commits an offence under subsection (1) is guilty of

- (a) an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding five years; or
- (b) an offence punishable on summary conviction. R.S., c. C-34, s. 246; 1972, c. 13, s. 22; 1980-81-82-83, c. 125, s. 19.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms "peace officer" and "public officer" are defined in s. 2. Assault is defined in s. 265.

This offence may be the basis for a conviction for constructive murder under s. 230 and murder of a peace officer, acting in the course of his duties, is first degree murder under s. 231(4).

Where the prosecution elects to proceed by indictment on this offence, then the accused may elect his mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2). Where the prosecution elects to proceed by way of summary conviction, then the trial of this offence is conducted by a summary conviction court pursuant to Part XXVII.

The punishment for the offence is then as set out in s. 787 and the limitation period is set out in s. 786(2). In either case, release pending trial is determined by s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by a peace officer under s. 496, 497 or by the officer in charge under s. 498.

A person, found guilty of the offence in this section, will be liable to the discretionary prohibition order prescribed by s. 100(2) for possession of firearms, ammunition and explosives.

The related offence of obstructing a peace officer in the execution of his duty is set out in s. 129. Misconduct by a peace officer in executing process is an offence under s. 128. Section 29 imposes certain duties on anyone executing a process. The use of force in enforcement of the law is principally dealt with under s. 25 and see notes under that section. Sections 494 and 495 deal specifically with warrantless arrest powers. Additional duties are imposed under other provisions of the Code, especially in Parts I and II respecting breach of the peace and more serious disorders. Personating a peace officer is an offence under s. 130.

ANNOTATIONS

“Engaged in the execution of his duty” [subsec. (1)(a)] – Taking the facts as found by the trial Judge, regardless as to whether or not the police officer was a trespasser on private property when he was engaged in investigating a possible unlawful entry into the building, he was at the time in the execution of his duty and since he was not unlawfully interfering with either the liberty or the property of the respondent, who assaulted him while being questioned, an offence was proven under this subsection: R. v. Stenning, [1970] 3 C.C.C. 145, 11 C.R.N.S. 68 (S.C.C.).

In R. v. Bushman, [1968] 4 C.C.C. 17, 4 C.R.N.S. 13 (B.C.C.A.), it was held (2:1) that where the accused failed to give police officers investigating a hit and run offence reasonable opportunity to depart from his residence’s vestibule, it cannot be said that he properly revoked the implied leave and licence to attend at a convenient outer door to converse with him, and accordingly his striking an officer amounted to assaulting a policeman.

Validity of arrest – An officer is in execution of his duty where he is empowered to make a warrantless arrest by s. 495(1)(a), although the arrest is effected by entry on to private premises without the consent of the occupier, provided the officer has reasonable and probable grounds for the belief that the person sought is within the premises and proper announcement was made before entry: R. v. Landry (1986), 26 D.L.R. (4th) 368, 25 C.C.C. (3d) 1, [1986] 1 S.C.R. 145 (8:1).

In R. v. Cottam and Cottam, [1970] 1 C.C.C. 117, 7 C.R.N.S. 179 (B.C.C.A.), it was held that to determine whether the officers in apprehending the accused were engaged in the execution of their duty a jury should be instructed (a) as to circumstances in which the arrest would be lawful and (b), if the arrest was unlawful, whether the officers had thereby so far exceeded their duty and authority as to be no longer in the execution of their duty.

An arrest is a submission to restraint on one’s freedom and physical force is not an essential ingredient of that act. Where on the facts it was found that the accused was not told by the officer that he was under arrest or the reason for his arrest, when it was feasible to do so, he cannot be convicted of assaulting the officer under this section: R. v. Acker, [1970] 4 C.C.C. 269, 9 C.R.N.S. 371 (N.S.S.C. App. Div.).

A police officer arresting an accused pursuant to an outstanding warrant, but without possession of the warrant, fully discharges his duty under s. 29 by telling the person that the reason for the arrest is the existence of the warrant, he need not obtain the warrant, or ascertain its contents in order to tell the accused. An arrest in such circumstances is therefore lawful and a conviction under this subsection will lie where the accused assaults the officer: Gamracy v. The Queen (1973), 12 C.C.C. (2d) 209, [1974] S.C.R. 640, 22 C.R.N.S. 224 (3:2).

Note: Also see notes under s. 129 and s. 495.

SEXUAL ASSAULT / No defence.

271. (1) Every one who commits a sexual assault is guilty of

- (a) an indictable offence and is liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding ten years; or
- (b) an offence punishable on summary conviction and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding eighteen months. 1980-81-82-83, c. 125, s. 19; R.S.C. 1985, c. 19 (3rd Supp.), s. 10; 1994, c. 44, s. 19.

(2) [Repealed. R.S.C. 1985, c. 19 (3rd Supp.), s. 10.]

CROSS-REFERENCES

While assault is defined in s. 265 as, in effect, a touching without the consent of the complainant, s. 273.1 gives a specific definition of consent for the purpose of the offence in this section. Section 265(4) deals with the defence of mistaken belief in consent generally, but again, s. 273.2 deals specifically with that defence in the context of this offence. A spouse may be charged with this offence (s. 278). Section 17 limits the availability of the statutory defence of compulsion by threats.

Section 150.1(1) and (2) set out the circumstances in which consent is a defence where the complainant is under 14 years of age. Age is determined by s. 30 of the Interpretation Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. I-21. Section 658 provides a means of proving the age of a child. Section 150.1(4) provides a limited defence of mistake as to the age of the complainant. A person convicted of this offence, who is found to be loitering in or near a school ground playground, public park or bathing area, is liable to be convicted of the vagrancy offence under s. 179.

Where the prosecution elects to proceed by indictment on this offence, then the accused may elect his mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2). Where the prosecution elects to proceed by way of summary conviction then the trial of this offence is conducted by a summary conviction court pursuant to Part XXVII. The maximum punishment for the offence is then 18 months and the limitation period is set out in s. 786(2). In either case, release pending trial is determined by s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by a peace officer under ss. 496, 497 or by the officer in charge under s. 498.

A person found guilty of the offence in this section, may, depending on the circumstances, be liable to either the mandatory prohibition order in s. 100(1) or to the discretionary prohibition order prescribed by s. 100(2) for possession of firearms, ammunition and explosives. Where the accused is found guilty of this offence in respect of a person who is under 14 years of age then the court has the discretion to impose an order of prohibition under s. 161 prohibiting the accused from attending certain public areas and facilities or taking certain employment which will bring him into contact with persons under 14 years of age. This offence may be the basis for an application for an authorization to intercept private communications by reason of s. 183, or a video surveillance warrant under s. 487.01. This offence may be the basis for a conviction for first degree murder under s. 231(5) and also for a finding that the accused is a dangerous offender under Part XXIV. Section 7(3) enacts special jurisdictional rules for commission of this offence outside Canada, when the offence is in relation to an internationally protected person or property referred to in s. 431 (official premises, etc.).

Other sexual offences are found in ss. 151 to 160 and 170 to 174.

Special evidentiary and procedural provisions: Section 274 specifically provides that no corroboration is required for a conviction for this offence and the judge shall not instruct the jury that it is unsafe to find the accused guilty in the absence of corroboration. Section 275 provides that the rule relating to evidence of recent complaint is abrogated respecting this section. While assault is defined in s. 265 as, in effect, a touching without the consent of the complainant, s. 273.1 gives a specific definition of consent for the purpose of the offence in this section. Section 265(4) deals with the defence of mistaken belief in consent generally, but, again, s. 273.2 deals specifically with that defence in the context of this offence. Section 277 provides that evidence of sexual reputation is inadmissible in proceedings under this section. Section 486(1) and (2) provide that the judge may make an order excluding all or any members of the public where such order is in the interest of public morals, the maintenance of order or the proper administration of justice. Where the accused is charged with an offence under this section and the application by the accused or the prosecutor for the exclusion order is dismissed then the judge shall state the reason for not making the order. Section 486(2.1) provides that where an accused is charged with this offence and the complainant is, at the time of the trial or preliminary inquiry, under the age of 18 years, the judge may order that the complainant testify outside the court room or behind a screen, where such procedure is necessary to obtain a full and candid account of the acts complained of. Section 486(4) provides that, in proceedings under this section, the judge shall inform the complainant and any witness under 18 years of age that an order may be made under s. 486(3) directing that the identity of the complainant or any such witness not be disclosed in any publication or broadcast. Where the complainant, witness under the age of 18 years or the prosecutor (defined in s. 2) applies for the order then it is mandatory. Section 486(3) also gives the judge a discretion respecting non-publication orders in proceedings under this section in other circumstances, as where the witness may not be the complainant or under 18 years of age. Section 715.1 provides that in proceedings under this section a videotape made within a reasonable time after the alleged offence, in which the complainant describes the acts complained of, is admissible in evidence if the complainant was under the age of 18 years at the time of the alleged offence and adopts its contents while testifying. Under s. 4(2) of the Canada Evidence Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. C-5 the spouse of an accused charged with this offence is a compellable witness at the instance of the prosecution. Section 16 of the Canada Evidence Act deals with the competency of witnesses under the age of 14 years.

As to cases concerning admissibility of evidence in child abuse cases, see notes under s. 150.1.

ANNOTATIONS

Meaning of “sexual assault” – Sexual assault is an assault, within any one of the definitions of that concept in s. 265(1), which is committed in circumstances of a sexual nature such that the sexual integrity of the victim is violated. The test to be applied in determining whether the impugned conduct has the requisite sexual nature is an objective one: whether viewed in the light of all the circumstances the sexual or carnal context of the assault is visible to a reasonable observer. The part of the body touched, the nature of the contact, the situation in which it occurred, the words and gestures accompanying the act, and all other circumstances surrounding the conduct, including threats, which may or may not be accompanied by force, will be relevant. The intent or purpose of the person committing the act, to the extent that this may appear from the evidence, may also be a factor in considering whether the conduct is sexual. If the motive of the accused is sexual gratification, to the extent that this may appear from the evidence it may be a factor in determining whether the conduct is sexual. The existence of such a motive is, however, merely one of many factors to be considered: R. v. Chase (1987), 37 C.C.C. (3d) 97, 59 C.R. (3d) 193, [1987] 2 S.C.R. 293 (6:0).

The offence of sexual assault is one of general intent so that the issue is whether, notwithstanding the absence of a proven sexual intent, the touching was committed in circumstances of a sexual nature: R. v. S. (P.L.) (1991), 64 C.C.C. (3d) 193, 5 C.R. (4th) 351, 122 N.R. 321 (S.C.C.).

The importance of the accused’s purpose as a factor in determining whether or not there has been a sexual assault will vary depending on the circumstances. In this case, where the conduct involved “skylarking” which had been part of the regular life of the family for many years without any sexual connotations, the jury, in order to convict, would have to find that the impugned conduct had changed, from being incidental to the romping or “skylarking” but without sexual connotation, to acts with sexual intent. In such a case, the accused’s purpose or motivation would be very relevant: R. v. J.(C.) (1990), 58 C.C.C. (3d) 167, 78 C.R. (3d) 204 (Nfld. C.A.).

Sexual assault does not require proof of sexuality or sexual gratification which are merely factors. The conduct of the accused in grabbing his young child’s genitals as a form of ‘discipline’ was an aggressive act of domination which violated the sexual integurity of the child which could be found to be a sexual assault: R. v. V.(K.B.) (1992), 71 C.C.C. (3d) 65, 13 C.R. (4th) 87, 8 O.R. (3d) 20 (C.A.), affd [1993] 2 S.C.R. 857, 82 C.C.C. (3d) 382, 22 C.R. (4th) 86.

Intoxication defence – Extreme drunkenness inducing a state akin to insanity or automatism is a defence to a general intent offence such as sexual assault. However, the burden is on the accused to prove the defence on a balance of probabilities and the accused's testimony would have to be supported by expert evidence: R. v. Daviault, [1994] 3 S.C.R. 63, 93 C.C.C. (3d) 21, 33 C.R. (4th) 165.

Abuse of process – In several cases, the courts have had to consider an allegation of abuse of process where the Crown originally elected to proceed by way of summary conviction but either sought to change the election or to lay a new charge when it was discovered that the conduct was outside the six-month limitation period prescribed for summary conviction offences. In Re Parkin and the Queen (1986), 28 C.C.C. (3d) 252 (Ont. C.A.), on the face of the information, the election to proceed summarily was valid. It was only in the course of the trial, after the testimony of the complainant and after Crown counsel consulted with the complainant's mother, that the Crown sought to withdraw the charge because of counsel's belief that the offence must have occurred outside the six-month limitation period. The court held that to permit the Crown to proceed on a new information by way of indictment would amount to an abuse of process. However, in R. v. Belair (1988), 41 C.C.C. (3d) 329, 64 C.R. (3d) 179 (Ont. C.A.) the first information upon which the Crown had elected to proceed by way of summary conviction was quashed prior to plea since, on its face, it alleged an offence outside the limitation period. The laying of a new charge upon which the Crown elected to proceed by way of indictment did not constitute an abuse of process. The accused suffered no prejudice as a result of Crown counsel's initial error and it may even be that the initial election was a nullity. The public has an interest in the charge being properly tried and in trial not offending the community's sense of fair play and decency. Also see R. v. Jans (1990), 10 W.C.B. (2d) 622 (Alta. C.A.) where the court found no abuse of process in virtually identical circumstances. The court noted that there was no injustice to the accused. He had not changed his position in reliance on the Crown's initial election. The community would be offended if a significant sexual assault on a child were to go unpunished because the prosecutor temporarily made an obvious procedural error.

The burden is on the accused to establish the facts which he alleges amount to an abuse of process. Even lengthy delay in the laying of charges alleging sexual assault by a person in loco parentis will not of itself amount to an abuse of process nor necessarily lead to an unfair trial. An allegation by the accused that his right to make full answer and defence has been prejudiced by delay, as a result of the death of potential defence witnesses, is to be determined at trial and not by way of a pre-trial motion to stay proceedings: R. v. D. (E.) (1990), 57 C.C.C. (3d) 151, 78 C.R. (3d) 112, 73 O.R. (2d) 758 (C.A.). To a similar effect, see: R. v. G. (W.G.) (1990), 58 C.C.C. (3d) 263 (Nfld. C.A.).

For further notes on abuse of process, see the Annotations following s. 579.

SEXUAL ASSAULT WITH A WEAPON, THREATS TO A THIRD PARTY OR CAUSING BODILY HARM / Punishment.

272. (1) Every person commits an offence who, in committing a sexual assault,
- (a) carries, uses or threatens to use a weapon or an imitation of a weapon;
  - (b) threatens to cause bodily harm to a person other than the complainant;
  - (c) causes bodily harm to the complainant; or
  - (d) is a party to the offence with any other person.

(2) Every person who commits an offence under subsection (1) is guilty of an indictable offence and liable

- (a) where a firearm is used in the commission of the offence, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding fourteen years and to a minimum punishment of imprisonment for a term of four years; and
  - (b) in any other case, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding fourteen years.
- 1980-81-82-83, c. 125, s. 19; 1995, c. 39, s. 145.

CROSS-REFERENCES

While assault is defined in s. 265 as, in effect, a touching without the consent of the complainant, s. 273.1 gives a specific definition of consent for the purpose of the offence in this section. Section 265(4) deals with the defence of mistaken belief in consent generally, but again, s. 273.2 deals specifically with that defence in the context of this offence. The terms “firearm”, “weapon” and “complainant” are defined in s. 2. “Bodily harm” is defined in s. 2. A spouse may be charged with this offence (s. 278). Section 17 limits the availability of the statutory defence of compulsion by threats to the offences described by this section.

Section 150.1(1) provides that consent is not a defence where the complainant is under 14 years of age. Age is determined by s. 30 of the Interpretation Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. I-21. Section 658 provides a means of proving the age of a child. Section 150.1(4) provides a limited defence of mistake as to the age of the complainant. A person convicted of this offence, who is found to be loitering in or near a school ground playground, public park or bathing area, is liable to be convicted of the vagrancy offence under s. 179.

The accused may elect his mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2). Release pending trial is determined by s. 515.

A person found guilty of the offence in this section will be liable to the mandatory prohibition order in s. 100(1) for possession of firearms, ammunition and explosives. Where the accused is found guilty of this offence in respect of a person who is under 14 years of age then the court has the discretion to impose an order of prohibition under s. 161 prohibiting the accused from attending certain public areas and facilities or taking certain employment which will bring him into contact with persons under 14 years of age. This offence may be the basis for an application for an authorization to intercept private communications by reason of s. 183 or a warrant to conduct video surveillance under s. 487.01(5). This offence may be the basis for first degree murder under s. 231(5) and also for a finding that the accused is a dangerous offender under Part XXIV. Section 7(3) enacts special jurisdictional rules for commission of this offence outside Canada when the offence is in relation to an internationally protected person or property referred to in s. 431 (official premises, etc.).

Other sexual offences are found in ss. 151 to 160 and 170 to 174.

Special evidentiary and procedural provisions: Section 274 specifically provides that no corroboration is required for a conviction for this offence and the judge shall not instruct the jury that it is unsafe to find the accused guilty in the absence of corroboration. Section 275 provides that the rule relating to evidence of recent complaint is abrogated respecting this section. Section 276 sets out the circumstances in which the complainant may be questioned as to her prior sexual conduct with the accused and others. Sections 276.1 and 276.2 then set out the procedure for dealing with an application by the accused to lead such evidence. Section 276.3 sets out the circumstances in which the proceedings relating to such evidence may be published. Section 276.4 directs the judge to give the jury a specific instruction as to the use of sexual conduct evidence. Section 276.5 clarifies that the determination as to the admissibility of such evidence is a question of law. Section 277 provides that evidence of sexual reputation is inadmissible in proceedings under this section. Section 486(1) and (2) provide that the judge may make an order excluding all or any members of the public where such order is in the interest of public morals, the maintenance of order or the proper administration of justice. Where the accused is charged with an offence under this section and the application by the accused or the prosecutor for the exclusion order is dismissed then the judge shall state the reason for not making the order. Section 486(2.1) provides that, where an accused is charged with this offence and the complainant is, at the time of the trial or preliminary inquiry, under the age of 18 years, the judge may order that the complainant testify outside the court room or behind a screen, where such procedure is necessary to obtain a full and candid account of the acts complained of. Section 486(4) provides that, in proceedings under this section, the judge shall inform the complainant and any witness under 18 years of age that an order may be made under s. 486(3) directing that the identity of the complainant or any such witness not be disclosed in any publication or broadcast. Where the complainant, witness under the age of 18 years or the prosecutor (defined in s. 2) applies for the order then it is mandatory. Section 486(3) also gives the judge a discretion respecting non-publication orders in proceedings under this section in other circumstances, as where the witness may not be the complainant or under 18 years of age. Section 715.1 provides that, in proceedings under this section, a videotape made within a reasonable time after the alleged offence, in which the complainant describes the acts complained of, is admissible in evidence if the complainant was under the age of 18 years at the time of the alleged offence and adopts its contents while testifying. Under s. 4(2) of the Canada Evidence Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. C-5 the spouse of an accused charged with this offence is a compellable witness at the instance of the prosecution. Section 16 of the Canada Evidence Act deals with the competency of witnesses under the age of 14 years.

As to cases concerning admissibility of evidence in child abuse cases, see notes under s. 150.1.

ANNOTATIONS

The offence described by para. (c) is a general intent offence for which drunkenness due to voluntary consumption of alcohol is no defence: R. v. Bernard (1985), 18 C.C.C. (3d) 574, 44 C.R. (3d) 398 (Ont. C.A.).

The offence under para. (b) does not require proof that the accused was actually in possession of a weapon. The offence is complete if the complainant believes, on reasonable grounds, that the accused had the present ability to affect his purpose: R. v. Worobec (1991), 63 C.C.C. (3d) 412 (B.C.C.A.).

AGGRAVATED SEXUAL ASSAULT / Punishment.

273. (1) Every one commits an aggravated sexual assault who, in committing a sexual assault, wounds, maims, disfigures or endangers the life of the complainant.

Special evidentiary and procedural provisions: Section 274 specifically provides that no corroboration is required for a conviction for this offence and the judge shall not instruct the jury that it is unsafe to find the accused guilty in the absence of corroboration. Section 275 provides that the rule relating to evidence of recent complaint is abrogated respecting this section. Section 276 sets out the circumstances in which the complainant may be questioned as to her prior sexual conduct with the accused and others. Sections 276.1 and 276.2 then set out the procedure for dealing with an application by the accused to lead such evidence. Section 276.3 sets out the circumstances in which the proceedings relating to such evidence may be published. Section 276.4 directs the judge to give the jury a specific instruction as to the use of sexual conduct evidence. Section 276.5 clarifies that the determination as to the admissibility of such evidence is a question of law. Section 277 provides that evidence of sexual reputation is inadmissible in proceedings under this section. Section 486(1) and (2) provide that the judge may make an order excluding all or any members of the public where such order is in the interest of public morals, the maintenance of order or the proper administration of justice. Where the accused is charged with an offence under this section and the application by the accused or the prosecutor for the exclusion order is dismissed then the judge shall state the reason for not making the order. Section 486(2.1) provides that, where an accused is charged with this offence and the complainant is at the time of the trial or preliminary inquiry, under the age of 18 years, the judge may order that the complainant testify outside the court room or behind a screen, where such procedure is necessary to obtain a full and candid account of the acts complained of. Section 486(4) provides that, in proceedings under this section, the judge shall inform the complainant and any witness under 18 years of age that an order may be made under s. 486(3) directing that the identity of the complainant or any such witness not be disclosed in any publication or broadcast. Where the complainant, witness under the age of 18 years or the prosecutor (defined in s. 2) applies for the order then it is mandatory. Section 486(3) also gives the judge a discretion respecting non-publication orders in proceedings under this section in other circumstances, as where the witness may not be the complainant or under 18 years of age. Section 715.1 provides that, in proceedings under this section, a videotape made within a reasonable time after the alleged offence, in which the complainant describes the acts complained of, is admissible in evidence if the complainant was under the age of 18 years at the time of the alleged offence and adopts its contents while testifying. Under s. 4(2) of the Canada Evidence Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. C-5 the spouse of an accused charged with this offence is a compellable witness at the instance of the prosecution. Section 16 of the Canada Evidence Act deals with the competency of witnesses under the age of 14 years.

MEANING OF “CONSENT” / Where no consent obtained / Subsection (2) not limiting.

273.1. (1) Subject to subsection (2) and subsection 265(3), “consent” means, for the purposes of sections 271, 272 and 273, the voluntary agreement of the complainant to engage in the sexual activity in question.

(2) No consent is obtained, for the purposes of sections 271, 272 and 273, where

(a) the agreement is expressed by the words or conduct of a person other than the complainant;

- (b) the complainant is incapable of consenting to the activity;
  - (c) the accused induces the complainant to engage in the activity by abusing a position of trust, power or authority;
  - (d) the complainant expresses, by words or conduct, a lack of agreement to engage in the activity; or
  - (e) the complainant, having consented to engage in sexual activity, expresses, by words or conduct, a lack of agreement to continue to engage in the activity.
- (3) Nothing in subsection (2) shall be construed as limiting the circumstance in which no consent is obtained; 1992, c. 38, s. 1.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term "complainant" is defined in s. 2. Section 265(3) sets out additional circumstances in which no valid consent is given as where, for example, the consent is obtained by fraud or the exercise of authority. As to mistaken belief in consent as a defence, see s. 265(4) which sets out the minimum evidentiary requirement and the mandatory jury direction. Section 273.2 sets out circumstances where belief in consent is no defence.

SYNOPSIS

This section supplements the definition of consent in s. 265 which defines assault for all of the assault offences including sexual assault. The definition in this section applies only to the sexual assault offences. Subsection (1) provides a general definition which focuses on the voluntary agreement by the complainant. Subsection (2) then sets out a number of circumstances where the apparent agreement by the complainant cannot amount to consent. Subsection (2) makes a number of points: agreement cannot be based on the words or conduct of someone other than the complainant and there is no agreement where the complainant is incapable of giving consent [although incapacity is not defined], agreement is the result of abuse of a position of trust, power or authority, the complainant expresses lack of consent or the complainant, having initially consented, expresses a change of mind. This subsection is in addition to the circumstances set out in s. 265(3) where there is no consent to an assault generally.

ANNOTATIONS

Consent is not a defence to sexual assault causing bodily harm. A victim cannot consent to the infliction of bodily harm unless the accused is acting in the course of a generally approved social purpose when the harm is inflicted. Consensual acts of violence are not such an activity. The consent of an individual cannot detract from the inherently degrading and dehumanizing nature of the conduct. When the activity in question involves pursuing sexual gratification by deliberately inflicting pain upon another that gives rise to bodily harm, the personal interest of the individuals involved must yield to the more compelling societal interests which are challenged by such behaviour: R. v. Welch (1995), 101 C.C.C. (3d) 216, 43 C.R. (4th) 225, 25 O.R. (3d) 665 (C.A.).

WHERE BELIEF IN CONSENT NOT A DEFENCE.

273.2. It is not a defence to a charge under section 271, 272 or 273 that the accused believed that the complainant consented to the activity that forms the subject-matter of the charge, where

- (a) the accused's belief arose from the accused's
  - (i) self-induced intoxication, or
  - (ii) recklessness or wilful blindness; or
- (b) the accused did not take reasonable steps, in the circumstances known to the accused at the time, to ascertain that the complainant was consenting; 1992, c. 38, s. 1.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term “complainant” is defined in s. 2. Sections 265 and 273.1 set out circumstances in which no valid consent in fact is given. As to mistaken belief in consent as a defence see s. 265(4) which sets out the minimum evidentiary requirement and the mandatory jury direction.

SYNOPSIS

This section attempts to clarify the circumstances in which the common law defence of mistaken belief in consent is a defence to a charge of sexual assault. Paragraph (a)(i) is consistent with the common law rule that self-induced intoxication is no defence to sexual assault and para. (a)(ii) reflects the decision of the Supreme Court of Canada in Sansregret v. The Queen, infra. Paragraph (b) is something of a departure from the common law in that it introduces a partly objective standard in determining whether the accused’s belief was honestly held. This paragraph must be read with s. 265(4) which requires that, where the defence is left to the jury, the jury is to be directed to consider the presence or absence of reasonable grounds in determining the honesty of the accused’s mistaken belief. A case such as Pappajohn v. The Queen, supra, noted under s. 265, must now be read in light of this paragraph which imposes the additional requirement of reasonable steps. Note, however, that it is reasonable steps in the circumstances known to the accused. In this respect, the defence is not unlike other sections of the Code, such as self-defence under s. 34, which impose an objective and subjective standard.

ANNOTATIONS

While this section does not require in all cases that the accused first determine “unequivocally” that the complainant was consenting, there may be circumstances where nothing short of an unequivocal indication of consent from the complainant, at the time of the alleged offence, will suffice to meet the threshold test. In general, para. (b) creates a proportionate relationship between what will be required in the way of reasonable steps by the accused and the circumstances known to the accused at the time: R. v. G. (R.) (1994), 38 C.R. (4th) 123, 87 W.A.C. 254 (B.C.C.A.).

The following case arose prior to the enactment of this section.

For there to be an air of reality to the defence of mistaken belief in consent, the totality of the evidence for the accused must be reasonably and realistically capable of supporting that defence. Although there is not, strictly speaking, a requirement that the evidence of the accused be corroborated, a bare assertion of a mistaken belief is not sufficient. The fact that the stories of the accused and the complainant are diametrically opposed is but one factor in determining whether or not there is an air of reality to the defence. If it is not realistically possible for a properly instructed jury, acting judiciously, to splice together some of each person’s evidence with respect to the encounter, and settle upon a reasonably coherent set of facts, supported by the evidence, that is capable of sustaining a defence of mistaken belief in consent then the issue really is purely one of credibility, of consent or no consent, and the defence of mistaken belief in consent should not be put to the jury. When the complainant and the accused give similar versions of the facts, and the only material contradiction is in their interpretation of what happened, the defence of honest but mistaken belief in consent should generally be put to the jury, except in cases where the accused’s conduct demonstrates recklessness or wilful blindness to the absence of consent. There is no requirement that the accused explicitly testify that he mistakenly believed that the complainant was consenting. Consent is a mental state experienced only by the complainant and thus an assertion by the accused that the complainant consented must mean that he in fact believed that she was consenting. The real question will be whether that belief was on honest one: R. v. Park, [1995] 2 S.C.R. 836, 99 C.C.C. (3d) 1, 39 C.R. (4th) 287. Also see: R. v. Livermore (1995), 102 C.C.C. (3d) 212, 43 C.R. (4th) 1, 129 D.L.R. (4th) 676 (S.C.C.).

REMOVAL OF CHILD FROM CANADA / Punishment.

273.3 (1) No person shall do anything for the purpose of removing from Canada a person who is ordinarily resident in Canada and who is

- (a) under the age of fourteen years, with the intention that an act be committed outside Canada that if it were committed in Canada would be an offence against section 151 or 152 or subsection 160(3) or 173(2) in respect of that person;
  - (b) over the age of fourteen years but under the age of eighteen years, with the intention that an act be committed outside Canada that if it were committed in Canada would be an offence against section 153 in respect of that person; or
  - (c) under the age of eighteen years, with the intention that an act be committed outside Canada that if it were committed in Canada would be an offence against section 155 or 159, subsection 160(2) or section 170, 171, 267, 268, 269, 271, 272 or 273 in respect of that person.
- (2) Every person who contravenes this section is guilty of
- (a) an indictable offence and is liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding five years; or
  - (b) an offence punishable on summary conviction. 1993, c. 45, s. 3.

SYNOPSIS

This section makes it an offence to do anything for the purpose of removing certain classes of persons from Canada who are ordinarily resident in Canada. It must be shown that the person to be removed from Canada is under a specified age and that the accused's intention was that an act be committed which would constitute one of the specified sexual offences if committed in Canada.

CORROBORATION NOT REQUIRED.

274. Where an accused is charged with an offence under section 151, 152, 153, 155, 159, 160, 170, 171, 172, 173, 212, 271, 272 or 273, no corroboration is required for a conviction and the judge shall not instruct the jury that it is unsafe to find the accused guilty in the absence of corroboration. 1980-81-82-83, c. 125, s. 19; R.S.C. 1985, c. 19 (3rd Supp.), s. 11.

CROSS-REFERENCES

As to other evidentiary and procedural provisions respecting the offences listed in this section, see the cross-references in relation to those provisions and the notes under s. 150.1.

SYNOPSIS

This section states that in the trial of an offence under ss. 151, 152, 153, 155, 159, 160, 170, 171, 172, 173, 212, 271, 272 or 273, corroboration is not required for a conviction and the judge shall not instruct the jury that it is unsafe to find the accused guilty in the absence of corroboration. The section is designed to ensure that, with the repeal of the statutory corroboration requirement, the courts do not revert to the common law position requiring corroboration of a sexual complainant's evidence. [See R. v. Camp (1977), 36 C.C.C. (2d) 511 (Ont. C.A.).] Also see s. 659 abrogating any mandatory rule as to the danger of acting on the evidence of children.

ANNOTATIONS

Notwithstanding this section, the trial judge still has a discretion when reviewing the facts with a jury to discuss with them the weight they might see fit to attach to the unsupported evidence of the complainant: R. v. Saulnier (1989), 48 C.C.C. (3d) 301, 89 N.S.R. (2d) 208 (N.S.C.A.).

There is no common law rule of practice which requires a judge to charge the jury as to the danger of acting on the uncorroborated evidence of the complainant on a charge of gross indecency under former s. 157 of the Criminal Code, R.S.C. 1970, c. C-34. The trial judge does, however, have a discretion to give the jury an instruction with respect to the weight of the unsupported testimony of the complainant: R. v. Stymiest (1993), 79 C.C.C. (3d) 408, 38 W.A.C. 133 (B.C.C.A.).

RULES RESPECTING RECENT COMPLAINT ABROGATED.

275. The rules relating to evidence of recent complaint are hereby abrogated with respect to offences under sections 151, 152, 153, 155 and 159, subsections 160(2) and (3), and sections 170, 171, 172, 173, 271, 272 and 273. 1980-81-82-83, c. 125, s. 19; R.S.C. 1985, c. 19 (3rd Supp.), s. 11.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The “recent complaint” rule abrogated by this section was the rule, developed at common law, which permitted the prosecution to elicit from the complainant or other person a complaint of a sexual assault made at the first reasonable opportunity. The complaint was admitted, not for its truth, but, to show consistency and rebut the adverse inference, which the trier of fact would otherwise be invited to draw, that the victim’s allegation was untrue. The rule was an exception to the rule at common law, that a witness’s testimony in chief may not be buttressed by the party calling the witness by proving that she has made a prior consistent statement. The recent complaint rule was often criticized because of the anachronistic assumptions underlying it (see Timm v. The Queen (1981), 59 C.C.C. (3d) 396, [1981] 2 S.C.R. 315, 21 C.R. (3d) 209, 124 D.L.R. (3d) 582) and was finally abolished by this provision. However, a form of this rule has now been revived in the case of youthful complainants by the provisions of s. 715.1 which permits the admission of a videotape of a complaint in some circumstances.

As to other evidentiary and procedural provisions respecting the offences listed in this section, see the cross-references in relation to those provisions and the notes under s. 150.1.

ANNOTATIONS

The effect of this section is that the Crown during its case in chief may not adduce evidence of recent complaints. However, since there was never a prohibition against the accused attempting to exploit the lack of a recent complaint, and since only the right of the Crown to lead the evidence in chief has been negated by this section, the defence can elect to cross-examine on this issue. In addition, prior consistent statements may be admissible as part of the Crown’s case in chief if they fall within one of the other existing exceptions to the rule against prior consistent statements such as to rebut an allegation of recent fabrication, as part of the res gestae, or as narrative. If the Crown is relying upon recent fabrication as the basis for admissibility of prior consistent statements, it must wait until the defence has clearly opened the door by making an opening statement, or through cross-examination of the complainant or other Crown witnesses or by the allegation of fabrication becoming implicit from the defence conduct of the case. The res gestae exception is limited to cases where the words spoken are so interrelated to the fact in issue that they become part of the fact itself. The statements by children who have allegedly been sexually assaulted may properly be admitted as part of the narrative in the sense that the statement advances the story from offence to prosecution or explains why so little was done to terminate the abuse or bring the perpetrator to justice. It is part of the narrative of a complainant’s testimony when she recounts the assaults, how they came to be terminated, and how the matter came to the attention of the police. This part of the narrative provides chronological cohesion and eliminates gaps which would divert the mind of the listener from the central issue. It may be supportive of the central allegation in the sense of creating a logical framework for its presentation but it cannot be used and the jury must be warned of this as confirmation of the truthfulness of the sworn allegations: R. v. F.(J.E.) (1993), 85 C.C.C. (3d) 457, 26 C.R. (4th) 220, 16 O.R. (3d) 1 (C.A.).

In determining whether there has been an allegation of recent fabrication so as to permit evidence of a complaint to be given as an exception to this provision, it is not sufficient to merely look at defence counsel's statements expressly disclaiming any such allegation. If having regard to the manner in which the complainant has been cross-examined, with defence counsel having elicited some but not all of the complainant's statements after the offence, so that the jury would wrongly infer that the complainant made no complaint on an earlier occasion, then the Crown must be permitted to correct the erroneous impression by re-examination and the adducing of other evidence. The accused cannot have an automatic unlimited power to choose among the complainant's various statements: R. v. N.(L.) (1989), 52 C.C.C. (3d) 1 (N.W.T.C.A.).

This section does not prevent evidence being given as to the fact of a complaint where such evidence is a necessary part of the narrative to understand an admission made by the accused when confronted with the complaint: R. v. George (1985), 23 C.C.C. (3d) 42 (B.C.C.A.).

If the full purpose underlying Parliament's abrogation of this rule is to be achieved, then evidence of when a complaint was first made, why it was not made at the first available opportunity if that was the case, and what it was that precipitated the complaint eventually made, must be receivable as part of the narrative, in order to ensure that the jury has all of the evidence of the complainant's conduct necessary to enable the jury to draw the right inference with respect to her credibility. The prior complaint, admissible under the narrative exception to the rule against prior consistent statements, is not, however, admissible to gauge the consistency and thus the credibility of the complainant's evidence at trial. Accordingly, unless it is necessary to provide the context for some other circumstance relevant to the jury's consideration, the actual content of the prior complaint has no relevance and is inadmissible: R. v. Ay (1994), 93 C.C.C. (3d) 456 (B.C.C.A.).

The child victims' complaints to their parents were admissible where the defence contended that the children's sworn testimony was inconsistent in vital respects with their prior statements and was the result of their parents' coaching or the product of suggestions made to them by their parents, and was not based on the children's antecedent memory of the event. The prior complaints became admissible under the common law exception to admission of prior consistent statements: R. v. Owens (1986), 33 C.C.C. (3d) 275, 55 C.R. (3d) 386 (Ont. C.A.).

In R. v. B.(D.C.) (1994), 91 C.C.C. (3d) 357, 32 C.R. (4th) 91, [1994] 7 W.W.R. 727 (Man. C.A.) the court held that the judge-made rule against prior consistent statements should no longer apply to the evidence of a child's complaint of sexual abuse.

EVIDENCE OF COMPLAINANT'S SEXUAL ACTIVITY/Idem/Factors that judge must consider.

276. (1) In proceedings in respect of an offence under section 151, 152, 153, 155 or 159, subsection 160(2) or (3) or section 170, 171, 172, 173, 271, 272 or 273, evidence that the complainant has engaged in sexual activity, whether with the accused or with any other person, is not admissible to support an inference that, by reason of the sexual nature of that activity, the complainant

- (a) is more likely to have consented to the sexual activity that forms the subject-matter of the charge; or
- (b) is less worthy of belief.

(2) In proceedings in respect of an offence referred to in subsection (1), no evidence shall be adduced by or on behalf of the accused that the complainant has engaged in sexual activity other than the sexual activity that forms the subject-matter of the charge, whether with the accused or with any other person, unless the judge, provincial court judge or justice determines, in accordance with the procedures set out in sections 276.1 and 276.2, that the evidence

- (a) is of specific instances of sexual activity;
- (b) is relevant to an issue at trial; and
- (c) has significant probative value that is not substantially outweighed by the danger of prejudice to the proper administration of justice.

(3) In determining whether evidence is admissible under subsection (2), the judge, provincial court judge or justice shall take into account

- (a) the interests of justice, including the right of the accused to make a full answer and defence;
- (b) society's interest in encouraging the reporting of sexual assault offences;
- (c) whether there is a reasonable prospect that the evidence will assist in arriving at a just determination in the case;
- (d) the need to remove from the fact-finding process any discriminatory belief or bias;
- (e) the risk that the evidence may unduly arouse sentiments of prejudice, sympathy or hostility in the jury;
- (f) the potential prejudice to the complainant's personal dignity and right of privacy;
- (g) the right of the complainant and of every individual to personal security and to the full protection and benefit of the law; and
- (h) any other factor that the judge, provincial court judge or justice considers relevant. 1980-81-82-83, c. 125, s. 19; R.S.C. 1985, c. 19 (3rd Supp.), s. 12; 1992, c. 38, s. 2.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms "complainant", "justice" and "provincial court judge" are defined in s. 2.

As to other evidentiary and procedural provisions respecting the offences listed in this section, see the cross-references in relation to those provisions and the notes under s. 150.1. However, note in particular the companion provision in s. 277 respecting evidence of sexual reputation.

As to the procedure for determining the admissibility of sexual conduct evidence, see ss. 276.1 and 276.2. Section 276.3 limits the publications of the proceedings. Section 276.4 requires the judge to instruct the jury as to the proper use of sexual conduct evidence and s. 276.5 makes the determination of admissibility a question of law, thus giving the Attorney General a right of appeal.

SYNOPSIS

This section was enacted following the decision of the Supreme Court of Canada in R. v. Seaboyer, noted below. Unlike the predecessor provision which was found to violate s. 7 of the Charter, this section does not attempt to delineate all the circumstances in which sexual conduct activity would be admissible. Rather, subsec. (1) sets out the purpose for which the evidence is not admissible, i.e. the evidence is not admissible for the now discredited purposes of merely showing the complainant is more likely to have consented or is less worthy of belief. In this sense, the section is structured in a way similar to s. 277 which was found in the same case to be constitutional. Subsection (2) codifies the test enunciated in Seaboyer that defence evidence which is probative of an issue in the case can only be excluded if the prejudicial effect of that evidence substantially outweighs the probative value. The requirement that the evidence relate to specific instances of sexual activity excludes the use of more general character evidence. It is unclear as to the extent that this section could apply to expert psychiatric or psychological evidence of disposition. Subsection (3) attempts to identify a non-exhaustive list of factors to assist the judge in determining the prejudicial effect of the evidence as weighed against its probative value. Of the various factors, perhaps those in paras. (c) to (e) will prove to be most significant as they relate directly to the probative value and prejudicial effect of evidence as traditionally understood, i.e. whether the evidence will be misused by the trier of fact. In making this determination, the judge will bear in mind the mandatory requirement in s. 276.4 that the jury be instructed as to the proper use of the evidence. The other factors listed in subsec. (3) reflect the decision by Parliament that certain evidence may be excluded despite its apparent probative value because of policy considerations not strictly related to the potential improper use of the evidence by the trier of fact. The weight to be attached to these broader policy issues will be somewhat more difficult to quantify in the particular case.

ANNOTATIONS

In R v. Seaboyer; R. v. Gayme (1991), 66 C.C.C. (3d) 321, 7 C.R. (4th) 117, [1991] 2 S.C.R. 577 (7:2) the court held that the predecessor to this section was unconstitutional. The court held, however, that striking down the section did not serve to revive the old common law rules respecting sexual conduct evidence. Rather, the court suggested some guidelines for determining the admissibility of this type of evidence. In doing so, the court suggested some circumstances in which sexual activity evidence might be admissible. (A) Evidence of specific instances of sexual conduct tending to prove that a person other than the accused caused the physical consequences of the rape alleged by the prosecution; (B) Evidence of sexual conduct tending to prove bias or motive to fabricate on the part of the complainant; (C) Evidence of prior sexual conduct, known to the accused at the time of the act charged, tending to prove that the accused believed that the complainant was consenting to the act charged (Without laying down absolute rules, normally one would expect some proximity in time between the conduct that is alleged to have given rise to an honest belief and the conduct charged.); (D) Evidence of prior sexual conduct which meets the requirements for the reception of similar act evidence, bearing in mind that such evidence cannot be used illegitimately merely to show that the complainant consented or is an unreliable witness; (E) Evidence tending to rebut proof introduced by the prosecution regarding the complainant's sexual conduct.

The phrase "engaged in sexual activity" refers to consensual sexual conduct and thus this section does not apply to questioning concerning other acts of sexual assault upon the complainant. Admissibility of evidence concerning other sexual assaults is to be determined by applying the common law rules of evidence of relevance and whether the prejudicial effect substantially outweighs the probative value: R. v. B.(O.) (1995), 103 C.C.C. (3d) 531, 146 N.S.R. (2d) 265 (C.A.). See also R. v. Vanderest (1994), 91 C.C.C. (3d) 5 (B.C.S.C.).

While the admissibility of evidence that the complainant was a virgin prior to the alleged assault by the accused is not covered either by this section or s. 277, the jury must be warned against the improper use of such evidence and in particular that the fact the complainant was a virgin does not mean that she was of better character and therefore more truthful: R. v. Brothers (1995), 99 C.C.C. (3d) 64, 40 C.R. (4th) 250, 97 W.A.C. 122 (Alta. C.A.).

Where the Crown adduced evidence from the complainant that she terminated her relationship with the accused prior to the alleged assault because she had a sexual preference for women with the apparent intention of asking the jury to draw the inference that the complainant was not the type of person to consent to intercourse with the male accused, then the defence should have been permitted to adduce evidence that the complainant, two days before the alleged assault, had sexual intercourse with a man. Such evidence would have been admissible according to the guidelines set out in R. v. Seaboyer, supra; R. v. Morden (1991), 69 C.C.C. (3d) 123, 9 C.R. (4th) 315, 15 W.A.C. 293 (B.C.C.A.).

The trial judge did not err in refusing to permit defence counsel to cross-examine the complainant (his step-daughter) as to whether she had lied in telling a police-officer that she had been sexually assaulted by persons other than the accused. There was no indication that the complainant's evidence on this collateral matter might be false. The evidence was of tenuous relevancy but had a significant potential to mislead the jury: R. v. W. (B.A.), [1992] 3 S.C.R. 811, 145 N.R. 87, 59 O.A.C. 323.

The trial judge did not err in curtailing cross-examination of the complainant concerning an allegation she made about another man, nor did he err in refusing the defence permission to call this man who would deny the allegation and testify that he had been charged with sexually assaulting the victim and had been acquitted. The only legal basis which would justify this cross-examination would be to lay the foundation for a pattern of fabrication by the complainant of similar allegations of sexual assault against other men. This should not be encouraged unless the defence is in a position to establish that the complainant has recanted her earlier accusations or that they are demonstrably false. The cross-examination was on a collateral matter being in the nature of an attack on the general character of the complainant: R. v. Riley (1992), 11 O.R. (3d) 151 (C.A.).

This section and the procedure set out in ss. 276.1 and 276.2 have no application to evidence tending to show that the complainant has fabricated stories of sexual activity in which she has admittedly never engaged. However, the trial judge must nevertheless determine whether the proposed evidence is sufficiently probative to warrant its admission: R. v. Gauthier (1995), 100 C.C.C. (3d) 563, 104 W.A.C. 184 (B.C.C.A.).

Evidence of a sexual relationship between the accused and the complainant proximate in time to the alleged offences might well support a defence of honest but mistaken belief in consent in some circumstances. However, such evidence should not have been admitted where the accused's defence to one count was consent, not mistaken belief in consent, and with respect to the other three counts a denial that the incidents ever occurred: R. v. Dickson (1993), 81 C.C.C. (3d) 224, 21 C.R. (4th) 8, 163 N.R. 59 (Y.T.C.A.), aff'd 86 C.C.C. (3d) 576n, [1994] 1 S.C.R. 153, 28 C.R. (4th) 194.

The trial judge erred in precluding cross-examination of the complainant on her statement to the police, wherein she admitted to having engaged in consensual sexual intercourse with the accused three days before the alleged assault and stated that was the reason for visiting the accused on the date of the alleged assault. At trial, the complainant denied visiting the accused on the date of the alleged assault with the intention of having sex with him. Ordinarily, nothing would prevent defence counsel from cross-examining the complainant on such a material inconsistency. The fact that the material inconsistency was inextricably linked in the police questioning to the earlier consensual sexual contact between the complainant and the accused should not prevent the cross-examination. Where the defence of honest but mistaken belief is not realistically advanced by the accused at trial, then evidence of prior, unrelated sexual activity between the complainant and the accused will seldom be relevant to an issue at trial. However, the circumstances of this case were exceptional, as the only reason the unrelated prior sexual activity was at all implicated was because it was directly referred to by the police while posing a question which did bear on the sexual activity forming the subject matter of the charge. It would be unfair for an accused to be denied access to evidence which is otherwise admissible and relevant to his defence if the prejudice related to admitting that evidence is uniquely attributable to the authorities' conduct: R. v. Crosby, [1995] 2 S.C.R. 912, 98 C.C.C. (3d) 225, 39 C.R. (4th) 315 (S.C.C.).

APPLICATION FOR HEARING / Form and content of application / Jury and public excluded / Judge may decide to hold hearing.

276.1. (1) Application may be made to the judge, provincial court judge or justice by or on behalf of the accused for a hearing under section 276.2 to determine whether evidence is admissible under subsection 276(2).

(2) An application referred to in subsection (1) must be made in writing and set out

- (a) detailed particulars of the evidence that the accused seeks to adduce, and
- (b) the relevance of that evidence to an issue at trial, and a copy of the application must be given to the prosecutor and to the clerk of the court.

(3) The judge, provincial court judge or justice shall consider the application with the jury and the public excluded.

(4) Where the judge, provincial court judge or justice is satisfied

- (a) that the application was made in accordance with subsection (2),
- (b) that a copy of the application was given to the prosecutor and to the clerk of the court at least seven days previously, or such shorter interval as the judge, provincial court judge or justice may allow where the interests of justice so require, and
- (c) that the evidence sought to be adduced is capable of being admissible under subsection 276(2), the judge, provincial court judge or justice shall grant the application and hold a hearing under section 276.2 to determine whether the evidence is admissible under subsection 276(2). 1992, c. 38, s. 2.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term's "complainant", "justice", "provincial court judge" and "clerk of the court" are defined in s. 2. The term "prosecutor" is defined in s. 2 and s. 785. As to the procedure for determining the admissibility of sexual conduct evidence, see s. 276.2. Section 276.3 limits the publication of the proceedings. Section 276.4 requires the judge to instruct the jury as to the proper use of sexual conduct evidence and s. 276.5 makes the determination of admissibility a question of law thus giving the Attorney General a right of appeal.

SYNOPSIS

This section sets out the first step of the procedure for making an application to adduce evidence of the sexual conduct of the complainant, other than the sexual activity which forms the subject matter of the charge. This section requires a written application setting out the particulars of the evidence sought to be adduced by the accused and the relevance of that evidence. The application to admit the evidence is actually a two-stage proceeding. Under this section, the judge determines whether the formal requirements have been met such as the written application and notice [seven days unless otherwise ordered] and whether the evidence is capable of being admissible. If these requirements are met, then the accused is entitled to an evidentiary hearing, conducted in accordance with s. 276.2, to determine whether the evidence should be admitted. The test for admissibility is set out in s. 276(2). The hearing under this section is held in camera and in the absence of the jury.

ANNOTATIONS

The inquiry under this section entails only a facial consideration of the matter and a tentative decision as to whether the evidence appears capable of being admissible. Any doubts that might exist at this stage are better left to be resolved at the evidentiary hearing under s. 276.2. The courts must be cautious in applying limits on the right of an accused to cross-examine and adduce evidence and so, unless the evidence clearly appears to be incapable of being admissible, having regard for the criteria set out in s. 276(2) and the indicia in s. 276(3), the judge should proceed to the evidentiary hearing stage: R. v. Ecker (1995), 96 C.C.C. (3d) 161, 37 C.R. (4th) 51, 85 W.A.C. 161 (Sask. C.A.).

JURY AND PUBLIC EXCLUDED / Complainant not compellable / Judge's determination and reasons / Record of reasons.

276.2. (1) At a hearing to determine whether evidence is admissible under subsection 276(2), the jury and the public shall be excluded.

(2) The complainant is not a compellable witness at the hearing.

(3) At the conclusion of the hearing, the judge, provincial court judge or justice shall determine whether the evidence, or any part thereof, is admissible under subsection 276(2) and shall provide reasons for that determination, and

- (a) where not all of the evidence is to be admitted, the reasons must state the part of the evidence that is to be admitted;
- (b) the reasons must state the factors referred to in subsection 276(3) that affected the determination; and
- (c) where all or any part of the evidence is to be admitted, the reasons must state the manner in which that evidence is expected to be relevant to an issue at trial.

(4) The reasons provided under subsection (3) shall be entered in the record of the proceedings or, where the proceedings are not recorded, shall be provided in writing; 1992, c. 38, s. 2.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms “complainant”, “justice”, and “provincial court judge” are defined in s. 2. As to the procedure for determining whether or not the accused is entitled to the evidentiary hearing prescribed by this section, see s. 276.1. Section 276.3 limits the publication of the proceedings. Section 276.4 requires the judge to instruct the jury as to the proper use of sexual conduct evidence and s. 276.5 makes the determination of admissibility a question of law, thus giving the Attorney General a right of appeal.

SYNOPSIS

This section sets out the final step in the procedure for making an application to adduce evidence of the sexual conduct of the complainant, other than the sexual activity which forms the subject matter of the charge. If the prerequisites set out in s. 276.1 have been met, then the accused becomes entitled to an evidentiary hearing, conducted in accordance with this section, to attempt to show that the evidence sought to be adduced meets the test for admissibility as set out in s. 276(2). The hearing under this section is held in camera and in the absence of the jury. Moreover, the complainant is not a compellable witness at the hearing. This section requires the court to provide reasons for the decision and to specify what parts of the evidence are to be admitted.

PUBLICATION PROHIBITED / Offence.

276.3. (1) No person shall publish in a newspaper, as defined in section 297, or in a broadcast, any of the following:

- (a) the contents of an application made under section 276.1;
- (b) any evidence taken, the information given and the representations made at an application under section 276.1 or at a hearing under section 276.2;
- (c) the decision of a judge, provincial court judge or justice under subsection 276.1(4), unless the judge, provincial court judge or justice, after taking into account the complainant’s right of privacy and the interests of justice, orders that the decision may be published; and
- (d) the determination made and the reasons provided under section 276.2, unless
  - (i) that determination is that evidence is admissible, or
  - (ii) the judge, provincial court judge or justice, after taking into account the complainant’s right of privacy and the interests of justice, orders that the determination and reasons may be published.

(2) Every person who contravenes subsection (1) is guilty of an offence punishable on summary conviction; 1992, c. 38, s. 2.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms “complainant”, “justice”, and “provincial court judge” are defined in s. 2. Procedure for summary conviction offences is found in Part XXVII which sets out the maximum penalties and the time limitation. Whether or not proceedings may be published under this section, publishers should bear in mind the provisions of s. 648 restricting publication of proceedings in the absence of the jury.

SYNOPSIS

This section makes it an offence to publish certain aspects of the hearings held under ss. 276.1 and 276.2 which are held in camera and in the absence of the jury, to determine the admissibility of sexual activity evidence as permitted by s. 276. This section prohibits publication of the application and the proceedings under ss. 276.1 and 276.2 and of the court's decisions under s. 276.1, unless otherwise ordered by the judge. As well, the decision under s. 276.2 cannot be published unless it is determined that the evidence is admissible or the court otherwise orders.

JUDGE TO INSTRUCT JURY RE USE OF EVIDENCE.

276.4. Where evidence is admitted at trial pursuant to a determination made under section 276.2, the judge shall instruct the jury as to the uses that the jury may and may not make of that evidence; 1992, c. 38, s. 2.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The procedure for determining whether evidence is admissible under s. 276 is set out in ss. 276.1 and 276.2

ANNOTATIONS

Cross-examination of the complainant on allegedly deviant and aberrant sexual behaviour, to support a defence by the accused psychologist that his acts were legitimate therapy, had a great potential for undue prejudice and the trial judge erred in failing to direct the jury as to the limited use of that evidence: R. v. Figa (1993), 87 C.C.C. (3d) 377, 145 A.R. 254, 55 W.A.C. 254 (C.A.). [Note: this case was tried prior to the enactment of this section.]

APPEAL.

276.5. For the purposes of sections 675 and 676, a determination made under section 276.2 shall be deemed to be a question of law; 1992, c. 38, s. 2.

CROSS-REFERENCES

Sections 675 and 676 govern rights of appeal by the accused and the Attorney General respectively. The main importance of this section lies in the fact that the decision to admit sexual activity evidence being a question of law is appealable by the Crown should the accused be acquitted.

REPUTATION EVIDENCE.

277. In proceedings in respect of an offence under section 151, 152, 153, 155 or 159, subsection 160(2) or (3) or section 170, 171, 172, 173, 271, 272 or 273, evidence of sexual reputation, whether general or specific, is not admissible for the purpose of challenging or supporting the credibility of the complainant. 1980-81-82-83, c. 125, s. 19; R.S.C. 1985, c. 19 (3rd Supp.), s. 13.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term "complainant" is defined in s. 2. As to other evidentiary and procedural provisions respecting the offences listed in this section, see the cross-references in relation to those provisions and the notes under s. 150.1. However, note in particular the companion provisions in s. 276 respecting evidence of sexual conduct with persons other than the accused.

SYNOPSIS

This section states that evidence of sexual reputation is not admissible to challenge or support the credibility of the complainant in proceedings under ss. 151, 152, 153, 155, 159, 170, 171, 172, 173, 271, 272, 273, or s. 160(2) or (3). It, in effect, reverses the common law rule that evidence of a reputation for sexual promiscuity was relevant to the complainant's credibility.

ANNOTATIONS

This section is not unconstitutional by reason of ss. 7 and 11(d) of the Charter: R. v. Seaboyer (1991), 66 C.C.C. (3d) 321, 83 D.L.R. (4th) 193, 4 O.R. (3d) 383 (S.C.C.) (7:2).

SPOUSE MAY BE CHARGED.

278. A husband or wife may be charged with an offence under section 271, 272 or 273 in respect of his or her spouse, whether or not the spouses were living together at the time the activity that forms the subject-matter of the charge occurred. 1980-81-82-83, c. 125, s. 19.

CROSS-REFERENCES

As to other evidentiary and procedural provisions respecting the offences listed in this section, see the cross-references in relation to those provisions and the notes under s. 150.1.

SYNOPSIS

This section specifies that a person may be charged with the offences of sexual assault, sexual assault with a weapon or causing bodily harm, or aggravated sexual assault against his or her spouse, whether or not they were living together at the time of the alleged offence. This reverses the common law rule that a husband could not be guilty of rape committed, by himself, upon his lawful wife, on the basis that, by virtue of the marriage contract, she was deemed to have irrevocably consented to intercourse.

Kidnapping, Hostage Taking and Abduction*KIDNAPPING / Punishment / Forcible confinement / Non-resistance.

- 279. (1) Every person commits an offence who kidnaps a person with intent
- (a) to cause the person to be confined or imprisoned against the person's will;
  - (b) to cause the person to be unlawfully sent or transported out of Canada against the person's will; or
  - (c) to hold the person for ransom or to service against the person's will.
- (1.1) Every person who commits an offence under subsection (1) is guilty of an indictable offence and liable
- (a) where a firearm is used in the commission of the offence, to imprisonment for life and to a minimum punishment of imprisonment for a term of four years; and
  - (b) in any other case, to imprisonment for life.
- (2) Every one who, without lawful authority, confines, imprisons or forcibly seizes another person is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding ten years.
- (3) In proceedings under this section, the fact that the person in relation to whom the offence is alleged to have been committed did not resist is not a defence unless the accused proves that the failure to resist was not caused by threats, duress, force or exhibition of force. R.S., c. C-34, s. 247; R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 39; 1995, c. 39, s. 147.

CROSS-REFERENCES

Section 17 limits the availability of the statutory defence of compulsion by threats to the offence of "forcible abduction". However, forcible abduction has been held not to include kidnapping: R. v. Robins (1982), 66 C.C.C. (2d) 550 (Que. C.A.).

This offence may be the basis for an application for an authorization to intercept private communications by reason of s. 183. These offences may be the basis for a conviction for constructive murder under s. 230 and first degree murder under s. 231(5). Section 7(3) enacts special jurisdictional rules for commission of this offence outside Canada when the offence is in relation to an internationally protected person or property referred to in s. 431 (official premises, etc.). A threat to commit an offence under this section against an internationally protected person (defined in s. 2) is an offence under s. 424.

The accused may elect his mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2) for either of the offences under this section. Release pending trial is determined by s. 515. A person found guilty of the offence in this section will be liable to the mandatory prohibition order in s. 100(1) for possession of firearms, ammunition and explosives. A person found guilty of this offence may be subject to a dangerous offender application under Part XXIV.

SYNOPSIS

This section describes the offences of kidnapping and forcible confinement, the punishment for these offences, and the defence of non-resistance. Any person who kidnaps another person against his will, with intent to confine him, to cause him to be sent out of Canada, or to hold him for ransom or to service, is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to life imprisonment. Anyone who confines, imprisons or forcibly seizes another person without lawful authority is guilty of an indictable offence punishable by a maximum term of imprisonment of 10 years. Where a firearm is used in the commission of any of these offences, the offender is subject to a minimum punishment of four years' imprisonment. Evidence of the fact that the victim did not resist does not constitute a defence unless the accused proves that such failure to resist was not caused by threats, duress or force.

ANNOTATIONS

Kidnapping [subsec. (1)] – To constitute kidnapping there must be a movement or taking of the person from one place to another and not simply the placing of the person in the area of confinement. Where an accused binds the victim who originally voluntarily entered his truck, places her in the back of the truck and continues on his trip until he can find a suitable place to sexually assault her the offence is made out: R. v. Oakley (1977), 36 C.C.C. (2d) 436, 39 C.R.N.S. 105 (Alta. S.C. App. Div.).

In R. v. Elder (1978), 40 C.C.C. (2d) 122, [1978] 3 W.W.R. 351 (Sask. Dist. Ct.) the accused was acquitted of the offences under both subsecs. (1) and (2) where during a hostage-taking incident at a prison while he assisted in moving the hostage from one area to another his only purpose was to remove him from danger. The accused's purpose negated the element of mens rea for both offences.

False statements by the accused which induced his victim to willingly enter into his custody constitutes kidnapping: R. v. Brown (1972), 8 C.C.C. (2d) 13 (Ont. C.A.).

Similarly, R. v. Metcalfe (1983), 10 C.C.C. (3d) 114 (B.C.C.A.) where it was held that "kidnap" includes to take and carry away a person against his will by unlawful force or by fraud. Leave to appeal to S.C.C. was refused April 2, 1984.

The mens rea of the offence under subsec. (1)(b) does not require proof that the accused knew that transportation of the victim out of Canada was unlawful: R. v. Kear (1989), 51 C.C.C. (3d) 574 (Ont. C.A.).

The powers which the accused, who were acting for an American bail bondsman, had to arrest a fugitive did not extend outside the United States and could not give them authority to violate Canadian sovereignty. Accordingly, the accused, in seizing the fugitive in Canada, were acting unlawfully and were properly convicted of the offence under subsec. (1)(b): R. v. Kear, supra.

Unlawful confinement [subsec. (2)] – The offence under this subsection does not require proof of total physical restraint of the victim: R. v. Gratton (1985), 18 C.C.C. (3d) 462 (Ont. C.A.), leave to appeal to S.C.C. refused [1985] 1 S.C.R. viii.

Constitutional considerations [subsec. (3)] – The reverse onus provision created by this subsection is of no force and effect being inconsistent with the guarantee to the presumption of innocence in s. 11(d) of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms: R. v. Gough (1985), 18 C.C.C. (3d) 453, 43 C.R. (3d) 297 (Ont. C.A.); R. v. Grift (1986), 28 C.C.C. (3d) 120, 43 Alta. L.R. (2d) 365 (Q.B.).

HOSTAGE TAKING / Punishment / Non-resistance.

279.1 (1) Every one takes a person hostage who

(a) confines, imprisons, forcibly seizes or detains that person, and

(b) in any manner utters, conveys or causes any person to receive a threat that the death of, or bodily harm to, the hostage will be caused or that the confinement, imprisonment or detention of the hostage will be continued with intent to induce any person, other than the hostage, or any group of persons or any state or international or intergovernmental organization to commit or cause to be committed any act or omission as a condition, whether express or implied, of the release of the hostage.

(2) Every person who takes a person hostage is guilty of an indictable offence and liable

(a) where a firearm is used in the commission of the offence, to imprisonment for life and to a minimum punishment of imprisonment for a term of four years; and

(b) in any other case, to imprisonment for life.

(3) Subsection 279(3) applies to proceedings under this section as if the offence under this section were an offence under section 279. R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 40(1); 1995, c. 39, s. 148.

CROSS-REFERENCES

Section 17 limits the availability of the statutory defence of compulsion by threats to the offence of hostage taking. Firearm is defined in s. 2.

This offence may be the basis for an application for an authorization to intercept private communications by reason of s. 183. This offence may be the basis for a conviction for constructive murder under s. 230 and first degree murder under s. 231(5). Section 7(3) and (3.1) enacts special jurisdictional rules where this offence is committed outside Canada. A threat to commit an offence under this section against an internationally protected person (defined in s. 2) is an offence under s. 424.

The accused may elect his mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2). Release pending trial is determined by s. 515. A person found guilty of the offence in this section will be liable to the mandatory prohibition order in s. 100(1) for possession of firearms, ammunition and explosives. A person found guilty of this offence may be subject to a dangerous offender application under Part XXIV.

Uttering threats is an offence under s. 264.1. The related offences of kidnapping and unlawful confinement are found in s. 279.

SYNOPSIS

This section describes the offence of hostage-taking. Any one commits this offence when he unlawfully confines a person and threatens that the safety of that person will be compromised or that his detention will continue if another person or group of persons, including states or international governments, does not comply with the offender's demands. Anyone convicted of an offence under this section is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to a maximum term of life imprisonment and to a minimum punishment of four years if a firearm is used in the commission of the offence. The defence of non-resistance applies in the same circumstances as are set out in s. 279(3).

ABDUCTION OF PERSON UNDER SIXTEEN / Definition of "guardian".

280. (1) Every one who, without lawful authority, takes or causes to be taken an unmarried person under the age of sixteen years out of the possession of and against the will of the parent or guardian of that person or of any other person who has the lawful care or charge of that person is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding five years.

(2) In this section and sections 281 to 283, "guardian" includes any person who has in law or in fact the custody or control of another person. R.S., c. C-34, s. 249; 1980-81-82-83, c. 125, s. 20.

CROSS-REFERENCES

Section 17 limits the availability of the statutory defence of compulsion by threats.

Section 7(3) enacts special jurisdictional rules for commission of this offence outside Canada when the offence is in relation to an internationally protected person.

The accused may elect his mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2). Release pending trial is determined by s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by the officer in charge under s. 498.

The accused's spouse is a competent and compellable witness at the instance of the Crown by virtue of s. 4(2). Age is determined by s. 30 of the Interpretation Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. I-21. Section 658 provides a means of proving the age of a child.

Related offences: s. 279, kidnapping and unlawful confinement; s. 279.1, hostage taking; s. 281, abduction of child under 14 years of age; s. 282, abduction of child under 14 years of age in contravention of custody order; s. 283, abduction of child under 14 years of age where no custody order with intent to deprive parent, etc., of possession of child.

Defences: s. 285, where court satisfied that taking, etc., was necessary to protect young person from imminent harm; s. 286, no defence that young person consented to or suggested any conduct of the accused. As to mistake defence generally, see notes under ss. 19 and 150.1.

SYNOPSIS

This section makes it an offence for anyone to cause to be taken, without lawful authority, any unmarried person under the age of 16 from the possession of the parent, the guardian, or any other person who has the lawful care or charge of that person. This taking must occur without the consent of the parent, guardian or other responsible person. A person convicted under this section is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to a maximum term of imprisonment of five years.

ANNOTATIONS

The phrase "takes or causes to be taken" requires some participation by the accused in the removal of the girl either through physical involvement or inducement or enticement. The mere fact that the girl is aware she can find refuge with the accused does not constitute any inducement on his part: R. v. Johnson (1977), 37 C.C.C. (2d) 352 (Sask. Dist. Ct.).

Proof of the taking away does not require any element of persuasion and even if the girls involved took a very active, if not leading part, in what occurred a conviction will follow if it is proved that the taking was against the will of the parent: R. v. Langevin and LaPensee (1962), 133 C.C.C. 257, 38 C.R. 421 (Ont. C.A.). In this case the dicta by Lebel, J.A., in R. v. Bebee (1958), 120 C.C.C. 310 (Ont. C.A.), that persuasion by the accused was a necessary element of the offence, was disapproved.

ABDUCTION OF PERSON UNDER FOURTEEN.

281. Every one who, not being the parent, guardian or person having the lawful care or charge of a person under the age of fourteen years, unlawfully takes, entices away, conceals, detains, receives or harbours that person with intent to deprive a parent or guardian, or any other person who has the lawful care or charge of that person, of the possession of that person is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding ten years. R.S., c. C-34, s. 250; 1980-81-82-83, c. 125, s. 20.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term “guardian” is defined in s. 280(2).

Section 17 limits the availability of the statutory defence of compulsion by threats. Section 7(3) enacts special jurisdictional rules for commission of this offence outside Canada when the offence is in relation to an internationally protected person.

The accused may elect his mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2). Release pending trial is determined by s. 515.

The accused’s spouse is a competent and compellable witness at the instance of the Crown by virtue of s. 4(2). Age is determined by s. 30 of the Interpretation Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. I-21. Section 658 provides a means of proving the age of a child.

Related offences: s. 279, kidnapping and unlawful confinement; s. 279.1, hostage taking; s. 280, abduction of person under 16 years of age against will of parent; s. 282, abduction of child under 14 years of age in contravention of custody order; s. 283, abduction of child under 14 years of age where no custody order with intent to deprive parent, etc., of possession of child.

Defences: s. 284, where the accused establishes that the taking away, etc., was with the consent of the parent, guardian or other person having the lawful possession, care or charge of the young person; s. 285, where court satisfied that taking, etc., was necessary to protect young person from imminent harm; s. 286 no defence that young person consented to or suggested any conduct of the accused. As to mistake defence generally, see notes under ss. 19 and 150.1.

ANNOTATIONS

It was held under the predecessor to this section that the word “detains” was to be given its dictionary meaning of “withhold”. Thus the gravamen of the offence was not merely the keeping or confinement of the child but the intentional withholding of the child from the accused’s wife, who had lawful custody of the child, which had the effect of depriving her of her custodial rights. Thus, in Ontario, where the child had lived with its mother, the courts had jurisdiction to try an offence of detaining, although the child was taken and held by the accused in another province: Re Bigelow and The Queen (1982), 69 C.C.C. (2d) 204, 37 O.R. (2d) 304 (C.A.), leave to appeal to S.C.C. refused C.C.C. loc. cit.

The word “unlawfully” in the English version of this section is surplusage and does not require proof of commission of some additional unlawful act in the taking of the child. The term “possession” is not limited to circumstances in which the parent or guardian is actually in physical control of the child at the time of the taking. The concept of deprivation of possession relates to the ability of a parent to exercise his right of control over the child. Although proof of the intent required by this section can be met by the intentional and purposeful deprivation of the parent’s control over the child, the mens rea of the offence can also be proven by the mere fact of the deprivation of possession of the child through a taking as long as the trier of fact can infer that the accused knew or foresaw that his actions would be certain or substantially certain to result in the parents being deprived of the ability to exercise control over the child: R. v. Chartrand, [1994] 2 S.C.R. 864, 91 C.C.C. (3d) 396, 31 C.R. (4th) 1.

ABDUCTION IN CONTRAVENTION OF CUSTODY ORDER / Where no belief in validity of custody order.

282. (1) Every one who, being the parent, guardian or person having the lawful care or charge of a person under the age of fourteen years, takes, entices away, conceals, detains, receives or harbours that person, in contravention of the custody provisions of a custody order in relation to that person made by a court anywhere in Canada, with intent to deprive a parent or guardian, or any other person who has the lawful care or charge of that person, of the possession of that person is guilty of

- (a) an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding ten years; or
- (b) an offence punishable on summary conviction.

(2) Where a count charges an offence under subsection (1) and the offence is not proven only because the accused did not believe that there was a valid custody order but the evidence does prove an offence under section 283, the accused may be convicted of an offence under section 283. 1980-81-82-83, c. 125, s. 20; 1993, c. 45, s. 4.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term "guardian" is defined in s. 280(2).

Section 17 limits the availability of the statutory defence of compulsion by threats. Section 7(3) enacts special jurisdictional rules for commission of this offence outside Canada when the offence is in relation to an internationally protected person.

The accused's spouse is a competent and compellable witness at the instance of the Crown by virtue of s. 4(2). Age is determined by s. 30 of the Interpretation Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. I-21. Section 658 provides a means of proving the age of a child.

Where the prosecution elects to proceed by indictment on this offence then the accused may elect his mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2). Where the prosecution elects to proceed by way of summary conviction then the trial of this offence is conducted by a summary conviction court pursuant to Part XXVII. The punishment for the offence is then as set out in s. 787 and the limitation period is set out in s. 786(2). In either case, release pending trial is determined by s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by a peace officer under s. 496, 497 or by the officer in charge under s. 498.

Related offences: s. 279, kidnapping and unlawful confinement; s. 279.1, hostage taking; s. 280, abduction of person under 16 years of age against will of parent; s. 281, abduction of child under 14 years of age by person other than parent, guardian or person having lawful care of child; s. 283, abduction of child under 14 years of age where no custody order with intent to deprive parent, etc., of possession of child.

Defences: s. 284, where the accused establishes that the taking away, etc., was with the consent of the parent, guardian or other person having the lawful possession, care or charge of the young person; s. 285, where court satisfied that taking, etc., was necessary to protect young person from imminent harm; s. 286, no defence that young person consented to or suggested any conduct of the accused. As to mistake defence generally, see notes under ss. 19 and 150.1.

SYNOPSIS

Subsection (1) describes the offence of abduction of a person under the age of 14 years in contravention of a custody order. Anyone who is the parent, guardian or person lawfully in charge of a person under 14 who takes, entices away, conceals, detains, receives or harbours that person in violation of a custody order of a Canadian court, with the intention of depriving another parent, guardian or person in charge of possession of the person under 14, commits this offence. The offence may be prosecuted by indictment or summarily, and is punishable on indictment by imprisonment not exceeding 10 years.

Where the accused would otherwise be found not guilty only because he or she did not believe there was a valid custody order in existence then by virtue of subsec. (2) the accused may be convicted of the offence under s. 283, if that offence is made out.

ANNOTATIONS

The words "lawful care or charge" do not modify the word "parent" and the parent may therefore be convicted of the offence under this section although at the time of the taking he did not have lawful care or charge of the child: R. v. Van Herk (1984), 12 C.C.C. (3d) 359, 40 C.R. (3d) 264 (Alta. C.A.).

The mens rea of the offence under this section is proof that the accused intended to deprive the person with lawful care of the child, of the possession of the child, and with an intent to do so in contravention of a valid and subsisting court order. A mistaken belief as to the legal effect of a custody order is a defence to this charge. Such a mistake although a mistake of law is an error as to the legal effect of civil law and therefore a defence. However, the fact that the accused knew the terms of the custody order and acted in contravention of its terms would, in most cases, be sufficient to persuade the trier of fact that she intended to do so. Quaere, whether the mistaken belief as to the legal effect of the order must be based on reasonable grounds: R. v. Ilczyszyn (1988), 45 C.C.C. (3d) 91 (Ont. C.A.).

In the subsequent case of R. v. Hammerbeck (1991), 68 C.C.C. (3d) 161 (B.C.C.A.) that court held that an honest belief by the accused that he was not bound by the terms of the custody order was a defence and that the mistake need not be based on reasonable grounds.

The term “detain” in this section means “withhold” and thus the mere fact that a parent keeps a child longer than the prescribed access period would not necessarily constitute a withholding and thus a detention of the child. Further, to prove the requisite intent for the offence, there must be proof that the act was done for the express purpose of depriving the other parent of possession of the child. Mere recklessness would not suffice. There must be an intention to somehow put the child beyond the reach of the other parent’s custody or control. An intention not to assist or co-operate in the regaining of physical control of the child by the other parent cannot be equated with the intention to deprive that parent of possession of the child: R. v. McDougall (1990), 62 C.C.C. (3d) 174, 3 C.R. (4th) 112, 1 O.R. (3d) 247 (C.A.).

A clause in a custody order, providing that neither parent may remove any of the children without consent of the other party or a court order, was a “custody provision” of the custody order within the meaning of this section. Further, although, by virtue of the order, the accused’s wife did not have a right to custody of the child, the right of access given to her by the court order involved transfer of the lawful care or charge of the child to the mother for the duration of the access. While the order was not one contemplating joint custody, what is granted by such an “access” order is more than merely a right to visit while the child is in the possession, care or charge of the other parent. It involves transfer of the child from the possession, care or charge of the custodial parent, here the accused, to that of the non-custodial parent. If prevented from the exercise of the right to lawful care or charge of the child during these access periods, then the person entitled to such access is denied possession of the child for that period within the meaning of this section: R. v. Petropoulos (1990), 59 C.C.C. (3d) 393, 29 R.F.L. (3d) 289 (B.C.C.A.).

Where the order made under the Divorce Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. 3 (2nd Supp.), while providing for rights of access for the accused spouse, made no provision for custody of the child then the Territorial legislation making the spouses joint guardians applied and the accused could not be convicted of the offence under this section. While the order was a custody order, it did not contain “custody provisions”: R. v. Gustaw (1991), 65 C.C.C. (3d) 296 (N.W.T.S.C.).

Every custody order is subject to variation and particularly where the order is only an interim custody order, police officers before attempting to arrest a parent for abduction in contravention of such an order should take reasonable steps and make such inquiries as are appropriate and possible to ensure that the order accurately reflects the true legal relationship between the parties: R. v. McCoy (1984), 17 C.C.C. (3d) 114 (Ont. Prov. Ct.).

ABDUCTION / Consent required.

283. (1) Every one who, being the parent, guardian or person having the lawful care or charge of a person under the age of fourteen years, takes, entices away, conceals, detains, receives or harbours that person, whether or not there is a custody order in relation to that person made by a court anywhere in Canada, with intent to deprive a parent or guardian, or any other person who has the lawful care or charge of that person, of the possession of that person, is guilty of

- (a) an indictable offence and is liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding ten years; or
- (b) an offence punishable on summary conviction.

(2) No proceedings may be commenced under subsection (1) without the consent of the Attorney General or counsel instructed by him for that purpose. 1980-81-82-83, c. 125, s. 20; 1993, c. 45, s. 5.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term "guardian" is defined in s. 280(2). "Attorney General" is defined in s. 2. Section 583(h) provides that a count in an indictment is not insufficient by reason only that it does not state that the required consent has been obtained (as to notes concerning sufficiency of consent, see s. 583).

Section 17 limits the availability of the statutory defence of compulsion by threats. Section 7(3) enacts special jurisdictional rules for commission of this offence outside Canada when the offence is in relation to an internationally protected person.

The accused's spouse is a competent and compellable witness at the instance of the Crown by virtue of s. 4(2). Age is determined by s. 30 of the Interpretation Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. I-21. Section 658 provides a means of proving the age of a child.

Where the prosecution elects to proceed by indictment on this offence then the accused may elect his mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2). Where the prosecution elects to proceed by way of summary conviction then the trial of this offence is conducted by a summary conviction court pursuant to Part XXVII. The punishment for the offence is then as set out in s. 787 and the limitation period is set out in s. 786(2). In either case, release pending trial is determined by s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by a peace officer under s. 496, 497 or by the officer in charge under s. 498.

Related offences: s. 279, kidnapping and unlawful confinement; s. 279.1, hostage taking; s. 280, abduction of person under 16 years of age against will of parent; s. 281, abduction of child under 14 years of age by person other than parent, guardian or person having lawful care of child; s. 282, abduction of child under 14 years of age in contravention of custody order with intent to deprive parent, etc., of possession of child.

Defences: s. 284, where the accused establishes that the taking away, etc., was with the consent of the parent, guardian or other person having the lawful possession, care or charge of the young person; s. 285, where court satisfied that taking, etc., was necessary to protect young person from imminent harm; s. 286, no defence that young person consented to or suggested any conduct of the accused. As to mistake defence generally, see notes under ss. 19 and 150.1.

SYNOPSIS

This section describes the offence of abduction by a parent, guardian or person lawfully in charge of a person under 14 years of age whether or not there is a custody order of a Canadian court in existence. In such circumstances, the offence is committed if the person under 14 is taken, enticed away, concealed, detained, received or harboured with the intention of depriving another parent, guardian or person lawfully in charge, of possession of the person under 14. The offence may be prosecuted by indictment or summarily, but only with the consent of an Attorney General, or counsel instructed by him. The offence is punishable, on indictment, by imprisonment not exceeding 10 years.

ANNOTATIONS

A parent may be convicted of the offence under this section where he has the requisite intent notwithstanding that under provincial legislation he has a right to custody of the child: R. v. Cook (1984), 12 C.C.C. (3d) 471, 40 C.R. (3d) 270, 63 N.S.R. (2d) 35 (C.A.), leave to appeal to S.C.C. refused October 11, 1984.

While provincial legislation may define “parent” it is not clear whether such definition could apply or whether the common law definition applies. At common law “parent” is prima facie confined to the lawful mother and father and exceptionally includes the father of a child born out of wedlock: R. v. Levesque (1984), 15 C.C.C. (3d) 413 (N.S. Co.Ct.).

The term “possession” includes not only physical custody of the child but an existing right to possession. There is no requirement that the parent be shown to have taken the child out of the physical possession of the other parent: R. v. Dawson (1995), 100 C.C.C. (3d) 123, 143 N.S.R. (2d) 1, 16 R.F.L. (4th) 279 (C.A.).

DEFENCE.

284. No one shall be found guilty of an offence under sections 281 to 283 if he establishes that the taking, enticing away, concealing, detaining, receiving or harbouring of any young person was done with the consent of the parent, guardian or other person having the lawful possession, care or charge of that young person. 1980-81-82-83, c. 125, s. 20.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term “guardian” is defined in s. 280(2). The term “young person” is not defined but presumably was intended to refer to the child under the age of fourteen years referred to in ss. 281 to 283.

SYNOPSIS

This section provides a defence of consent to the abduction offences found in ss. 281 to 283. The consent must be given by the parent, guardian or other person in charge of a person under 14 who has lawful possession, care, or charge of that person. Consent of a young person provides no defence, by virtue of s. 286.

DEFENCE.

285. No one shall be found guilty of an offence under sections 280 to 283 if the court is satisfied that the taking, enticing away, concealing, detaining, receiving or harbouring of any young person was necessary to protect the young person from danger of imminent harm or if the person charged with the offence was escaping from danger of imminent harm. 1980-81-82-83, c. 125, s. 20; 1993, c. 45, s. 6.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term “young person” is not defined but presumably was intended to refer to the child under the age of fourteen years or sixteen years, as the case may be, referred to in ss. 280 to 283.

ANNOTATIONS

An honest but mistaken belief that the child is in danger of imminent harm is a defence, provided that the taking of the child was necessary, in an objective sense, based on the circumstances as the accused honestly believed them to be. In considering the defence, the jury should be instructed to consider other remedial steps which might have been taken and to consider the reasonableness of the accused’s mistaken belief: R. v. Adams (1993), 79 C.C.C. (3d) 193, 19 C.R. (4th) 277, 12 O.R. (3d) 248 (C.A.).

NO DEFENCE.

286. In proceedings in respect of an offence under sections 280 to 283, it is not a defence to any charge that a young person consented to or suggested any conduct of the accused. 1980-81-82-83, c. 125, s. 20.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term "young person" is not defined but presumably was intended to refer to the child under the age of fourteen years or sixteen years, as the case may be, referred to in ss. 280 to 283.

SYNOPSIS

This section clarifies the fact that although a defence of consent by a person in charge of a young person exists with respect to ss. 281 to 283 (see s. 284), the consent or suggestion of a young person cannot provide a defence to abduction under any of ss. 280 to 283. They might, however, be relevant to establish necessity under s. 285.

Abortion

PROCURING MISCARRIAGE / Woman procuring her own miscarriage / Definition of "means" / Exceptions / Information requirement / Definitions / "accredited hospital" / "approved hospital" / "board" / "Minister of Health" / "qualified medical practitioner" / "therapeutic abortion committee" / Requirement of consent not affected.

287. (1) Every one who, with intent to procure the miscarriage of a female person, whether or not she is pregnant, uses any means for the purpose of carrying out his intention is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for life.

(2) Every female person who, being pregnant, with intent to procure her own miscarriage, uses any means or permits any means to be used for the purpose of carrying out her intention is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding two years.

(3) In this section, "means" includes

- (a) the administration of a drug or other noxious thing;
- (b) the use of an instrument; and
- (c) manipulation of any kind.

(4) Subsections (1) and (2) do not apply to

- (a) a qualified medical practitioner, other than a member of a therapeutic abortion committee for any hospital, who in good faith uses in an accredited or approved hospital any means for the purpose of carrying out his intention to procure the miscarriage of a female person, or
- (b) a female person who, being pregnant, permits a qualified medical practitioner to use in an accredited or approved hospital any means for the purpose of carrying out her intention to procure her own miscarriage, if, before the use of those means, the therapeutic abortion committee for that accredited or approved hospital, by a majority of the members of the committee and at a meeting of the committee at which the case of the female person has been reviewed,

- (c) has by certificate in writing stated that in its opinion the continuation of the pregnancy of the female person would or would be likely to endanger her life or health, and
- (d) has caused a copy of such certificate to be given to the qualified medical practitioner.

(5) The Minister of Health of a province may by order

- (a) require a therapeutic abortion committee for any hospital in that province, or any member thereof, to furnish him with a copy of any certificate described in paragraph (4)(c) issued by that committee, together with such other information relating to the circumstances surrounding the issue of that certificate as he may require, or

- (b) require a medical practitioner who, in that province, has procured the miscarriage of any female person named in a certificate described in paragraph (4)(c), to furnish him with a copy of that certificate, together with such other information relating to the procuring of the miscarriage as he may require.

(6) For the purposes of subsections (4) and (5) and this subsection,

“accredited hospital” means a hospital accredited by the Canadian Council on Hospital Accreditation in which diagnostic services and medical, surgical and obstetrical treatment are provided;

“approved hospital” means a hospital in a province approved for the purposes of this section by the Minister of Health of that province;

“board” means the board of governors, management or directors, or the trustees, commission or other person or group of persons having the control and management of an accredited or approved hospital;

“Minister of Health” means

- (a) in the Provinces of Ontario, Quebec, New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island, Manitoba and Newfoundland, the Minister of Health,
- (b) in the Provinces of Nova Scotia and Saskatchewan, the Minister of Public Health, and
- (c) in the Province of British Columbia, the Minister of Health Services and Hospital Insurance,
- (d) in the Province of Alberta, the Minister of Hospitals and Medical Care,
- (e) in the Yukon Territory and the Northwest Territories, the Minister of National Health and Welfare;

NOTE: Definition “Minister of Health” amended 1993, c. 28, s. 78 (to come into force April 1, 1999) by re-enacting subsec. (6)(e). The text of para. (e), which is not yet in force and therefor printed in lightface italics, reads as follows:

- (e) in the Yukon Territory, the Northwest Territories and Nunavut, the Minister of National Health and Welfare;

“qualified medical practitioner” means a person entitled to engage in the practice of medicine under the laws of the province in which the hospital referred to in subsection (4) is situated;

“therapeutic abortion committee” for any hospital means a committee, comprised of not less than three members each of whom is a qualified medical practitioner, appointed by the board of that hospital for the purpose of considering and determining questions relating to terminations of pregnancy within that hospital.

(7) Nothing in subsection (4) shall be construed as making unnecessary the obtaining of any authorization or consent that is or may be required, otherwise than under this Act, before any means are used for the purpose of carrying out an intention to procure the miscarriage of a female person. R.S., c. C-34, s. 251; 1974-75-76, c. 93, s. 22.1.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The related offence of supplying noxious things, etc., for purpose of procuring a miscarriage is found in s. 288.

ANNOTATIONS

This section is of no force and effect by reason of its violation of s. 7 of the Charter of Rights: R. v. Morgentaler, Smoling and Scott (1988), 37 C.C.C. (3d) 449, 62 C.R. (3d) 1, [1988] 1 S.C.R. 30 (5:2).

Provincial legislation, whose central purpose and dominant characteristic was the restriction of abortion as a socially undesirable practice which should be suppressed or punished, is ultra vires the province. The prohibition of the performance of abortions in certain circumstances with penal consequences is traditionally regarded as a part of the criminal law. The legislation in this case was designed to prevent the defendant from opening free-standing abortion clinics within the province: R. v. Morgentaler, [1993] 3 S.C.R. 463, 85 C.C.C. (3d) 118, 25 C.R. (4th) 179.

There are no substantive rights under the Quebec Charter of Human Rights and Freedoms, R.S.Q. 1977, c. C-12, nor the Civil Code of Lower Canada, upon which an injunction could be founded to restrain a woman from having an abortion. Similarly, the common law did not recognize any right in the foetus until born alive. Additionally, a father's interest in a foetus cannot support a right to veto a woman's decision in respect of that foetus, including the decision to have an abortion. Accordingly, the courts of Quebec were not entitled to grant an injunction to the father to restrain the mother from having an abortion: Tremblay v. Daigle (1989), 62 D.L.R. (4th) 634, [1989] 2 S.C.R. 530, 102 N.R. 81 (9:0).

SUPPLYING NOXIOUS THINGS.

288. Every one who unlawfully supplies or procures a drug or other noxious thing or an instrument or thing, knowing that it is intended to be used or employed to procure the miscarriage of a female person, whether or not she is pregnant, is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding two years. R.S., c. C-34, s. 252.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The accused may elect his mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2). Release pending trial is determined by s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by the officer in charge under s. 498. The actual offence of procuring a miscarriage (abortion) is found in s. 287. However, as noted thereunder, s. 287 has been held to be unconstitutional.

SYNOPSIS

This section describes the indictable offence of supplying or procuring a drug or instrument which is to be used to cause the miscarriage of a female person. The accused must know that the item referred to above is intended to be employed to cause a miscarriage. The female need not be pregnant for the offence to be committed. Punishment upon conviction on indictment is a maximum jail term of two years.

ANNOTATIONS

In determining whether the accused knew that the drug he supplied was intended to be used to procure a miscarriage, it was irrelevant that the abortifacient was supplied to an unidentified policewoman who had no intention of using it: Irwin v. The Queen, [1968] 4 C.C.C. 119, 3 C.R.N.S. 377 (S.C.C.).

Offences Against Conjugal Rights

BIGAMY / Matters of defence / Incompetency no defence / Validity presumed / Act or omission by accused.

290. (1) Every one commits bigamy who

- (a) in Canada,
  - (i) being married, goes through a form of marriage with another person,
  - (ii) knowing that another person is married, goes through a form of marriage with that person, or
  - (iii) on the same day or simultaneously, goes through a form of marriage with more than one person; or
- (b) being a Canadian citizen resident in Canada leaves Canada with intent to do anything mentioned in subparagraphs (a)(i) to (iii) and, pursuant thereto, does outside Canada anything mentioned in those subparagraphs in circumstances mentioned therein.

(2) No person commits bigamy by going through a form of marriage if

- (a) that person in good faith and on reasonable grounds believes that his spouse is dead,
- (b) the spouse of that person has been continuously absent from him for seven years immediately preceding the time when he goes through the form of marriage, unless he knew that his spouse was alive at any time during those seven years,
- (c) that person has been divorced from the bond of the first marriage, or
- (d) the former marriage has been declared void by a court of competent jurisdiction.

(3) Where a person is alleged to have committed bigamy, it is not a defence that the parties would, if unmarried, have been incompetent to contract marriage under the law of the place where the offence is alleged to have been committed.

(4) Every marriage or form of marriage shall, for the purpose of this section, be deemed to be valid unless the accused establishes that it was invalid.

(5) No act or omission on the part of an accused who is charged with bigamy invalidates a marriage or form of marriage that is otherwise valid. R.S., c. C-34, s. 254.

CROSS-REFERENCES

“Form of marriage” is defined in s. 214.

The punishment for bigamy is found in s. 291(1). The accused may elect his mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2). Release pending trial is determined by s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by the officer in charge under s. 498.

The accused’s spouse is a competent and compellable witness at the instance of the Crown by virtue of s. 4(2). Section 291(2) provides for a means of proof of the marriage by way of certificate. Section 25(1) of the Interpretation Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. I-21, provides that “Where an enactment provides that a document is evidence of a fact without anything in the context to indicate that the document is conclusive evidence, then, in any judicial proceedings, the document is admissible in evidence and the fact is deemed to be established in the absence of any evidence to the contrary”.

The related offence of polygamy is found in s. 293 and of solemnizing a marriage in contravention of the laws of the province in s. 295.

SYNOPSIS

This section describes the offence of bigamy. Every one commits this offence who, in Canada goes through a form of marriage with a person while already married to another person, who goes through a form of marriage with another person knowing that person to be married to someone else, or who goes through a form of marriage with more than one other person simultaneously. If a resident Canadian citizen leaves Canada to do any of the things described above, that person also commits the offence of bigamy. These general prohibitions do not apply if the person in good faith and on reasonable grounds believes that his spouse is dead, if the person has been divorced from the spouse, if the spouse of the person has been absent for seven years without interruption and nothing has been heard of the spouse during that time, or if the former marriage has been declared void by a court of competent jurisdiction. A person charged under this section cannot use as a defence the fact that there would be a legal impediment to the original marriage in the place where the offence is alleged to have been committed. Unless the accused establishes otherwise, there is a presumption in this section that all forms of marriage are valid and no act or omission of the accused may be set up as invalidating the marriage.

ANNOTATIONS

All that is necessary is to prove that the ceremony was one known to and recognized by the law as capable of producing a valid marriage, and accordingly independent circumstances, such as the lack of a marriage licence, which might otherwise create a legal disability, are irrelevant: R. v. Howard, [1966] 3 C.C.C. 91, 54 W.W.R. 484 (B.C.Co.Ct.).

It has been held in a number of cases that a bona fide but mistaken belief that the first marriage had been dissolved through divorce was no defence to a charge under this section: R. v. Bleiler (1912), 19 C.C.C. 249, 1 D.L.R. 787 (Alta. S.C.); R. v. Morgan (1942), 78 C.C.C. 129, [1942] 4 D.L.R. 321 (N.S.S.C.); R. v. Brinkley (1907), 12 C.C.C. 454, 14 O.L.R. 434 (C.A.); Queneau v. The King (1949), 95 C.C.C. 187, 8 C.R. 235 (Que. C.A.). These cases are in accord with what was the leading English case of R. v. Wheat and Stocks (1921), 15 Cr. App. R. 134. In the later case of R. v. King (1963), 48 Cr. App. R. 17, R. v. Wheat and Stocks was distinguished and explained as being limited to the case where the accused's belief is that the first marriage was dissolved as a result of a divorce. In R. v. King the court held that a belief that the first marriage was invalid would be a defence although the defence was rejected on the facts of the case. Interestingly, the accused's belief that the first marriage was invalid was due to his mistaken belief that he had not been validly divorced from an even earlier marriage. R. v. Wheat and Stocks was finally overruled by the Court of Appeal in R. v. Gould (1968), 52 Cr. App. R. 152 where it was held that a belief that the former marriage had been dissolved is a defence to the charge. It was held in Gould that the belief must be an honest one based on reasonable grounds.

The defence was accepted in R. v. Woolridge (1979), 49 C.C.C. (2d) 300 (Sask. Prov. Ct.) where the trial Judge held that an honest and reasonable belief that the previous marriage had been dissolved by divorce was a defence to the charge under this section applying R. v. Haugen (1923), 41 C.C.C. 132, [1923] 2 W.W.R. 709 (Sask. C.A.) where it was held that an honest and reasonable belief that the accused's first marriage was a nullity because his first wife was still validly married was a defence.

It is submitted that such a defence is properly recognized and that a mistaken belief that the previous marriage had been dissolved by divorce should be a defence if the belief is honestly held. While some cases have foundered on the issue of whether the accused's mistake is one of fact or law, it is submitted that applying the decision of the Supreme Court of Canada in R. v. Prue; R. v. Baril (1979), 46 C.C.C. (2d) 257, [1979] 2 S.C.R. 547, 8 C.R. (3d) 68 (a case under former s. 238(3)) this kind of mistake should be recognized as a mistake of fact. Finally, it is submitted that it is sufficient if the belief is honestly held and need not be based on reasonable grounds, applying R. v. Rees (1956), 115 C.C.C. 1, [1956] S.C.R. 640, 24 C.R. 1; D.P.P. v. Morgan (1975), 61 Cr. App. R. 136 (H.L.) and Pappajohn v. The Queen (1980), 52 C.C.C. (2d) 481, [1980] 2 S.C.R. 120, 111 D.L.R. (3d) 1.

PUNISHMENT / Certificate of marriage.

291. (1) Every one who commits bigamy is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding five years.

(2) For the purposes of this section a certificate of marriage issued under the authority of law is evidence of the marriage or form of marriage to which it relates without proof of the signature or official character of the person by whom it purports to be signed. R.S., c. C-34, s. 255.

CROSS-REFERENCES

“Form of marriage” is defined in s. 214.

The offence of bigamy is defined in s. 290. The accused may elect his mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2). Release pending trial is determined by s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by the officer in charge under s. 498.

The accused’s spouse is a competent and compellable witness at the instance of the Crown by virtue of s. 4(2).

With respect to subsec. (2), note that s. 25(1) of the Interpretation Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. I-21 provides that “Where an enactment provides that a document is evidence of a fact without anything in the context to indicate that the document is conclusive evidence, then, in any judicial proceedings, the document is admissible in evidence and the fact is deemed to be established in the absence of any evidence to the contrary”.

For notes respecting mistake generally, see notes under s. 19.

The related offence of polygamy is found in s. 293 and of solemnizing a marriage in contravention of the laws of the province in s. 295.

PROCURING FEIGNED MARRIAGE / Corroboration.

292. (1) Every person who procures or knowingly aids in procuring a feigned marriage between himself and another person is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding five years.

(2) No person shall be convicted of an offence under this section on the evidence of only one witness unless the evidence of that witness is corroborated in a material particular by evidence that implicates the accused. R.S., c. C-34, s. 256; 1980-81-82-83, c. 125, s. 21.

CROSS-REFERENCES

“Form of marriage” is defined in s. 214.

The accused’s spouse is a competent and compellable witness at the instance of the Crown by virtue of s. 4(2).

The accused may elect his mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2). Release pending trial is determined by s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by the officer in charge under s. 498.

The related offence of pretending to solemnize a marriage is found in s. 294 and of solemnizing a marriage in contravention of the laws of the province in s. 295.

SYNOPSIS

This section imposes criminal liability upon any person, male or female, who procures or knowingly aids in procuring a feigned marriage between that person and another person. The offence is indictable and the maximum sentence is a term of five years of imprisonment. No person can be convicted of an offence under this section on the uncorroborated evidence of one witness.

ANNOTATIONS

In R. v. B.(G.) (1990), 56 C.C.C. (3d) 161, [1990] 2 S.C.R. 3, [1990] 4 W.W.R. 577, 77 C.R. (3d) 327 (5:0) the court considered the effect of, now repealed, s. 586 which provided that no person shall be convicted on the unsworn evidence of a child, "unless the evidence of the child is corroborated in a material particular by evidence that implicates the accused". The wording is thus almost identical to subsec. (2) of this section. It was there held that the requirement that the corroborating evidence implicate the accused requires only that the evidence confirm in some material particular the story of the witness giving the evidence which required corroboration. The confirming evidence need not also itself implicate the accused.

POLYGAMY / Evidence in case of polygamy.

293. (1) Every one who

- (a) practises or enters into or in any manner agrees or consents to practise or enter into
    - (i) any form of polygamy, or
    - (ii) any kind of conjugal union with more than one person at the same time, whether or not it is by law recognized as a binding form of marriage; or
  - (b) celebrates, assists or is a party to a rite, ceremony, contract or consent that purports to sanction a relationship mentioned in subparagraph (a)(i) or (ii),
- is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding five years.

(2) Where an accused is charged with an offence under this section, no averment or proof of the method by which the alleged relationship was entered into, agreed to or consented to is necessary in the indictment or upon the trial of the accused, nor is it necessary on the trial to prove that the persons who are alleged to have entered into the relationship had or intended to have sexual intercourse. R.S., c. C-34, s. 257.

CROSS-REFERENCES

"Form of marriage" is defined in s. 214.

The accused's spouse is a competent and compellable witness at the instance of the Crown by virtue of s. 4(2).

The accused may elect his mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2). Release pending trial is determined by s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by the officer in charge under s. 498.

The related offence of bigamy is found in s. 291 and of solemnizing a marriage in contravention of the laws of the province in s. 295.

SYNOPSIS

This section makes it a criminal offence to agree, consent to or practise any form of polygamy or conjugal union with more than one person at the same time. It also imposes criminal liability on anyone who celebrates, assists or is party to a rite, ceremony, contract or consent that sanctions a relationship described above. The offence is indictable with a maximum term of imprisonment of five years. Subsection (2) states that it is not necessary to include in the indictment or to prove at trial the method by which the relationship was entered into, agreed to or consented to, nor is it necessary to establish at trial that the parties had, or intended to have, sexual intercourse.

ANNOTATIONS

The words "any kind of conjugal union" in subsec. (1)(a)(ii) predicate some form of union under the guise of marriage and were not intended to apply to adultery even where one or both of the persons are married at the time they are living together: R. v. Tolhurst, R. v. Wright (1937), 68 C.C.C. 319, [1937] 3 D.L.R. 808 (Ont. C.A.).

Unlawful Solemnization of Marriage

PRETENDING TO SOLEMNIZE MARRIAGE.

294. Every one who

- (a) solemnizes or pretends to solemnize a marriage without lawful authority, the proof of which lies on him, or
  - (b) procures a person to solemnize a marriage knowing that he is not lawfully authorized to solemnize the marriage,
- is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding two years. R.S., c. C-34, s. 258.

CROSS-REFERENCES

“Form of marriage” is defined in s. 214.

The accused’s spouse is a competent and compellable witness at the instance of the Crown by virtue of s. 4(2).

The accused may elect his mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2). Release pending trial is determined by s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by the officer in charge under s. 498.

The related offence of procuring a feigned marriage is found in s. 292.

SYNOPSIS

This section prohibits any person who does not have the lawful authority to do so from solemnizing or pretending to solemnize a marriage. It also prohibits any person from knowingly procuring an unqualified person to solemnize a marriage. A person charged with an offence under this section must prove that he is, in fact, lawfully entitled to solemnize a marriage – a requirement that has potential Charter implications.

A person convicted under this section is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to a maximum term of imprisonment of two years.

MARRIAGE CONTRARY TO LAW.

295. Every one who, being lawfully authorized to solemnize marriage, knowingly and wilfully solemnizes a marriage in contravention of the laws of the province in which the marriage is solemnized is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding two years. R.S., c. C-34, s. 259.

CROSS-REFERENCES

“Form of marriage” is defined in s. 214.

The accused may elect his mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2). Release pending trial is determined by s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by the officer in charge under s. 498.

The related offence of bigamy is found in s. 291 and of polygamy in s. 293.

SYNOPSIS

This section imposes criminal liability on any person who is lawfully authorized to solemnize a marriage, but who knowingly and wilfully solemnizes a marriage which contravenes the law of the province where the marriage takes place. The offence is indictable and the maximum term of imprisonment is two years.

Blasphemous Libel

OFFENCE / Question of fact / Saving.

296. (1) Every one who publishes a blasphemous libel is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding two years.

(2) It is a question of fact whether or not any matter that is published is a blasphemous libel.

(3) No person shall be convicted of an offence under this section for expressing in good faith and in decent language, or attempting to establish by argument used in good faith and conveyed in decent language, an opinion upon a religious subject. R.S., c. C-34, s. 260.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term "publishes" is not defined in this section, but it may be that the definition in s. 299 applies in part to this section as well as to the defamatory libel offence.

The accused may elect his mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2). Release pending trial is determined by s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by the officer in charge under s. 498.

Section 584(1) provides that no count for publishing a blasphemous libel is insufficient by reason only that it does not set out the words that are alleged to be libellous. However, under s. 587(1)(e), particulars may be ordered further describing any writing or words that are the subject of the charge. Under s. 584(2), a count for publishing a libel may charge that the published matter was written in a sense that, by innuendo, made the publication thereof criminal and may specify that sense without any introductory assertion to show how the matter was written in that sense. Under s. 584(3), it is sufficient to prove that the matter was libellous, with or without innuendo.

Seditious libel is dealt with in ss. 59 to 61, defamatory libel in ss. 297 to 317 and hate propaganda in ss. 318 to 320. Publishing false news is an offence under s. 181.

Defamatory Libel

DEFINITION OF "NEWSPAPER".

297. In sections 303, 304 and 308, "newspaper" means any paper, magazine or periodical containing public news, intelligence or reports of events, or any remarks or observations thereon, printed for sale and published periodically or in parts or numbers, at intervals not exceeding thirty-one days between the publication of any two such papers, parts or numbers, and any paper, magazine or periodical printed in order to be dispersed and made public, weekly or more often, or at intervals not exceeding thirty-one days, that contains advertisements, exclusively or principally. R.S., c. C-34, s. 261.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The calculation of days is dealt with in s. 27 of the Interpretation Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. I-21.

DEFINITION / Mode of expression.

298. (1) A defamatory libel is matter published, without lawful justification or excuse, that is likely to injure the reputation of any person by exposing him to hatred, contempt or ridicule, or that is designed to insult the person of or concerning whom it is published.

(2) A defamatory libel may be expressed directly or by insinuation or irony

(a) in words legibly marked upon any substance; or

(b) by any object signifying a defamatory libel otherwise than by words. R.S., c. C-34, s. 262.

CROSS-REFERENCES

Publishing a libel is defined in s. 299.

The punishment for publishing a defamatory libel known to be false is a maximum of five years under s. 300. The punishment for publishing a defamatory libel is a maximum of two years under

s. 301. The punishment for extortion by libel is a maximum of five years under s. 302. For all these offences, the accused may elect his mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2). Release pending trial is determined by s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by the officer in charge under s. 498.

Liability of the proprietor of a newspaper is dealt with in s. 303. Various defences or excuses for publishing a defamatory libel are set out in ss. 304 to 316. Section 317 provides for a special verdict in the case of defamatory libel. Section 584(1) provides that no count for publishing a defamatory libel is insufficient by reason only that it does not set out the words that are alleged to be libellous. However, under s. 587(1)(e), particulars may be ordered further describing any writing or words that are the subject of the charge. Under s. 584(2), a count for publishing a libel may charge that the published matter was written in a sense that, by innuendo, made the publication thereof criminal and may specify that sense without any introductory assertion to show how the matter was written in that sense. Under s. 584(3), it is sufficient to prove that the matter was libellous, with or without innuendo. The plea of justification in cases of defamatory libel is dealt with in ss. 607(2), 611 and 612. Under s. 612(3), where the accused is convicted, the court may consider, in pronouncing sentence, whether the offence was aggravated or mitigated by the plea. Under s. 637, a private prosecutor has no right to stand jurors aside. Sections 728 and 729 make special provision for costs in cases of defamatory libel.

Seditious libel is dealt with in ss. 59 to 61, blasphemous libel in s. 296 and hate propaganda in ss. 318 to 320. Publishing false news is an offence under s. 181.

SYNOPSIS

This section defines defamatory libel and specifies that it may be expressed directly or by insinuation or irony in words legibly marked or through an object otherwise than by words. A defamatory libel is a matter published that is likely to injure the reputation of any person by exposing that person to hatred, contempt, ridicule or insult. Furthermore, a defamatory libel must be published without lawful justification.

PUBLISHING.

299. A person publishes a libel when he

- (a) exhibits it in public;
  - (b) causes it to be read or seen; or
  - (c) shows or delivers it, or causes it to be shown or delivered, with intent that it should be read or seen by the person whom it defames or by any other person.
- R.S., c. C-34, s. 263.

PUNISHMENT OF LIBEL KNOWN TO BE FALSE.

300. Every one who publishes a defamatory libel that he knows is false is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding five years.
R.S., c. C-34, s. 264.

CROSS-REFERENCES

Defamatory libel is defined in s. 298 and see cross-references under that section concerning related offences, special procedural provisions and defences or excuses. Publishing is defined in s. 299. As to vicarious liability of a newspaper proprietor, see s. 303.

The accused may elect his mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2). Release pending trial is determined by s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by the officer in charge under s. 498.

SYNOPSIS

This section imposes criminal liability upon any person who publishes, as defined in

s. 299, a defamatory libel, as defined in s. 298. In order to be convicted under this section, the accused person must know that the defamatory libel is false. Any person convicted under this section is guilty of an indictable offence with a maximum term of imprisonment of five years.

ANNOTATIONS

This section is a reasonable limit on freedom of expression as guaranteed by s. 2(b) of the Charter and is, therefore, valid: R. v. Stevens (1995), 96 C.C.C. (3d) 238, [1995] 4 W.W.R. 153, 91 W.A.C. 81 (Man. C.A.). See also R. v. Lucas (unreported, January 12, 1996, Sask. C.A.) [096/059/029-6 pp.].

This offence requires proof of an intention to publish defamatory libel, knowledge of falsity and an intention to defame: R. v. Lucas, supra. See also R. v. Stevens, supra.

PUNISHMENT FOR DEFAMATORY LIBEL.

301. Every one who publishes a defamatory libel is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding two years. R.S., c. C-34, s. 265.

CROSS-REFERENCES

Defamatory libel is defined in s. 298 and see cross-references under that section concerning related offences, special procedural provisions and defences or excuses. Publishing is defined in s. 299. As to vicarious liability of a newspaper proprietor, see s. 303.

The accused may elect his mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2). Release pending trial is determined by s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by the officer in charge under s. 498.

SYNOPSIS

This section provides that a person who is convicted of publishing a defamatory libel is guilty of an indictable offence, with a maximum term of imprisonment of two years. The difference between this section and s. 300 is that there is no requirement in this section that the libel be false.

EXTORTION BY LIBEL / Idem / Punishment.

302. (1) Every one commits an offence who, with intent

(a) to extort money from any person, or

(b) to induce a person to confer on or procure for another person an appointment or office of profit or trust, publishes or threatens to publish or offers to abstain from publishing or to prevent the publication of a defamatory libel.

(2) Every one commits an offence who, as the result of the refusal of any person to permit money to be extorted or to confer or procure an appointment or office of profit or trust, publishes or threatens to publish a defamatory libel.

(3) Every one who commits an offence under this section is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding five years. R.S., c. C-34, s. 266.

CROSS-REFERENCES

Defamatory libel is defined in s. 298 and see cross-references under that section concerning related offences, special procedural provisions and defences or excuses. Publishing is defined in s. 299. The accused may elect his mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2). Release pending trial is determined by s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by the officer in charge under s. 498.

The general extortion offence is found in s. 346.

SYNOPSIS

This section describes the offence of extortion by libel. It states that anyone who, with intent, publishes, threatens to publish, or offers to refrain from or prevent the publication of a defamatory libel in order to extort money from a person or to induce that person to confer an appointment or office of profit or trust upon another person, commits an offence. An offence under this section is also committed if, as a result of a person's refusal to do any of the things described in subsec. (1), anyone threatens to publish, or in fact publishes a defamatory libel. The offences set out in this section are indictable and carry a maximum term of imprisonment of five years.

PROPRIETOR OF NEWSPAPER PRESUMED RESPONSIBLE / General authority to manager when negligence / Selling newspapers.

303. (1) The proprietor of a newspaper shall be deemed to publish defamatory matter that is inserted and published therein, unless he proves that the defamatory matter was inserted in the newspaper without his knowledge and without negligence on his part.

(2) Where the proprietor of a newspaper gives to a person general authority to manage or conduct the newspaper as editor or otherwise, the insertion by that person of defamatory matter in the newspaper shall, for the purposes of subsection (1), be deemed not to be negligence on the part of the proprietor unless it is proved that

- (a) he intended the general authority to include authority to insert defamatory matter in the newspaper; or
- (b) he continued to confer general authority after he knew that it had been exercised by the insertion of defamatory matter in the newspaper.

(3) No person shall be deemed to publish a defamatory libel by reason only that he sells a number or part of a newspaper that contains a defamatory libel, unless he knows that the number or part contains defamatory matter or that defamatory matter is habitually contained in the newspaper. R.S., c. C-34, s. 267.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term "newspaper" is defined in s. 303. Defamatory libel is defined in s. 298 and see cross-references under that section concerning related offences, special procedural provisions and defences or excuses. Publishing is defined in s. 299. The liability of a party generally is set out in ss. 21 and 22.

SYNOPSIS

This section sets out the conditions under which a proprietor or vendor of a newspaper, as that term is defined in s. 297, is deemed to publish defamatory matter. The proprietor of a newspaper must prove that any defamatory matter in his newspaper was inserted without his knowledge and without negligence on his part or else he is deemed to have published it. If the proprietor has given authority to another person as manager or editor of the newspaper and that person has inserted defamatory matter in the newspaper, no negligence will be ascribed to the proprietor unless the prosecution proves that he intended to give the manager or editor the authority to insert defamatory matter in the newspaper, or allowed the manager or editor to continue to exercise general authority after the defamatory matter had been inserted in the newspaper. Subsection (3) states that a vendor of newspapers containing a defamatory libel will not be deemed to have published that defamatory libel unless the vendor knows that such material is, in fact, contained in the newspaper or that the newspaper habitually carries it.

SELLING BOOK CONTAINING DEFAMATORY LIBEL / Sale by servant.

304. (1) No person shall be deemed to publish a defamatory libel by reason only that he sells a book, magazine, pamphlet or other thing, other than a newspaper that contains a defamatory matter if, at the time of the sale, he does not know that it contains the defamatory matter.

(2) Where a servant, in the course of his employment, sells a book, magazine, pamphlet or other thing, other than a newspaper, the employer shall be deemed not to publish any defamatory matter contained therein unless it is proved that the employer authorized the sale knowing that

(a) defamatory matter was contained therein; or

(b) defamatory matter was habitually contained therein, in the case of a periodical.
R.S., c. C-34, s. 268.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term "newspaper" is defined in s. 303. Defamatory libel is defined in s. 298 and see cross-references under that section concerning related offences, special procedural provisions and other defences or excuses. Publishing is defined in s. 299. As to vicarious liability of a newspaper proprietor, see s. 303.

SYNOPSIS

This section sets out the circumstances in which a person who sells a book, pamphlet or publication other than a newspaper that contains defamatory matter is not deemed to have published a defamatory libel. The seller of the item mentioned in subsec. (1) is not deemed to have published a defamatory libel if, at the time of sale, he did not know that the item contained defamatory matter. Similarly, where an employee sells an item containing defamatory matter, the employer will not be deemed to have published that defamatory matter unless the prosecution proves that the employer knew the matter was contained in the item or, in the case of a periodical, that the item habitually contained such defamatory matter.

PUBLISHING PROCEEDINGS OF COURTS OF JUSTICE.

305. No person shall be deemed to publish a defamatory libel by reason only that he publishes defamatory matter

(a) in a proceeding held before or under the authority of a court exercising judicial authority; or

(b) in an inquiry made under the authority of an Act or by order of Her Majesty, or under the authority of a public department or a department of the government of a province. R.S., c. C-34, s. 269.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term "newspaper" is defined in s. 303. Defamatory libel is defined in s. 298 and see cross-references under that section concerning related offences, special procedural provisions and other defences or excuses. Publishing is defined in s. 299. As to vicarious liability of a newspaper proprietor, see s. 303.

Note s. 166 which makes it an offence to publish certain judicial proceedings calculated to injure public morals or respecting marriage, judicial separation or restitution of conjugal rights.

SYNOPSIS

This section describes a general exemption from the provisions that apply to publishing defamatory libel for those persons who publish defamatory matter in a court proceeding or an authorized inquiry.

PARLIAMENTARY PAPERS.

306. No person shall be deemed to publish a defamatory libel by reason only that he

(a) publishes to the Senate or House of Commons or to a legislature of a province, defamatory matter contained in a petition to the Senate or House of Commons or to the legislature of a province, as the case may be;

- (b) publishes by order or under the authority of the Senate or House of Commons or of a legislature of a province, a paper containing defamatory matter; or
- (c) publishes, in good faith and without ill-will to the person defamed, an extract from or abstract of a petition or paper mentioned in paragraph (a) or (b). R.S., c. C-34, s. 270.

CROSS-REFERENCES

Defamatory libel is defined in s. 298 and see cross-references under that section concerning related offences, special procedural provisions and other defences or excuses. Publishing is defined in s. 299. As to vicarious liability of a newspaper proprietor, see s. 303. Section 307 creates the related defence of publication of fair reports of parliamentary, legislative or judicial proceedings. Section 316 contains provision for proof that the matter alleged to be defamatory was published by order or under the authority of Parliament or of the legislature.

SYNOPSIS

This section, like s. 305, describes a general exemption from the provisions that apply to publishing a defamatory libel for those persons who publish defamatory matter contained in a petition to the Senate, House of Commons, or legislature of a province, who publish under the authority of these bodies a paper containing defamatory matter, or who publish, in good faith and without ill-will to the person defamed, an extract from or abstract of the documents referred to above.

FAIR REPORTS OF PARLIAMENTARY OR JUDICIAL PROCEEDINGS / Divorce proceedings an exception.

307. (1) No person shall be deemed to publish a defamatory libel by reason only that he publishes in good faith, for the information of the public, a fair report of the proceedings of the Senate or House of Commons or the legislature of a province, or a committee thereof, or of the public proceedings before a court exercising judicial authority, or publishes, in good faith, any fair comment on any such proceedings.

(2) This section does not apply to a person who publishes a report of evidence taken or offered in any proceeding before the Senate or House of Commons or any committee thereof, on a petition or bill relating to any matter of marriage or divorce, if the report is published without authority from or leave of the House in which the proceeding is held or is contrary to any rule, order or practice of that House. R.S., c. C-34, s. 271.

CROSS-REFERENCES

Defamatory libel is defined in s. 298 and see cross-references under that section concerning related offences, special procedural provisions and other defences or excuses. Publishing is defined in s. 299. As to vicarious liability of a newspaper proprietor, see s. 303. Section 306 creates the related defence of publication of parliamentary or legislative papers. Section 316 contains provision for proof that the matter alleged to be defamatory was published by order or under the authority of Parliament or of the legislature.

With reference to subsec. (2) of this section, note that s. 166 makes it an offence to publish certain judicial proceedings calculated to injure public morals or respecting marriage, judicial separation or restitution of conjugal rights.

SYNOPSIS

This section, like ss. 305 and 306, establishes an exemption from the provisions that apply to publishing a defamatory libel to a person who publishes in good faith or for public information, a fair report of, or fair comment on the proceedings of the Senate, House of Commons, provincial legislature, a committee of any of these bodies, or court matters that are open to the public. This exemption does not apply in relation to publication of evidence or a petition or bill relating to a matter of marriage or divorce in proceedings before the Senate, the House of Commons, or any committee thereof if the person who publishes the material does so without the authority of the appropriate House or the publication is contrary to any rule, order or practice of that House.

FAIR REPORT OF PUBLIC MEETING.

308. No person shall be deemed to publish a defamatory libel by reason only that he publishes in good faith, in a newspaper, a fair report of the proceedings of any public meeting if

- (a) the meeting is lawfully convened for a lawful purpose and is open to the public;
- (b) the report is fair and accurate;
- (c) the publication of the matter complained of is for the public benefit; and
- (d) he does not refuse to publish in a conspicuous place in the newspaper a reasonable explanation or contradiction by the person defamed in respect of the defamatory matter. R.S., c. C-34, s. 272.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term "newspaper" is defined in s. 303. Defamatory libel is defined in s. 298 and see cross-references under that section concerning related offences, special procedural provisions and other defences or excuses. Publishing is defined in s. 299. As to vicarious liability of a newspaper proprietor, see s. 303. The general defence of publication for the public benefit is set out in s. 309.

SYNOPSIS

This section provides an exemption for any person who publishes defamatory libel when that person publishes in a newspaper, in good faith, a fair report of what occurred at a public meeting. The person who publishes the report may only resort to this exemption if the meeting is lawfully convened for a lawful purpose and is open to the public, the report is fair and accurate, the publication of the material complained of is for the benefit of the public, and the person agrees to publish, in a conspicuous place in the newspaper, any explanation or contradiction of the offending material by the person defamed. This section applies to publication of defamatory matter in newspapers only.

PUBLIC BENEFIT.

309. No person shall be deemed to publish a defamatory libel by reason only that he publishes defamatory matter that, on reasonable grounds, he believes is true, and that is relevant to any subject of public interest, the public discussion of which is for the public benefit. R.S., c. C-34, s. 273.

CROSS-REFERENCES

Defamatory libel is defined in s. 298 and see cross-references under that section concerning related offences, special procedural provisions and other defences or excuses. Note however, in particular, that the plea of justification in cases of defamatory libel is dealt with in ss. 607(2), 611 and 612. Under s. 612(3), where the accused is convicted, the court may consider, in pronouncing sentence, whether the offence was aggravated or mitigated by the plea. Publishing is defined in s. 299. As to vicarious liability of a newspaper proprietor, see s. 303. The special defence of publication for the public benefit in a newspaper is set out in s. 308.

SYNOPSIS

This section provides a more general exemption than the one found in s. 308 in that it applies to any publication, not just newspapers. So long as the person who publishes the defamatory matter believes, on reasonable grounds, that the material is true, relevant to a subject of public interest and that it is in the public interest to discuss it, the exemption in this section applies.

FAIR COMMENT ON PUBLIC PERSON OR WORK OF ART.

310. No person shall be deemed to publish a defamatory libel by reason only that he publishes fair comments

- (a) on the public conduct of a person who takes part in public affairs; or
- (b) on a published book or other literary production, or on any composition or work of art or performance publicly exhibited, or on any other communication made to the public on any subject, if the comments are confined to criticism thereof. R.S., c. C-34, s. 274.

CROSS-REFERENCES

Defamatory libel is defined in s. 298 and see cross-references under that section concerning related offences, special procedural provisions and other defences or excuses. Publishing is defined in s. 299. As to vicarious liability of a newspaper proprietor, see s. 303.

SYNOPSIS

This section provides that a person will not be deemed to have published a defamatory libel by reason of the fact that he makes fair comment about the public conduct of a person who participates in public affairs. Similarly, a person who makes fair comment in the form of criticism of any published book, literary production, publicly exhibited composition, work of art, performance or other communication, may avail himself of this section. This section allows for fair comment on public matters only.

WHEN TRUTH A DEFENCE.

311. No person shall be deemed to publish a defamatory libel where he proves that the publication of the defamatory matter in the manner in which it was published was for the public benefit at the time when it was published and that the matter itself was true. R.S., c. C-34, s. 275.

CROSS-REFERENCES

Defamatory libel is defined in s. 298 and see cross-references under that section concerning related offences, special procedural provisions and other defences or excuses. Note however, in particular, that the plea of justification in cases of defamatory libel is dealt with in ss. 607(2), 611 and 612. Under s. 612(3), where the accused is convicted, the court may consider, in pronouncing sentence, whether the offence was aggravated or mitigated by the plea. Publishing is defined in s. 299. As to vicarious liability of a newspaper proprietor, see s. 303. The related defence of publication for the public benefit is set out in ss. 308 and 309.

SYNOPSIS

This section, like s. 309, provides an exemption from criminal liability under s. 300 for any person who publishes defamatory matter that was true and the publication of which, both in manner and time, was for the public benefit. This section, unlike s. 309, however, requires the person charged under s. 300 to prove both of these elements.

PUBLICATION INVITED OR NECESSARY.

312. No person shall be deemed to publish a defamatory libel by reason only that he publishes defamatory matter

- (a) on the invitation or challenge of the person in respect of whom it is published, or
- (b) that it is necessary to publish in order to refute defamatory matter published in respect of him by another person, if he believes that the defamatory matter is true and it is relevant to the invitation, challenge or necessary refutation, as the case may be, and does not in any respect exceed what is reasonably sufficient in the circumstances. R.S., c. C-34, s. 276.

CROSS-REFERENCES

Defamatory libel is defined in s. 298 and see cross-references under that section concerning related offences, special procedural provisions and other defences or excuses. Note however, in particular, that the plea of justification in cases of defamatory libel is dealt with in ss. 311, 607(2), 611 and 612. Under s. 612(3), where the accused is convicted, the court may consider, in pronouncing sentence, whether the offence was aggravated or mitigated by the plea. Publishing is defined in s. 299. As to vicarious liability of a newspaper proprietor, see s. 303. The related defence of publication for the public benefit is set out in ss. 308 and 309.

SYNOPSIS

This section provides an exemption to an offence under s. 300 for any person who publishes defamatory matter upon the invitation or challenge of the person to whom the matter is relevant, or which is necessary to refute defamatory matter published by another person in respect of himself. In order to qualify for this exemption, the person using it must believe that the defamatory matter is true, relevant to the invitation, challenge or refutation, and does not go beyond what could be considered to be reasonably sufficient in the circumstances.

ANSWERS TO INQUIRIES.

313. No person shall be deemed to publish a defamatory libel by reason only that he publishes, in answer to inquiries made to him, defamatory matter relating to a subject-matter in respect of which the person by whom or on whose behalf the inquiries are made has an interest in knowing the truth or who, on reasonable grounds, the person who publishes the defamatory matter believes has such an interest, if

- (a) the matter is published, in good faith, for the purpose of giving information in answer to the inquiries;
- (b) the person who publishes the defamatory matter believes that it is true;
- (c) the defamatory matter is relevant to the inquiries; and
- (d) the defamatory matter does not in any respect exceed what is reasonably sufficient in the circumstances. R.S., c. C-34, s. 277.

CROSS-REFERENCES

Defamatory libel is defined in s. 298 and see cross-references under that section concerning related offences, special procedural provisions and other defences or excuses. Note however, in particular, that the plea of justification in cases of defamatory libel is dealt with in ss. 311, 607(2), 611 and 612. Under s. 612(3), where the accused is convicted, the court may consider, in pronouncing sentence, whether the offence was aggravated or mitigated by the plea. Publishing is defined in s. 299. As to vicarious liability of a newspaper proprietor, see s. 303.

SYNOPSIS

If a person publishes defamatory matter in response to inquiries made by another person who has, or is believed to have, an interest in knowing the truth, that person, subject to certain restrictions, will not be guilty of an offence under s. 300. This excuse applies if the person who publishes the defamatory matter believes that it is true, if the defamatory matter is relevant to the inquiries and does not exceed what is reasonably sufficient in the circumstances, and if the defamatory matter is published in good faith for the purpose of responding to the inquiries.

GIVING INFORMATION TO PERSON INTERESTED.

314. No person shall be deemed to publish a defamatory libel by reason only that he publishes to another person defamatory matter for the purpose of giving information to that person with respect to a subject-matter in which the person to whom the information is given has, or is believed on reasonable grounds by the person who gives it to have, an interest in knowing the truth with respect to that subject-matter if

- (a) the conduct of the person who gives the information is reasonable in the circumstances;
- (b) the defamatory matter is relevant to the subject-matter; and
- (c) the defamatory matter is true, or if it is not true, is made without ill-will toward the person who is defamed and is made in the belief, on reasonable grounds, that it is true. R.S., c. C-34, s. 278.

CROSS-REFERENCES

Defamatory libel is defined in s. 298 and see cross-references under that section concerning related offences, special procedural provisions and other defences or excuses. Note however, in particular, that the plea of justification in cases of defamatory libel is dealt with in ss. 311, 607(2), 611 and 612. Under s. 612(3), where the accused is convicted, the court may consider, in pronouncing sentence, whether the offence was aggravated or mitigated by the plea. Publishing is defined in s. 299. As to vicarious liability of a newspaper proprietor, see s. 303.

SYNOPSIS

This section, like s. 313, provides an exemption from criminal liability under s. 300 to a person who publishes defamatory matter to another person whom the person believes, on reasonable grounds, has an interest in knowing the truth. This section applies only if the conduct of the person who gives out this matter is reasonable, if the defamatory matter is relevant to the subject, and if the defamatory matter is true or, if not true, if the person who gives the defamatory matter does so without ill-will and believes, on reasonable grounds, that the matter is true.

PUBLICATION IN GOOD FAITH FOR REDRESS OF WRONG.

315. No person shall be deemed to publish a defamatory libel by reason only that he publishes defamatory matter in good faith for the purpose of seeking remedy or redress for a private or public wrong or grievance from a person who has, or who on reasonable grounds he believes has, the right or is under an obligation to remedy or redress the wrong or grievance, if

- (a) he believes that the defamatory matter is true;
- (b) the defamatory matter is relevant to the remedy or redress that is sought; and
- (c) the defamatory matter does not in any respect exceed what is reasonably sufficient in the circumstances. R.S., c. C-34, s. 279.

CROSS-REFERENCES

Defamatory libel is defined in s. 298 and see cross-references under that section concerning related offences, special procedural provisions and other defences or excuses. Note however, in particular, that the plea of justification in cases of defamatory libel is dealt with in ss. 311, 607(2), 611 and 612. Under s. 612(3), where the accused is convicted, the court may consider, in pronouncing sentence, whether the offence was aggravated or mitigated by the plea. Publishing is defined in s. 299. As to vicarious liability of a newspaper proprietor, see s. 303.

SYNOPSIS

A person will not be criminally liable under s. 300 only by reason of the fact that he publishes defamatory matter in good faith for the purpose of seeking a redress for a private or public wrong from another person whom he believes, on reasonable grounds, to be obliged to remedy that wrong or grievance. This section requires that the person who publishes the defamatory matter believes that this material is true, that it is relevant to the remedy being sought, and that it does not exceed what is reasonably sufficient in the circumstances.

PROVING PUBLICATION BY ORDER OF LEGISLATURE / Directing verdict / Certificate of order.

316. (1) An accused who is alleged to have published a defamatory libel may, at any stage of the proceedings, adduce evidence to prove that the matter that is alleged to be defamatory was contained in a paper published by order or under the authority of the Senate or House of Commons or a legislature of a province.

(2) Where at any stage in proceedings referred to in subsection (1) the court, judge, justice or provincial court judge is satisfied that the matter alleged to be defamatory was contained in a paper published by order or under the authority of the Senate or House of Commons or a legislature of a province, he shall direct a verdict of not guilty to be entered and shall discharge the accused.

(3) For the purposes of this section, a certificate under the hand of the Speaker or clerk of the Senate or House of Commons or a legislature of a province to the effect that the matter that is alleged to be defamatory was contained in a paper published by order or under the authority of the Senate, House of Commons or legislature of a province, as the case may be, is conclusive evidence thereof. R.S., c. C-34, s. 280.

CROSS-REFERENCES

Defamatory libel is defined in s. 298 and see cross-references under that section concerning related offences, special procedural provisions and other defences or excuses. This section relates back to the defence set out in s. 307.

SYNOPSIS

This section provides a means by which a person, charged under s. 300, may prove that the matter alleged to be defamatory, was contained in a paper published by order or under the authority of the Senate or House of Commons or provincial legislature. (See s. 306(b).) The accused may raise s. 306(b) at any stage of the proceedings and, if the court is satisfied that the section applies, he shall direct a verdict of not guilty and discharge the accused. A certificate of the Speaker or clerk of the Senate, House of Commons or provincial legislature, to the effect that the matter alleged to be defamatory was contained in a paper published by order or under the authority of any of the bodies specified in s. 306(b), is conclusive evidence of facts contained in that certificate.

Verdicts

VERDICTS IN CASES OF DEFAMATORY LIBEL.

317. Where, on the trial of an indictment for publishing a defamatory libel, a plea of not guilty is pleaded, the jury that is sworn to try the issue may give a general verdict of guilty or not guilty on the whole matter put in issue on the indictment, and shall not be required or directed by the judge to find the defendant guilty merely on proof of publication by the defendant of the alleged defamatory libel, and of the sense ascribed thereto in the indictment, but the judge may, in his discretion, give a direction or opinion to the jury on the matter in issue as in other criminal proceedings, and the jury may, on the issue, find a special verdict. R.S., c. C-34, s. 281.

CROSS-REFERENCES

Defamatory libel is defined in s. 298 and see cross-references under that section concerning related offences, special procedural provisions and other defences or excuses. Note however, in particular, that the plea of justification in cases of defamatory libel is dealt with in ss. 311, 607(2), 611 and 612. Under s. 612(3), where the accused is convicted, the court may consider, in pronouncing sentence, whether the offence was aggravated or mitigated by the plea. Section 584(1) provides that no count for publishing a defamatory libel is insufficient by reason only that it does not set out the words that are alleged to be libellous. However, under s. 587(1)(e), particulars may be ordered further describing any writing or words that are the subject of the charge. Under s. 584(2), a count for publishing a libel may charge that the published matter was written in a sense that, by innuendo, made the publication thereof criminal and may specify that sense without any introductory assertion to show how the matter was written in that sense. Under s. 584(3), it is sufficient to prove that the matter was libellous, with or without innuendo.

SYNOPSIS

This section describes the kinds of verdicts that may flow from the trial on an indictment for publishing a defamatory libel. When the accused pleads not guilty to such an indictment, the jury may give a general verdict of guilty or not guilty on the whole matter. The judge is not empowered to direct the jury to find the accused guilty merely on the basis of proof of publication of the defamatory libel. The jury may, if the judge has exercised his discretion to give an opinion or direction to the jury on the matter in issue, find a special verdict.

Hate Propaganda

ADVOCATING GENOCIDE / Definition of “genocide” / Consent / Definition of “identifiable group”.

318. (1) Every one who advocates or promotes genocide is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding five years.

(2) In this section, “genocide” means any of the following acts committed with intent to destroy in whole or in part any identifiable group, namely,

- (a) killing members of the group; or
- (b) deliberately inflicting on the group conditions of life calculated to bring about its physical destruction.

(3) No proceeding for an offence under this section shall be instituted without the consent of the Attorney General.

(4) In this section, “identifiable group” means any section of the public distinguished by colour, race, religion or ethnic origin. R.S., c. 11 (1st Supp.), s. 1.

CROSS-REFERENCES

“Attorney General” is defined in s. 2. Section 583(h) provides that a count in an indictment is not insufficient by reason only that it does not state that the required consent has been obtained. [As to notes concerning sufficiency of consent, see s. 583.]

The accused may elect his mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2). Release pending trial is determined by s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by the officer in charge under s. 498.

This offence may be the basis for an application for an authorization to intercept private communications by reason of s. 183.

Procedure for an in rem proceeding against hate propaganda, which includes material advocating genocide, is set out in s. 320. The offences in relation to inciting hatred and hate propaganda are set out in s. 319. The offence of publishing false news is in s. 181. The offence of defamatory libel is dealt with in ss. 297 to 317.

SYNOPSIS

This section describes the offence of advocating or promoting genocide. Genocide is defined as the act of killing members of an identifiable group or of deliberately inflicting conditions on an identifiable group calculated to bring about the destruction of that group, in whole or in part. An identifiable group is defined as any section of the public distinguished by colour, race, religion or ethnic origin. The offence is indictable, and may be prosecuted only with the consent of an Attorney General and is punishable by imprisonment not exceeding five years.

ANNOTATIONS

There is little authority, Canadian or British, in the area of hate propaganda but as to the origins of these provisions reference might be made to The Report of the Special Committee on Hate Propaganda in Canada (Ottawa, Queen's Printer, 1966) (The Cohen Committee) and R. E. Hage "The Hate Propaganda Amendment to the Criminal Code", 28 U.T. Fac. L. Rev. 63 (1970).

PUBLIC INCITEMENT OF HATRED / Wilful promotion of hatred / Defences / Forfeiture / Exemption from seizure of communication facilities / Consent / Definitions / "communicating" / "identifiable group" / "public place" / "statements".

319. (1) Every one who, by communicating statements in any public place, incites hatred against any identifiable group where such incitement is likely to lead to a breach of the peace is guilty of

- (a) an indictable offence and is liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding two years; or
- (b) an offence punishable on summary conviction.

(2) Every one who, by communicating statements, other than in private conversation, wilfully promotes hatred against any identifiable group is guilty of

- (a) an indictable offence and is liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding two years; or
- (b) an offence punishable on summary conviction.

(3) No person shall be convicted of an offence under subsection (2)

- (a) if he establishes that the statements communicated were true;
- (b) if, in good faith, he expressed or attempted to establish by argument an opinion on a religious subject;
- (c) if the statements were relevant to any subject of public interest, the discussion of which was for the public benefit, and if on reasonable grounds he believed them to be true; or
- (d) if, in good faith, he intended to point out, for the purpose of removal, matters producing or tending to produce feelings of hatred toward an identifiable group in Canada.

(4) Where a person is convicted of an offence under section 318 or subsection (1) or (2) of this section, anything by means of or in relation to which the offence was committed, on such conviction, may, in addition to any other punishment imposed, be ordered by the presiding provincial court judge or judge to be forfeited to Her Majesty in right of the province in which that person is convicted, for disposal as the Attorney General may direct.

(5) Subsections 199(6) and (7) apply with such modifications as the circumstances require to section 318 or subsection (1) or (2) of this section.

(6) No proceeding for an offence under subsection (2) shall be instituted without the consent of the Attorney General.

(7) In this section,

“communicating” includes communicating by telephone, broadcasting or other audible or visible means;

“identifiable group” has the same meaning as in section 318;

“public place” includes any place to which the public have access as of right or by invitation, express or implied;

“statements” includes words spoken or written or recorded electronically or electromagnetically or otherwise, and gestures, signs or other visible representations. R.S., c. 11 (1st Supp.), s. 1.

CROSS-REFERENCES

“Attorney General” is defined in s. 2. Section 583(h) provides that a count in an indictment is not insufficient by reason only that it does not state that the required consent has been obtained. [As to notes concerning sufficiency of consent, see s. 583.]

Where the prosecution elects to proceed by indictment on either of these offences then the accused may elect his mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2). Where the prosecution elects to proceed by way of summary conviction then the trial of this offence is conducted by a summary conviction court pursuant to Part XXVII. The punishment for the offence is then as set out in s. 787 and the limitation period is set out in s. 786(2). In either case, release pending trial is determined by s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by a peace officer under s. 496, 497 or by the officer in charge under s. 498.

Procedure for an in rem proceeding against hate propaganda is set out in s. 320. The offence of advocating genocide is in s. 318. The offence of publishing false news is in s. 181. The offence of defamatory libel is dealt with in ss. 297 to 317.

SYNOPSIS

This section creates two offences involving the inciting or promoting of hatred against an identifiable group.

In subsec. (1), the offence is committed if such hatred is incited by the communication, in a public place, of words likely to lead to a breach of the peace.

In subsec. (2) the offence is committed only by the wilful promotion of hatred against an identifiable group through the communication of statements other than in private conversation.

Subsection (3) creates defences to the offence where it is established that the statements are true, that they amount to the good faith expression of an opinion on a religious subject, that they are reasonably believed to be true and are published with respect to a matter of public interest and to the public good, or that they are published in a good faith effort to identify hate engendering matters in order to have them removed. The wording seems to place the onus of establishing only the first of these four defences on the accused.

Both offences created in this section may be prosecuted by indictment or summarily, and are punishable, on indictment, to a term of imprisonment not exceeding two years. The offence in subsec. (2) may only be prosecuted with the consent of an Attorney General.

Subsections (4) and (5) specify that where a person is convicted of offences under this section or s. 318, the means of communication by which the offence is committed may be forfeited to the Crown, with the exception of communication facilities and equipment as described in s. 199(6) and (7).

Subsection (7) defines “communicating” to include audible or visible means, defines “identifiable group” as in s. 318, defines “public place” to include places in which the public has access by right or by express or implied invitation, and defines “statement” to include spoken, written or recorded words, and gestures, signs, or other visible representation.

ANNOTATIONS

Subsec. (2) – “Wilful” in this subsection means with the intention of promoting hatred and does not include recklessness. The offence would therefore be made out only if the accused had as their conscious purpose the promotion of hatred against the identifiable group or if they foresaw that the promotion of hatred against that group was certain or morally certain to result and communicated the statements as a means of achieving some other purpose: R. v. Buzzanga and Durocher (1979), 49 C.C.C. (2d) 369, 101 D.L.R. (3d) 488 (Ont. C.A.).

This definition of the term “wilful” was approved by the Supreme Court of Canada in R. v. Keegstra (1990), 61 C.C.C. (3d) 1, [1991] 2 W.W.R. 1, 1 C.R. (4th) 129 (S.C.C.). In that case, the court also considered the meaning to be attached to the other elements of the offence. The term “promotes” indicates active support or instigation. The term “hatred” connotes emotion of an intense and extreme nature that is clearly associated with vilification and detestation. It is an emotion that, if exercised against members of an identifiable group, implies that those individuals are to be despised, scorned, denied respect and made subject to ill-treatment on the basis of group affiliation.

It constitutes misdirection to instruct the jury that if they found that the accused in his actions was aware that there was a danger that his conduct would cause the promotion of hatred against an identifiable group and knowing this he chose to persist in his conduct then the jury could make a finding of wilfulness. At most, the jury should be instructed that they may consider the risks known to the accused: R. v. Keegstra (1991), 63 C.C.C. (3d) 110, [1991] 4 W.W.R. 136, 79 Alta. L.R. (2d) 97 (C.A.).

Although this subsection infringes freedom of expression, as guaranteed by s. 2(b) of the Charter, it constitutes a reasonable limit on that right and is therefore valid legislation: R. v. Keegstra, supra.

Subsec. (3)(a) – Reversing the burden of proof to the defence that the statements were true as provided for in this paragraph while infringing the guarantee to the presumption of innocence in s. 11(d) of the Charter is a reasonable limit and therefore valid: R. v. Keegstra, supra.

Subsec. (3)(d) – It would seem that this defence was simply provided out of an abundance of caution since it would be rare that a person could successfully invoke this exemption where it was shown that he wilfully promoted hatred: R. v. Buzzanga and Durocher, supra.

WARRANT OF SEIZURE / Summons to occupier / Owner and author may appear / Order of forfeiture / Disposal of matter / Appeal / Consent / Definitions / “court” / “genocide” / “hate propaganda” / “judge”.

320. (1) A judge who is satisfied by information on oath that there are reasonable grounds for believing that any publication, copies of which are kept for sale or distribution in premises within the jurisdiction of the court, is hate propaganda, shall issue a warrant under his hand authorizing seizure of the copies.

(2) Within seven days of the issue of the warrant under subsection (1), the judge shall issue a summons to the occupier of the premises requiring him to appear before the court and show cause why the matter seized should not be forfeited to Her Majesty.

(3) The owner and the author of the matter seized under subsection (1) and alleged to be hate propaganda may appear and be represented in the proceedings in order to oppose the making of an order for the forfeiture of the matter.

(4) If the court is satisfied that the publication referred to in subsection (1) is hate propaganda, it shall make an order declaring the matter forfeited to Her Majesty in right of the province in which the proceedings take place, for disposal as the Attorney General may direct.

(5) If the court is not satisfied that the publication referred to in subsection (1) is hate propaganda, it shall order that the matter be restored to the person from whom it was seized forthwith after the time for final appeal has expired.

(6) An appeal lies from an order made under subsection (4) or (5) by any person who appeared in the proceedings

(a) on any ground of appeal that involves a question of law alone,

(b) on any ground of appeal that involves a question of fact alone, or

(c) on any ground of appeal that involves a question of mixed law and fact, as if it were an appeal against conviction or against a judgment or verdict of acquittal, as the case may be, on a question of law alone under Part XXI, and sections 673 to 696 apply with such modifications as the circumstances require.

(7) No proceeding under this section shall be instituted without the consent of the Attorney General.

(8) In this section,

“court” means

(a) in the Province of Quebec, the Court of Quebec,

(a.1) in the Province of Ontario, the Ontario Court (General Division),

(b) in the Provinces of New Brunswick, Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, the Court of Queen’s Bench,

(c) in the Provinces of Prince Edward Island and Newfoundland, the Supreme Court, Trial Division, and

(c.1) [Repealed. 1992, c. 51, s. 36.]

(d) in the Provinces of Nova Scotia and British Columbia, the Yukon Territory and the Northwest Territories, the Supreme Court;

NOTE: Definition “court” amended 1993, c. 28, s. 78 (to come into force April 1, 1999) by re-enacting para. (d). The text of para. (d), which is not yet in force and therefor printed in lightface italics, reads as follows:

(d) in the Provinces of Nova Scotia and British Columbia, the Yukon Territory, the Northwest Territories and Nunavut, the Supreme Court;

“genocide” has the same meaning as in section 318;

“hate propaganda” means any writing, sign or visible representation that advocates or promotes genocide or the communication of which by any person would constitute an offence under section 319;

“judge” means a judge of a court. R.S., c. 11 (1st Supp.), s. 1; 1974-75, c. 48, s. 25; 1978-79, c. 11, s. 10; R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (2nd Supp.), s. 10; c. 40 (4th Supp.), s. 2; 1990, c. 16, s. 4; 1990, c. 17, s. 11; 1992, c. 1, s. 58.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The procedure in this section resembles the in rem procedure for obscene publications in s. 164 and thus see notes under that section respecting procedure. The procedure for obtaining a normal search warrant to obtain evidence of commission of an offence is set out in ss. 487 and 487.1.

SYNOPSIS

This section authorizes a judge of a court as defined in subsec. (8), with the consent of an Attorney General, to issue a warrant to seize copies of any publication where reasonable grounds exist for believing that the subject publication is hate propaganda and that copies are kept for sale or distribution in premises located within the court’s jurisdiction. Hate propaganda means writings, signs or representations that advocate or promote genocide or which would constitute the incitement or promotion of hatred against an identifiable group contrary to s. 319. Subsection (2) requires the judge to issue a summons to the occupier of the premises that have been searched within seven days of the issuance of the warrant, requiring him to show cause why the seized copies should not be forfeited. The owner and author of the publication may appear and oppose forfeiture. Subsections (4) to (6) describe the procedure for forfeiture, restoration and appeal.

ANNOTATIONS

A warrant may be issued under the general search warrant provision, s. 487, although the investigation relates to hate literature offences: R. v. Keegstra (1984), 19 C.C.C. (3d) 254 (Alta. Q.B.), revd on other grounds 43 C.C.C. (3d) 150, 65 C.R. (3d) 289 (C.A.).

Part IX / OFFENCES AGAINST RIGHTS OF PROPERTY

Interpretation

321. In this Part

"break" means

- (a) to break any part, internal or external, or
- (b) to open any thing that is used or intended to be used to close or to cover an internal or external opening;

"Credit card" means any card, plate, coupon book or other device issued or otherwise distributed for the purpose of being used

- (a) on presentation to obtain, on credit, money, goods, services or any other thing of value, or
- (b) in an automated teller machine, a remote service unit or a similar automated banking device to obtain any of the services offered through the machine, unit or device;

"document" means any paper, parchment or other material on which is recorded or marked anything that is capable of being read or understood by a person, computer system or other device, and includes a credit card, but does not include trade-marks on articles of commerce or inscriptions on stone or metal or other like material;

"exchequer bill" means a bank-note, bond, note, debenture or security that is issued or guaranteed by Her Majesty under the authority of Parliament or the legislature of a province;

"exchequer bill paper" means paper that is used to manufacture exchequer bills;

"false document" means a document

- (a) the whole or a material part of which purports to be made by or on behalf of a person
  - (i) who did not make it or authorize it to be made, or
  - (ii) who did not in fact exist,
- (b) that is made by or on behalf of the person who purports to make it but is false in some material particular,
- (c) that is made in the name of an existing person, by him or under his authority, with a fraudulent intention that it should pass as being made by a person, real or fictitious, other than the person who makes it or under whose authority it is made;

"revenue paper" means paper that is used to make stamps, licences or permits or for any purpose connected with the public revenue. R.S., c. C-34, s. 282; R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 42.

Theft

THEFT / Time when theft completed / Secrecy / Purpose of taking / Wild living creature.

322. (1) Every one commits theft who fraudulently and without colour of right takes, or fraudulently and without colour of right converts to his use or to the use of another person, anything whether animate or inanimate, with intent,

- (a) to deprive, temporarily or absolutely, the owner of it, or a person who has a special property or interest in it, of the thing or of his property or interest in it;
- (b) to pledge it or deposit it as security;
- (c) to part with it under a condition with respect to its return that the person who parts with it may be unable to perform; or
- (d) to deal with it in such a manner that it cannot be restored in the condition in which it was at the time it was taken or converted.

(2) A person commits theft when, with intent to steal anything, he moves it or causes it to move or to be moved, or begins to cause it to become movable.

(3) A taking or conversion of anything may be fraudulent notwithstanding that it is effected without secrecy or attempt at concealment.

(4) For the purposes of this Act, the question whether anything that is converted is taken for the purpose of conversion, or whether it is, at the time it is converted, in the lawful possession of the person who converts it is not material.

(5) For the purposes of this section, a person who has a wild living creature in captivity shall be deemed to have a special property or interest in it while it is in captivity and after it has escaped from captivity. R.S., c. C-34, s. 283.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The punishment for theft is set out in s. 334 and therefore see that section for cross-references respecting mode of trial and release pending trial as well as special procedural provisions. For notes on the defence of mistake generally, see notes under s. 19. Section 323 deals with special property or interest in the case of oyster beds. Also, note s. 588 which deems certain persons to have a property interest in property of which they have the management, control or custody. Section 583(b) deals with sufficiency of an indictment which fails to name the person who owns or has a special property or interest in property mentioned in the count. Sections 324 to 333 define other means by which theft may be committed. Offences resembling theft are set out in ss. 335 to 342. The related offence of false pretences is dealt with in ss. 361 to 363. Fraudulently obtaining food and lodging is an offence under s. 364. The general offence of fraud is contained in s. 380. The offence of secret commissions is set out in s. 426. The offence of possession of goods obtained by commission of an indictable offence is set out in ss. 354 and 355. The break and enter offences are dealt with in ss. 348 to 352. Robbery is dealt with in ss. 343 and 344. For notes on doctrine of recent possession, see s. 354.

SYNOPSIS

This section describes the offence of theft.

Subsection (1) states that a person commits theft when the person takes or converts anything with the intent to deprive the owner or person who has special property in it, to deposit it as security, to part with it under conditions that make its return dubious, or to deal with it in a manner that makes it impossible to return it in the condition it was in when it was taken. The person who commits theft as defined above must deal fraudulently and without colour of right with the subject matter of the charge. Subsection (3) states that a taking or conversion of a thing may be fraudulent even if it is done without secrecy or attempt at concealment. The section further sets out that a person who moves or causes a thing to be moved, or begins to make the thing moveable, with the intent to steal that thing, commits the offence of theft. Under subsection (4), the question of whether a converted item was taken for the purpose of conversion, or whether it is lawfully in the possession of the person who converted it is not material to an offence under this section. Finally, subsection (4) establishes that a person who has kept a wild living creature in captivity is deemed to have a special property or interest in the creature when it is in captivity and after it has escaped.

ANNOTATIONS

Special property or interest [also see s. 328] – The special property or interest must be in the very thing alleged to have been stolen. The interest a person may have in protecting himself against loss or damage resulting from the use of a forged document by and in the possession of another is neither property nor special property nor interest in the forged document. Further, the property or the special property or interest must exist at the time at which the theft, either by taking or conversion, is committed: Smith et al. v. The Queen (1961), 131 C.C.C. 403, 36 C.R. 384 (S.C.C.).

In R. v. Ben Smith; R. v. Harry Smith, [1963] 1 C.C.C. 68, 38 C.R. 378 (Ont. C.A.) convictions for theft were upheld where the accused, who were directors of a company, without the knowledge of the other directors and without any authority from the company used the company's money to purchase certain shares which they then pledged with a bank to cover a personal overdraft. It was immaterial that the accused honestly intended, with reasonable prospects, to redeem the shares and pay back the company or that they in fact did so to the eventual profit of the company or that the accused were trustees for the company. On the facts the accused had temporarily deprived the company of a special property or interest in the shares, which includes the equitable interest of a cestui que trust.

A holder of a conditional sale agreement has an interest in his goods which are in the possession of the conditional buyer: R. v. Maroney (1974), 18 C.C.C. (2d) 257, 27 C.R.N.S. 185 (S.C.C.) (5:0).

Notwithstanding that it is being illegally held, a narcotic may be the subject of a theft as defined in this section, the person with de facto ownership of the narcotic having a special property or interest in it: R. v. Grassier (1981), 64 C.C.C. (2d) 520, 50 N.S.R. (2d) 230 (S.C. App. Div.).

“Anything” – In R. v. Scallen (1974), 15 C.C.C. (2d) 441 (B.C.C.A.) it was held that the word “anything” in this section was wide enough to include a bank credit and that “anything” need not be something tangible or material.

Similarly, in R. v. Hardy (1980), 57 C.C.C. (2d) 73 (B.C.C.A.), a conviction for theft of “money” from his employer was upheld where the accused caused cheques to be made out to himself as additional salary, caused other cheques to be issued to cover repairs to his own cars and home, and instructed the company bookkeeper to offset a supplier's invoice for supplies or services delivered to the accused against the supplier's indebtedness of the company. The majority of the Court were of the view that these various money credits with the employer's banker and with its customers which the accused diverted to himself or to his benefit were “anything” within the meaning of this section. Lambert J.A. although concurring in the result was of the view that dealings whereby the employer's accounts receivable were set-off were not within the indictment, a trade account receivable not properly being described as “money”.

To come within the term “anything” in this section, the thing which is taken, whether tangible or intangible, must be of a nature such that it can be the subject of a proprietary right and the property must be capable of being taken or converted in a manner that results in the deprivation of the victim. Confidential information per se, rather than a list or other tangible object containing confidential information does not fall within this definition. Confidential information does not qualify as property for the purposes of this section and except in very unusual circumstances is not of a nature such that it can be taken or converted: R. v. Stewart (1988), 41 C.C.C. (3d) 481, 63 C.R. (3d) 305, [1988] 1 S.C.R. 963 (6:0).

A promissory note falls within the definition of property in s. 2 and is thus “anything” capable of being stolen within the meaning of this section: R. v. Cinq-Mars (1989), 51 C.C.C. (3d) 248 (Que. C.A.).

Proof of ownership – In Little and Wolski v. The Queen (1974), 19 C.C.C. (2d) 385, 52 D.L.R. (3d) 1 (S.C.C.) (5:0), an appeal from conviction for theft was dismissed where although the owner of the goods allegedly stolen was named in the indictment as “Westwood Jewellers Limited” the only evidence was that the goods were stolen from “Westwood Jewellers” which was owned and managed by one of the witnesses. The Court divided on the effect of this apparent failure to prove ownership in the entity named in the indictment. de Grandpré, J., for the majority held that: . . . if the owner of the object allegedly stolen is mentioned in the indictment and if his ownership is not proven and there are no other circumstances to indicate to the accused the true nature of the charge, an acquittal should be entered. However, when, as in the present case there cannot be any possibility for the accused to fail to identify the transaction about which they are charged, there is no reason to discharge the accused for the sole reason that the owner mentioned in the indictment has not been mentioned in the evidence. Dickson, J., for himself and Beetz, J., while agreeing that the conviction was proper, held that except in exceptional circumstances as where the theft can be inferred from the suspicious circumstances of the accused’s possession, an allegation of ownership is not mere surplusage. However, the identity of the owner is sufficiently established: . . . in instances in which the owner is named in the indictment when, (i) the evidence adduced by the Crown reasonably identifies the owner with the person named in the indictment as owner, and (ii) it is clear that failure to prove the identity of the owner with greater precision has not misled or prejudiced the accused in preparation or presentation of his defence. In this case both (i) and (ii) were met and therefore the conviction was proper.

Conversion – In R. v. Konken (1971), 3 C.C.C. (2d) 348, [1971] 3 W.W.R. 752 (B.C.C.A.), the accused was acquitted of theft through conversion of a water pump. The majority held that the accused’s explanation for retaining the pump, after overhearing conversation which might have led him to believe the pump was not abandoned as he thought, was reasonable and therefore the Crown had failed to prove that the accused had fraudulently and without colour of right converted the pump. Nemetz, J.A., agreed that the accused should be acquitted and went on to hold that where a person retains goods innocently taken the essential element to support a conversion is that the knowledge subsequently acquired by the person must be of an unequivocal and unambiguous nature. In this case no knowledge of ownership was brought home to the accused.

Intent to deprive owner – In R. v. O’Mahoney, [1966] 2 C.C.C. 264, 47 C.R. 22 (B.C.C.A.), the accused was personally responsible for any shortages in accounts. Some shortages he made up by switching funds from one account to the other, but the ultimate deficiency he always made up from his own pocket. It was held that he did not have an intent to steal as set out in s. 322(1).

“Fraudulently” including “prank” defence – In R. v. Ben Smith; R. v. Harry Smith, supra, with respect to the issue of fraudulent intent the Court stated as follows (at p. 83 C.C.C.): “In Stephen’s History of the Criminal Law, 1883, vol. II, pp. 121-2 two essential elements of fraudulent intent are stated to be ‘deceit or an intention to deceive or in some cases mere secrecy; and, secondly, either actual injury or possible injury or an intent to expose some person either to actual injury or to a risk of possible injury by means of that deceit or secrecy'. In vol. III of the same work the learned author adds to these two essential elements a possible third element, really implicit in the first one, which is that the conduct must not only be wrongful but intentionally and knowingly wrongful."

In R. v. Kerr, [1965] 4 C.C.C. 37, 47 C.R. 268 (Man. C.A.), the accused openly took a large ashtray "as a prank", intending to return it. It was held that there was no animus furandi as is required by the Code. The "prank" defence was rejected in R. v. Heminger and Hornigold, [1969] 3 C.C.C. 201 (Man. C.A.), the Court distinguishing Kerr on the facts. In this case the accused had taken a chair from a beer parlour.

In Bogner v. The Queen (1975), 33 C.R.N.S. 349 (2:1) (Que. C.A.), the Court appears to have rejected the concept of a "prank" defence. The majority held that a general dishonest state of mind in addition to the intent to do the acts constituting the actus reus was not required.

In R. v. Théroux, [1993] 2 S.C.R. 5, 79 C.C.C. (3d) 449, 19 C.R. (4th) 194 the court considered the mens rea of fraud under s. 380 of the Criminal Code. In that context, the court held that "an act of deceit which is made carelessly without any expectation of consequences, as for example, an innocent prank or a statement made in debate which is not intended to be acted upon, would not amount to fraud because the accused would have no knowledge that the prank would put the property of those who heard it at risk." It is unclear whether this would have an application to the question of prank under this section.

The element of fraud cannot be inferred merely from the accused's failure to return goods which were given to him by the owner, although the time set for the return of the goods has expired: Washington (State) v. Johnson (1988), 40 C.C.C. (3d) 546, 62 C.R. (3d) 225, [1988] 1 S.C.R. 327 (4:3).

Colour of right – In R. v. DeMarco (1973), 13 C.C.C. (2d) 369, 22 C.R.N.S. 258 (Ont. C.A.), it was held that an honestly asserted proprietary or possessory claim constitutes a colour of right notwithstanding it is unfounded in law or fact. Further, an absence of fraudulent intent may exist apart from a colour of right as conduct to be fraudulent must be dishonest and morally wrong. Also see R. v. Howson, [1966] 3 C.C.C. 348, 47 C.R. 322 (Ont. C.A.).

It was held in R. v. Pace, [1965] 3 C.C.C. 55, 48 D.L.R. (2d) 532 (N.S.S.C. App. Div.) that theft may still be committed though the object is of no use or value to the owner. The Court considered that a belief that the owner would consent to the taking if asked might constitute a colour of right defence but such a defence is not made out where the accused's belief is merely that no one would object to the taking.

The accused did not act under a colour of right where he obtained and then destroyed a promissory note evidencing his indebtedness to the complainant, because he believed that he was the victim of a fraud and feared losing his money. It was apparent that the accused was acting merely on the basis of a moral right in order to avoid having to exercise his legal rights through the court. A moral right cannot of itself found a colour of right: R. v. Cinq-Mars (1989), 51 C.C.C. (3d) 248 (Que. C.A.).

On a charge of theft involving alleged misappropriation by a travel agent, of money held in his trust account, the issue on the availability of the defence of colour of right was not what the jury thought the accused's rights were in relation to the account but whether the accused had an honest belief he had a right to the money: Lilly v. The Queen (1983), 5 C.C.C. (3d) 1, 34 C.R. (3d) 297, [1983] 1 S.C.R. 794 (7:0).

An honest belief in a moral as opposed to a legal right cannot constitute a colour of right defence. However, a belief in a moral right may negative a fraudulent intent: R. v. Hemmerly (1976), 30 C.C.C. (2d) 141 (Ont. C.A.).

Passing of property – In determining whether property passed so that the offence, if any, could not constitute theft, the focus should be on the knowledge of the accused rather than the knowledge of the victim. Where a transferor mistakenly transfers property to a recipient, and the recipient knows of the mistake, property does not pass for the purpose of the criminal law if the law of property creates a right of recovery, no matter whether the original transfer is said to be void or voidable. If the recipient then converts the property to his own use, fraudulently and without colour of right, and with intent to deprive the transferor of the property, then he is guilty of theft: R. v. Milne (1992), 70 C.C.C. (3d) 481, 12 C.R. (4th) 175, [1992] 1 S.C.R. 697 (5:0).

Where the accused received goods because the victim was induced to deliver them through the accused's fraud in providing a cheque which the accused knew would be dishonoured, then no title in the goods passed to the accused and he could be convicted of conversion. The civil law, such as the provincial Sale of Goods Act, had no application, provided that, as here, the victim had a right to recover the goods. It would be open to find an act of conversion when the accused took delivery and asserted ownership and control or later when he effected sales to third parties: R. v. Smith (1992), 77 C.C.C. (3d) 182 (Ont. C.A.), affd 84 C.C.C. (3d) 160n (S.C.C.) (5:0).

OYSTERS / Oyster bed.

323. (1) Where oysters and oyster brood are in oyster beds, layings or fisheries that are the property of any person and are sufficiently marked out or known as the property of that person, that person shall be deemed to have a special property or interest in them.

(2) An indictment is sufficient if it describes an oyster bed, laying or fishery by name or in any other way, without stating that it is situated in a particular territorial division. R.S., c. C-34, s. 284.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The punishment for theft is set out in s. 334 and therefore see that section for cross-references respecting mode of trial and release pending trial as well as special procedural provisions. Also, note s. 588 which deems certain persons to have a property interest in property of which they have the management, control or custody. Section 583(b) deals with sufficiency of an indictment which fails to name the person who owns or has a special property or interest in property mentioned in the count. Sections 324 to 333 define other means by which theft may be committed. Offences resembling theft are set out in ss. 335 to 342.

THEFT BY BAILEE OF THINGS UNDER SEIZURE.

324. Every one who is a bailee of anything that is under lawful seizure by a peace officer or public officer in the execution of the duties of his office, and who is obliged by law or agreement to produce and deliver it to that officer or to another person entitled thereto at a certain time and place, or on demand, steals it if he does not produce and deliver it in accordance with his obligation, but he does not steal it if his failure to produce and deliver it is not the result of a wilful act or omission by him. R.S., c. C-34, s. 285.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term 'steal' is defined in s. 2 as committing theft. The general offence of theft is defined in s. 322. The terms "peace officer" and "public officer" are defined in s. 2. The punishment for theft is set out in s. 334 and therefore see that section for cross-references respecting mode of trial and release pending trial as well as special procedural provisions. Also, note s. 588 which deems certain persons to have a property interest in property of which they have the management, control or custody. Section 583(b) deals with sufficiency of an indictment which fails to name the person who owns or has a special property or interest in property mentioned in the count. Sections 325 to 333 define other means by which theft may be committed. Offences resembling theft are set out in ss. 335 to 342. See, in particular, criminal breach of trust under s. 336 and public servant refusing to deliver property under s. 337. The offence of secret commission by an agent is set out in s. 426. See cross-references under s. 322 respecting other related offences.

SYNOPSIS

This section describes the offence of theft by a bailee of things under seizure. When a person is the bailee of any item that has been lawfully seized by a peace officer or a public officer and is obliged by law or agreement to produce that item to a specific person at a certain time and place, or on demand, he is deemed by this section to have stolen the item if he does not deliver it in accordance with his obligation. This section only applies if his failure to deliver the item is the result of a wilful act or omission on his part.

ANNOTATIONS

It is a necessary element of the offence under this section that the goods were lawfully seized. Where there is no evidence that the bailiff had ascertained that the goods which he purported to seize were on the premises at the time there was no valid seizure. An undertaking signed by the accused acknowledging the seizure and agreeing to hold the goods as a bailee could not be taken as an admission that the goods were on the premises if in fact they were not. Moreover whatever the civil consequences of signing the undertaking, in the absence of evidence that the accused read the undertaking it could not be taken as an admission in criminal proceedings: R. v. Vroom (1975), 23 C.C.C. (2d) 345, 58 D.L.R. (3d) 565 (Alta. S.C. App. Div.) (2:1).

AGENT PLEDGING GOODS, WHEN NOT THEFT.

325. A factor or an agent does not commit theft by pledging or giving a lien on goods or documents of title to goods that are entrusted to him for the purpose of sale or for any other purpose, if the pledge or lien is for an amount that does not exceed the sum of

- (a) the amount due to him from his principal at the time the goods or documents are pledged or the lien is given; and
- (b) the amount of any bill of exchange that he has accepted for or on account of his principal. R.S., c. C-34, s. 286.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The general offence of theft is defined in s. 322. The punishment for theft is set out in s. 334 and therefore see that section for cross-references respecting mode of trial and release pending trial as well as special procedural provisions. As to meaning of "bill of exchange", see Bills of Exchange Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. B-4. Sections 324, 326 and 328 to 333 define other means by which theft may be committed. Offences resembling theft are set out in ss. 335 to 342. See cross-references under s. 322 respecting other related offences.

SYNOPSIS

This section sets out the circumstances in which an agent does not commit the offence of theft when dealing with goods entrusted to him for the purpose of sale or otherwise. An agent who pledges or gives a lien on goods is not guilty of theft if the pledge or lien is for an amount that does not exceed the sum of the amount due to him from his principal or the amount of any bill of exchange that he has accepted for or on account of his principal.

THEFT OF TELECOMMUNICATION SERVICE / Definition of "telecommunication".

326. (1) Every one commits theft who fraudulently, maliciously, or without colour of right,

- (a) abstracts, consumes or uses electricity or gas or causes it to be wasted or diverted; or

(b) uses any telecommunication facility or obtains any telecommunication service.

(2) In this section and in section 327, “telecommunication” means any transmission, emission or reception of signs, signals, writing, images or sounds or intelligence of any nature by wire, radio, visual, or other electromagnetic system. R.S., c. C-34, s. 287; 1974-75-76, c. 93, s. 23.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term “radio” is defined in s. 35 of the Interpretation Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. I-21. The general offence of theft is defined in s. 322. The punishment for theft is set out in s. 334 and therefore see that section for cross-references respecting mode of trial and release pending trial as well as special procedural provisions. Section 327(2) provides for an order of forfeiture of an instrument or device in relation to which an offence under para. (1)(b) was committed. Sections 328 to 333 define other means by which theft may be committed. Offences resembling theft are set out in ss. 335 to 342. The related offence of possession of a device for unlawfully obtaining a telecommunication facility or service is in s. 327 and unauthorized use of a computer service in s. 342.1. See cross-references under s. 322 respecting other related offences. Part VI deals with interception of private communications and note, in particular, the offence in s. 191 of possession of a device designed for surreptitious interception of private communications.

ANNOTATIONS

The word “fraudulently” does not mean that the Crown must prove that the accused deceived the utility company into willingly providing the service; the expression only connotes an intentional and deliberate taking of service that was not his to obtain: R. v. Brais (1972), 7 C.C.C. (2d) 301, 20 C.R.N.S. 190, [1972] 5 W.W.R. 671 (B.C.C.A.).

A charge of fraudulently using a telecommunication wire requires that the accused acted intentionally and deliberately with knowledge that the service was not the accused’s to obtain. Where the accused added several extension phones to the one properly installed by the telephone company the evidence failed to prove the element of knowledge that the incoming wire was not made available to him for use as he did and he was acquitted: R. v. Renz (1974), 18 C.C.C. (2d) 492 (B.C.C.A.).

The unauthorized use of the programmes and other information stored in a university computer did not involve use of a telecommunication facility within the meaning of this section notwithstanding access was gained to the computer through a remote terminal. This section is aimed at theft of information from a facility through which it is channelled; and a computer system is not a facility constructed to serve a telecommunication function as defined in subsec. (2) but is rather a data processing facility: R. v. McLaughlin (1980), 53 C.C.C. (2d) 417, [1980] 2 S.C.R. 331, 18 C.R. (3d) 339 (5:0). [Note: now see s. 342.1, infra.]

The offence under para. (b) is not made out where the accused having innocently obtained the pay-TV signal continued to watch the signal without paying the cable company: R. v. Miller and Miller (1984), 12 C.C.C. (3d) 466, 33 Alta. L.R. (2d) 97 (C.A.).

POSSESSION OF DEVICE TO OBTAIN TELECOMMUNICATION FACILITY OR SERVICE / Forfeiture / Limitation.

327. (1) Every one who, without lawful excuse, the proof of which lies on him, manufactures, possesses, sells or offers for sale or distributes any instrument or device or any component thereof, the design of which renders it primarily useful for obtaining the use of any telecommunication facility or service, under circumstances that give rise to a reasonable inference that the device has been used or is or was intended to be used to obtain the use of any telecommunication facility or service without payment of a lawful charge therefor, is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding two years.

(2) Where a person is convicted of an offence under subsection (1) or paragraph

326(1)(b), any instrument or device in relation to which the offence was committed or the possession of which constituted the offence, upon such conviction, in addition to any punishment that is imposed, may be ordered forfeited to Her Majesty, whereupon it may be disposed of as the Attorney General directs.

(3) No order for forfeiture shall be made under subsection (2) in respect of telephone, telegraph or other communication facilities or equipment owned by a person engaged in providing telephone, telegraph or other communication service to the public or forming part of the telephone, telegraph or other communication service or system of such a person by means of which an offence under subsection (1) has been committed if such person was not a party to the offence. 1974-75-76, c. 93, s. 24.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term "telecommunication" is defined in s. 326(2). Possession is defined in s. 4(3). A party to an offence is defined in ss. 21 and 22. The related offence of theft of a telecommunication service is in s. 326. See cross-references under s. 322 respecting other related offences. Part VI deals with interception of private communications and note, in particular, the offence in s. 191 of possession of a device designed for surreptitious interception of private communications.

The accused may elect his mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2). Release pending trial is determined by s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by the officer in charge under s. 498.

SYNOPSIS

This section makes it an offence for a person to manufacture, possess, sell or offer for sale, or distribute any device or component which is primarily useful in the activity described in s. 326(1)(b), i.e., theft of a telecommunication service. The section specifies that no criminal liability will be found where the accused has a lawful excuse for possession of the described device. The section puts the onus of establishing the lawful excuse upon the accused and may thereby give rise to a challenge under s. 11(d) of the Charter. Subsections (2) and (3) deal with the issue of forfeiture of the device described above upon conviction, but such forfeiture will not be imposed in respect of a telephone, telegraph or other communications equipment which is owned by a person in the business of providing a telecommunications service to the public who was not a party to the offence.

ANNOTATIONS

A device used to descramble pay-TV signals is a device the design of which renders it primarily useful for obtaining the use of a telecommunication service within the meaning of this section although the pay-TV service is carried on the same cable as the regular television service which the accused legitimately receives: R. v. Lefave (1984), 15 C.C.C. (3d) 287 (Ont. Gen. Sess. Peace).

The possession offence under this section does not require proof that the accused intended to use the device himself and would cover circumstances where the accused is in possession for storage purposes under circumstances which give rise to a reasonable inference that he knows that the intended use of the device is to be by other persons who will eventually receive them for the purposes of obtaining the telecommunications service without payment of lawful charges: R. v. Fulop (1988), 46 C.C.C. (3d) 427, 32 O.A.C. 44 (C.A.), affd 63 C.C.C. (3d) 288, 116 N.R. 79 (S.C.C.).

A computer program on a computer disc by which the accused could make long-distance telephone calls without charge constitutes an instrument or device within the meaning of this section: R. v. Duck (1985), 21 C.C.C. (3d) 529 (Ont. Dist. Ct.).

THEFT BY OR FROM PERSON HAVING SPECIAL PROPERTY OR INTEREST.

328. A person may be convicted of theft notwithstanding that anything that is alleged to have been stolen was stolen

(a) by the owner of it from a person who has a special property or interest in it;

- (b) by a person who has a special property or interest in it from the owner of it;
- (c) by a lessee of it from his reversioner;
- (d) by one of several joint owners, tenants in common or partners of or in it from the other persons who have an interest in it; or
- (e) by the directors, officers or members of a company, body corporate, unincorporated body or of a society associated together for a lawful purpose from the company, body corporate, unincorporated body or society, as the case may be. R.S., c. C-34, s. 288.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term 'steal' is defined in s. 2 as committing theft. The general offence of theft is defined in s. 322. The punishment for theft is set out in s. 334 and therefore see that section for cross-references respecting mode of trial and release pending trial as well as special procedural provisions. Also, note s. 588 which deems certain persons to have a property interest in property of which they have the management, control or custody. Section 583(b) deals with sufficiency of an indictment which fails to name the person who owns or has a special property or interest in property mentioned in the count. Sections 324, 326 and 329 to 333 define other means by which theft may be committed. Offences resembling theft are set out in ss. 335 to 342. See cross-references under s. 322 respecting other related offences.

SYNOPSIS

This section describes the circumstances in which the offence of theft may be committed by the owner of an item or a person who has a special property or interest in it. The following are situations in which the offence will have been committed: (a) when an item is taken by the owner from a person who has a special property or interest in it; (b) when a person who has a special property or interest in an item steals it from the owner; (c) when an item is stolen by a lessee from the person to whom it reverts; (d) when one of several joint owners, tenants in common or partners of or in an item, takes it from the others; and (e) when the directors, officers or members of a corporation, an unincorporated body or society steal an item from that corporation, body or society.

ANNOTATIONS

In R. v. Ben Smith; R. v. Harry Smith, [1963] 1 C.C.C. 68, 36 D.L.R. (2d) 613 (Ont. C.A.), it was held that a special property or interest included the equitable interest of a cestui que trust. In this case the accused had converted the shares of a company for their own personal use. See s. 322.

A neighbour taking care of a dwelling-house in the absence of the owner, at the owner's request, has a special property or interest in the house and the moveable property in it: R. v. Rodrigue (1987), 61 C.R. (3d) 381 (Que. C.A.).

HUSBAND OR WIFE / Theft by spouse while living apart / Assisting or receiving.

329. (1) Subject to subsection (2), no husband or wife, during cohabitation, commits theft of anything that is by law the property of the other.

(2) A husband or wife commits theft who, intending to desert or on deserting the other or while living apart from the other, fraudulently takes or converts anything that is by law the property of the other in a manner that, if it were done by another person, would be theft.

(3) Every one commits theft who, during cohabitation of a husband and wife, knowingly

- (a) assists either of them in dealing with anything that is by law the property of the other in a manner that would be theft if they were not married; or
- (b) receives from either of them anything that is by law the property of the other and has been obtained from the other by dealing with it in a manner that would be theft if they were not married. R.S., c. C-34, s. 289.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The accused's spouse is a competent and compellable witness at the instance of the Crown by virtue of s. 4(2). The general offence of theft is defined in s. 322. The punishment for theft is set out in s. 334 and therefore see that section for cross-references respecting mode of trial and release pending trial as well as special procedural provisions. Also note s. 328 which provides for theft by persons who own or have a special property or interest in property. Sections 324, 326 and 330 to 333 define other means by which theft may be committed. Offences resembling theft are set out in ss. 335 to 342. See cross-references under s. 322 respecting other related offences.

SYNOPSIS

This section sets out the general rule that no husband or wife commits theft of any item which is the property of the other during the period in which the spouses are living together. This rule does not apply when a husband or wife fraudulently takes or converts the property of the other if that spouse intends to desert or, in fact, lives apart from the other spouse. Subsection (3) stipulates that a person who knowingly assists a husband or a wife who are cohabiting in dealing with the other spouse's property in a manner that would be theft if they were not married, or who receives from either of them anything that is the property of the other and that has been obtained in a manner that would be theft if they were not married, himself commits the offence of theft.

THEFT BY PERSON REQUIRED TO ACCOUNT / Effect of entry in account.

330. (1) Every one commits theft who, having received anything from any person on terms that require him to account for or pay it or the proceeds of it or a part of the proceeds to that person or another person, fraudulently fails to account for or pay it or the proceeds of it or the part of the proceeds of it accordingly.

(2) Where subsection (1) otherwise applies, but one of the terms is that the thing received or the proceeds or part of the proceeds of it shall be an item in a debtor and creditor account between the person who receives the thing and the person to whom he is to account for or to pay it, and that the latter shall rely only on the liability of the other as his debtor in respect thereof, a proper entry in that account of the thing received or the proceeds or part of the proceeds of it, as the case may be, is a sufficient accounting therefor, and no fraudulent conversion of the thing or the proceeds or part of the proceeds of it thereby accounted for shall be deemed to have taken place. R.S., c. C-34, s. 290.

CROSS-REFERENCES

As to limitation on restitution of property see s. 491.1(3). The general offence of theft is defined in s. 322. The punishment for theft is set out in s. 334 and therefore see that section for cross-references respecting mode of trial and release pending trial as well as special procedural provisions. Sections 324, 326, 328, 329 and 331 to 333 define other means by which theft may be committed. Offences resembling theft are set out in ss. 335 to 342. See, in particular, criminal breach of trust under s. 336. The offence of secret commission by an agent is set out in s. 426. See cross-references under s. 322 respecting other related offences.

SYNOPSIS

This section describes a kind of theft which can be committed by a person who is required to account for, pay for or account for the proceeds of anything received from another person and fraudulently fails to do so. Subsection (2) creates an exception to this offence where a debtor-creditor account has been set up between two parties and a proper entry of the transaction is entered into that account.

ANNOTATIONS

Fraudulently – The element of fraud cannot be inferred merely from the accused's failure to return the goods within a reasonable time: Washington (State) v. Johnson (1988), 40 C.C.C. (3d) 546, 62 C.R. (3d) 225, [1988] 1 S.C.R. 327 (4:3).

Terms requiring accused to account – In Preston v. The Queen (1958), 28 C.R. 51, 40 M.P.R. 220 (N.S.S.C., in banco), it was held (4:1) that the conviction failed upon lack of proof of the terms of accounting and fraudulent failure to account.

This section does not apply where the accused is required to return the specific article entrusted to him: R. v. Kimbrough (1918), 30 C.C.C. 56, 41 D.L.R. 40 (Alta. S.C. App. Div.).

An accused may be convicted of the offence described by this section where he failed to account for the proceeds of a cheque which he had been given while employed by a corporation, even if the improper dealings with the cheque may have arisen after the accused was fired by the corporation. The accused's obligation to account did not necessarily cease with his termination from the company: R. v. Fischer (1987), 31 C.C.C. (3d) 303, 53 Sask. R. 263 (C.A.).

Debtor and creditor account [subsec. (2)] – The saving provision of subsec. (2) does not apply where although the accused has a debtor and creditor relationship with persons to whom he is to pay the funds, it is no part of the terms on which the accused received the funds from a third party that the funds would be an item in a debtor and creditor account between the accused and the person to whom the funds were to be paid: R. v. Lowden (1981), 59 C.C.C. (2d) 1, 15 Alta. L.R. (2d) 250 (C.A.), affd on other grounds 68 C.C.C. (2d) 531, 139 D.L.R. (3d) 257 (S.C.C.) (9:0).

Charging offence – In R. v. McKenzie (1971), 4 C.C.C. (2d) 296, 16 C.R.N.S. 374, (S.C.C.), the accused was convicted on a charge that "... unlawfully did commit theft of the sum of approximately sixteen dollars and fifty cents, the property of Dominic Louis Christian contrary to the form of the statute in such case made and provided", where as a taxi driver he failed to remit to the taxi's owner all the money due to him. On appeal by the Crown it was held (5:0), that the information was by virtue of s. 492(2)(b) [now s. 581(2)(b)] framed to declare the matter charged to be an indictable offence in the words of s. 280 [now s. 334] and was therefore sufficient and that the accused's failure to account to his employer was theft within this section.

THEFT BY PERSON HOLDING POWER OF ATTORNEY.

331. Every one commits theft who, being entrusted, whether solely or jointly with another person, with a power of attorney for the sale, mortgage, pledge or other disposition of real or personal property, fraudulently sells, mortgages, pledges or otherwise disposes of the property or any part of it, or fraudulently converts the proceeds of a sale, mortgage, pledge or other disposition of the property, or any part of the proceeds, to a purpose other than that for which he was entrusted by the power of attorney. R.S., c. C-34, s. 291.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The general offence of theft is defined in s. 322. The punishment for theft is set out in s. 334 and therefore see that section for cross-references respecting mode of trial and release pending trial as well as special procedural provisions. Sections 324, 326, 328 to 330, 332 and 333 define other means by which theft may be committed. Offences resembling theft are set out in ss. 335 to 342. See, in particular, criminal breach of trust under s. 336. The offence of secret commission by an agent is set out in s. 426. See cross-references under s. 322 respecting other related offences.

As to limitation on restitution of property see, s. 491.1(3).

SYNOPSIS

This section sets out the offence of theft committed by a person who holds power of attorney. Any person entrusted solely or jointly with a power of attorney for the sale, mortgage, or other disposition of real or personal property, who fraudulently disposes of all or part of that property or fraudulently converts the proceeds of such disposition to a purpose other than that which the power of attorney specifies, commits the offence of theft.

MISAPPROPRIATION OF MONEY HELD UNDER DIRECTION / Effect of entry in account.

332. (1) Every one commits theft who, having received, either solely or jointly with another person, money or valuable security or a power of attorney for the sale of real or personal property, with a direction that the money or a part of it, or the proceeds or a part of the proceeds of the security or the property shall be applied to a purpose or paid to a person specified in the direction, fraudulently and contrary to the direction applies to any other purpose or pays to any other person the money or proceeds or any part of it.

(2) This section does not apply where a person who receives anything mentioned in subsection (1) and the person from whom he receives it deal with each other on such terms that all money paid to the former would, in the absence of any such direction, be properly treated as an item in a debtor and creditor account between them, unless the direction is in writing. R.S., c. C-34, s. 292.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term "valuable security" is defined in s. 2 and its value determined by reference to s. 4(2). The general offence of theft is defined in s. 322. The punishment for theft is set out in s. 334 and therefore see that section for cross-references respecting mode of trial and release pending trial as well as special procedural provisions. Sections 324, 326, 328, 329 to 331 and 333 define other means by which theft may be committed. Offences resembling theft are set out in ss. 335 to 342. See, in particular, criminal breach of trust under s. 336. The offence of secret commission by an agent is set out in s. 426. See cross-references under s. 322 respecting other related offences.

As to limitation on restitution of property see, s. 491.1(3).

SYNOPSIS

This section describes the offence of theft of money held under direction. Any person who, fraudulently and contrary to a direction that money or valuable security be applied or paid to a specific person, applies to another purpose or pays to another person, part or all of the money or proceeds, commits the offence of theft. Subsection (1) does not apply if a debtor-creditor account exists, unless the direction referred to in subsec. (1) is in writing.

ANNOTATIONS

A conviction under this section was upheld where the accused, president of a brokerage house, received money for the purchase of a portion of a bond issue and on the date that the bonds were to be delivered was unable to effect delivery as the bonds were held by a bank and the accused lacked the funds to obtain delivery. The accused in the meantime had applied the money received for the purchase of the bonds to cover debts of his company. The offence under this section does not depend on the existence of a mandate. All that is required is a direction which in this case was the confirmation given by the accused confirming the sale and the date of delivery. The defence under subsec. (2) did not apply as by the terms of the agreement the accused was not to apply the funds to the credit of the victim's account generally but was to use the funds for a particular purpose, namely to pay for the bonds on the day they were issued. Finally, it was no defence to the charge that the accused was not required to keep the money in specie: R. v. Legare (1977), 36 C.C.C. (2d) 463, 78 D.L.R. (3d) 645 (S.C.C.) (4:3).

The existence of a debtor and creditor relationship in the absence of a direction is a question of fact to be decided by the jury: R. v. Finlay, [1968] 2 C.C.C. 157 (Y.T.C.A.).

Where the only evidence of a direction is the expectation on the part of the person who gave the money to the accused then the offence under this section is not made out. However, expectations known to the accused as a result of express instructions are directions and there need not also be instructions as to what not to do with the money. Thus, an accused travel agent was properly convicted where money was paid to him by his clients for the express purpose of purchasing airline tickets for a particular trip on a regular carrier and the accused accepted the money for the purpose of satisfying those expectations and then dealt with the money so as to defeat that purpose: Lowden v. The Queen (1982), 68 C.C.C. (2d) 531, 139 D.L.R. (3d) 257, [1982] 2 S.C.R. 60 (9:0).

TAKING ORE FOR SCIENTIFIC PURPOSE.

333. No person commits theft by reason only that he takes, for the purpose of exploration or scientific investigation, a specimen of ore or mineral from land that is not enclosed and is not occupied or worked as a mine, quarry or digging. R.S., c. C-34, s. 293.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The general offence of theft is defined in s. 322. The punishment for theft is set out in s. 334. For offences in relation to minerals and mines, see ss. 394 to 396.

PUNISHMENT FOR THEFT.

334. Except where otherwise provided by law, every one who commits theft

- (a) is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding ten years, where the property stolen is a testamentary instrument or the value of what is stolen exceeds five thousand dollars; or
- (b) is guilty
  - (i) of an indictable offence and is liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding two years, or
  - (ii) of an offence punishable on summary conviction, where the value of what is stolen does not exceed five thousand dollars. R.S., c. C-34, s. 294; 1972, c. 13, s. 23; 1974-75-76, c. 93, s. 25; R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 43; 1994, c. 44, s. 20.

CROSS-REFERENCES

This section applies to theft as defined in ss. 322, 324, 326, 328 to 332. The terms “property” and “testamentary instrument” are defined in s. 2.

The offence in para. (a) may be the basis for an application for an authorization to intercept private communications by reason of s. 183 or for a warrant to conduct video surveillance by reason of s. 487.01(5). Theft is an enterprise crime offence for the purposes of Part XII.2.

As to admission of photographic evidence of property, see s. 491.2. For proof by way of affidavit of ownership, lawful possession, value, and that the person was deprived of property by fraud or otherwise without the person’s lawful consent, see s. 657.1.

Where the offence, although committed outside Canada, is in relation to the use of nuclear material, see s. 7(3.4).

The offence in para. (a) is an indictable offence for which the accused may elect his mode of trial under s. 536(2). Where the prosecution elects to proceed by indictment for the offence under para. (b) then, by virtue of s. 553, it is an offence over which a provincial court judge has absolute jurisdiction and does not depend on the consent of the accused. That is, the accused does not have an election as to mode of trial, although the provincial court judge may, by virtue of s. 555(1), elect to continue the proceedings as a preliminary inquiry, in which case, the accused is deemed to have elected trial by judge and jury pursuant to s. 565(1)(a). As well, under s. 555(2), where, in the course of the trial, evidence establishes that the subject-matter of the offence is a testamentary instrument or that its value exceeds $1000 then the provincial court judge shall put the accused to his election under s. 536(2). Where the prosecution elects to proceed by way of summary conviction then the proceedings are conducted by a summary conviction court pursuant to Part XXVII. The punishment is then as set out in s. 787 and the limitation period is set out in s. 786(2). For the offence under para. (b), release pending trial is determined by s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by a peace officer under s. 496, 497 or by the officer in charge under s. 498. The value of a valuable security is determined in accordance with s. 4(2) and of a postal card or stamp in accordance with s. 4(1).

Section 588 deems certain persons to have a property interest in property of which they have the management, control or custody. By virtue of s. 583(b), an indictment which otherwise complies with s. 581 is not insufficient by reason that it fails to name the person who owns or has a special property or interest in property mentioned in the count. Offences resembling theft are set out in ss. 335 to 342. The related offence of false pretences is dealt with in ss. 361 to 363. Fraudulently obtaining food and lodging is an offence under s. 364. The general offence of fraud is contained in s. 380. The offence of secret commission is set out in s. 426. The offence of possession of goods obtained by commission of an indictable offence is set out in ss. 354 and 355. The break and enter offences are dealt with in ss. 348 to 352. Robbery is dealt with in ss. 343 and 344. Under s. 357, it is an offence to bring into or have in Canada anything that the accused has obtained outside Canada by an act that, if it had been committed in Canada, would have been the offence of theft.

SYNOPSIS

This section sets out the punishment for the offence of theft as described in the preceding sections. Where the value of the property stolen is greater than five thousand dollars or it is a testamentary instrument, the offence of theft is indictable and a person convicted of the offence faces a maximum term of 10 years' imprisonment. In other cases, the offence is either indictable, with a maximum of two years of imprisonment, or summary. This section only applies if there is no other specific provision for punishment in law [for example, theft of a credit card under s. 342 which contains its own punishment section].

Offences Resembling Theft

TAKING MOTOR VEHICLE OR VESSEL WITHOUT CONSENT / Definition of "vessel".

335. (1) Every one who, without the consent of the owner, takes a motor vehicle or vessel with intent to drive, use, navigate or operate it or cause it to be driven, used, navigated or operated is guilty of an offence punishable on summary conviction.

(2) For the purposes of subsection (1), "vessel" has the meaning assigned by section 214. R.S., c. C-34, s. 296; 1972, c. 13, s. 23; R.S.C. 1985, c. 1 (4th Supp.), s. 15.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term "motor vehicle" is defined in s. 2.

Trial of this offence is conducted by a summary conviction court pursuant to Part XXVII. The punishment is set out in s. 787 and the limitation period is set out in s. 786(2). Release pending trial is determined by s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by a peace officer under s. 496, 497 or by the officer in charge under s. 498.

The related offence of theft is defined in s. 322 and punished in accordance with s. 334. While the offence under this section is not specifically made an included offence of theft under s. 334, under s. 606(4), the accused may be permitted to plead guilty to this offence with the consent of the prosecutor.

ANNOTATIONS

The offence under this section is not an included offence of theft under s. 334. The two offences are separate and in certain fact situations the accused may be prosecuted under either section at the option of the Crown. In particular an intent by the accused to return the vehicle does not preclude his conviction for theft: LaFrance v. The Queen (1973), 13 C.C.C. (2d) 289, 23 C.R.N.S. 100 (S.C.C.) (6:3).

Mere presence in a motor vehicle that had been unlawfully taken is not per se proof that he was a party to the original taking: R. v. Eden, [1970] 3 C.C.C. 280, [1970] 2 O.R. 161 (C.A.).

CRIMINAL BREACH OF TRUST.

336. Every one who, being a trustee of anything for the use or benefit, whether in whole or in part, of another person, or for a public or charitable purpose, converts, with intent to defraud and in contravention of his trust, that thing or any part of it to a use that is not authorized by the trust is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding fourteen years. R.S., c. C-34, s. 296.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term “trustee” is defined in s. 2.

Related offences: s. 122, breach of trust by official (defined in s. 118); s. 426, secret commission; s. 331, theft by person holding power of attorney; s. 322, conversion; s. 332, theft by person holding money, etc., under direction; s. 380, fraud.

Pursuant to s. 583, an indictment, which otherwise complies with s. 581, is not insufficient by reason (b), that it does not name the person who owns the property or (c), that it charges an intent to defraud without naming the person whom it was intended to defraud.

The accused may elect his mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2). Release pending trial is determined by s. 515.

SYNOPSIS

This section describes the offence of criminal breach of trust. Any person who acts as a trustee and who, with intent to defraud and in contravention of his trust, converts the object of the trust, or any part of it, to a use not authorized by the trust, commits an indictable offence and is liable to a maximum term of imprisonment of 14 years.

ANNOTATIONS

The intent to defraud in this section is a limited intent directed to the trust duties: R. v. Patricia (1974), 17 C.C.C. (2d) 27, [1974] 4 W.W.R. 425 (B.C.C.A.).

Having charged the individual accused with the offence under this section in that “being a trustee of funds” he converted those funds to an unauthorized use, the Crown was required to prove that the accused was a trustee and it was not sufficient to prove he was party to an offence committed by the actual trustee, a corporate entity: Rosen v. The Queen (1985), 16 C.C.C. (3d) 481, 44 C.R. (3d) 232, [1985] 1 S.C.R. 83 (7:0).

PUBLIC SERVANT REFUSING TO DELIVER PROPERTY.

337. Every one who, being or having been employed in the service of Her Majesty in right of Canada or a province, or in the service of a municipality, and entrusted by virtue of that employment with the receipt, custody, management or control of anything, refuses or fails to deliver it to a person who is authorized to demand it and does demand it, is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding fourteen years. R.S., c. C-34, s. 297.

CROSS-REFERENCES

Related offences: s. 122, breach of trust by official (defined in s. 118); s. 426, secret commission; s. 322, conversion; s. 331, theft by person holding power of attorney; s. 332, theft by person holding money, etc., under direction; s. 380, fraud; s. 399, false return by public officer.

The accused may elect his mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2). Release pending trial is determined by s. 515.

SYNOPSIS

This section describes an offence which can only be committed by a public servant in the employ of the federal government or a provincial or municipal government. If such a public servant is entrusted in the course of employment with the custody, management or control of anything and refuses or fails to deliver it upon the demand of a person authorized to make a demand, that public servant commits an indictable offence under this section and is liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding 14 years.

FRAUDULENTLY TAKING CATTLE OR DEFACING BRAND / Punishment for theft of cattle / Evidence of property in cattle / Presumption from possession.

338. (1) Every one who, without the consent of the owner,

(a) fraudulently takes, holds, keeps in his possession, conceals, receives, appropriates, purchases or sells cattle that are found astray, or

(b) fraudulently, in whole or in part,

(i) obliterates, alters or defaces a brand or mark on cattle, or

(ii) makes a false or counterfeit brand or mark on cattle,

is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding five years.

(2) Every one who commits theft of cattle is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding ten years.

(3) In any proceedings under this Act, evidence that cattle are marked with a brand or mark that is recorded or registered in accordance with any Act is, in the absence of any evidence to the contrary, proof that the cattle are owned by the registered owner of that brand or mark.

(4) Where an accused is charged with an offence under subsection (1) or (2), the burden of proving that the cattle came lawfully into the possession of the accused or his employee or into the possession of another person on behalf of the accused is on the accused, if the accused is not the registered owner of the brand or mark with which the cattle are marked, unless it appears that possession of the cattle by an employee of the accused or by another person on behalf of the accused was without the knowledge and authority, sanction or approval of the accused. R.S., c. C-34, s. 298; 1974-75-76, c. 93, s. 26.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term "cattle" is defined in s. 2. Possession is defined by s. 4(3). The general theft offence is defined in s. 322 and the general offence of possession of goods obtained by crime in s. 354. Other offences in relation to cattle are in s. 444. Under s. 357, it is an offence to bring into or have in Canada anything that the accused has obtained outside Canada by an act that, if it had been committed in Canada, would have been the offence of theft.

Pursuant to s. 583(b), an indictment, which otherwise complies with s. 581, is not insufficient by reason that it does not name the person who owns the property.

The accused may elect his mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2). Release pending trial is determined by s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by the officer in charge pursuant to s. 498 for the offence under subsec. (1).

SYNOPSIS

This section sets up a code to govern the offence of stealing cattle, the punishment for this offence and some evidence and procedural provisions. Subsection (1) states that any person who, without the consent of the owner, fraudulently takes, keeps in his possession, holds, conceals, receives, appropriates, purchases or sells stray cattle is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to a maximum term of imprisonment of five years. Subsection (1) applies the same punishment to any person who fraudulently obliterates, alters or defaces a brand or mark, in whole or in part, on cattle, or who makes a false or counterfeit brand or mark on cattle. Subsection (2) describes the punishment for the more serious offence of cattle theft. This offence is also indictable but carries a maximum term of imprisonment of 10 years. Subsection (3) states that, in any proceedings under the Criminal Code, evidence that cattle are marked with a brand or mark registered in accordance with any Act is proof, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, that the cattle are owned by the registered owner of that brand. Subsection (4) puts the burden upon a person charged under subsec. (1) or (2) of proving that the cattle came lawfully into his possession or constructive possession, if that person is not the registered owner of the brand with which the cattle are marked. The accused will not bear the burden of proof under subsec. (4), if it appears that the possession of the cattle by an employee or other person on his behalf, was without the knowledge and authority, sanction or approval of the accused.

ANNOTATIONS

A charge under this section was dismissed where, although the circumstances were suspicious and established negligence on the part of the accused in that he failed to make any attempt to verify the identity of the cattle and make those inspections which a reasonably prudent rancher would make, still the Crown had not established the requisite mens rea. This case was interesting in that expert evidence was adduced as to the behaviour of cows in “mothering up” to their own calves in order to establish that certain calves were not the offspring of the accused’s own cattle: R. v. Galpin (1977), 34 C.C.C. (2d) 545 (B.C. Prov. Ct.).

TAKING POSSESSION ETC., OF DRIFT TIMBER / Dealer in second-hand goods / Search for timber unlawfully detained / Evidence of property in timber / Presumption from possession / Definitions / “coastal waters of Canada” / “lumber” / “lumbering equipment”.

339. (1) Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding five years who, without the consent of the owner,

- (a) fraudulently takes, holds, keeps in his possession, conceals, receives, appropriates, purchases or sells,
  - (b) removes, alters, obliterates or defaces a mark or number on, or
  - (c) refuses to deliver up to the owner or to the person in charge thereof on behalf of the owner or to a person authorized by the owner to receive it,
- any lumber or lumbering equipment that is found adrift, cast ashore or lying on or embedded in the bed or bottom, or on the bank or beach, of a river, stream or lake in Canada, or in the harbours or any of the coastal waters of Canada.

(2) Every one who, being a dealer in second-hand goods of any kind, trades or traffics in or has in his possession for sale or traffic any lumbering equipment that is marked with the mark, brand, registered timber mark, name or initials of a person, without the written consent of that person, is guilty of an offence punishable on summary conviction.

(3) A peace officer who suspects, on reasonable grounds, that any lumber owned by any person and bearing the registered timber mark of that person is kept or detained in or on any place without the knowledge or consent of that person, may enter into or on that place to ascertain whether or not it is detained there without the knowledge or consent of that person.

(4) Where any lumber or lumbering equipment is marked with a timber mark or a boom chain brand registered under any Act, the mark or brand is, in proceedings under subsection (1), and, in the absence of any evidence to the contrary, proof that it is the property of the registered owner of the mark or brand.

(5) Where an accused or his servants or agents are in possession of lumber or lumbering equipment marked with the mark, brand, registered timber mark, name or initials of another person, the burden of proving that it came lawfully into his possession or into possession of his servants or agents is, in proceedings under subsection (1), on the accused.

(6) In this section,

“coastal waters of Canada” includes all of Queen Charlotte Sound, all of the Strait of Georgia and the Canadian waters of the Strait of Juan de Fuca;

“lumber” means timber, mast, spar, shingle bolt, sawlog or lumber of any description;

“lumbering equipment” includes a boom chain, chain, line and shackle. R.S., c. C-34, s. 299.

CROSS-REFERENCES

Possession is defined by s. 4(3). The term “peace officer” is defined in s. 2. The power given a peace officer under subsec. (3) would seem to be a search within the meaning of s. 8 of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms and therefore see notes under that section.

Pursuant to s. 583(b), an indictment, which otherwise complies with s. 581, is not insufficient by reason that it does not name the person who owns the property.

The accused may elect his mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2) for the offence under subsec. (1) and release pending trial is determined by s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by the officer in charge pursuant to s. 498. Trial of the offence described by subsec. (2) is conducted by a summary conviction court pursuant to Part XXVII. The punishment is as set out in s. 787 [although note the maximum fine for a corporation is as set out in s. 719(b)] and the limitation period is set out in s. 786(2). Release pending trial is determined by s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by a peace officer under s. 496, 497 or by the officer in charge under s. 498.

SYNOPSIS

This section sets out a number of provisions that deal with offences in relation to certain specified kinds of lumber and lumbering equipment. Subsection (1)(a) states that any person who, without the consent of the owner, fraudulently takes, holds, keeps in his possession, appropriates, purchases or sells any lumber or lumbering equipment found adrift or embedded in the shore, bottom or bed of any river, stream or lake in Canada, or in the harbours of coastal waters of Canada commits an indictable offence with a maximum term of imprisonment of five years. Subsection (1)(b) and (c) apply the same punishment to any person who, without the consent of the owner, removes, alters, obliterates or defaces a mark or number, or who refuses to deliver to the owner or person authorized to receive it, any lumber found in the places described above. It is to be noted that subsec. (1)(a) specifies that the acts described therein be committed fraudulently whereas subsec. (1)(b) and (c) do not have the same requirement. Subsection (2) makes it a summary conviction offence for a second-hand dealer to trade, or have in his possession to sell, lumbering equipment that is marked with the name or initials of a person or with a name, brand or registered timber mark, unless the dealer has the written consent of that person. Subsection (3) empowers a peace officer, who has reasonable grounds to suspect that lumber owned by another person is being kept or detained in any place without the owner's knowledge or consent, to enter that place to ascertain whether or not his suspicions are founded. This section, which permits entry into a place without a warrant, may be found to offend s. 8 of the Charter. Any lumber or lumbering equipment marked with a registered timber mark or boom chain brand is presumed to be the property of the registered owner of the mark or brand in proceedings under subsec. (1), unless there is evidence to the contrary. Subsection (5) places on a person charged under subsec. (1) the burden of proving that lumber or lumbering equipment marked with a brand mark, registered timber mark, name or initials of another person, that is in the possession of the accused came to be so possessed lawfully.

DESTROYING DOCUMENTS OF TITLE.

340. Every one who, for a fraudulent purpose, destroys, cancels, conceals or obliterates

- (a) a document of title to goods or lands,
- (b) a valuable security or testamentary instrument, or
- (c) a judicial or official document, is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding ten years. R.S., c. C-34, s. 300.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms "document of title to goods", "document of title to lands", "valuable security" and "testamentary instrument" are defined in s. 2. The value of a valuable security is determined in accordance with s. 4(2).

The accused may elect his mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2). Release pending trial is determined by s. 515.

FRAUDULENT CONCEALMENT.

341. Every one who, for a fraudulent purpose, takes, obtains, removes or conceals anything is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding two years. R.S., c. C-34, s. 301.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The accused may elect his mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2). Release pending trial is determined by s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by the officer in charge pursuant to s. 498. The related offences of fraudulent concealment of title documents are in ss. 340 and 385.

Where the offence, although committed outside Canada, is in relation to the use of nuclear material, see s. 7(3.4).

SYNOPSIS

This section describes the offence of fraudulent concealment. Any person who, for a fraudulent purpose, takes, removes or conceals anything commits the offence. The offence is indictable and carries a maximum term of two years' imprisonment.

THEFT, FORGERY, ETC., OF CREDIT CARD / Jurisdiction.

342. (1) Every one who

- (a) steals a credit card,
- (b) forges or falsifies a credit card,
- (c) has in his possession, uses or deals in any other way with a credit card that he knows was obtained
  - (i) by the commission in Canada of an offence, or
  - (ii) by an act or omission anywhere that, if it had occurred in Canada, would have constituted an offence, or
- (d) uses a credit card that he knows has been revoked or cancelled

is guilty of

- (e) an indictable offence and is liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding ten years, or
- (f) an offence punishable on summary conviction.

(2) An accused who is charged with an offence under subsection (1) may be tried and punished by any court having jurisdiction to try that offence in the place where the offence is alleged to have been committed or in the place where the accused is found, is arrested or is in custody, but where the place where the accused is found, is arrested or is in custody is outside the province in which the offence is alleged to have been committed, no proceedings in respect of that offence shall be commenced in that place without the consent of the Attorney General of that province. 1974-75-76, c. 93, s. 27; R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 44.

(3) [Repealed. R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 44.]

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term "credit card" is defined in s. 321. The term "steal" is defined in s. 2 as theft. Possession is defined by s. 4(3), however, s. 358 defines circumstances in which possession is complete. "Attorney General" is defined in s. 2. Section 583(h) provides that a count in an indictment is not insufficient by reason only that it does not state that the required consent has been obtained. [As to notes concerning sufficiency of consent, see s. 583.] Section 359 enacts a special evidentiary rule. Under s. 359, evidence that stolen property was found in the accused's possession in the previous 12 months is admissible to prove knowledge that the property that forms the subject-matter of the proceedings was stolen property. For the section to be invoked, notice must be given to the accused.

The general theft offence is defined by s. 322; the general offence of possession of goods obtained by crime by s. 354; the general forgery and uttering offences by ss. 366 to 368. Obtaining credit by fraud or by false pretences is an offence under s. 362. Bringing into Canada anything obtained outside Canada by an act that, if committed in Canada, would have been an offence under this section if committed in Canada, is an offence under s. 357.

It would seem that where the prosecution elects to proceed by indictment then the accused may elect his mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2). However, s. 553(a) provides that a provincial court judge has absolute jurisdiction to try an accused charged with "theft" where the value of the subject-matter of the offence does not exceed $1000 and, therefore, query whether the offence described by para. (1)(a) is governed by s. 553(a). Where the prosecution elects to proceed by way of summary conviction then the trial of the offence is conducted by a summary conviction court pursuant to Part XXVII. The punishment is as set out in s. 787 and the limitation period is set out in s. 786(2). Release pending trial in any case is determined by s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by a peace officer under s. 496, 497 or by the officer in charge under s. 498.

SYNOPSIS

This section deals with offences in relation to a credit card. Subsection (1) makes it a hybrid offence, with a maximum term of imprisonment of ten years upon conviction for the indictable offence, to steal, forge or falsify a credit card, or to use a credit card which the accused knows has been revoked or cancelled. Subsection (1) further states that any person who has in his possession, uses or deals in any way with a credit card which that person knows was obtained anywhere by an action which, in Canada, is or would be an offence, commits an offence. Subsection (2) provides that the trial of an offence under subsec. (1) may be held either where the offence is alleged to have been committed or anywhere the accused is found, arrested or in custody. If the accused is found, arrested or in custody outside the province where the offence under subsec. (1) is alleged to have been committed, the consent of the Attorney General of that province is required before a trial may be commenced.

ANNOTATIONS

Where the information is drafted to come within subsec. (1)(c)(ii) but specifies that the credit card was obtained by an “offence” that if it had occurred in Canada would have constituted an offence then the Crown having particularized the act or omission as an “offence” must prove that it was an offence known to the law of the place where it allegedly took place. This would require proof of the foreign law: R. v. Ingram et al. (1978), 43 C.C.C. (2d) 211 (Ont. Prov. Ct.).

It was held in R. v. Colman, [1981] 3 W.W.R. 572, 29 A.R. 170 (Q.B.) that inasmuch as subsec. (1)(c) in the French version creates only one offence an accused charged with possession of the credit card may successfully plead autrefois acquit based on a prior acquittal on an information charging that she unlawfully did “use or deal” with the credit card. Since the French version was more favourable to the accused it was that version which must be adopted. Cavanagh J. noted that the Yukon Territory Court of Appeal came to a contrary conclusion in R. v. McKay (1978), 39 C.C.C. (2d) 101, 3 C.R. (3d) 1, but without any reference to the French version of this subsection.

A credit card was “obtained by” commission of an indictable offence where it was originally simply found by the accused but he subsequently formed the intention to convert the card to his own use: R. v. Costello (1982), 1 C.C.C. (3d) 403, [1983] 1 W.W.R. 666 (B.C.C.A.). Folld: R. v. Zurowski (1983), 5 C.C.C. (3d) 285, 33 C.R. (3d) 93 (Alta. C.A.); R. v. Elias (1986), 33 C.C.C. (3d) 476 (Que. C.A.), affd 46 C.C.C. (3d) 447 (S.C.C.) (5:0).

UNAUTHORIZED USE OF COMPUTER / Definitions / “computer program” / “computer service” / “computer system” / “data” / “electro-magnetic, acoustic, mechanical or other device” / “function” / “intercept”.

342.1. (1) Every one who, fraudulently and without color of right,

- (a) obtains, directly or indirectly, any computer service,
- (b) by means of an electro-magnetic, acoustic, mechanical or other device, intercepts or causes to be intercepted, directly or indirectly, any function of a computer system, or
- (c) uses or causes to be used, directly or indirectly, a computer system with intent to commit an offence under paragraph (a) or (b) or an offence under section 430 in relation to data or a computer system is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding ten years, or is guilty of an offence punishable on summary conviction.

(2) In this section,

“computer program” means data representing instructions or statements that, when executed in a computer system, causes the computer system to perform a function;
 “computer service” includes data processing and the storage or retrieval of data;
 “computer system” means a device that, or a group of interconnected or related devices one or more of which,

- (a) contains computer programs or other data, and
- (b) pursuant to computer programs,
  - (i) performs logic and control, and
  - (ii) may perform any other function;

“data” means representations of information or of concepts that are being prepared or have been prepared in a form suitable for use in a computer system;

“electro-magnetic, acoustic, mechanical or other device” means any device or apparatus that is used or is capable of being used to intercept any function of a computer system, but does not include a hearing aid used to correct subnormal hearing of the user to not better than normal hearing;

“function” includes logic, control, arithmetic, deletion, storage and retrieval and communication or telecommunication to, from or within a computer system;

"intercept" includes listen to or record a function of a computer system, or acquire the substance, meaning or purport thereof. R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 45.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term "telecommunication" is defined in s. 35 of the Interpretation Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. I-21. As to notes respecting the term "colour of right", see notes under s. 322.

Related offences: s. 184, unlawful interception of private communications; s. 326, theft of telecommunication service; s. 327, possession of device to unlawfully obtain telecommunication facility or service; s. 430(1.1), mischief in relation to data.

The accused may elect his mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2) where the prosecution elects to proceed by way of indictment. Where the prosecution elects to proceed by way of summary conviction then the trial is conducted by a summary conviction court pursuant to Part XXVII. The punishment is as set out in s. 787 [although note the maximum fine for a corporation is as set out in s. 719(b)] and the limitation period is set out in s. 786(2). Release pending trial is determined by s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by a peace officer under s. 496, 497 or by the officer in charge under s. 498.

SYNOPSIS

This section makes it a hybrid offence for a person fraudulently or without colour of right to obtain, directly or indirectly, any computer service, or to intercept or cause to be intercepted, directly or indirectly, any function of a computer service by means of any device. It further states that it is an offence to use or cause to be used, directly or indirectly, a computer system with intent to commit either of the offences described above or an offence under s. 430. Subsection (2) contains an extensive set of definitions of terms relevant to this offence. The maximum term of imprisonment upon conviction for the indictable offence described in this section is ten years.

Robbery and Extortion

ROBBERY.

343. Every one commits robbery who

- (a) steals, and for the purpose of extorting whatever is stolen or to prevent or overcome resistance to the stealing, uses violence or threats of violence to a person or property;
- (b) steals from any person and, at the time he steals or immediately before or immediately thereafter, wounds, beats, strikes or uses any personal violence to that person;
- (c) assaults any person with intent to steal from him; or
- (d) steals from any person while armed with an offensive weapon or imitation thereof. R.S., c. C-34, s. 302.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms "offensive weapon" and "property" are defined in s. 2. The term "steal" is defined in s. 2 as committing theft. Theft is defined in ss. 322 to 333, but principally in s. 322. Assault is defined in s. 265. The punishment for robbery is set out in s. 344.

Section 17 limits the availability of the statutory defence of compulsion by threats to the offence of "robbery". As to admission of photographic evidence of property, see s. 491.2. Under s. 583, an indictment, which otherwise complies with s. 581, is not insufficient by reason only that (a), it does not name the person injured or intended to be injured; (b), it does not name the person who owns or has a special property or interest in the property mentioned in the count, however, see s. 587 as to when particulars may be ordered. Also note s. 588 which deems certain persons to have a property interest in property of which they have the management, control or custody. This offence has often posed problems respecting included offences. Thus, see notes under s. 662.

This offence may be the basis for an application for an authorization to intercept private communications by reason of s. 183 for a warrant to conduct video surveillance by reason of s. 487.01(5). Robbery is an enterprise crime offence for the purposes of Part XII.2.

Where the offence, although committed outside Canada, is in relation to the use of nuclear material, see s. 7(3.4):

The accused may elect his mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2). Release pending trial is determined by s. 515. A person convicted of the offence in this section will be liable to the mandatory prohibition order in s. 100(1) for possession of firearms, ammunition and explosives.

Related offences: s. 85, using firearm during commission or attempted commission of indictable offence; s. 244, discharging firearm with intent to wound; s. 264.1, uttering threats; s. 266, assault; s. 267, assault with a weapon or causing bodily harm; s. 268, aggravated assault; s. 272, sexual assault with a weapon; s. 273, aggravated sexual assault; s. 279, kidnapping and unlawful confinement; s. 345, stopping mail with intent to rob; s. 346, extortion; s. 348, break and enter; s. 351(2), disguised with intent.

SYNOPSIS

This section describes the offence of robbery. Every person who steals and uses violence or threats of violence to another person or property in order to overcome resistance to the stealing or to extort whatever is stolen, commits the form of robbery set out in para. (a). Everyone who steals from any person and, during the course of the stealing, or immediately before or after, wounds, beats or uses any personal violence to that person commits the form of robbery set out in para. (b). A person who assaults another person with the intent to steal from him commits the offence of robbery described in para. (c). Finally, everyone who steals from any person while armed, with an offensive weapon or an imitation thereof, commits the offence of robbery described in para. (d). It is to be noted that paras. (a), (b) and (d) require proof of the act of stealing as one of the elements of the offence. Paragraph (c) requires proof only of an intent to steal as an essential element.

ANNOTATIONS

Use of violence or threats of violence [para. (a)] – Assault, for which only a general intent is required, may be a lesser and included offence in the charge of unlawfully and by violence stealing, which also requires proof of the specific intent to carry out that purpose: R. v. George (1960), 128 C.C.C. 289, 34 C.R. 1 (S.C.C.) (4:1).

The offence under this paragraph is not made out in a “purse snatching” case where the accused simply snatches the purse before the victim could offer any resistance and he uses no other violence to the victim: R. v. Picard (1976), 39 C.C.C. (2d) 57 (Que. Sess. Ct.).

However, where the victim’s arms are held to prevent resistance while the money is taken, then the offence is made out: R. v. Trudel (1984), 12 C.C.C. (3d) 342 (Que. C.A.).

In R. v. Katrensky (1975), 24 C.C.C. (2d) 350, [1975] 5 W.W.R. 732 (B.C. Prov. Ct.), the accused was convicted of robbery as defined in this section where he merely handed the bank teller a note stating “empty your till”. It was held that to constitute a threat of violence the Crown must prove that the victim felt threatened and that she had reasonable and probable grounds for her fear. In this case while there may not have been any immediate fear of violence, the implied threat of violence if the request was not carried out was sufficient to constitute the act of the accused robbery.

Threats of violence within the meaning of this paragraph would include any demonstration from which physical injury to the victim may be reasonably apprehended: R. v. Sayers and McCoy (1983), 8 C.C.C. (3d) 572 (Ont. C.A.).

A threat of violence is characterized by conduct which reflects an intent to have recourse to violence in order to carry out the theft or to prevent resistance to the theft. A threat may be expressed or implicit and made by means of words, writings or actions. There is no requirement that the accused be armed or utter words such as "This is a hold up". The question is whether the actions and words of the accused, in light of the context and circumstances in which they took place, could reasonably create a feeling of apprehension on the part of the victims: R. v. Pelletier (1992), 71 C.C.C. (3d) 438, 44 Q.A.C. 168 (C.A.).

Stealing and using violence [para. (b)] – In order to avoid an interpretation repetitious to para. (a), this paragraph should be regarded as setting out what one might call constructive robbery occurring with theft and a proximate application of violence R. v. Lieberman, [1970] 5 C.C.C. 300, 11 C.R.N.S. 168 (Ont. C.A.) (2:1). It is not necessary that the violence be used to accomplish or further the theft. The purpose for which the personal violence is used is immaterial provided it accompanies the act of stealing or immediately precedes it or follows it: R. v. Downer (1978), 40 C.C.C. (2d) 532 (Ont. C.A.).

The "violence" contemplated by this paragraph requires proof of more than a mere assault. Thus the mere nudging of the victim to steal her purse is not sufficient: R. v. Lew (1978), 40 C.C.C. (2d) 140 (Ont. C.A.). Similarly: R. v. Oakley (1986), 24 C.C.C. (3d) 351 (Ont. C.A.).

Assault with intent to steal [para. (c)] – A charge that the accused "did commit robbery [of the victim] of approximately $15" particularizes a completed stealing and where the Crown fails to prove that any money was stolen the Crown cannot rely on the definition of robbery in this paragraph to make out the offence. The accused may, however, be convicted of attempted robbery: R. v. Bob (1980), 54 C.C.C. (2d) 169 (B.C.C.A.).

Stealing while armed [para. (d)] – To be "armed" means to be equipped with or possessed of an instrument: R. v. Sloan (1974), 19 C.C.C. (2d) 190 (B.C.C.A.).

A charge of robbery was dismissed where the accused was charged that he "simulated with his fist that he was armed". It was held that this paragraph requires that the accused be armed with a weapon or an imitation thereof and no part of the body can resemble an offensive weapon: R. v. Gouchie (1976), 33 C.C.C. (2d) 120 (Que. Sess. Peace).

The offence under this paragraph does not require that the accused intended to use the weapon or that the victim be frightened or intimidated by its presence: Tremblay v. A.-G. Que. et al. (1984), 43 C.R. (3d) 92 (Que. C.A.).

Mens rea generally – An honest belief that a debt was due from the victim to himself will vitiate the element of theft in a robbery charge against the accused: R. v. Carroll (1975), 27 C.C.C. (2d) 276, 31 C.R.N.S. 398 (Ont. C.A.).

Included offences – This section creates only one offence, namely robbery, which may be committed in any of the different ways described. On a charge of stealing while armed, under subsec. (d) while theft is an included offence, assault is not as the mere fact of being armed does not necessarily involve an assault. Where the Crown alleges in the indictment the particular means by which the robbery was committed, as here, "did steal . . . while armed with an imitation of an offensive weapon" it is required to prove every essential averment of the charge and could not require the trial Judge instruct the jury to consider whether robbery was committed in one of the other ways described in the section: R. v. Johnson (1977), 35 C.C.C. (2d) 439, 2 B.C.L.R. 193 (C.A.).

The fact that robbery may be committed in ways which do not include an assault does not alter the fact that robbery as described in this section does include the offence of assault. It is sufficient that an offence such as assault is included in the enactment creating the principal offence, it need not be necessarily included. Thus common assault was an included offence although the indictment merely alleged that the accused "unlawfully did commit robbery of [the victim] of a quantity of cigarettes and approximately $4.00 in cash”: Luckett v. The Queen (1980), 50 C.C.C. (2d) 489, [1980] 1 S.C.R. 1140, 105 D.L.R. (3d) 577 (7:0).

The accused may be convicted of assault causing bodily harm on an indictment charging robbery simpliciter. The inclusion of the word “wounds” in the definition of robbery in para. (b) makes assault causing bodily harm an included offence: R. v. Horsefall (1990), 61 C.C.C. (3d) 245 (B.C.C.A.).

An indictment which charges robbery under para. (c) includes attempted theft so that the accused may be convicted of that offence where the evidence establishes a theft but no assault: R. v. Boisvert (1991), 68 C.C.C. (3d) 478 (Que. C.A.).

Property which may be subject-matter of offence – A narcotic may be the subject of a robbery notwithstanding it constitutes an offence for the victim to be in possession of it: R. v. Janzic (1982), 1 C.C.C. (3d) 246 (Ont. C.A.), leave to appeal to S.C.C. refused 46 N.R. 90n.

ROBBERY.

- 344. Every person who commits robbery is guilty of an indictable offence and liable
 (a) where a firearm is used in the commission of the offence, to imprisonment for life and to a minimum punishment of imprisonment for a term of four years; and
 (b) in any other case, to imprisonment for life. R.S., c. C-34, s. 303; 1972, c. 13, s. 70; 1995, c. 39, s. 149.

Robbery is defined in s. 343.

As to admission of photographic evidence of property see, s. 491.2. Firearm is defined in s. 2.

Section 17 limits the availability of the statutory defence of compulsion by threats to the offence of “robbery”. Under s. 583, an indictment, which otherwise complies with s. 581, is not insufficient by reason only that (a), it does not name the person injured or intended to be injured; (b), it does not name the person who owns or has a special property or interest in the property mentioned in the count, however, see s. 587 as to when particulars may be ordered. Also note s. 588 which deems certain persons to have a property interest in property of which they have the management, control or custody. This offence has often posed problems respecting included offences. Thus, see notes under s. 662.

This offence may be the basis for an application for an authorization to intercept private communications by reason of s. 183 or a warrant to conduct video surveillance by reason of s. 487.01(5). Robbery is an enterprise crime offence for the purposes of Part XII.2.

The accused may elect his mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2). Release pending trial is determined by s. 515. A person convicted of the offence in this section will be liable to the mandatory prohibition order in s. 100(1) for possession of firearms, ammunition and explosives.

Robbery is defined in s. 343. The term “mail conveyance” is defined in s. 2 of the Canada Post Corporation Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. C-10 as meaning "any physical, electronic, optical or other means used to transmit the mail". That section also contains the definition of "mail".

Section 476(e) contains a special provision for territorial jurisdiction where an offence is committed in respect of a mail in the course of door-to-door delivery.

The related offence of theft from the mail is in s. 356. Using a firearm during commission or attempted commission of an indictable offence is an offence under s. 85. Disguised with intent is an offence under s. 351(2).

The accused may elect his mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2). Release pending trial is determined by s. 515. A person convicted of the offence in this section may be liable to the mandatory prohibition order in s. 100(1) for possession of firearms, ammunition and explosives.

EXTORTION / Punishment / Saving.

346. (1) Every one commits extortion who, without reasonable justification or excuse and with intent to obtain anything, by threats, accusations, menaces or violence induces or attempts to induce any person, whether or not he is the person threatened, accused or menaced or to whom violence is shown, to do anything or cause anything to be done.

The accused may elect his mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2). Release pending trial is determined by s. 515. A person convicted of the offence in this section may be liable to the mandatory prohibition order in s. 100(1) for possession of firearms, ammunition and explosives.

SYNOPSIS

This section describes the offence of extortion. Any person who, without reasonable justification or excuse and with intent to obtain anything, induces or attempts to induce another person by means of threats, accusations, menaces or violence, to do anything or cause anything to be done, commits the offence of extortion. The person threatened or menaced does not necessarily have to be the person from whom the accused is expecting action. This is an indictable offence with a maximum term of life imprisonment and a minimum term of four years where a firearm is used in the commission of the offence. Subsection (2) clarifies that a threat to institute civil proceedings is not a threat for the purposes of this section.

ANNOTATIONS

"Anything" – The word "anything" is of a wide and unrestricted use and accordingly the extorting of an act of sexual intercourse is an offence: R. v. Bird, [1970] 3 C.C.C. 340, 9 C.R.N.S. 1 (B.C.C.A.).

Threats or menaces – A “threat” to come within this section does not necessarily connote a menace of ill to be personally inflicted by the threatener. Thus a false statement by the accused that if the victim does not do a certain thing he will be dealt with by a third person of known violent propensities or associations will constitute this offence: R. v. Swartz (1977), 37 C.C.C. (2d) 409 (Ont. C.A.), affd without reference to the point 45 C.C.C. (2d) 1, 7 C.R. (3d) 185, sub nom. R. v. Cotroni; Papalia v. The Queen (S.C.C.).

There is no requirement that the threats or menaces be shown to be of such a nature as to deprive the victim of the free and voluntary exercise of his will: R. v. Syrmalis and Syrmalis; R. v. Laurie (1981), 63 C.C.C. (2d) 452 (Que. C.A.).

An approach by a lawyer to a lawyer acting for another party to have certain criminal charges dropped in exchange for a sum of money, if made without threats, accusations, menaces or violence does not constitute an offence under this section: Rousseau v. The Queen (1985), 21 C.C.C. (3d) 1, [1985] 2 S.C.R. 38 (S.C.C.).

Reasonable justification of excuse – In R. v. Natarelli And Volpe, [1968] 1 C.C.C. 154, 1 C.R.N.S. 302 (S.C.C.), it was held that in determining whether there could be reasonable justification or excuse for making the demand or using threats, the accused’s entire course of conduct, and not one isolated item thereof, must be considered; and once it is proved that the accused made threats to cause death or bodily injury with intent to obtain consideration, then they are guilty regardless of whether they honestly believed that they did have or whether they actually had a right to the consideration demanded.

On a charge contrary to this section, arising out of seizure of certain property, evidence was admissible as to what the accused had been told by a bailiff to whom he had spoken. This information was not admissible for its truth, but was admissible to show the accused’s state of mind and the honesty of his belief and whether he had reasonable justification or excuse for his actions: R. v. Toth (1989), 8 W.C.B. (2d) 147 (Ont. C.A.).

Criminal Interest Rate

CRIMINAL INTEREST RATE / Definitions / “credit advanced” / “criminal rate” / “insurance charge” / “interest” / “official fee” / “overdraft charge” / “required deposit balance” / Presumption / Proof of effective annual rate / Notice / Cross-examination with leave / Consent required for proceedings / Application.

347. (1) Notwithstanding any Act of Parliament, every one who

- (a) enters into an agreement or arrangement to receive interest at a criminal rate, or
- (b) receives a payment or partial payment of interest at a criminal rate, is guilty of
- (c) an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding five years, or
- (d) an offence punishable on summary conviction and is liable to a fine not exceeding twenty-five thousand dollars or to imprisonment for a term not exceeding six months or to both.

(2) In this section,

“credit advanced” means the aggregate of the money and the monetary value of any goods, services or benefits actually advanced or to be advanced under an agreement or arrangement minus the aggregate of any required deposit balance and any fee, fine, penalty, commission and other similar charge or expense directly or indirectly incurred under the original or any collateral agreement or arrangement;

“criminal rate” means an effective annual rate of interest calculated in accordance with generally accepted actuarial practices and principles that exceeds sixty per cent on the credit advanced under an agreement or arrangement;

“insurance charge” means the cost of insuring the risk assumed by the person who advances or is to advance credit under an agreement or arrangement, where the face amount of the insurance does not exceed the credit advanced;

“interest” means the aggregate of all charges and expenses, whether in the form of a fee, fine, penalty, commission or other similar charge or expense or in any other form, paid or payable for the advancing of credit under an agreement or arrangement, by or on behalf of the person to whom the credit is or is to be advanced, irrespective of the person to whom any such charges and expenses are or are to be paid or payable, but does not include any repayment of credit advanced or any insurance charge, official fee, overdraft charge, required deposit balance or, in the case of a mortgage transaction, any amount required to be paid on account of property taxes;

“official fee” means a fee required by law to be paid to any governmental authority in connection with perfecting any security under an agreement or arrangement for the advancing of credit;

“overdraft charge” means a charge not exceeding five dollars for the creation of or increase in an overdraft, imposed by a credit union or caisse populaire the membership of which is wholly or substantially comprised of natural persons or a deposit taking institution the deposits in which are insured, in whole or in part, by the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation or guaranteed, in whole or in part, by the Quebec Deposit Insurance Board;

“required deposit balance” means a fixed or an ascertainable amount of the money actually advanced or to be advanced under an agreement or arrangement that is required, as a condition of the agreement or arrangement, to be deposited or invested by or on behalf of the person to whom the advance is or is to be made and that may be available, in the event of his defaulting in any payment, to or for the benefit of the person who advances or is to advance the money.

(3) Where a person receives a payment or partial payment of interest at a criminal rate, he shall, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, be deemed to have knowledge of the nature of the payment and that it was received at a criminal rate.

(4) In any proceedings under this section, a certificate of a Fellow of the Canadian Institute of Actuaries stating that he has calculated the effective annual rate of interest on any credit advanced under an agreement or arrangement and setting out the calculations and the information on which they are based is, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, proof of the effective annual rate without proof of the signature or official character of the person appearing to have signed the certificate.

(5) A certificate referred to in subsection (4) shall not be received in evidence unless the party intending to produce it has given to the accused or defendant reasonable notice of that intention together with a copy of the certificate.

(6) An accused or a defendant against whom a certificate referred to in subsection (4) is produced may, with leave of the court, require the attendance of the actuary for the purposes of cross-examination.

(7) No proceedings shall be commenced under this section without the consent of the Attorney General.

(8) This section does not apply to any transaction to which the Tax Rebate Discounting Act applies. 1980-81-82-83, c. 43, s. 9.

CROSS-REFERENCES

“Attorney General” is defined in s. 2. Section 583(h) provides that a count in an indictment is not insufficient by reason only that it does not state that the required consent has been obtained. [As to notes concerning sufficiency of consent, see s. 583.] This offence may be the basis for an application for an authorization to intercept private communications by reason of s. 183 and an enterprise crime offence within the meaning of s. 462.3.

Where the prosecution elects to proceed by indictment on this offence then the accused may elect his mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2). Where the prosecution elects to proceed by way of summary conviction then the trial of this offence is conducted by a summary conviction court pursuant to Part XXVII.

The limitation period is set out in s. 786(2). In either case, release pending trial is determined by s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by a peace officer under s. 496, 497 or by the officer in charge under s. 498.

The related offence of extortion is found in s. 346.

SYNOPSIS

This section describes the offence of charging a criminal interest rate. The offence is committed by anyone who enters into an agreement or arrangement to receive interest at a criminal rate, or who actually receives a payment or partial payment of interest at a criminal rate. The term “criminal rate” means an effective annual rate that exceeds 60 per cent on the credit advanced, calculated according to accepted actuarial principles and practices. The term “interest” means the aggregate of all charges and expenses, in any form, but with certain listed and defined exceptions, paid or payable for the advancing of credit. The offence may be tried by indictment, with a maximum penalty of five years, or by summary conviction, with a maximum penalty of a fine of $25,000 and imprisonment for six months, but only with the consent of an Attorney General. Subsection (3) creates a presumption, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, that a person receiving payment or partial payment of interest at a criminal rate does so knowingly. Subsections (4) and (5) permit, for the purposes of this section, proof of a rate of interest by a certificate of a fellow of the Canadian Institute of Actuaries, provided that the accused is given reasonable notice and a copy of the certificate. Subsection (6) permits the court to require the attendance of the actuary for cross-examination. The section applies, notwithstanding any other federal enactment, but does not apply to transactions governed by the Tax Rebate Discounting Act.

ANNOTATIONS

The term “interest” in this section is broadly defined and included a “facility fee” which the borrower agreed to pay to obtain the loan. The mens rea of this offence is proof that the accused voluntarily entered into a loan agreement providing for receipt by him of a criminal rate of interest. The Crown is not also required to prove that the accused knew that charging a rate above 60% was unlawful: William E. Thomson Associates Inc. v. Carpenter (1989), 61 D.L.R. (4th) 1, 69 O.R. (2d) 545, 34 O.A.C. 35 (C.A.). [Note: It was held in this case, a civil action, that the unlawfulness of the transaction did not render the entire loan agreement void and that the illegal part of the agreement could be severed and the borrower required to repay the principal.] Fold: BCORP Fin. Inc. v. Baseline Resort Dev. Inc., [1990] 5 W.W.R. 275 (B.C.S.C.).

The stipulation that the borrower was to pay a share of the anticipated profit from a real estate deal was a condition of the borrower receiving the loan and fell within the all-inclusive definition of “interest”: 677950 Ontario Ltd. v. Artell Developments Ltd. (1992), 75 C.C.C. (3d) 343, 93 D.L.R. (4th) 334, 57 O.A.C. 189 (C.A.), affd [1993] 2 S.C.R. 443, 82 C.C.C. (3d) 192n, 64 O.A.C. 161.

It is no defence that the borrowers were willing to participate in the agreement and that the accused was not engaged in swindling or other trickery. It would, however, be a defence if in certain circumstances the accused had made an honest mistake as to the terms of the agreement: R. v. McRobb (1984), 20 C.C.C. (3d) 493 (Ont. Co. Ct.), affd 32 C.C.C. (3d) 479 (C.A.).

Although the Crown has proceeded by way of summary conviction, so that the six month limitation period applies, evidence of payments made by the victims of the offence prior to this period is relevant and admissible to establish the effective annual rate of interest: R. v. Duzan (1993), 79 C.C.C. (3d) 552, 105 Sask. R. 29 (C.A.).

This section is intra vires Parliament: 677950 Ontario Ltd. v. Artell Developments Ltd., supra.

Breaking and Entering

BREAKING AND ENTERING WITH INTENT, COMMITTING OFFENCE OR BREAKING OUT / Presumptions / Definition of "place".

348. (1) Every one who

- (a) breaks and enters a place with intent to commit an indictable offence therein,
- (b) breaks and enters a place and commits an indictable offence therein, or
- (c) breaks out of a place after
  - (i) committing an indictable offence therein, or
  - (ii) entering the place with intent to commit an indictable offence therein, is guilty of an indictable offence and liable

- (d) to imprisonment for life, if the offence is committed in relation to a dwelling-house, or
- (e) to imprisonment for a term not exceeding fourteen years, if the offence is committed in relation to a place other than a dwelling-house.

(2) For the purposes of proceedings under this section, evidence that an accused

- (a) broke and entered a place or attempted to break and enter a place is, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, proof that he broke and entered the place or attempted to do so, as the case may be, with intent to commit an indictable offence therein; or
- (b) broke out of a place is, in the absence of any evidence to the contrary, proof that he broke out after
  - (i) committing an indictable offence therein, or
  - (ii) entering with intent to commit an indictable offence therein.

(3) For the purposes of this section and section 351, "place" means

- (a) a dwelling-house;
- (b) a building or structure or any part thereof, other than a dwelling-house;
- (c) a railway vehicle, a vessel, an aircraft or a trailer; or
- (d) a pen or an enclosure in which fur-bearing animals are kept in captivity for breeding or commercial purposes. R.S., c. C-34, s. 306; 1972, c. 13, s. 24; R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 47.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term "dwelling house" is defined in s. 2. The term "break" is defined in s. 321. "Enter" is defined in s. 350(a) and s. 350(b) deems a person to have broken and entered in circumstances defined therein. An indictable offence includes a Crown-option offence, which may be prosecuted by indictment, by virtue of s. 34(1) of the Interpretation Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. I-21.

As to admission of photographic evidence of property, see s. 491.2. For proof by way of affidavit of ownership, lawful possession, value, and that the person was deprived of property by fraud or otherwise without the person's lawful consent, see s. 657.1.

Section 662(6) provides that a person, charged with the offence under subsec. (1)(b), may be convicted of the offence under subsec. (1)(a) where the evidence does not prove the former offence but does prove the latter. Under s. 583, an indictment, which otherwise complies with s. 581, is not insufficient by reason only that (a) it does not name the person injured or intended to be injured; (b) it does not name the person who owns or has a special property or interest in the property mentioned in the count, however, see s. 587 as to when particulars may be ordered. Also note s. 588 which deems certain persons to have a property interest in property of which they have the management, control or custody.

This offence may be the basis for an application for an authorization to intercept private communications by reason of s. 183 or a warrant to conduct video surveillance under s. 487.01(5).

The accused may elect his mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2). Release pending trial is determined by s. 515. A person convicted of the offence in this section may be liable to the mandatory prohibition order in s. 100(1) for possession of firearms, ammunition and explosives.

The offence of forcible entry is in s. 72 and trespassing by night in s. 177. Being unlawfully in a dwelling house is an offence under s. 349. Possession of break-in instruments is an offence under s. 351(1). Defence of property is dealt with in ss. 38 to 42. Section 494 gives the owner of property or person in possession and persons authorized by them a power to arrest, without warrant, a person found committing a criminal offence on or in relation to that property. The offence which is most often alleged to be the indictable offence intended to be committed is theft under s. 334.

SYNOPSIS

This section describes the offence of breaking and entering. The offence is committed by anyone: (a) who breaks and enters a place with intent to commit an indictable offence therein; (b) who breaks and enters a place and actually commits an indictable offence; or (c) breaks out of a place after committing an indictable offence, or after having entered intending to commit an indictable offence. The offence is indictable, with a maximum punishment of life imprisonment if the place is a dwelling house, and fourteen years otherwise. The meaning of “place”, for the purpose of this section, is defined by subsec. (3). Subsection (2) creates two presumptions. Where a person breaks and enters a place or attempts to do so, those acts are proof, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, that the person had the intent to commit an indictable offence therein. Similarly, where a person breaks out of a place, that act is proof that he committed, or entered with intent to commit, an indictable offence therein.

ANNOTATIONS

Intoxication defence – In R. v. Gaweł, [1984] 6 W.W.R. 672n (Sask. C.A.), varying [1984] 5 W.W.R. 608, 40 C.R. (3d) 93 (Q.B.), on a charge of break and enter and committing assault, the accused was convicted of assault only, the evidence showing that the accused, who was in a highly intoxicated state, mistakenly believed he was in his own house when he assaulted the occupant.

Presumption of intent [subsec. (2)] – Once a prima facie case is made out using this presumption the accused need only raise a reasonable doubt, which he may do by adducing evidence of an explanation that may reasonably be true. However, an explanation that is disbelieved does not constitute “any evidence to the contrary” as it is no evidence. The evidence upon which the accused relies must at least raise a reasonable doubt as to his guilt, and if it does not meet this test then the prima facie case remains: R. v. Proudlock (1978), 43 C.C.C. (2d) 321, 5 C.R. (3d) 21, 91 D.L.R. (3d) 449 (S.C.C.). [Note: Since this decision the Criminal Code has been amended to delete the word “any” from the phrase “in the absence of any evidence to the contrary”. However, the majority judgment in R. v. Proudlock indicates that there is no basis for a distinction depending on the presence of the word “any”; the phrases “evidence to the contrary” and “any evidence to the contrary” both being the converse of “no evidence to the contrary”.]

When there is any evidence to the contrary, in the sense of evidence tending to negative the existence of the necessary intent, the onus is then upon the Crown to prove the existence of the necessary intent beyond a reasonable doubt. Evidence of the accused’s condition due to the consumption of alcohol and drugs which caused him to act in an irrational manner was evidence to the contrary in that it tended to negative an intent to commit an indictable offence: R. v. Campbell (1974), 17 C.C.C. (2d) 320 (Ont. C.A.).

Evidence that the accused is of good character is not of itself "evidence to the contrary": R. v. Khan (1982), 66 C.C.C. (2d) 32, 36 O.R. (2d) 399 (C.A.).

The presumption in this subsection is not available where the indictment specifies the particular indictable offence such as theft or mischief: R. v. Khan, supra.

Doctrine of recent possession [Also see notes under s. 354] – Upon proof of unexplained possession of recently stolen goods the trier of fact may, but not must, draw an inference of guilt of not only the possession offence but an offence such as break and enter committed in obtaining the goods: R. v. Kowlyk (1988), 43 C.C.C. (3d) 1, 65 C.R. (3d) 97, [1988] 2 S.C.R. 59 (4:1).

"Place" – The definition of "place" in para. 4(b) contemplates a type of structure within which human beings function and not, for example, a glass show-case on the exterior wall of a building which gives no access to any part of the building: R. v. Desjarnik (1981), 64 C.C.C. (2d) 408 (Que. Ct. Sess. of Peace).

On the other hand a small boutique in a shopping mall which is a permanent structure closed in on all sides at night is a "place" notwithstanding it has no roof: R. v. McKerness (1983), 4 C.C.C. (3d) 233, 33 C.R. (3d) 71 (Que. Ct. Sess. Peace).

An oil bulk plant compound enclosed by a permanent fence in which are situated fuel storage tanks, an office and warehouse is a structure and hence a "place" within the meaning of this section: R. v. Thibault (1982), 66 C.C.C. (2d) 422, 51 N.S.R. (2d) 91 (C.A.).

Similarly, an area containing an office building surrounded by a 10 foot high fence is a place: R. v. Fajil (1986), 53 C.R. (3d) 396 (B.C.C.A.).

Included offences – Possession of stolen goods contrary to s. 322 is included in a charge of break, enter and theft: R. v. L'Hirondelle (1992), 72 C.C.C. (3d) 254 (Alta. C.A.). Contra: R. v. Rivet (1975), 29 C.R.N.S. 301 (Ont. C.A.).

Constitutional considerations – While subsec. (2)(b) infringes the presumption of innocence in s. 11(d) of the Charter, it constitutes a reasonable limit within the meaning of s. 1 of the Charter and is therefore valid: R. v. Slavens (1991), 64 C.C.C. (3d) 29, 5 C.R. (4th) 204 (B.C.C.A.).

BEING UNLAWFULLY IN DWELLING-HOUSE / Presumption.

349. (1) Every one who without lawful excuse, the proof of which lies on him, enters or is in a dwelling-house with intent to commit an indictable offence therein is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding ten years.

(2) For the purposes of proceedings under this section, evidence that an accused, without lawful excuse, entered or was in a dwelling-house is, in the absence of any evidence to the contrary, proof that he entered or was in the dwelling-house with intent to commit an indictable offence therein. R.S., c. C-34, s. 307.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term "dwelling house" is defined in s. 2. "Enter" is defined in s. 350(a). The offence which is most often alleged to be the indictable offence intended to be committed is theft under s. 334.

The accused may elect his mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2). Release pending trial is determined by s. 515. A person convicted of the offence in this section may be liable to the mandatory prohibition order in s. 100(1) for possession of firearms, ammunition and explosives.

The offence of forcible entry is in s. 72 and trespassing by night in s. 177. Being unlawfully in a dwelling house is an offence under s. 349. Possession of break-in instruments is an offence under

s. 351(1). Defence of property is dealt with in ss. 38 to 42. Section 494 gives the owner of property or person in possession and persons authorized by them a power to arrest, without warrant, a person found committing a criminal offence on or in relation to that property.

SYNOPSIS

This section describes the offence of being unlawfully in a dwelling house. Anyone who enters or is in a dwelling house, with intent to commit an indictable offence therein, commits the offence. A person is not guilty if he has a lawful excuse for entering or being present in the dwelling house, but the onus is on that person to so establish, on a balance of probabilities. It is important to note that the accused need not have entered with the requisite intent, provided that he formulates that intent while present in the dwelling house. The offence is indictable with a maximum punishment of 10 years. Subsection (2) provides that evidence of entry or presence in a dwelling house without lawful excuse, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, is proof of the existence of the requisite intent.

ANNOTATIONS

“dwelling house” – A motel unit is a dwelling-house: R. v. Henderson, [1975] 1 W.W.R. 360 (B.C. Prov. Ct.).

Presumption of intent [subsec. (2)] – Prior to the amendment of this subsection which replaced the words “prima facie evidence” with the words “in the absence of any evidence to the contrary, proof” it was held that even where the Crown could rely on the presumption because of proof of an unlawful entry there was no onus on the accused to provide a reasonable and logical explanation for his presence in the premises since the evidence, while not establishing a lawful excuse for the accused’s presence, might well create a reasonable doubt as to his intent to commit an indictable offence therein which is a vital element in the commission of the offence: R. v. Austin, [1969] 1 C.C.C. 97, 4 C.R.N.S. 388 (S.C.C.) (3:2). In R. v. Proudlock (1978), 43 C.C.C. (2d) 321, 5 C.R. (3d) 21, 91 D.L.R. (3d) 449 (S.C.C.) Pigeon, J., whose judgment was concurred in by five members of the Court, was of the view that the change in the wording had not affected the meaning which should be attributed to the presumption. In particular an explanation which is not believed does not constitute “any evidence to the contrary”.

Evidence of drunkenness which discloses that the accused did not have the necessary specific intent is evidence to the contrary neutralizing the statutory presumption: R. v. Johnnie and Namox (1975), 23 C.C.C. (2d) 68, 30 C.R.N.S. 202 (B.C.C.A.).

Evidence to the contrary is evidence in either the prosecution or the defence case which is not disbelieved by the trier of fact and which gives rise to a reasonable doubt with respect to the existence of the intent to commit an indictable offence on the part of the accused: R. v. Nagy (1988), 45 C.C.C. (3d) 350, 30 O.A.C. 12 (C.A.).

Included offences – The offence of mischief as described in s. 430(1)(d) is an included offence: R. v. E. (S.) (1993), 80 C.C.C. (3d) 502, [1993] N.W.T.R. 97 (C.A.). Contra: R. v. Drake (1974), 16 C.C.C. (2d) 505, 8 N.S.R. (2d) 454 (C.A.).

Constitutional considerations – It was held in R. v. Nagy (1988), 45 C.C.C. (3d) 350, 30 O.A.C. 12 (C.A.), that this subsection creates a mandatory presumption so that if the prosecution proves entry or presence in a dwelling-house without lawful excuse the trier of fact must, not may, convict in the absence of any evidence to the contrary and therefore this subsection offends the presumption of innocence guarantee in s. 11(d) of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. However, it constitutes a reasonable limit within the meaning of s. 1 of the Charter and therefore the subsection is valid.

ENTRANCE.

350. For the purposes of sections 348 and 349,

- (a) a person enters as soon as any part of his body or any part of an instrument that he uses is within any thing that is being entered; and
- (b) a person shall be deemed to have broken and entered if
  - (i) he obtained entrance by a threat or artifice or by collusion with a person within, or
  - (ii) he entered without lawful justification or excuse, the proof of which lies upon him, by a permanent or temporary opening. R.S., c. C-34, s. 308.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term "break" is defined in s. 321.

SYNOPSIS

For the purposes of s. 348 and 349, entry occurs as soon as any part of the body of, or an instrument used by, a person is within anything being entered. A person is deemed to have broken and entered if entry is obtained, by threat, artifice or collusion with a person inside, or through a permanent or temporary opening, without lawful justification. The onus is on the accused to establish that justification.

ANNOTATIONS

Entry by artifice, etc. [para. (b)(i)] – By artifice is by a manoeuvre or stratagem such as sneaking into premises behind someone making a lawful entry: R. v. Leger (1976), 31 C.C.C. (2d) 413 (Ont. C.A.).

Entry without lawful justification or excuse [para. (b)(ii)] – The words "by a permanent or temporary opening" are clear and should be given their ordinary meaning and embrace an entry not only through the further opening of a temporary opening, but any entry through any temporary opening. Thus entry by the accused through a doorway in a partly constructed house which was open, as the door had not yet been installed, comes within this provision: Johnson v. The Queen (1977), 34 C.C.C. (2d) 12, 37 C.R.N.S. 370 (S.C.C.) (9:0).

In determining whether there was lawful justification or excuse, the time to be considered is the time of the entry. Thus, this paragraph did not apply to an accused who was licenced to enter a store as were other members of the public during normal business hours, notwithstanding he harboured an intent to remain in the store until after closing and then steal a quantity of goods: R. v. Farbridge (1984), 15 C.C.C. (3d) 521, [1985] 2 W.W.R. 56, 42 C.R. (3d) 385 (Alta. C.A.).

Constitutional considerations – The phrase "the proof of which lies upon him" in para. (b)(i) is unconstitutional as violating s. 11(d) of the Charter of Rights. However, with that phrase eliminated this paragraph is valid: R. v. Singh (1987), 41 C.C.C. (3d) 278, 61 C.R. (3d) 353 (Alta. C.A.).

POSSESSION OF BREAK-IN INSTRUMENT / Disguise with intent.

351. (1) Every one who, without lawful excuse, the proof of which lies on him, has in his possession any instrument suitable for the purpose of breaking into any place, motor vehicle, vault or safe under circumstances that give rise to a reasonable inference that the instrument has been used or is or was intended to be used for any such purpose, is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding ten years.

(2) Every one who, with intent to commit an indictable offence, has his face masked or coloured or is otherwise disguised is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding ten years. R.S., c. C-34, s. 309; 1972, c. 13, s. 25; R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 48.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term “motor vehicle” is defined in s. 2. The term “place” is defined in s. 351. Possession is defined in s. 4(3). An indictable offence include a Crown-option offence, which may be prosecuted by indictment, by virtue of s. 34(1) of the Interpretation Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. I-21.

The accused may elect his mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2). Release pending trial is determined by s. 515.

Related offences: s. 85, using firearm during commission or attempted commission of indictable offence; s. 343, robbery; s. 348, break and enter; s. 349, unlawfully in dwelling house; s. 352, breaking into coin-operated device; s. 353, selling, etc., automobile master key.

SYNOPSIS

This section describes two indictable offences – that of being in possession of a break-in instrument and that of being disguised with intent to commit an indictable offence. Subsection (1) states that every person who possesses an instrument suitable for the purpose of breaking into any place, motor vehicle, vault or safe in circumstances which give rise to a reasonable inference that the instrument has been used, or is or was intended to be used for such a purpose, is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to a maximum term of imprisonment of 10 years. Subsection (1) makes it clear that the person accused of this offence may escape criminal liability, if he can establish a lawful excuse for possessing the instrument described above. Subsection (2) makes it an indictable offence, with a maximum term of imprisonment of 10 years, for a person to mask, colour or otherwise disguise his face with intent to commit an indictable offence.

ANNOTATIONS

Meaning of instrument [subsec. (1)] – Nitric acid, sulphuric acid, bicarbonate of soda and various implements, being proved sufficient to make nitroglycerine, were held to be an “instrument” within this section: R. v. Benischek, [1963] 3 C.C.C. 286, 39 C.R. 285 (Ont. C.A.).

Liability of party – In Zanini v. The Queen, [1968] 2 C.C.C. 1, 2 C.R.N.S. 219, (S.C.C.) (5:0), the accused and his companions were charged with breaking and entering and committing theft in a dwelling-house and possession of house-breaking instruments. The two companions pleaded guilty to the former charge and the latter charge was withdrawn as against them. The accused was acquitted of the former charge as the stolen money could not be identified by the owner, but by application of s. 21(2) of the Code was convicted of the latter charge. The accused’s appeal was dismissed, it being held that the fact that the possession charge was withdrawn against the two active principals did not affect the right of the Crown to proceed against the accused, as there is no requirement in s. 21(2) that the active participants must be convicted of possession; and it was open to the jury to find, as it did, that the accused knew or ought to have known that one of his confederates, for the purpose of effecting their common design of breaking and entering the dwelling-house at least would, of necessity, be in possession of house-breaking instruments.

Reasonable inference of intended use of instrument [subsec. (1)] – The phrase “a reasonable inference”, in a criminal statute, requires proof beyond a reasonable doubt. Accordingly, the burden on the Crown to prove every element of the offence beyond a reasonable doubt requires proof beyond a reasonable doubt of (a) possession by the accused of the instruments specified in the indictment; (b) the suitability of the instruments for the prohibited purpose; and (c) and intention to use the instruments for the prohibited purpose. In the result, the phrase “without lawful excuse, the proof of which lies on him” added to a predecessor to this subsection to make available to the accused the defence of innocent purpose is now superfluous and was presumably kept in the provision, with subsequent amendments, out of an abundance of caution. The phrase does not encompass excuses or justifications that would exist if those words were omitted from the section and thus general common law excuses such as duress or authorization by law need not be proved by the accused on a balance of probabilities. In the result, this provision does not offend the guarantee to the presumption of innocence in s. 11(d) of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms: R. v. Holmes (1988), 41 C.C.C. (3d) 497, 64 C.R. (3d) 97, [1988] 1 S.C.R. 914 (5:0).

It was not necessary for the Crown to establish a nexus between the accused's possession of instruments and a "target" vehicle where it was alleged that the tools were used for breaking into and theft of automobiles. The absence of a nexus in time and place between the possession of instruments and a particular automobile is, however, a significant factor in determining whether it is appropriate to draw an inference of intent to use instruments for the prohibited purpose: R. v. K.(S.) (1995), 103 C.C.C. (3d) 572 (B.C.C.A.).

Masked with intent [subsec. (2)] – The Crown must prove the intention to commit one or more specific indictable offences: R. v. Shay (1976), 32 C.C.C. 13 (Ont. C.A.).

POSSESSION OF INSTRUMENTS FOR BREAKING INTO COIN-OPERATED OR CURRENCY EXCHANGE DEVICES.

352. Every one who, without lawful excuse, the proof of which lies on him, has in his possession any instrument suitable for breaking into a coin-operated device or a currency exchange device, under circumstances that give rise to a reasonable inference that the instrument has been used or is or was intended to be used for breaking into a coin-operated device or a currency exchange device, is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding two years. R.S., c. C-34, s. 310; 1972, c. 13, s. 26; 1974-75-76, c. 93, s. 28.

CROSS-REFERENCES

Possession is defined in s. 4(3).

The accused may elect his mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2). Release pending trial is determined by s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by the officer in charge pursuant to s. 498.

The related offence of possession of break-in instruments is in s. 351 and of selling, etc., automobile master key in s. 353.

SYNOPSIS

This section describes the offence of possession of any instrument for breaking into coin-operated or currency exchange devices in circumstances which give rise to a reasonable inference that the instrument has been used, or is or was intended to be used for such a purpose. This section, like s. 351, puts the onus of proof on the accused to establish that such possession was with lawful excuse. This is an indictable offence with a maximum term of two years' imprisonment.

ANNOTATIONS

An instrument is "suitable" within the meaning of this section provided any reasonable person would assume or believe that it was capable, adequate or suitable for the purpose notwithstanding there is evidence that in fact the instruments could not break into the device: R. v. Garland And Clowe (1978), 41 C.C.C. (2d) 346, 3 C.R. (3d) 206 (Nfld. Dist. Ct.).

Expert evidence merely to the effect that the instrument was suitable for picking locks is not evidence that it was within the specific category of instruments suitable for breaking into a coin-operated device: Re Mackie and The Queen (1978), 43 C.C.C. (2d) 269, 4 C.R. (3d) 263 (Ont. H.C.J.).

A conviction for theft of the coins from a coin-operated device is a bar to a conviction under this section arising out of the same circumstances in view of the rule in Kienapple v. The Queen (1974), 15 C.C.C. (2d) 524, [1975] 1 S.C.R. 729, 26 C.R.N.S. 1, where there is no evidence that the key had been used prior to the theft and the accused was arrested immediately after the theft so that there was no evidence from which an inference could be drawn of any intended future use of it: R. v. Stanziale (1979), 47 C.C.C. (2d) 348, 9 C.R. (3d) 281 (Ont. C.A.).

SELLING, ETC., AUTOMOBILE MASTER KEY / Terms and conditions of licence / Record to be kept / Failure to comply with subsection (3) / Definition of “automobile master key”.

353. (1) Every one who

- (a) sells, offers for sale or advertises in a province an automobile master key otherwise than under the authority of a licence issued by the Attorney General of that province, or
- (b) purchases or has in his possession in a province an automobile master key otherwise than under the authority of a licence issued by the Attorney General of that province, is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding two years.

(2) A licence issued by the Attorney General of a province as described in paragraph (1)(a) or (b) may contain such terms and conditions relating to the sale, offering for sale, advertising, purchasing or having in possession of an automobile master key as the Attorney General of that province may prescribe.

(3) Every one who sells an automobile master key

- (a) shall keep a record of the transaction showing the name and address of the purchaser and particulars of the licence issued to the purchaser as described in paragraph (1)(b); and
- (b) shall produce the record for inspection at the request of a peace officer.

(4) Every one who fails to comply with subsection (3) is guilty of an offence punishable on summary conviction.

(5) For the purposes of this section, “automobile master key” includes a key, pick, rocker key or other instrument designed or adapted to operate the ignition or other switches or locks of a series of motor vehicles. R.S., c. C-34, s. 311.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms “Attorney General” and “motor vehicle” are defined in s. 2. Possession is defined in s. 4(3). The accused may elect his mode of trial for the offence in subsec. (1), pursuant to s. 536(2). Release pending trial is determined by s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by the officer in charge pursuant to s. 498. The offence under subsec. (4) is tried by a summary conviction court under Part XXVII. The punishment is as set out in s. 787 [although see s. 719(b) respecting maximum fine for corporation] and the limitation period is set out in s. 786(2). Release pending trial is determined by s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by a peace officer under s. 496, 497 or by the officer in charge under s. 498.

Related offences: s. 351, possession of break-in instruments; s. 352, possession of instruments for breaking into coin-operated devices; s. 334, theft; s. 335, joy-riding.

SYNOPSIS

This section creates several offences in relation to “automobile master key” (defined in subsec. (5)).

Subsection (1) describes the offence of selling, offering for sale, advertising in a province, purchasing, or possessing in a province an automobile master key otherwise than under the authority of a licence issued by the Attorney General of the province. That offence is indictable and carries a maximum term of two years’ imprisonment. Subsection (2) states that a licence issued by the Attorney General of a province may contain such terms and conditions relating to the sale, offering for sale, advertising, purchasing or possession of an automobile master key as the Attorney General of that province may prescribe. Subsection (3) requires that any person who sells an automobile master key keep a record of the transaction, showing the name, address and particulars of the licence referred to in subsec. (1) of the purchaser. Subsection (3) further requires the vendor of the master key to produce the record at the request of a peace officer. A failure to comply with either of the requirements described in subsection (3) gives rise to a summary conviction offence.

ANNOTATIONS

This section contemplates a device which may be the subject of commerce, the sale and possession of which is lawful only under licence. A coat hanger although so fashioned as to be capable of lifting the latch on locked vehicles does not fall within the meaning of "automobile master key": R. v. Young (1983), 3 C.C.C. (3d) 395 (Ont. C.A.).

Having in Possession

POSSESSION OF PROPERTY OBTAINED BY CRIME / Obliterated vehicle identification number / Definition of "vehicle identification number".

354. (1) Every one commits an offence who has in his possession any property or thing or any proceeds of any property or thing knowing that all or part of the property or thing or of the proceeds was obtained by or derived directly or indirectly from

- (a) the commission in Canada of an offence punishable by indictment; or
- (b) an act or omission anywhere that, if it had occurred in Canada, would have constituted an offence punishable by indictment.

(2) In proceedings in respect of an offence under subsection (1), evidence that a person has in his possession a motor vehicle the vehicle identification number of which has been wholly or partially removed or obliterated or a part of a motor vehicle being a part bearing a vehicle identification number that has been wholly or partially removed or obliterated is, in the absence of any evidence to the contrary, proof that the motor vehicle or part, as the case may be, was obtained, and that such person had the motor vehicle or part, as the case may be, in his possession knowing that it was obtained,

- (a) by the commission in Canada of an offence punishable by indictment; or
- (b) by an act or omission anywhere that, if it had occurred in Canada, would have constituted an offence punishable by indictment.

(3) For the purposes of subsection (2), "vehicle identification number" means any number or other mark placed on a motor vehicle for the purpose of distinguishing the motor vehicle from other similar motor vehicles. R.S., c. C-34, s. 312; 1972, c. 13, s. 27; 1974-75-76, c. 93, s. 29.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms "motor vehicle" and "property" are defined in s. 2. Possession is defined in s. 4(3), however, s. 358 defines circumstances in which possession is complete. An indictable offence includes Crown-option offences which may be prosecuted by indictment, by virtue of s. 34(1) of the Interpretation Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. I-21.

The punishment for this offence is set out in s. 355 and see notes under that section respecting mode of trial and release pending trial. The offence which is most often alleged to be the indictable offence by which the goods were obtained is theft under s. 334. Other related offences are: s. 342, theft, etc., of credit card; s. 343, robbery; s. 346, extortion; s. 348, break and enter; s. 349, unlawfully in dwelling house; s. 351, possession of break-in instruments; s. 352, possession of instruments for breaking into coin-operated devices; s. 362, obtaining by false pretences; s. 380, fraud.

By virtue of s. 583(b), an indictment which otherwise complies with s. 581 is not insufficient by reason that it fails to name the person who owns or has a special property or interest in property mentioned in the count. Also note s. 588 which deems certain persons to have a property interest in property of which they have the management, control or custody. Sections 359 and 360 enact special evidentiary rules. Under s. 359, evidence that stolen property was found in the accused's possession in the previous 12 months is admissible to prove knowledge that the property which forms the subject-matter of the proceedings was stolen property. Under s. 360, evidence may be given that the accused was convicted in the previous 5 years of theft or an offence under this section, to prove that knowledge that the property which forms the subject-matter of the proceedings was unlawfully obtained. Note that, for both sections, notice must be given to the accused.

As to admission of photographic evidence of property, see s. 491.2. For proof by way of affidavit of ownership, lawful possession, value, and that the person was deprived of property by fraud or otherwise without the person's lawful consent, see s. 657.1.

This offence may be the basis for an application for an authorization to intercept private communications by reason of s. 183 or a warrant to conduct video surveillance pursuant to s. 487.01(5). In some circumstances, the offence under this section will constitute an enterprise crime offence for the purposes of Part XII.2 [see s. 462.3, definition of enterprise crime offence para. (b)].

Bringing into Canada anything obtained outside Canada by an act that, if committed in Canada, would have been an offence under this section if committed in Canada is an offence under s. 357. Possession of mail, etc., obtained by theft is an offence under s. 356(1)(b).

SYNOPSIS

This section describes the offence of possession of property obtained by crime. Subsection (1) states that if a person has in his possession any property or the proceeds of any property, knowing that such property or proceeds were obtained or derived directly or indirectly from the commission in Canada of an indictable offence or an act or omission in any location which would in Canada constitute an indictable offence, that person is guilty of an offence. Subsection (2) states that evidence that the vehicle identification number of a motor vehicle, or a part of a motor vehicle, has been wholly or partially obliterated or removed is, absent evidence to the contrary, proof that the item was obtained and that the person in possession of it knew that it was obtained by the commission of an indictable offence.

ANNOTATIONS

Doctrine of recent possession – The most recent review of the elements of the “doctrine” of recent possession is found in R. v. Kowlyk (1988), 43 C.C.C. (3d) 1, 65 C.R. (3d) 97, [1988] 2 S.C.R. 59 (4:1). Those elements, as set out in that case and distilled from the various decisions as approved in Kowlyk, may be summarized as follows:

1. No adverse inference may be drawn against an accused from the fact of possession alone unless it were recent: R. v. Graham (1972), 7 C.C.C. (2d) 93, [1974] S.C.R. 59 (7:0);
2. if a pre-trial explanation of such possession were given by the accused, and if it possessed that degree of contemporaneity with the possession making evidence of it admissible, no adverse inference could be drawn on the basis of recent possession alone if the explanation were one which could reasonably be true: R. v. Graham, supra;
3. in the absence of such explanation, recent possession alone is quite sufficient to raise a factual inference of theft;
4. where the accused does not testify, a jury instruction as to the inference arising from unexplained possession does not constitute a “comment” within the meaning of s. 4(6): R. v. Newton (1976), 28 C.C.C. (2d) 286, 34 C.R.N.S. 161 (S.C.C.) (9:0);
5. where an explanation which could reasonably be true is given for the possession, then no inference of guilt on the basis of recent possession alone may be drawn, even if the trier of fact is not satisfied as to the truth of the explanation and thus, to obtain a conviction in the face of such an explanation, it must establish by other evidence the guilt of the accused beyond a reasonable doubt;

6. the unexplained possession of stolen goods, standing alone, will also warrant an inference of guilt of breaking and entering and theft of those goods;

7. upon proof of the unexplained possession of recently stolen goods, the trier of fact may – but not must – draw an inference of guilt of theft or of offences incidental thereto;

8. where the circumstances are such that a question could arise as to whether the accused was a thief or merely a possessor, it will be for the trier of fact, upon a consideration of all the circumstances, to decide which, if either, inference should be drawn.

In the subsequent case of R. v. Wiseman (1989), 52 C.C.C. (3d) 160, 93 N.S.R. (2d) 306 (N.S.C.A.), the court interpreted Kowlyk as also standing for the proposition that, in charging the jury, the trial judge should avoid the use of the phrase “doctrine of recent possession”. The court stated that what is really involved is an inference from unexplained possession of recently stolen goods. The court seems to have been concerned that use of a term such as “doctrine” implies some mandatory rule of law, rather than application of a common sense inference.

Although the doctrine is stated in terms of the inference applying in the absence of any reasonable explanation, there is no burden on the Crown to prove that no explanation was given prior to trial or that such explanation, if given, could not reasonably be true: R. v. Graham, supra. It would seem, however, that where an explanation was given to the police, then defence counsel can adduce it through the police: R. v. Newton, supra, per Dickson J. The exact basis for its admissibility is unclear, although the suggestion from R. v. Graham, supra, is that if made contemporaneously with the finding in possession, it is admissible as part of the res gestae. In that case, it was held that a statement made a few hours later was not admissible at the instance of the defence. In R. v. Graham and other cases such as Ungaro v. The King (1950), 96 C.C.C. 245 (S.C.C.), it was pointed out that where the accused gives a statement to the police, but also testifies, it is the explanation under oath which, if reasonably true, negatives the inference of guilty knowledge.

The trier of fact need not believe the explanation, it is enough that it raises a reasonable doubt: R. v. L'Heureux (1985), 21 C.C.C. (3d) 574, 47 C.R. (3d) 221 (S.C.C.) (7:0). However, an explanation which is disbelieved cannot constitute a reasonable explanation: R. v. Proudlock (1978), 43 C.C.C. (2d) 321, 91 D.L.R. (3d) 449, 5 C.R. (3d) 21 (S.C.C.).

Since no adverse inference may be drawn from the accused's failure to give an explanation for his possession of stolen goods upon his arrest and after he has been informed of his right to remain silent, then it would seem that evidence of silence at that time is irrelevant and should not be admitted. Where evidence has been admitted of silence at the time of arrest and following the caution, it is clearly misdirection to tell the jury that, in assessing the accused's explanation given on the witness stand, they may consider that an explanation given at once is more convincing than one given at some later time. Rather, the jury should be told that, while an explanation given before arrest or not too long after the arrest is more convincing than one given at some later time, they must not take into account that the accused, upon being arrested and warned, said nothing and they should be directed that he had the right to say nothing and to consult a lawyer: R. v. Machado (1989), 50 C.C.C. (3d) 133, 71 C.R. (3d) 158 (B.C.C.A.).

Where it was the theory of the Crown that the accused was the actual thief and the Crown did not rely on the doctrine of recent possession the trial Judge is not in error in failing to direct the jury on the doctrine: Hewson v. The Queen (1978), 42 C.C.C. (2d) 507, 89 D.L.R. (3d) 573, [1978] 2 S.C.R. 111 (5:4).

In Saieva v. The Queen (1982), 68 C.C.C. (2d) 97, [1982] 1 S.C.R. 897 (7:0), the Court in considering whether possession was sufficiently “recent” to entitle reliance on the doctrine of recent possession approved the statement in R. v. Killam (1973), 12 C.C.C.

(2d) 114, [1973] 5 W.W.R. 3 (B.C.C.A.) that the criteria to be used are the nature of the object “its rareness, the readiness in which it can, and is likely to, pass from hand to hand, the ease of its identification and the likelihood of transferability”.

Proof that goods obtained by crime – An admission by the accused is admissible for its truth, even if the admission itself contains hearsay, provided that the accused indicates a belief in the acceptance of the truth of the hearsay statement. If, however, the accused merely reports a hearsay statement without either adopting it or indicating a belief in its truth then the statement is not admissible for the truth of its contents. Thus, out of court statements by an accused, charged with the offence under this section, that he did not know the origin of the goods but his friend had stolen the goods and he knew they were “hot”, made in circumstances indicating he believed the statements were true, were admissible not only to prove guilty knowledge but that, in fact, the goods were stolen: Streu v. The Queen (1989), 48 C.C.C. (3d) 321, [1989] 1 S.C.R. 1521, 70 C.R. (3d) 1 (5:0).

Where the indictable offence is specified in the indictment as “theft” it is misdirection to instruct the jury that the offence is proven if the goods were obtained by fraud: R. v. Beaudet (1977), 34 C.C.C. (2d) 150 (Ont. C.A.).

Although it is alleged that the goods were obtained by the commission “in Canada” of an indictable offence the Crown is not required to prove whether the crime was committed in Canada as long as it is, or would have been if committed in Canada, an indictable offence: R. v. Elliott (1984), 15 C.C.C. (3d) 195, [1985] 1 W.W.R. 97 (Alta. C.A.).

Meaning of “obtained by” – The words “obtained by”, apply only where the indictable offence was committed in respect of the thing obtained. Thus where the owner willingly parts with the goods as part of a scheme to defraud his own insurance company by falsely reporting that the goods were stolen the goods have not been obtained by the commission of an indictable offence. They have however been “indirectly derived” from the commission of a crime within the meaning of this subsection: R. v. Geauvreau (1979), 51 C.C.C. (2d) 75 (Ont. C.A.), affd 66 C.C.C. (2d) 375, 28 C.R. (3d) 1, [1982] 1 S.C.R. 485 (9:0).

Goods were not, however, obtained by or derived directly or indirectly from commission of the offence of fraud where the goods were sold to the accused by the owner even if, to the knowledge of the accused, the owner had attempted to defraud his insurance company by arranging for a fake break and enter in which these goods were “stolen”. In those circumstances the goods were not the proceeds of crime: R. v. Epp (1988), 42 C.C.C. (3d) 572, 68 Sask. R. 49 (C.A.).

Goods which the accused originally found were “obtained by” the commission of an indictable offence where she subsequently fraudulently converted them to her own use and then retained them in her possession: R. v. Hayes (1985), 20 C.C.C. (3d) 385, 46 C.R. (3d) 393 (Ont. C.A.).

Charging offence – Where a count named the property’s owner with some imprecision, but still furnished the accused with reasonable information to identify the alleged owner, there was no error fatal to conviction: R. v. Emmons (1970), 1 C.C.C. (2d) 468, 13 C.R.N.S. 310 (Alta.S.C.App.Div.).

A charge of possession of stolen clothes the property of a person or persons unknown was held to be valid on the ground that for either theft or possession the Crown need only prove ownership in some person or persons other than the accused: R. v. McDowell, [1970] 5 C.C.C. 374, 18 C.R.N.S. 193 (Ont.C.A.), affd [1971] 1 S.C.R. vi, 18 C.R.N.S. 195n.

A count alleging possession of property without alleging the owner or without even in the alternative alleging ownership in a person or persons unknown is valid: R. v. Halliday (1975), 25 C.C.C. (2d) 131, 12 N.S.R. (2d) 1 (S.C. App. Div.).

Where the indictment spells out the particulars of the actual commission of the offence punishable by indictment, from which the property originated, it is not necessary for the Crown to prove knowledge of those particulars on the part of the accused: R. v. Gowing and Johnson (1970), 2 C.C.C. (2d) 105, 12 C.R.N.S. 139 (Alta. S.C. App. Div.).

Rule precluding multiple convictions – The majority theory (6:1) in Cote v. The Queen (1974), 18 C.C.C. (2d) 321, 26 C.R.N.S. 26 (S.C.C.) that in law there is no bar to a convicted thief, who is subsequently found with the very stolen articles, being convicted of unlawful possession should be carefully considered in view of the difficulty of establishing when the thief had consummated his theft and when the offence of his unlawful possession of the same property commenced. Although there is a division of opinion the weight of the previous authorities seems to be in favour of the proposition that where possession and theft are proximate the thief cannot also be convicted of illegal possession of the same articles: Fergusson v. The Queen (1961), 132 C.C.C. 112, 36 C.R. 271 (S.C.C.), R. v. Siggins (1960), 127 C.C.C. 409, 32 C.R. 306 (Ont. C.A.), R. v. Varkonyi, [1964] 1 C.C.C. 311, 42 W.W.R. 507 (Man. C.A.), R. v. Pryce, [1967] 3 C.C.C. 13, 50 C.R. 80 (B.C.C.A.), and R. v. Hunt, [1968] 4 C.C.C. 366, 4 C.R.N.S. 386 (N.S. Co. Ct.). Contra R. v. MacQuarrie, [1964] 3 C.C.C. 261, 43 C.R. 97 (P.E.I.S.C.), per MacGuigan J., dissenting, and R. v. McKay, [1968] 4 C.C.C. 355, 4 C.R.N.S. 380 (N.W.T.T.C.).

Presumption for removal of V.I.N. number [subsec. (2)] – The presumption does not operate to provide proof of the type of indictable offence specified in the indictment by which the vehicle left the hands of its rightful possessor: R. v. Leslie (1975), 23 C.C.C. (2d) 343 (Ont. C.A.).

The presumption in this subsection may be rebutted by evidence that merely raises a reasonable doubt and is not rejected by the trier of fact: Re Boyle and The Queen, infra; R. v. Hill (1983), 4 C.C.C. (3d) 519 (Ont. C.A.).

The term “obliterate” in this subsection includes the destruction of the integrity of the original vehicle identification number by altering some of the numbers and letters comprising it to produce a new and spurious vehicle identification number: R. v. Hodgkins (1985), 19 C.C.C. (3d) 109 (Ont. C.A.).

Constitutional considerations – Application of the doctrine of recent possession does not offend the guarantees in para. 11 (c) and (d) of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms: R. v. Russell (1983), 4 C.C.C. (3d) 460, 32 C.R. (3d) 307 (N.S.S.C. App. Div.).

Subsection (2) creates two presumptions: that the vehicle was obtained by commission of an indictable offence and that the accused had guilty knowledge. However, only the first is constitutionally valid. The presumption of guilty knowledge is arbitrary and contravenes the guarantee to the presumption of innocence in s. 11 (d) of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. Accordingly, while the Crown may rely on this subsection to prove that the vehicle was unlawfully obtained, guilty knowledge must be proved by inferences from other circumstances such as the unexplained possession of recently stolen goods: Re Boyle and The Queen (1983), 5 C.C.C. (3d) 193, 35 C.R. (3d) 34 (Ont. C.A.).

PUNISHMENT.

355. Every one who commits an offence under section 354

- (a) is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding ten years, where the subject-matter of the offence is a testamentary instrument or the value of the subject-matter of the offence exceeds five thousand dollars; or
- (b) is guilty
  - (i) of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding two years, or
  - (ii) of an offence punishable on summary conviction, where the value of the subject-matter of the offence does not exceed five thousand dollars. R.S., c. C-34, s. 313; 1972, c. 13, s. 28; 1974-75-76, c. 93, s. 30; R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 49; 1994, c. 44, s. 21.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The offence in para. (a) is an indictable offence for which the accused may elect his mode of trial under s. 536(2). Release pending trial is determined under s. 515. Where the prosecution elects to proceed by indictment for the offence under para. (b) then, by virtue of s. 553, it is an offence over which a provincial court judge has absolute jurisdiction and does not depend on the consent of the accused. That is, the accused does not have an election as to mode of trial, although the provincial court judge may, by virtue of s. 555(1), elect to continue the proceedings as a preliminary inquiry, in which case, the accused is deemed to have elected trial by judge and jury pursuant to s. 565(1)(a). As well, under s. 555(2), where, in the course of the trial, evidence establishes that the subject-matter of the offence is a testamentary instrument or that its value exceeds $5,000 then the provincial court judge shall put the accused to his election under s. 536(2). Where the prosecution elects to proceed by way of summary conviction then the proceedings are conducted by a summary conviction court pursuant to Part XXVII. The punishment is then as set out in s. 787 and the limitation period is set out in s. 786(2). For the offence under para. (b), release pending trial is determined by s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by a peace officer under s. 496, 497 or by the officer in charge under s. 498. The value of a valuable security (defined in s. 2) is determined in accordance with s. 4(2) and of a postal card or stamp in accordance with s. 4(1). The term "testamentary instrument" is defined in s. 2.

ANNOTATIONS

An item's retail value prima facie establishes its value: R. v. Belanger (1972), 6 C.C.C. (2d) 210 (B.C.C.A.).

On a charge of possession of stolen property the value is not an essential ingredient of the offence but rather goes only to jurisdiction and sentence. Where the charge alleged the offence under para. (a) but there was no evidence to show that the value was in excess of that amount the court would be justified in entering a conviction under para. (b) provided there was evidence that the property was of some value: R. v. Gillis (1977), 35 C.C.C. (2d) 418 (N.S.S.C. App. Div.).

THEFT FROM MAIL / Allegation of value not necessary.

356. (1) Every one who

(a) steals

(i) any thing sent by post, after it is deposited at a post office and before it is delivered,

(ii) a bag, sack or other container or covering in which mail is conveyed, whether or not it contains mail, or

(iii) a key suited to a lock adopted for use in the Canada Post Corporation, or

(b) has in his possession anything in respect of which he knows that an offence has been committed under paragraph (a),

is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding ten years.

(2) In proceedings for an offence under this section it is not necessary to allege in the indictment or to prove on the trial that anything in respect of which the offence was committed had any value. R.S., c. C-34, s. 314; 1980-81-82-83, c. 54, s. 56.

CROSS-REFERENCES

Possession is defined by s. 4(3), however, s. 358 defines circumstances in which possession is complete. The terms "mail", "post" and "post office" are defined in s. 2(1) of the Canada Post Corporation Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. C-10 and "delivery" in s. 2(2) of that Act.

This offence may be the basis for an application for an authorization to intercept private communications by reason of s. 183 or a warrant to conduct video surveillance under s. 487.01(5).

The accused may elect his mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2). Release pending trial is determined by s. 515.

Section 476(e) contains a special provision for territorial jurisdiction where an offence is committed, in respect of a mail, in the course of door-to-door delivery.

The related offence of stopping mail with intent to rob or search is in s. 345.

For the offence under subsec. (1)(b), ss. 359 and 360 enact special evidentiary rules.

Under s. 359, evidence that stolen property was found in the accused's possession in the previous 12 months is admissible to prove knowledge that the property that forms the subject-matter of the proceedings was stolen property. Under s. 360, evidence may be given that the accused was convicted in the previous 5 years, of theft or an offence under s. 354, that to prove that knowledge that the property which forms the subject-matter of the proceedings was unlawfully obtained. Note that, for both sections, notice must be given to the accused.

SYNOPSIS

This section describes the offence of theft from the mail. Subsection (1)(a) states that any person who steals anything sent by post, after it has been deposited at a post office and before it is delivered, who steals a bag, sack, or other container used to convey mail, whether or not it contains mail, or who steals a key for a lock used by Canada Post, is guilty of an offence. Subsection (1)(b) makes it an offence for a person to have in his possession anything in respect of which he knows that an offence under subsec. (1)(a) has been committed. The offence is indictable and carries a maximum term of imprisonment of 10 years. Subsection (2) makes it clear that it is unnecessary for the prosecution to allege in the indictment or to prove at trial that anything in respect of which an offence under this section was committed had any value.

ANNOTATIONS

By virtue of s. 588 a letter once it is deposited at the post office becomes the property of the Postmaster General: R. v. Wendland (1970), 1 C.C.C. (2d) 382 (Sask. C.A.).

By virtue of the definition of "delivery" in the Post Office Act, R.S.C. 1970, c. P-14 [now s. 2(2) of the Canada Post Corporation Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. C-10], mail in a lock box is already delivered: R. v. Burgess (1976), 33 C.C.C. (2d) 126 (B.C.C.A.).

Mail is not "delivered" until it is in a receptacle to which the addressee has access and may remove the mail: R. v. Weaver, Warwick and Smurthwaite (1980), 55 C.C.C. (2d) 564, 30 O.R. (2d) 361 (C.A.).

BRINGING INTO CANADA PROPERTY OBTAINED BY CRIME.

357. Every one who brings into or has in Canada anything that he has obtained outside Canada by an act that, if it had been committed in Canada, would have been the offence of theft or an offence under section 342 or 354, is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to a term of imprisonment not exceeding ten years. R.S., c. C-34, s. 315; R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 50.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The offence of theft is described in ss. 322 to 334 and 338. The accused may elect his mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2). Release pending trial is determined by s. 515.

SYNOPSIS

This section makes it an offence to import into Canada or to have possession of anything so imported that the accused obtained by an act that would have been the offence of theft or an offence under s. 342 (credit card offences) or 354 (possession of goods obtained by crime) if it had been committed in Canada. The offence is indictable and carries a maximum term of imprisonment of 10 years.

HAVING IN POSSESSION WHEN COMPLETE.

358. For the purposes of sections 342 and 354 and paragraph 356(1)(b), the offence of having in possession is complete when a person has, alone or jointly with another person, possession of or control over anything mentioned in those sections or when he aids in concealing or disposing of it, as the case may be. R.S., c. C-34, s. 316; R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 50.

CROSS-REFERENCES

For the definition of possession generally, see s. 4(3).

ANNOTATIONS

It was held in R. v. MacPherson; R. v. Resnick, [1964] 3 C.C.C. 170, 43 C.R. 272 (Ont. C.A.), that a person aiding in concealing or disposing of stolen goods is held to be in possession of these goods.

It was found in R. v. Hanson; R. v. Klepeck, [1966] 4 C.C.C. 86 (B.C.C.A.), that the intention of the accused to possess only a part of the whole is inconsistent with an intention to possess the whole.

EVIDENCE / Notice to accused.

359. (1) Where an accused is charged with an offence under section 342 or 354 or paragraph 356(1)(b), evidence is admissible at any stage of the proceedings to show that property other than the property that is the subject-matter of the proceedings

(a) was found in the possession of the accused, and

(b) was stolen within twelve months before the proceedings were commenced, and that evidence may be considered for the purpose of proving that the accused knew that the property that forms the subject-matter of the proceedings was stolen property.

(2) Subsection (1) does not apply unless

(a) at least three days notice in writing is given to the accused that in the proceedings it is intended to prove that property other than the property that is the subject-matter of the proceedings was found in his possession; and

(b) the notice sets out the nature or description of the property and describes the person from whom it is alleged to have been stolen. R.S., c. C-34, s. 317; R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 51.

CROSS-REFERENCES

Possession is defined in s. 4(3). Under s. 27(1) of the Interpretation Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. I-21, in calculating "at least" a number of days between two events, the days on which the events happen are excluded.

SYNOPSIS

This section sets out evidentiary provisions which the prosecutor may rely upon in proceedings under ss. 342, 354 or 356(1)(b). Evidence that property, other than the property that is the subject-matter of the offence, was found in the possession of the accused and was stolen within the 12 months prior to the beginning of the proceedings, is admissible at any stage of the proceedings and may be considered for the purpose of proving that the accused knew that the property that forms the subject-matter of the offence was stolen property. Subsection (2) states that the prosecutor may only make use of subsec. (1) if written notice, at least three days prior to trial, is given to the accused. Subsection 2(b) further requires that the notice set out the nature or description of the property referred to in subsec. 2(a) and the person from whom the prosecutor alleges such property was stolen.

ANNOTATIONS

Compliance with subsec. (2) is not required where evidence of possession of another stolen article was offered only to identify the accused as the thief of both articles: R. v. Boutilier (1968), 4 C.R.N.S. 90 (N.S.Co.Ct.).

In R. v. Hewitt (1986), 32 C.C.C. (3d) 62, 55 C.R. (3d) 41 (Man. C.A.) the court considered the constitutionality of this section in view of s. 7 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms and seems to have held that the section should be "read down" so as to apply only where the evidence of prior convictions would be relevant for a reason other than to show merely that the accused was of a bad disposition.

In R. v. Guyett (1989), 51 C.C.C. (3d) 368, 72 C.R. (3d) 383, 35 O.A.C. 135 (C.A.), the court also held that this section offends s. 7 of the Charter of Rights since, under it, evidence of bad character may be introduced, even if it shows nothing other than bad character. However, the court did not find it necessary to consider whether this section constitutes a reasonable limit within the meaning of s. 1 of the Charter, since the evidence, which had been admitted pursuant to this section, would have been admissible, in any event, under the common law rules of admissibility.

EVIDENCE OF PREVIOUS CONVICTION / Notice to accused.

360. (1) Where an accused is charged with an offence under section 354 or paragraph 356(1)(b) and evidence is adduced that the subject-matter of the proceedings was found in his possession, evidence that the accused was, within five years before the proceedings were commenced, convicted of an offence involving theft or an offence under section 354 is admissible at any stage of the proceedings and may be taken into consideration for the purpose of proving that the accused knew that the property that forms the subject-matter of the proceedings was unlawfully obtained.

(2) Subsection (1) does not apply unless at least three days notice in writing is given to the accused that in the proceedings it is intended to prove the previous conviction. R.S., c. C-34, s. 318.

CROSS-REFERENCES

Possession is defined in s. 4(3). Under s. 27(1) of the Interpretation Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. I-21, in calculating "at least" a number of days between two events, the days on which the events happen are excluded. Section 667 provides a means of proving prior convictions. Also note s. 666 which permits evidence of previous convictions to be introduced where the accused adduces evidence of his good character and s. 12 of the Canada Evidence Act which gives the judge a discretion to permit cross-examination of an accused on his prior criminal record.

SYNOPSIS

This section allows the prosecutor to introduce evidence, in proceedings under ss. 354 or 356(1)(b), that the accused has been convicted, within the five years prior to the commencement of these proceedings, of an offence involving theft or an offence under s. 354. Such evidence is admissible at any stage of the proceedings and may be considered for the purpose of proving that the accused knew that the property which forms the subject-matter of the offence in the proceedings was unlawfully obtained. Section 7 of the Charter may be raised in relation to this evidentiary provision. As in s. 359, the prosecutor must give the accused written notice, at least three days prior to the proceedings, that it is intended to prove the prior conviction.

ANNOTATIONS

The fact that the prior conviction was under appeal at the time of trial did not render it inadmissible pursuant to this section: Hewson v. The Queen (1978), 42 C.C.C. (2d) 507, 89 D.L.R. (3d) 573, [1978] 2 S.C.R. 111 (5:4).

Where additional charges of break and enter and possession of housebreaking instruments are tried jointly with charges of possession and the Crown's emphasis is substantially on the break and enter aspect, evidence of previous convictions for theft or possession is not admissible: R. v. Bowins, Doxtater And Stauffers (1973), 24 C.R.N.S. 279 (Ont.Co.Ct.).

It would seem that to invoke this section the property which is the subject-matter of the proceedings must have been found in the accused's possession and it does not apply to the Crown's case that on some prior occasion the goods were in the accused's possession: R. v. Alvey (1971), 4 C.C.C. (2d) 174, [1971] 3 O.R. 527 (C.A.) referring to R. v. Drage and Others (1878), 14 Cox C.C. 85.

This provision offends s. 7 of the Charter of Rights and is of no force and effect: R. v. Hudyma (1988), 46 C.C.C. (3d) 88 (Ont. Dist. Ct.); R. v. Wyatt (1986), 32 C.R.R. 211 (Ont. Prov. Ct.). Contra: R. v. Gallant (1982), 70 C.C.C. (2d) 213, 38 O.R. (2d) 788, 2 C.R.R. 144 (Ont. Prov. Ct.).

False Pretences

FALSE PRETENCE / Exaggeration / Question of fact.

361. (1) A false pretence is a representation of a matter of fact either present or past, made by words or otherwise, that is known by the person who makes it to be false and that is made with a fraudulent intent to induce the person to whom it is made to act on it.

(2) Exaggerated commendation or depreciation of the quality of anything is not a false pretence unless it is carried to such an extent that it amounts to a fraudulent misrepresentation of fact.

(3) For the purposes of subsection (2) it is a question of fact whether commendation or depreciation amounts to a fraudulent misrepresentation of fact. R.S., c. C-34, s. 319.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The offences relating to false pretences are found in ss. 362 and 363. See the cross-references under those sections for mode of trial, release pending trial and special evidentiary provisions. The related offence of theft is defined in ss. 322 to 334, theft, etc., of credit card in s. 342 and fraud in s. 380.

SYNOPSIS

This section defines a false pretence as a representation of a matter of fact made in any fashion that is known by the person who makes it to be false and that is made with a fraudulent intent to induce the person to whom it is made to act on it. Both of the mental elements described above must be present in order to fall within the definition of a false pretence. Subsection (2) states that an exaggeration or depreciation of the quality of anything does not amount to a false pretence unless it amounts to a fraudulent misrepresentation of fact. Whether or not the exaggeration or depreciation described in subsec. (2) is a fraudulent misrepresentation is a question of fact.

ANNOTATIONS

A false representation amounting to a mere promise or profession of intention is not a false pretence within this section unless such promise or profession of intention necessarily and irresistibly involves a representation of an existing fact. Thus a false promise to pay for goods in the future is not within this section: R. v. Reid (1940), 74 C.C.C. 156, [1940] 4 D.L.R. 25 (B.C.C.A.). [Note however that where the means of payment is a cheque, Parliament has enacted a special rule set out in s. 362(4).]

FALSE PRETENCE OR FALSE STATEMENT / Punishment / Idem / Presumption from cheque issued without funds / Definition of "cheque".

362. (1) Every one commits an offence who

- (a) by a false pretence, whether directly or through the medium of a contract obtained by a false pretence, obtains anything in respect of which the offence of theft may be committed or causes it to be delivered to another person;
  - (b) obtains credit by a false pretence or by fraud;
  - (c) knowingly makes or causes to be made, directly or indirectly, a false statement in writing with intent that it should be relied on, with respect to the financial condition or means or ability to pay of himself or any person, firm or corporation that he is interested in or that he acts for, for the purpose of procuring, in any form whatever, whether for his benefit or the benefit of that person, firm or corporation,
    - (i) the delivery of personal property,
    - (ii) the payment of money,
    - (iii) the making of a loan,
    - (iv) the grant or extension of credit,
    - (v) the discount of an account receivable, or
    - (vi) the making, accepting, discounting or endorsing of a bill of exchange, cheque, draft, or promissory note; or
  - (d) knowing that a false statement in writing has been made with respect to the financial condition or means or ability to pay of himself or another person, firm or corporation that he is interested in or that he acts for, procures on the faith of that statement, whether for his benefit or for the benefit of that person, firm or corporation, anything mentioned in subparagraphs (c)(i) to (vi).
- (2) Every one who commits an offence under paragraph (1)(a)
- (a) is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to a term of imprisonment not exceeding ten years, where the property obtained is a testamentary instrument or the value of what is obtained exceeds five thousand dollars; or
  - (b) is guilty
    - (i) of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding two years, or
    - (ii) of an offence punishable on summary conviction, where the value of what is obtained does not exceed five thousand dollars.
- (3) Every one who commits an offence under paragraph (1)(b), (c) or (d) is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding ten years.
- (4) Where, in proceedings under paragraph (1)(a), it is shown that anything was obtained by the accused by means of a cheque that, when presented for payment within a reasonable time, was dishonoured on the ground that no funds or insufficient funds were on deposit to the credit of the accused in the bank or other institution on which the cheque was drawn, it shall be presumed to have been obtained by a false pretence, unless the court is satisfied by evidence that when the accused issued the cheque he believed on reasonable grounds that it would be honoured if presented for payment within a reasonable time after it was issued.
- (5) In this section, "cheque" includes, in addition to its ordinary meaning, a bill of exchange drawn on any institution that makes it a business practice to honour bills of exchange or any particular kind thereof drawn on it by depositors. R.S., c. C-34, s. 320; 1972, c. 13, s. 29; 1974-75-76, c. 93, s. 31; R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 52; 1994, c. 44, s. 22.

CROSS-REFERENCES

A false pretence is defined in s. 361.

As to admission of photographic evidence of property, see s. 491.2. For proof by way of affidavit of ownership, lawful possession, value, and that the person was deprived of property by fraud or otherwise without the person's lawful consent, see s. 657.1. By virtue of s. 583(b), an indictment which otherwise complies with s. 581 is not insufficient by reason only that (b), it fails to name the person who owns or has a special property or interest in property mentioned in the count or (c), it charges an intent to defraud without naming or describing the person whom it was intended to defraud. Also note s. 588 which deems certain persons to have a property interest in property of which they have the management, control or custody. Under s. 586, no count alleging false pretences or fraud is insufficient by reason only that it does not set out in detail the nature of the false pretences or fraud. However, under s. 587(1)(b), the court may order particulars of any false pretence or fraud that is alleged.

Where the offence under subsec. (1)(a), although committed outside Canada, is in relation to the use of nuclear material, see s. 7(3.4).

The offence in para. (2)(a) is a pure indictable offence for which the accused may elect his mode of trial under s. 536(2). Where the prosecution elects to proceed by indictment for the offence under para. 2(b) then, by virtue of s. 553, it is an offence over which a provincial court judge has absolute jurisdiction and does not depend on the consent of the accused. That is, the accused does not have an election as to mode of trial, although the provincial court judge may, by virtue of s. 555(1), elect to continue the proceedings as a preliminary inquiry, in which case, the accused is deemed to have elected trial by judge and jury pursuant to s. 565(1)(a). As well, under s. 555(2), where, in the course of the trial, evidence establishes that the subject-matter of the offence is a testamentary instrument or that its value exceeds $1000 then the provincial court judge shall put the accused to his election under s. 536(2). Where the prosecution elects to proceed by way of summary conviction then the proceedings are conducted by a summary conviction court pursuant to Part XXVII. The punishment is then as set out in s. 787 and the limitation period is set out in s. 786(2). For the offences under subsec. (2), release pending trial is determined by s. 515, although in case of the offence under subsec. (2)(b) the accused is eligible for release by a peace officer under s. 496, 497 or by the officer in charge under s. 498. The value of a valuable security (defined in s. 2) is determined in accordance with s. 4(2) and of a postal card or stamp in accordance with s. 4(1). The term "testamentary instrument" is defined in s. 2.

For the offences punished under subsec. (3), the accused may elect his mode of trial under s. 536(2) and release pending trial is governed by s. 515.

SYNOPSIS

This section describes the offence of false pretences and the punishment for the offence. Subsection (1) states that any person who, by a false pretence or fraud, obtains credit, or who knowingly makes a false statement in writing, intending it to be relied upon, with respect to his own financial state, or that of any entity in which he has an interest, in order to procure any of the benefits listed in subsec. (1)(c), is guilty of an offence. Subsection (1) further states that every one commits an offence who knows that a false written statement about his own financial state or that of any entity in which he has an interest has been made and, on the basis of that statement, procures anything mentioned in subsec. (1)(c). Finally, an offence under this section is committed when a person, by false pretence, directly or indirectly as described in subsec. (1)(a), obtains anything for himself or another person in respect of which the offence of theft may be committed. The form of the offence described in subsec. (1)(a) is indictable, with a maximum term of 10 years' imprisonment when the property obtained is a testamentary instrument, or its value exceeds $5,000. Where the value does not exceed $5,000, the offence is hybrid with a maximum term of imprisonment of two years on indictment. The forms of the offence described in subsec. (1)(b), (c) and (d) are all punishable by indictment only, with a maximum term of 10 years' imprisonment. Subsection (4) enacts a presumption that in proceedings under subsec. (1)(a) where the goods have been obtained by an N.S.F. cheque, it shall be presumed that those goods have been obtained by false pretences unless the court is satisfied that the accused believed on reasonable grounds that the cheque would be honoured when he wrote it. Subsection (5) gives a wide definition to the term "cheque" for the purposes of this section.

ANNOTATIONS

Whether property must pass – The word "obtains" does not mean that the goods must wholly or entirely pass to the accused; the passing of their possession and a property interest, e.g., an insurable interest, in them is sufficient for conviction: R. v. Hemingway (1955), 112 C.C.C. 321, 22 C.R. 275 (S.C.C.).

Subsequently the view was expressed (2:1) that the acquiring of mere possession would satisfy the requirements of the offence of obtaining anything by a false pretence: R. v. Campbell, [1968] 1 C.C.C. 104, 1 C.R.N.S. 325 (B.C.C.A.).

A very useful review of the conflicting authorities on the issue whether or not, for the establishment of this offence, in addition to bare possession some aspect of ownership must also pass is found in R. v. Vallillee (1974), 15 C.C.C. (2d) 409, 24 C.R.N.S. 319 (Ont. C.A.).

Proof of offence of obtaining by false pretences [subsec. (1)(a)] – Where on appeal the Court finds that a lesser amount than that set out in the indictment was proved to have been obtained it may amend the conviction accordingly and dismiss the appeal: Lake v. The Queen, [1969] 2 C.C.C. 224, [1969] S.C.R. 49 (5:0).

Where the victim made his own thorough investigation, not relying on the representations by the accused, a conviction under this section cannot be sustained: R. v. Thornton (1926), 46 C.C.C. 249, 37 B.C.L.R. 344 (C.A.).

Obtaining credit by fraud or false pretences [subsec. (1)(b)] – The credit obtained does not have to be that of the accused; it is sufficient for conviction if he obtained goods by falsely charging them to his employer's account. Furthermore, it is no defence for the accused to argue successfully that he could have been convicted under subsec. (1)(a) of obtaining by a false pretence: R. v. Dvornek (1962), 132 C.C.C. 231, 37 C.R. 344 (B.C.C.A.).

A loan of money secured by a property mortgage amounts to the obtaining of credit. Furthermore, there is a presumption that where money was obtained by a false pretence, prima facie, there is an intent to defraud. Even where the victim makes its own investigation, if the false representation by the accused is the operative inducement in the obtaining of the credit the offence is made out: R. v. Dyke And Dyke (1976), 33 C.C.C. (2d) 556, 37 C.R.N.S. 379 (Nfld. Dist. Ct.).

False statement respecting financial condition [subsec. (1)(c)] – It was held prior to the recent amendment to subpara. (iv), which added the word "grant", that the phrase "extension of credit" means granting or according credit and therefore does not include conduct by the accused which merely serves to keep open an existing line of credit: R. v. Cohen (1984), 15 C.C.C. (3d) 231 (Que. C.A.).

Presumption from N.S.F. cheque [subsec. (4)] – Where the case against the accused was that he obtained goods by a cheque drawn against a non-existent bank account it is not necessary, once the Crown has satisfactorily proven the non-existence of the account, to prove the presentment and dishonouring of the cheque: R. v. Morphett (1970), 1 C.C.C. (2d) 98, 13 C.R.N.S. 270 (B.C.C.A.).

More than a reasonable doubt is required to rebut the presumption which may be satisfied by evidence whether or not it flows from the accused: R. v. Druckman (1974), 31 C.R.N.S. 177 (Ont. Co. Ct.).

The accused's explanation is to be judged using a subjective test and a real belief that funds would be available even though considered objectively the belief was unreasonable will lead to an acquittal: R. v. Lane (1978), 42 C.C.C. (2d) 375 (Ont. Prov. Ct.).

This subsection is of no force and effect by reason of its violation of the guarantee to the presumption of innocence in s. 11(d) of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms: R. v. Driscoll (1987), 38 C.C.C. (3d) 28, 60 C.R. (3d) 88, [1987] 6 W.W.R. 748 (Alta. C.A.); R. v. Ferguson (1992), 70 C.C.C. (3d) 30, 12 C.R. (4th) 198 (P.E.I.S.C.). Contra: R. v. Bunka (1984), 12 C.C.C. (3d) 437, [1984] 4 W.W.R. 252, 32 Sask. R. 271 (Q.B.).

OBTAINING EXECUTION OF VALUABLE SECURITY BY FRAUD.

363. Every one who, with intent to defraud or injure another person, by a false pretence causes or induces any person

- (a) to execute, make, accept, endorse or destroy the whole or any part of a valuable security, or
- (b) to write, impress or affix a name or seal on any paper or parchment in order that it may afterwards be made or converted into or used or dealt with as a valuable security, is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding five years. R.S., c. C-34, s. 321.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term “valuable security” is defined in s. 2 and its value determined in accordance with s. 4(2).

By virtue of s. 583, an indictment which otherwise complies with s. 581 is not insufficient by reason only that (b), it fails to name the person who owns or has a special property or interest in property mentioned in the count or (c), it charges an intent to defraud without naming or describing the person whom it was intended to defraud. Also note s. 588 which deems certain persons to have a property interest in property of which they have the management, control or custody. Under s. 586, no count alleging false pretences or fraud is insufficient by reason only that it does not set out in detail the nature of the false pretences or fraud. However, under s. 587(1)(b), the court may order particulars of any false pretence or fraud that is alleged.

The accused may elect his mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2). Release pending trial is determined by s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by the officer in charge pursuant to s. 498.

SYNOPSIS

This section describes the indictable offence of obtaining the execution of a valuable security by means of a false pretence. The accused must have the intent to defraud or injure another person. The maximum term of imprisonment upon conviction for this offence is five years.

FRAUDULENTLY OBTAINING FOOD, BEVERAGE OR ACCOMMODATION / Presumption / Definition of “cheque”.

364. (1) Every one who fraudulently obtains food, a beverage or accommodation at any place that is in the business of providing those things is guilty of an offence punishable on summary conviction

(2) In proceedings under this section, evidence that the accused obtained food, a beverage or accommodation at a place that is in the business of providing those things and did not pay for it and

- (a) made a false or fictitious show or pretence of having baggage,
- (b) had any false or pretended baggage,
- (c) surreptitiously removed or attempted to remove his baggage or any material part of it,
- (d) absconded or surreptitiously left the premises,
- (e) knowingly made a false statement to obtain credit or time for payment, or
- (f) offered a worthless cheque, draft or security in payment for the food, beverage or accommodation, is, in the absence of any evidence to the contrary, proof of fraud.

(3) In this section, "cheque" includes, in addition to its ordinary meaning, a bill of exchange drawn on any institution that makes it a business practice to honour bills of exchange or any particular kind thereof drawn on it by depositors. R.S., c. C-34, s. 322; 1994, c. 44, s. 23.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms "food", "beverage" and "accommodation" are not defined in this section. However, reference might be made to the definition of "food" in the Food and Drugs Act, s. 2. While there is no definition of "fraudulently" which is universally applicable, generally speaking, it refers to conduct which is dishonest and morally wrong: R. v. DeMarco (1973), 13 C.C.C. (2d) 369 (Ont. C.A.).

This offence resembles the offence of obtaining by false pretences and thus, see notes under s. 361 respecting related offences. Trial of this offence is conducted by a summary conviction court pursuant to Part XXVII. The punishment is as set out in s. 787 and the limitation period is set out in s. 786(2). Release pending trial is determined by s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by a peace officer under s. 496, 497 or by the officer if charge under s. 498.

SYNOPSIS

This section describes the summary conviction offence of fraudulently obtaining food, beverage or accommodation at a place that is in the business of providing those things. Subsection (2) sets out a number of fact situations which, in conjunction with evidence that an accused obtained any of the accommodations described in subsec. (1) without paying, will constitute proof of the fraud, in the absence of evidence to the contrary.

PRETENDING TO PRACTISE WITCHCRAFT, ETC.

365. Every one who fraudulently

- (a) pretends to exercise or to use any kind of witchcraft, sorcery, enchantment or conjuration,
- (b) undertakes, for a consideration, to tell fortunes, or
- (c) pretends from his skill in or knowledge of an occult or crafty science to discover where or in what manner anything that is supposed to have been stolen or lost may be found, is guilty of an offence punishable on summary conviction. R.S., c. C-34, s. 323.

CROSS-REFERENCES

While there is no definition of "fraudulently" which is universally applicable, generally speaking, it refers to conduct which is dishonest and morally wrong: R. v. DeMarco (1973), 13 C.C.C. (2d) 369 (Ont. C.A.).

This offence resembles the offence of obtaining by false pretences and thus, see notes under s. 361 respecting related offences. Trial of this offence is conducted by a summary conviction court pursuant to Part XXVII. The punishment is as set out in s. 787 and the limitation period is set out in s. 786(2). Release pending trial is determined by s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by a peace officer under s. 496, 497 or by the officer ifn charge under s. 498.

ANNOTATIONS

The mere telling of a fortune is not per se illegal, as the Crown must also prove an intent to delude or defraud: R. v. Dazenbrook (1975), 23 C.C.C. (2d) 252 (Ont. Prov. Ct.).

The trial Judge could properly find the offence under para. (b) was made out upon evidence that the accused, who was given $10, represented she could predict events from reading lines on the customer's hands and that she was an expert and had taken special courses in Europe: R. v. Corbeil (1981), 65 C.C.C. (2d) 570 (Que. C.A.).

The offence under para. (b) of this section does not require proof that in fact the predictions were false, or that the accused expressly stated that she had a power to predict the future: R. v. Labrosse (1984), 17 C.C.C. (3d) 283 (Que. C.A.). Note: On further appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada, 33 C.C.C. (3d) 220, [1987] 1 S.C.R. 310, 39

D.L.R. (4th) 639, the court left open the question whether it was a defence that the accused honestly believed that she could predict the future, in view of the trial judge's express finding that he disbelieved the accused when she made that assertion.

Forgery and Offences Resembling Forgery

FORGERY / Making false document / When forgery complete / Forgery complete though document incomplete.

366. (1) Every one commits forgery who makes a false document, knowing it to be false, with intent

- (a) that it should in any way be used or acted on as genuine, to the prejudice of any one whether within Canada or not; or
- (b) that a person should be induced, by the belief that it is genuine, to do or to refrain from doing anything, whether within Canada or not.

(2) Making a false document includes

- (a) altering a genuine document in any material part;
- (b) making a material addition to a genuine document or adding to it a false date, attestation, seal or other thing that is material; or
- (c) making a material alteration in a genuine document by erasure, obliteration, removal or in any other way.

(3) Forgery is complete as soon as a document is made with the knowledge and intent referred to in subsection (1), notwithstanding that the person who makes it does not intend that any particular person should use or act on it as genuine or be induced, by the belief that it is genuine, to do or refrain from doing anything.

(4) Forgery is complete notwithstanding that the false document is incomplete or does not purport to be a document that is binding in law, if it is such as to indicate that it was intended to be acted on as genuine. R.S., c. C-34, s. 324.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms "document" and "false document" are defined in s. 321.

The punishment for forgery is set out in s. 367 and for uttering a forged document in s. 368. For either offence, the accused may elect his mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2). Release pending trial is determined by s. 515.

Forgery and uttering offences may be the basis for an application for an authorization to intercept private communications by reason of s. 183 and a warrant to conduct video surveillance under s. 487.01(5), and are enterprise crime offences for the purposes of Part XII.2. Offences resembling forgery and uttering, but referring to specific types of documents, are in the following sections: s. 369, exchequer bill paper, public seals, etc.; s. 370, counterfeit government proclamation; ss. 371, 372, false telegram, etc.; s. 374, drawing document without authority; s. 375, obtaining by forged document; s. 376, counterfeiting stamp, mark, etc.; s. 377, defacing official documents; s. 378, offences in relation to registers; ss. 397 to 402, falsification of books and documents in relation to contracts and trade; ss. 406 to 414, forgery of trade-marks and trade descriptions; ss. 416 to 421, offences in relation to public stores; Part XII, offences in relation to currency, counterfeiting, etc.

SYNOPSIS

This section describes the offence of forgery. Every person who makes a false document, knowing it to be false, with the intent that it should be used as genuine to the prejudice of another person, or that another person should be induced, believing the document to be genuine, to do or refrain from doing anything, commits the offence of forgery. The action contemplated or the person to be induced may be inside or outside Canada. Subsection (2) defines the term "making a false document" in the context of altering a genuine document. Subsection (3) states that a forgery is complete as soon as the document is made with the intent and knowledge referred to in subsection (1), whether or not the accused intends a specific person to act on it. Subsection (4) further states that the offence of forgery is complete even if the false document is incomplete or of no binding legal effect so long as it can be demonstrated that it was intended to be acted upon as genuine.

ANNOTATIONS

Meaning of false document – The provisions of this subsection do not exclude the definition of "false document" in s. 321. Thus an accused may be convicted of forgery where he makes a "false document" as that phrase is defined in s. 321. Specifically, the accused makes a "false document" where he prepares a document which is false in some material particular. A document which is false in reference to the very purpose for which it was created is clearly one which is false in a material particular. Thus the act of the accused in preparing inventory sheets which contained false information as to the very matter which they purported to certify and so were false in a number of material particulars comes within this section: Gaysek v. The Queen (1971), 2 C.C.C. (2d) 545, 18 D.L.R. (3d) 306 (S.C.C.) (3:2).

It is not necessarily the case that a document which merely contains a lie falls within the definition of a false document. However, a document which is false in reference to the very purpose for which it was created is one that is false in a material particular within the meaning of s. 321 and therefore capable of founding a conviction under this section: R. v. Ogilvie (1993), 81 C.C.C. (3d) 125, [1993] R.J.Q. 453 (C.A.).

It is open to the trier of fact to find a document to be a false document where it is a photocopy which purports to be a true copy of the state of a particular instrument at the time of its reproduction. In this case the accused photocopied parts of two documents so that it appeared that what had been copied was a certified cheque: R. v. Sebo (1988), 42 C.C.C. (3d) 536, 64 C.R. (3d) 388, 87 A.R. 141 (C.A.), leave to appeal to S.C.C. refused 93 A.R. 240n. Similarly: R. v. Nuosci (1991), 69 C.C.C. (3d) 64, 10 C.R. (3d) 332, 6 O.R. (3d) 316 (C.A.), leave to appeal to S.C.C. refused May 7, 1992.

In R. v. Paquette (1979), 45 C.C.C. (2d) 575, [1975] 2 S.C.R. 168 (S.C.C.) (7:0) the Court in reversing the accused notary's acquittal on a charge of uttering approved the dissenting reasons of Montgomery, J.A., in the Quebec Court of Appeal, 42 C.C.C. (2d) 57, who had held that in adding a false attestation to an affidavit the accused made a false document within the meaning of this subsection notwithstanding he was unaware that the entire document was a forgery. The accused had attested to the signature of one of the purported witnesses although he had not seen the "witness" sign the document.

Authorized signings are excluded from the ambit of this offence, even where the document fails on its face to specifically indicate that the actual signatory is acting as a proxy of another. Such documents may be misleading as a result, but they do not have the property of falsity inherent in forgery: R. v. Foley (1994), 90 C.C.C. (3d) 390, 30 C.R. (4th) 238, 120 Nfld. & P.E.I.R. 24 (Nfld. C.A.).

Offences involving cheques – The accused was convicted of forgery where he endorsed the signature of the payee of a cheque. As the cheque was made out to the payee the payee could be the only endorser. When the accused signed the payee's name as endorser he did it to the prejudice of the payee and the offence was made out. Moreover, it was no defence that the payor had authorized the accused to deal with the cheque in that manner since such authorization could not come from the payor: Cowan v. The Queen (1962), 132 C.C.C. 352, 37 C.R. 151 (S.C.C.) (3:2).

A forged endorsement on an otherwise valid cheque converts the cheque into a false document: R. v. Elkin (1978), 42 C.C.C. (2d) 185, [1978] 5 W.W.R. 547 (B.C.C.A.); R. v. Jones, [1970] 4 C.C.C. 284, 11 C.R.N.S. 219 (Ont. C.A.); R. v. Keshane (1974), 20 C.C.C. (2d) 542, 27 C.R.N.S. 331 (Sask. C.A.).

The figures on a cheque are a material part: R. v. O'Hearn, [1964] 3 C.C.C. 296, 44 C.R. 48 (B.C.C.A.).

PUNISHMENT FOR FORGERY / Corroboration.

367. (1) Every one who commits forgery is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding fourteen years. R.S.C. c. C-34, s. 325; 1994, c. 44, s. 24.

(2) [Repealed. 1994, c. 44, s. 24.]

CROSS-REFERENCES

Forgery is defined in s. 366. This offence may be the basis for an application for an authorization to intercept private communications by reason of s. 183. Forgery is an enterprise crime offence for the purposes of Part XII.2.

The accused may elect his mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2). Release pending trial is determined by s. 515. For related offences, see cross-references under s. 366. The offence of uttering is defined in s. 368.

UTTERING FORGED DOCUMENT / Wherever forged.

368. (1) Every one who, knowing that a document is forged,

(a) uses, deals with or acts on it, or

(b) causes or attempts to cause any person to use, deal with, or act on it, as if the document were genuine, is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding fourteen years.

(2) For the purposes of proceedings under this section, the place where a document was forged is not material. R.S., c. C-34, s. 326.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term "document" is defined in s. 321. The offence of forgery is defined in s. 366 and punished under s. 367.

This offence may be the basis for an application for an authorization to intercept private communications by reason of s. 183. Uttering a forged document is an enterprise crime offence for the purposes of Part XII.2. The accused may elect his mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2). Release pending trial is determined by s. 515.

Offences resembling forgery and uttering but referring to specific types of documents are in the following sections: s. 369, exchequer bill paper, public seals, etc.; s. 370, counterfeit government proclamation; ss. 371, 372, false telegram, etc.; s. 374, drawing document without authority; s. 375, obtaining by forged document; s. 376, counterfeiting stamp, mark, etc.; s. 377, defacing official documents; s. 378, offences in relation to registers; ss. 397 to 402, falsification of books and documents in relation to contracts and trade; ss. 406 to 414, forgery of trade-marks and trade descriptions; ss. 416 to 421, offences in relation to public stores; Part XII, offences in relation to currency, counterfeiting, etc.

SYNOPSIS

This section describes the indictable offence of uttering a forged document. Any person who, with knowledge that a document is forged, uses or acts upon it as though it were genuine is guilty of the offence of uttering. A person who causes, or attempts to cause, another person to use or act upon a forged document is also guilty of this offence. The maximum term of imprisonment for this offence is 14 years. In proceedings under this section, the place where the forgery occurred is not material.

ANNOTATIONS

The requirement of corroboration only applies to the offence of forgery, not to the offence of uttering: R. v. Susimaki, [1968] 3 C.C.C. 381, 3 C.R.N.S. 281 (B.C.C.A.).

A forgery within the meaning of s. 366 must exist before an offence under this section can be committed. It is not sufficient that the document was a "false document" as defined by s. 321 if the document was not made with one of the intents specified in s. 366(1): R. v. Hawrish (1986), 32 C.C.C. (3d) 446, 52 Sask. R. 248 (C.A.). Contra: R. v. Lapointe (1984), 12 C.C.C. (3d) 238 (Que. C.A.) where it was held, relying in part on R. v. Keshane (1974), 20 C.C.C. (2d) 542, [1975] 1 W.W.R. 294, 27 C.R.N.S. 331 (Sask. C.A.) leave to appeal to S.C.C. refused C.C.C. loc. cit., [1974] S.C.R. ix, now overruled on this point, that while on a charge under para. (1)(b) the Crown must establish that the accused intended that the other person use the document as genuine or that he was reckless in that respect, what need not be shown is the intent described in s. 366 with which the document was forged. And it was held in R. v. Sebo (1988), 42 C.C.C. (3d) 536, 64 C.R. (3d) 388, 87 A.R. 141 (C.A.), that an intention to defraud is not an element of the offence under this section. Rather, the intent required is the intent to deceive, such an interpretation is consistent with the forgery offence defined by s. 366(1)(b) which as well does not require proof of an intent to defraud.

The fact that the accused ought to have known that certain facts existed does not by itself form a basis for the application of the doctrine of wilful blindness: R. v. Currie (1975), 24 C.C.C. (2d) 292 (Ont. C.A.) (2:1).

Acts of the accused in preparing fictitious bills for fees which were to be used if necessary to cover the payment of a benefit to a bank manager, did not constitute uttering where the bills were never used and never seen either by the bank or the revenue authorities: R. v. Valois (1986), 25 C.C.C. (3d) 97, 51 C.R. (3d) 243, [1986] 1 S.C.R. 278 (7:0).

EXCHEQUER BILL PAPER, PUBLIC SEALS, ETC.

369. Every one who, without lawful authority or excuse, the proof of which lies on him,

(a) makes, uses or knowingly has in his possession

(i) any exchequer bill paper, revenue paper, or paper that is used to make bank notes, or

(ii) any paper that is intended to resemble paper mentioned in subparagraph (i),

(b) makes, offers or disposes of or knowingly has in his possession any plate, die, machinery, instrument or other writing or material that is adapted and intended to be used to commit forgery, or

(c) makes, reproduces or uses a public seal of Canada or of a province, or the seal of a public body or authority in Canada, or of a court of law, is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding fourteen years. R.S., c. C-34, s. 327.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms "exchequer bill" and "exchequer bill paper", "revenue paper" are defined in s. 321. The terms "bank-note" and "writing" are defined in s. 2. "Writing" is also defined in s. 35 of the Interpretation Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. I-21. Forgery is defined in s. 366.

The accused may elect his mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2). Release pending trial is determined by s. 515.

This offence resembles the offences of forgery and uttering under ss. 367 and 368. Other related offences are as follows: s. 370, counterfeit government proclamation; ss. 371, 372, false telegram, etc.; s. 374, drawing document without authority; s. 375, obtaining by forged document; s. 376, counterfeiting stamp, mark, etc.; s. 377, defacing official documents; s. 378, offences in relation to registers; ss. 397 to 402, falsification of books and documents in relation to contracts and trade; ss. 406 to 414, forgery of trade-marks and trade descriptions; ss. 416 to 421, offences in relation to public stores; Part XII, offences in relation to currency, counterfeiting, etc.

SYNOPSIS

This section describes the indictable offence of unlawfully making use of or possessing exchequer bill paper, revenue bill paper, paper used to make bank notes, or any paper that is intended to look like those papers. It further describes the offence of making, disposing of, or knowingly possessing any item that is intended to be used to commit forgery, and the offence of making or using a public seal of Canada, a province, a public body or a court of law. The section requires that the accused demonstrate that any of the actions described above were done with lawful authority or excuse. The maximum term of imprisonment for this offence is 14 years.

ANNOTATIONS

The word “other” in para. (b) relates back only to the word “instrument”, which is used as meaning a written document. Thus there is no common category into which “plate, die, machinery and instrument” fall to warrant the ejusdem generis interpretation rule, so cheques and an unemployment insurance card found on the accused were held to be unlawful items: R. v. Evans (1962), 132 C.C.C. 271, 37 C.R. 341 (B.C.C.A.).

In Griffiths v. The Queen (1969), 7 C.R.N.S. 196 (Que. Q.B., App. Side), it was held that proof of mere possession of an unendorsed forged cheque, in the absence of proof that the cheque was intended to be used to commit forgery, is not an offence. Furthermore Rivard, J., refused to follow R. v. Evans, supra.

Having regard to the definition of revenue paper in s. 321 as paper used to make stamps, licences or permits, the offence is not made out where the accused is in possession of a false birth certificate. The definition contemplates present possession of paper for the future purpose of making or manufacturing certain government documents. It was not intended to apply to completed documents: R. v. Hagerman (1988), 46 C.C.C. (3d) 432 (B.C. Co. Ct.).

COUNTERFEIT PROCLAMATION, ETC.

370. Every one who knowingly

- (a) prints a proclamation, order, regulation or appointment, or notice thereof, and causes it falsely to purport to have been printed by the Queen’s Printer for Canada or the Queen’s Printer for a province, or
- (b) tenders in evidence a copy of any proclamation, order, regulation or appointment that falsely purports to have been printed by the Queen’s Printer for Canada or the Queen’s Printer for a province, is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding five years. R.S., c. C-34, s. 328.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The accused may elect his mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2). Release pending trial is determined by s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by the officer in charge under s. 498.

This offence resembles the offences of forgery and uttering under ss. 367 and 368. Other related offences are as follows: s. 369, exchequer bill paper, public seals, etc.; ss. 371, 372, false telegram, etc.; s. 374, drawing document without authority; s. 375, obtaining by forged document; s. 376, counterfeiting stamp, mark, etc.; s. 377, defacing official documents; s. 378, offences in relation to registers; ss. 397 to 402, falsification of books and documents in relation to contracts and trade; ss. 406 to 414, forgery of trade-marks and trade descriptions; ss. 416 to 421, offences in relation to public stores; Part XII, offences in relation to currency, counterfeiting, etc. With respect to the offence in para. (b), also see s. 131, perjury and s. 237, fabricating evidence.

SYNOPSIS

This section describes two offences relating to the counterfeiting of official documents. Everyone who knowingly prints a proclamation, order, regulation, or appointment, or a notice of such document, and causes it falsely to purport to have been printed by a federal or provincial Queen's Printer, commits the offence, as does anyone knowingly tendering a copy of such a document (with the exception of notices) in evidence. The offence is indictable, and is punishable by imprisonment for up to five years.

TELEGRAM, ETC., IN FALSE NAME.

371. Every one who, with intent to defraud, causes or procures a telegram, cablegram or radio message to be sent or delivered as being sent by the authority of another person, knowing that it is not sent by his authority and with intent that the message should be acted on as being sent by his authority, is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding five years. R.S., c. C-34, s. 329.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term "radio" is defined in s. 35 of the Interpretation Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. I-21.

The accused may elect his mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2). Release pending trial is determined by s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by the officer in charge under s. 498.

This offence resembles the offences of forgery and uttering under ss. 367 and 368. Other related offences are as follows: s. 369, exchequer bill paper, public seals, etc.; s. 370, counterfeit government proclamation; s. 374, drawing document without authority; s. 375, obtaining by forged document; s. 376, counterfeiting stamp, mark, etc.; s. 377, defacing official documents; s. 378, offences in relation to registers; ss. 397 to 402, falsification of books and documents in relation to contracts and trade; ss. 406 to 414, forgery of trade-marks and trade descriptions; ss. 416 to 421, offences in relation to public stores; Part XII, offences in relation to currency, counterfeiting, etc. With respect to the offence in para. (b), also see s. 131, perjury and s. 237, fabricating evidence.

Also see related offences: s. 181, publishing false news; s. 372, conveying false information, indecent and harassing telephone calls.

SYNOPSIS

This section describes the offence of sending messages in a false name. Everyone causing a telegram, cablegram or radio message to be sent or delivered purportedly by the authority of a person known not to have authorized it, intending that it be acted upon as if authorized by that person, and intending to defraud, commits the offence. The offence is indictable with a maximum punishment of five years' imprisonment.

FALSE MESSAGES / Indecent telephone calls / Harassing telephone calls.

372. (1) Every one who, with intent to injure or alarm any person, conveys or causes or procures to be conveyed by letter, telegram, telephone, cable, radio, or otherwise information that he knows is false is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding two years.

(2) Every one who, with intent to alarm or annoy any person, makes any indecent telephone call to that person is guilty of an offence punishable on summary conviction.

(3) Every one who, without lawful excuse and with intent to harass any person, makes or causes to be made repeated telephone calls to that person is guilty of an offence punishable on summary conviction. R.S., c. C-34, s. 330.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term "radio" is defined in s. 35 of the Interpretation Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. I-21.

The accused may elect his mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2) for the offence described in subsec. (1) and release pending trial is determined by s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by the officer in charge under s. 498. It may be that, in some circumstances, the accused found guilty of this offence would be liable to the discretionary order prohibiting possession of firearms, ammunition or explosives.

Trial of the offences described by subsecs. (2) and (3) is conducted by a summary conviction court pursuant to Part XXVII. The punishment is as set out in s. 787 and the limitation period is set out in s. 786(2). Release pending trial is determined by s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by a peace officer under s. 496, 497 or by the officer in charge under s. 498.

An alternative to this offence is the procedure for requiring the offender to enter into a recognizance to keep the peace either at common law or pursuant to s. 810. Other related offences: s. 175, causing disturbance; s. 264, criminal harassment; s. 264.1, uttering threats; s. 346, extortion; s. 423, intimidation and watching and besetting; s. 424, threat to commit offence against internationally protected person; s. 371, sending false telegram, etc., with intent to defraud.

SYNOPSIS

This section describes the offences of sending false messages, and making indecent and harassing telephone calls. Subsection (1) provides that anyone who conveys, or causes the conveying by a variety of means, of information known to be false with the intention of injuring or alarming someone, commits an indictable offence. The maximum punishment is two years' imprisonment. Subsection (2) provides that anyone making an indecent telephone call to someone, intending to alarm or annoy them, commits a summary conviction offence. Subsection (3) provides that anyone making or causing to be made repeated telephone calls to someone, without lawful excuse, and intending to harass them, commits a summary conviction offence.

ANNOTATIONS

Subsec. (2) – This subsection applies, although the calls were made to an answering machine. The accused was aware that the calls were being recorded and would be heard by the victim at a later time: R. v. Manicke (1993), 81 C.C.C. (3d) 255, 109 Sask. R. 126 (C.A.).

Subsec. (3) – The victim of an offence under this subsection must be the recipient of the harassing telephone calls. Thus, the accused was acquitted where he made repeated calls intending to harass his wife, but the calls were intercepted by a friend: R. v. Wood (1983), 8 C.C.C. (3d) 217 (Ont. Prov. Ct.).

The term “harass” in this subsection is synonymous with annoy and could include conduct of the accused in repeatedly telephoning a person and simply hanging up when the call was answered: R. v. Sabine (1990), 57 C.C.C. (3d) 209, 78 C.R. (3d) 34 (N.B.Q.B.).

DRAWING DOCUMENT WITHOUT AUTHORITY, ETC.

374. Every one who

- (a) with intent to defraud and without lawful authority makes, executes, draws, signs, accepts or endorses a document in the name or on the account of another person by procuration or otherwise, or
- (b) makes use of or utters a document knowing that it has been made, executed, signed, accepted or endorsed with intent to defraud and without lawful authority, in the name or on the account of another person, by procuration or otherwise,

is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding fourteen years. R.S., c. C-34, s. 332.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term “document” is defined in s. 321.

The accused may elect his mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2). Release pending trial is determined by s. 515.

This offence resembles the offences of forgery and uttering under ss. 367 and 368. Other related offences are as follows: s. 369, exchequer bill paper, public seals, etc.; s. 370, counterfeit government proclamation; ss. 371, 372, false telegram, etc.; s. 375, obtaining by forged document; s. 376, counterfeiting stamp, mark, etc.; s. 377, defacing official documents; s. 378, offences in relation to registers; ss. 397 to 402, falsification of books and documents in relation to contracts and trade; ss. 406 to 414, forgery of trade-marks and trade descriptions; ss. 416 to 421, offences in relation to public stores; Part XII, offences in relation to currency, counterfeiting, etc.

SYNOPSIS

This section describes the offence of drawing or using a document without authority. Anyone who makes, executes, draws, signs, accepts or endorses a document in the name of or on behalf of another person without lawful authority, and with an intention to defraud, or who knowingly makes use of, or utters such a document, commits an indictable offence. The maximum term of punishment is 14 years' imprisonment.

OBTAINING, ETC., BY INSTRUMENT BASED ON FORGED DOCUMENT.

375. Every one who demands, receives or obtains anything, or causes or procures anything to be delivered or paid to any person under, on, or by virtue of any instrument issued under the authority of law, knowing that it is based on a forged document, is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding fourteen years. R.S., c. C-34, s. 333.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term "document" is defined in s. 321.

The accused may elect his mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2). Release pending trial is determined by s. 515.

This offence resembles the offences of forgery and uttering under ss. 367 and 368. Other related offences are as follows: s. 369, exchequer bill paper, public seals, etc.; s. 370, counterfeit government proclamation; ss. 371, 372, false telegram, etc.; s. 374, drawing document without authority; s. 376, counterfeiting stamp, mark, etc.; s. 377, defacing official documents; s. 378, offences in relation to registers; ss. 397 to 402, falsification of books and documents in relation to contracts and trade; ss. 406 to 414, forgery of trade-marks and trade descriptions; ss. 416 to 421, offences in relation to public stores; Part XII, offences in relation to currency, counterfeiting, etc.

SYNOPSIS

This section creates the offence of using an instrument based on a forged document. Anyone who demands, receives or obtains anything, or causes anything to be delivered or paid, by virtue of an instrument issued under legal authority, but knowing that it is based on a forged document, commits an indictable offence. The maximum term or punishment is 14 years.

COUNTERFEITING STAMP, ETC. / Counterfeiting mark / Definitions / "mark" / "stamp".

376. (1) Every one who

- (a) fraudulently uses, mutilates, affixes, removes or counterfeits a stamp or part thereof,
- (b) knowingly and without lawful excuse, the proof of which lies on him, has in his possession
  - (i) a counterfeit stamp or a stamp that has been fraudulently mutilated, or
  - (ii) anything bearing a stamp of which a part has been fraudulently erased, removed or concealed, or

(c) without lawful excuse, the proof of which lies on him, makes or knowingly has in his possession a die or instrument that is capable of making the impression of a stamp or part thereof, is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding fourteen years.

(2) Every one who, without lawful authority,

(a) makes a mark,

(b) sells, or exposes for sale, or has in his possession a counterfeit mark,

(c) affixes a mark to anything that is required by law to be marked, branded, sealed or wrapped other than the thing to which the mark was originally affixed or was intended to be affixed, or

(d) affixes a counterfeit mark to anything that is required by law to be marked, branded, sealed or wrapped, is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding fourteen years.

(3) In this section

“mark” means a mark, brand, seal, wrapper or design used by or on behalf of

(a) the government of Canada or of a province,

(b) the government of a state other than Canada, or

(c) a department, board, commission or agent established by a government mentioned in paragraph (a) or (b) in connection with the service or business of that government;

“stamp” means an impressed or adhesive stamp used for the purpose of revenue by the government of Canada or a province or by the government of a state other than Canada. R.S., c. C-34, s. 334.

CROSS-REFERENCES

Possession is defined in s. 4(3). While there is no definition of “fraudulently” which is universally applicable, generally speaking, it refers to conduct which is dishonest and morally wrong: R. v. DeMarco (1973), 13 C.C.C. (2d) 369 (Ont. C.A.).

The accused may elect his mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2). Release pending trial is determined by s. 515.

This offence resembles the offences of forgery and uttering under ss. 367 and 368. Other related offences are as follows: s. 369, exchequer bill paper, public seals, etc.; s. 370, counterfeit government proclamation; s. 374, drawing document without authority; ss. 397 to 402, falsification of books and documents in relation to contracts and trade; ss. 406 to 414, forgery of trade-marks and trade descriptions; ss. 416 to 421, offences in relation to public stores; Part XII, offences in relation to currency, counterfeiting, etc.

SYNOPSIS

This section describes the offences of counterfeiting a stamp or a mark. Stamp and mark are both defined in subsec. (3), and are limited to government uses. Subsection (1) provides that an indictable offence is committed where anyone counterfeits a stamp or part of a stamp, fraudulently deals with a stamp or part of a stamp in a variety of ways, possesses a counterfeit or fraudulently mutilated stamp, or something bearing a stamp of which part has been fraudulently erased, removed or concealed, or makes or knowingly possesses a die or instrument capable of making the impression of a stamp or part thereof. In the case of the possession offences and the offence of making a die or instrument, the accused will not be convicted if he can establish that the act in question was done with a lawful excuse. Subsection (2) provides that an indictable offence is committed where anyone, without lawful authority, makes a mark, sells or exposes for sale a counterfeit mark, affixes a mark originally affixed, or intended to be affixed, to one thing to something else legally requiring a mark, or affixes a counterfeit mark to something requiring a mark. The maximum term of punishment for both offences is 14 years' imprisonment.

DAMAGING DOCUMENTS / Definition of "election document".*377. (1) Every one who unlawfully

- (a) destroys, defaces or injures a register, or any part of a register, of births, baptisms, marriages, deaths or burials that is required or authorized by law to be kept in Canada, or a copy or any part of a copy of such a register that is required by law to be transmitted to a registrar or other officer,
- (b) inserts or causes to be inserted in a register or copy referred to in paragraph (a) an entry, that he knows is false, of any matter relating to a birth, baptism, marriage, death or burial, or erases any material part from that register or copy,
- (c) destroys, damages or obliterates an election document or causes an election document to be destroyed, damaged or obliterated, or
- (d) makes or causes to be made an erasure, alteration or interlineation in or on an election document, is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding five years.

(2) In this section, "election document" means any document or writing issued under the authority of an Act of Parliament or the legislature of a province with respect to an election held pursuant to the authority of that Act. R.S., c. C-34, s. 335.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term "document" is defined in s. 321.

The accused may elect his mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2). Release pending trial is determined by s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by the officer in charge under s. 498.

This offence resembles the offences of forgery and uttering under ss. 367 and 368. Other related offences are as follows: s. 369, exchequer bill paper, public seals, etc.; s. 370, counterfeit government proclamation; s. 374, drawing document without authority; s. 375, obtaining by instrument issued under authority of law knowing it is based on a forged document; s. 376, counterfeiting stamp, mark, etc.; s. 377, defacing official documents.

SYNOPSIS

This section describes the offence of damaging or interfering with certain registers and election documents. Paragraph 1(a) prohibits a person from destroying, defacing or injuring a register or part of a register of births, baptisms, marriages, deaths or burials lawfully required or authorized to be kept, or a copy or partial copy lawfully required to be transmitted. Subsection 1(b) prohibits false insertions or erasures in such a register or copy. Subsection 1(c) prohibits a person from damaging or obliterating an election document, or causing such an act to be done. Paragraph 1(d) proscribes erasures, alterations or interlineations in election documents. An election document is defined in subsec. (2), and relates only to elections authorized by federal or provincial enactments. This offence is indictable and carries a maximum term of five years' imprisonment.

OFFENCES IN RELATION TO REGISTERS.*378. Every one who

- (a) being authorized or required by law to make or issue a certified copy of, extract from or certificate in respect of a register, record or document, knowingly makes or issues a false certified copy, extract or certificate,
- (b) not being authorized or required by law to make or issue a certified copy of, extract from or certificate in respect of a register, record or document, fraudulently makes or issues a copy, extract or certificate that purports to be certified as authorized or required by law, or

(c) being authorized or required by law to make a certificate or declaration concerning any particular required for the purpose of making entries in a register, record or document, knowingly and falsely makes the certificate or declaration, is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding five years. R.S., c. C-34, s. 336.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term “document” is defined in s. 321. The term “register” is not defined but probably refers to the registers described in s. 377.

The accused may elect his mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2). Release pending trial is determined by s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by the officer in charge under s. 498.

This offence resembles the offences of forgery and uttering under ss. 367 and 368. Other related offences are as follows: s. 369, exchequer bill paper, public seals, etc.; s. 370, counterfeit government proclamation; s. 374, drawing document without authority; s. 375, obtaining by instrument issued under authority of law knowing it is based on a forged document; s. 376, counterfeiting stamp, mark, etc.; s. 377, defacing official documents.

SYNOPSIS

This section describes the offence of issuing false or unauthorized certifications. Paragraph (a) prohibits persons legally required or authorized to issue certified copies of, extracts from, or certificates in respect of a register, record or document, from knowingly doing so falsely. Paragraph (b) prohibits other persons from fraudulently issuing such documents if they purport to be certified as legally required or authorized. Paragraph (c) prohibits persons legally authorized or required to make certificates or declarations concerning any particular required for making entries in such register, record or document from knowingly doing so falsely. In each case, the offence is indictable, with a maximum term of punishment of five years’ imprisonment.

Part X / FRAUDULENT TRANSACTIONS RELATING TO CONTRACTS AND TRADE

Interpretation

DEFINITIONS / “goods” / “trading stamps”.

379. In this Part,

“goods” means anything that is the subject of trade or commerce;

“trading stamps” includes any form of cash receipt, receipt, coupon, premium ticket or other device, designed or intended to be given to the purchaser of goods by the vendor thereof or on his behalf, and to represent a discount on the price of the goods or a premium to the purchaser thereof

(a) that may be redeemed

(i) by any person other than the vendor, the person from whom the vendor purchased the goods or the manufacturer of the goods,

(ii) by the vendor, the person from whom the vendor purchased the goods or the manufacturer of the goods in cash or in goods that are not his property in whole or in part, or

(iii) by the vendor elsewhere than in the premises where the goods are purchased, or

(b) that does not show on its face the place where it is delivered and the merchantable value thereof, or

(c) that may not be redeemed on demand at any time, but an offer, endorsed by the manufacturer upon a wrapper or container in which goods are sold, of a premium or reward for the return of that wrapper or container to the manufacturer is not a trading stamp. R.S., c. C-34, s. 337.

CROSS-REFERENCES

In addition to the definitions in this section, see s. 2 and notes to that section.

SYNOPSIS

This section provides a definition of the term goods and trading stamps for the purpose of Part X, which concerns fraudulent transactions relating to contracts and trade.

ANNOTATIONS

"Trading stamps" – The definition of "trading stamps" in this section is exhaustive notwithstanding the use of the word "includes": R. v. Loblaw Groceterias Co. (Man.) Ltd.; R. v. Thomson (Niagara IGA Grocery) (1960), 129 C.C.C. 223, [1961] S.C.R. 138 (5:0).

Fraud

FRAUD / Affecting public market.

380. (1) Every one who, by deceit, falsehood or other fraudulent means, whether or not it is a false pretence within the meaning of this Act, defrauds the public or any person, whether ascertained or not, of any property, money or valuable security,

(a) is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to a term of imprisonment not exceeding ten years, where the subject-matter of the offence is a testamentary instrument or the value of the subject-matter of the offence exceeds five thousand dollars; or

(b) is guilty

(i) of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding two years, or

(ii) of an offence punishable on summary conviction, where the value of the subject-matter of the offence does not exceed five thousand dollars.

(2) Every one who, by deceit, falsehood or other fraudulent means, whether or not it is a false pretence within the meaning of this Act, with intent to defraud, affects the public market price of stocks, shares, merchandise or anything that is offered for sale to the public is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding ten years. R.S., c. C-34, s. 338; 1974-75-76, c. 93, s. 32; R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 54; 1994, c. 44, s. 25.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term "person" is defined in s. 35 of the Interpretation Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. I-21. The terms "property" and "valuable security" are defined in s. 2.

As to admission of photographic evidence of property, see s. 491.2. For proof by way of affidavit of ownership, lawful possession, value, and that the person was deprived of property by fraud or otherwise without the person's lawful consent, see s. 657.1.

By virtue of s. 583, an indictment which otherwise complies with s. 581 is not insufficient by reason only that: para. (b), it fails to name the person who owns or has a special property or interest in property mentioned in the count or para. (c), it charges an intent to defraud without naming or describing the person whom it was intended to defraud. Also note s. 588 which deems certain persons to have a property interest in property of which they have the management, control or custody. Under s. 586, no count alleging fraud is insufficient by reason only that it does not set out in detail the nature of the fraud. However, under s. 587(1)(b) the court may order particulars of any fraud that is alleged.

Where the offence, although committed outside Canada, is in relation to the use of nuclear material, see s. 7(3.4).

The offence in para. (1)(a) is an indictable offence for which the accused may elect the mode of trial under s. 536(2) and release pending trial is determined in accordance with s. 515. Where the prosecution elects to proceed by indictment for the offence under para. (1)(b) then, by virtue of s. 553, it is an offence over which a provincial court judge has absolute jurisdiction and does not depend on the consent of the accused. That is, the accused does not have an election as to mode of trial, although the provincial court judge may, by virtue of s. 555(1), elect to continue the proceedings as a preliminary inquiry, in which case the accused is deemed to have elected trial by judge and jury pursuant to s. 565(1)(a). As well, under s. 555(2), where, in the course of the trial, evidence establishes that the subject-matter of the offence is a testamentary instrument or that its value exceeds $1,000 then the provincial court judge shall put the accused to his election under s. 536(2). Where the prosecution elects to proceed by way of summary conviction then the proceedings are conducted by a summary conviction court pursuant to Part XXVII. The punishment is then as set out in s. 787 and the limitation period is set out in s. 786(2). For the offence under para. (b), release pending trial is determined by s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by a peace officer under s. 496, 497 or by the officer in charge under s. 498. The value of a valuable security is determined in accordance with s. 4(2) and of a postal card or stamp in accordance with s. 4(1). The term “testamentary instrument” is defined in s. 2.

For the offence under subsec. (2), the accused may elect his mode of trial under s. 536(2) and release pending trial is determined in accordance with s. 515.

The related offence of theft is generally described in s. 322 and false pretences in s. 362. Other offences relating to trading in securities, etc., are in ss. 382 to 384 and s. 400 [false prospectus].

SYNOPSIS

This section describes the offences of defrauding the public, or any person, of property, money or valuable security, and of affecting the public market price of stocks, shares, merchandise or anything offered for sale to the public. The activities described above must be accomplished by deceit, falsehood or other fraudulent means, whether or not they constitute false pretences within the meaning of the Criminal Code. The accused must have the intent to defraud to attract criminal liability for affecting the market price of stocks, shares, or publicly offered merchandise and this form of the offence is punishable on indictment by a maximum term of 10 years' imprisonment. The more general offence of defrauding the public is indictable, with a maximum punishment of 10 years, when the subject-matter of the offence is a testamentary instrument or has a value greater than $5,000. In other circumstances, this form of the offence is hybrid, with a maximum punishment on indictment of two years.

ANNOTATIONS

Meaning of defrauds generally – The classic definition of fraud is found in the judgment of Buckley, J., in London v. Globe Finance Corp. Ltd., [1903] 1 Ch. 728 at pp. 732-3: “To defraud is to deprive by deceit: it is by deceit to induce a man to act to his injury. More tersely it may be put, that to deceive is by falsehood to induce a state of mind; to defraud is by deceit to induce a course of action.”

It was held, however, in Scott v. Metropolitan Police Commissioner (1974), 60 Cr. App. R. 124 (H.L.), that this definition is not exhaustive and that to “defraud” ordinarily means: "to deprive a person dishonestly of something which is his or of something to which he is or would or might but for the perpetration of the fraud, be entitled."

In R. v. Renard (1974), 17 C.C.C. (2d) 355 (Ont. C.A.), the Court held that, a victim may be defrauded by being deprived of something and he may be deprived of something either by being fraudulently induced to part with it or by having that to which he is entitled fraudulently diverted or withheld from him.

An accused's acts in procuring a third person to put him in a position to take money to which the complainant would be otherwise entitled constitutes fraud: R. v. Kribbs, [1968] 1 C.C.C. 345, [1967] 2 O.R. 539 (C.A.).

A charge of fraud is valid against the principle shareholder who fraudulently depletes the assets of his alter ego, a limited company: R. v. Marquardt (1972), 6 C.C.C. (2d) 372, 18 C.R.N.S. 162 (B.C.C.A.).

Meaning of falsehood – It is a falsehood for a person to promise to pay cash for the purchase of an item without any intention of honouring the promise: R. v. Stanley (1957), 119 C.C.C. 220, 26 C.R. 180 (B.C.C.A.).

Meaning of "other fraudulent means" generally – In R. v. Cox and Paton, [1963] 2 C.C.C. 148, [1963] S.C.R. 500 (5:0), although no exhaustive definition of "other fraudulent means" was given it was held that if all the directors of a company were to join together to purchase a worthless asset with company funds in order to enrich themselves then even "supposing it could be said that the directors being the 'mind of the company' and well knowing the true facts, the company was not deceived . . . it is clear that . . . the directors would have defrauded the company, if not by deceit or falsehood, by 'other fraudulent means'".

In R. v. Olan, Hudson and Hartnett (1978), 41 C.C.C. (2d) 145, 86 D.L.R. (3d) 212, [1978] 2 S.C.R. 1175 (9:0) the Court considered the application of Cox and Paton v. The Queen, supra, in a situation where the accused had caused a company over which they had control to divest its holdings in "blue chip" securities and to purchase shares in a company whose major asset was a debt owed to it by a company controlled by two of the accused. It was held that where it is alleged a corporation was defrauded by its directors' deception of the corporation is not an essential element of the offence, the words "other fraudulent means" include not only means which are in the nature of a falsehood or deceit but also all other means which can properly be stigmatized as dishonest. Further, while no exhaustive definition of "defraud" was attempted the Crown at least must prove dishonesty and deprivation. The element of deprivation is satisfied on proof of detriment, prejudice, or risk of prejudice to the economic interest of the victims. The issue in this case was whether the use of the victim's assets in this manner was in furtherance of a bona fide business interest of the victim or was it expended in advancing the personal interests of the accused and whether the victim suffered deprivation as a result. The Court disagreed with the Ontario Court of Appeal view that there was no evidence of fraud and ordered a new trial. It was not necessary for the Crown to prove the new investment was worthless or negligible.

At least where the Crown relies on "other fraudulent means" rather than deceit or falsehood there need not be some form of relationship or nexus between the accused and the victim. Thus, the infringement of copyright by "counterfeiting" of video tapes may constitute fraud, whether or not it would also amount to theft, notwithstanding there is no relationship between the accused and the victim, the holder of the copyright or distribution rights to the tapes: R. v. Kirkwood (1983), 5 C.C.C. (3d) 393, 35 C.R. (3d) 97 (Ont. C.A.), relying on Scott v. Metropolitan Police Commissioner, supra. Followed: R. v. Fitzpatrick (1984), 11 C.C.C. (3d) 46 (B.C.C.A.).

Risk of deprivation – Where the "owner" of certain confidential information had no intention of dealing with it in a commercial way it could not be said that a person who obtains that information has committed fraud, since there was no risk of economic loss amounting to deprivation: R. v. Stewart (1988), 41 C.C.C. (3d) 481, 63 C.R. (3d) 305, [1988] 1 S.C.R. 963 (6:0).

While there need not be actual economic loss there must be an actual risk of prejudice and where the victim named in the indictment merely acted as a conduit in the transactions so that there was no actual risk of prejudice to her economic interests the charge was not made out: R. v. Campbell and Kotler (1986), 29 C.C.C. (3d) 97, [1986] 2 S.C.R. 376, 32 D.L.R. (4th) 363 (5:0).

In R. v. Knowles (1979), 51 C.C.C. (2d) 237 (Ont. C.A.) the Court found the requisite dishonest deprivation where the victim was induced to make a loan which it would not have made had it known the true state of affairs, namely that the true borrower was an officer of a company which was a subsidiary of the victim. The deceit practised by the accused placed the accused in a conflict of interest and thus imperilled the victim's economic interests notwithstanding the loan was secured and used for the purpose for which it was advanced.

Economic loss does not have to be proven by the Crown and fraud is complete when money is paid for corporate shares to which the accused falsely ascribed certain attributes: R. v. Knelson And Baran (1962), 133 C.C.C. 210, 38 C.R. 181 (B.C.C.A.).

In considering whether the acts of the accused can properly be stigmatized as dishonest, the standard to be applied is that of a reasonable person. It connotes an underhanded design which has the effect, or which engenders the risk, of depriving others of what is theirs. The dishonesty lies in the wrongful use of something in which another person has an interest, in such a manner that this other's interest is extinguished or put at risk. The use is wrongful in this sense if it constitutes conduct which reasonable decent persons would consider dishonest and unscrupulous: R. v. Zlatic (1993), 79 C.C.C. (3d) 466, 19 C.R. (4th) 230, [1993] 2 S.C.R. 29.

Mens rea – The mens rea of fraud is established by proof of subjective knowledge of the prohibited act, and subjective knowledge that the act could have as a consequence deprivation, in the sense of causing another to lose their pecuniary interest in certain property or in placing that interest at risk. There is no requirement that the accused subjectively appreciate the dishonesty of his acts: R. v. Thérault (1993), 79 C.C.C. (3d) 449, 19 C.R. (4th) 194, [1993] 2 S.C.R. 5; R. v. Zlatic, supra.

Expectation of subsequent validation – Where pursuant to the suggestion of his superior, who approved but would not authorize a salary increase, the accused submitted fictitious expense accounts to the Quebec government, it was held (4:3) that such a direction was not a valid defence to a charge of defrauding the public in general and the Government of the Province of Quebec in particular, and that the accused's expectation that such a practice would ultimately be validated was also not a proper defence in law: R. v. Lemire, [1965] 4 C.C.C. 11, 45 C.R. 16 (S.C.C.).

Proof of charge as particularized – Proprietorships are not in and of themselves persons capable of being defrauded but are merely the registered names under which persons capable of being defrauded do business. Where the prosecution alleges in an indictment that the victim is a proprietorship then it in effect has particularized as the victim the person who used the proprietorship to carry on business and that it was in the operation of that proprietorship that he was defrauded and not otherwise: R. v. Campbell and Kotler (1986), 29 C.C.C. (3d) 97, [1986] 2 S.C.R. 376, 32 D.L.R. (4th) 363 (5:0).

On a charge under this section it is not necessary for the Crown to prove the accused actually obtained the property which was the subject of the charge, only that the victim was deprived of the property as a result of the accused's dishonest acts: R. v. Huggett (1978), 42 C.C.C. (2d) 198 (Ont. C.A.).

A charge of conspiracy or attempt to commit fraud may be made out although the victim is unascertained. Further, the victim need not be particularized in the indictment: R. v. Vezina; R. v. Cote (1986), 23 C.C.C. (3d) 481, 25 D.L.R. (4th) 82 (S.C.C.) (7:0).

An indictment alleging that certain individuals were defrauded of "$2,500.00", rather than a sum of money, is sufficient to support a conviction although the evidence showed the individuals were induced by deceit, falsehood or other fraudulent means merely to part with a cheque in that amount drawn, moreover, on the bank accounts of corporations of which they were principal owners or co-owners: R. v. Scheel (1978), 42 C.C.C. (2d) 31, 3 C.R. (3d) 359 (Ont. C.A.).

Meaning of "property" [Also see "Risk of deprivation", supra] – The word "property" does not mean ownership, but is only descriptive of the thing of which one is defrauded and the offence is completed once there is a passing over of possession under deceitful circumstances: R. v. Vallillee (1974), 15 C.C.C. (2d) 409, 24 C.R.N.S.319 (Ont.C.A.).

It was held in R. v. Falconi (1976), 31 C.C.C. (2d) 144 (Ont. Co. Ct.) that, considering the definition of "prescription" in the Pharmacy Act, R.S.O. 1970, c. 348 as simply a "direction", a prescription was not property within the meaning of this section.

Other notes – Although the acts of the accused may also constitute a breach of provincial welfare legislation it is open to the Crown to proceed under this section: R. v. Gladu (1986), 29 C.C.C. (3d) 186 (Ont. C.A.); R. v. Gallant (1987), 34 C.C.C. (3d) 190, 64 Nfld. & P.E.I.R. 89 (P.E.I. C.A.). R. v. Rouse (1988), 39 C.C.C. (3d) 115, 85 A.R. 60 (C.A.).

Affecting public market [subsec. (2)] – In one of the few cases decided under this subsection a conviction was upheld where the accused was one of several persons involved in operating a "box". While ostensibly set up to maintain orderly marketing in shares the two companies involved in the "box" were in fact used to give the illusion of arms length transactions in the trading of the shares and gave the impression that the shares were continually rising in value: R. v. McNaughton (1976), 43 C.C.C. (2d) 293, 33 C.R.N.S. 279 (Que. C.A.).

USING MAILS TO DEFRAUD.

381. Every one who makes use of the mails for the purpose of transmitting or delivering letters or circulars concerning schemes devised or intended to deceive or defraud the public, or for the purpose of obtaining money under false pretences, is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding two years. R.S., c. C-34, s. 339.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term "mail" is defined in s. 2 of the Canada Post Corporation Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. C-10. By virtue of s. 583, an indictment, which otherwise complies with s. 581, is not insufficient by reason only that: para. (c), it charges an intent to defraud without naming or describing the person whom it was intended to defraud. Under s. 586, no count alleging false pretences or fraud is insufficient by reason only that it does not set out in detail the nature of the false pretences or fraud. However, under s. 587(1)(b), the court may order particulars of any false pretence or fraud that is alleged.

This offence may be the basis for an application for an authorization to intercept private communications by reason of s. 183 and a warrant to conduct video surveillance under s. 487.01(5).

The accused may elect his mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2). Release pending trial is determined by s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by the officer in charge pursuant to s. 498.

The related offence of fraud is described in s. 380 and of circulating a false prospectus in s. 400.

SYNOPSIS

This section makes it an offence to use the mails to deliver letters or circulars that either describe schemes intended to deceive the public, or that are to be used for the purpose of obtaining money under false pretences. This is an indictable offence with a maximum term of two years' imprisonment.

FRAUDULENT MANIPULATION OF STOCK EXCHANGE TRANSACTIONS.

382. Every one who, through the facility of a stock exchange, curb market or other market, with intent to create a false or misleading appearance of active public trading in a security or with intent to create a false or misleading appearance with respect to the market price of a security,

- (a) effects a transaction in the security that involves no change in the beneficial ownership thereof,
- (b) enters an order for the purchase of the security, knowing that an order of substantially the same size at substantially the same time and at substantially the same price for the sale of the security has been or will be entered by or for the same or different persons, or
- (c) enters an order for the sale of the security, knowing that an order of substantially the same size at substantially the same time and at substantially the same price for the purchase of the security has been or will be entered by or for the same or different persons, is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding five years. R.S., c. C-34, s. 340.

CROSS-REFERENCES

This offence may be the basis for an application for an authorization to intercept private communications by reason of s. 183 and is an enterprise crime offence for the purposes of Part XII.2. The accused may elect his mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2). Release pending trial is determined by s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by the officer in charge pursuant to s. 498.

The related offence of fraud is described in s. 380, of a broker reducing stock by selling for his own account in s. 384 and of circulating a false prospectus in s. 400.

SYNOPSIS

This section sets out the offence of manipulation of transactions on a stock exchange, curb market or other market and is colloquially known as “wash-trading”. Every person who uses one of these institutions with intent to create a false or misleading appearance with respect to the market price, or activity of a security, and who engages in any of the activities specified in paras. (a), (b) or (c), commits an indictable offence and is liable to a maximum term of five years’ imprisonment. Paragraph (a) describes a transaction in a security that involves no change in the beneficial ownership. Paragraphs (b) and (c) describe the entering of an order for the sale or purchase of a security, knowing that a substantially matching or counter balancing purchase or sale order has been, or will be entered on behalf of the same or different persons.

ANNOTATIONS

The section requires an “intent to create a false or misleading appearance of active public interest”, and if the purpose is merely to stabilize the market price in the accused’s own interest, an offence has not been committed: R. v. Jay, [1966] 1 C.C.C.70, [1965] 2 O.R.471 (C.A.).

For the offence of knowingly entering a cross-order the Crown need not prove that the cross-trade involved either fictitious persons or persons involved with the accused in a fraudulent conspiracy, since the purpose of this section is to prevent fraudulent misuse of the facilities of a market for profit: R. v. MacMillan, [1969] 2 C.C.C.289, 66 D.L.R. (2d) 680 (Ont. C.A.).

The words “or other market” in this section include an “over-the-counter” market: Re Bluestein and The Queen (1982), 70 C.C.C. (2d) 336, 36 C.R. (3d) 46, 142 D.L.R. (3d) 71 (Que. C.A.).

GAMING IN STOCKS OR MERCHANDISE / Onus.

383. (1) Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding five years who, with intent to make gain or profit by the rise or fall in price of the stock of an incorporated or unincorporated company or undertaking, whether in or outside Canada, or of any goods, wares or merchandise,

- (a) makes or signs, or authorizes to be made or signed, any contract or agreement, oral or written, purporting to be for the purchase or sale of shares of stock or goods, wares or merchandise, without the bona fide intention of acquiring the shares, goods, wares or merchandise or of selling them, as the case may be, or
- (b) makes or signs, or authorizes to be made or signed, any contract or agreement, oral or written, purporting to be for the sale or purchase of shares of stock or goods, wares or merchandise in respect of which no delivery of the thing sold or purchased is made or received, and without the bona fide intention of making or receiving delivery thereof, as the case may be, but this section does not apply where a broker, on behalf of a purchaser, receives delivery, notwithstanding that the broker retains or pledges what is delivered as security for the advance of the purchase money or any part thereof.

(2) Where, in proceedings under this section, it is established that the accused made or signed a contract or agreement for the sale or purchase of shares of stock or goods, wares or merchandise, or acted, aided or abetted in the making or signing thereof, the burden of proof of a bona fide intention to acquire or to sell the shares, goods, wares or merchandise or to deliver or to receive delivery thereof, as the case may be, lies on the accused. R.S., C. C-34, s. 341.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term "goods" is defined in s. 379.

The accused may elect his mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2). Release pending trial is determined by s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by the officer in charge pursuant to s. 498.

The related offence of fraud is described in s. 380, of wash-trading in s. 382, of a broker reducing stock by selling for his own account in s. 384 and of circulating a false prospectus in s. 400.

SYNOPSIS

This section describes the indictable offence of dealing in stocks or merchandise with the intention of profiting by the variation in the price of those goods but without the bona fide intention of acquiring, selling, or making or receiving delivery of the goods. Subsection (1) exempts brokers from this offence in certain circumstances. Subsection (2) states that when it has been established that the accused has made or signed an agreement for the sale or purchase of stocks or merchandise, or acted, aided and abetted in such a transaction, the burden of proof to establish the bona fide intention described in subsec. (1), lies on the accused. The maximum term of imprisonment upon conviction is five years.

BROKER REDUCING STOCK BY SELLING FOR HIS OWN ACCOUNT.

384. Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding five years who, being an individual, or a member or an employee of a partnership, or a director, an officer or an employee of a corporation, where he or the partnership or corporation is employed as a broker by any customer to buy and carry on margin any shares of an incorporated or unincorporated company or undertaking, whether in or out of Canada, thereafter sells or causes to be sold shares of the company or undertaking for any account in which

- (a) he or his firm or a partner thereof, or
- (b) the corporation or a director thereof, has a direct or indirect interest, if the effect of the sale is, otherwise than unintentionally, to reduce the amount of those shares in the hands of the broker or under his control in the ordinary course of business below the amount of those shares that the broker should be carrying for all customers. R.S., c. C-34, s. 342.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The accused may elect his mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2). Release pending trial is determined by s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by the officer in charge pursuant to s. 498.

The related offence of fraud is described in s. 380, of wash-trading in s. 382, of gaming in stocks or merchandise in s. 383 and of circulating a false prospectus in s. 400.

SYNOPSIS

This section describes an indictable offence in which a broker sells shares that have been bought and carried on margin for any account in which the broker, his firm, partner, corporation or corporate director has direct or indirect interest. The effect of the sale must be to reduce intentionally the amount of those shares in the hands or under the control of the broker below the amount of those shares that the broker should be carrying for all customers. The maximum term of imprisonment for this offence is five years.

FRAUDULENT CONCEALMENT OF TITLE DOCUMENTS / Consent required.

385. (1) Every one who, being a vendor or mortgagor of property or of a chose in action or being a solicitor for or agent of a vendor or mortgagor of property or a chose in action, is served with a written demand for an abstract of title by or on behalf of the purchaser or mortgagee before the completion of the purchase or mortgage, and who

(a) with intent to defraud and for the purpose of inducing the purchaser or mortgagee to accept the title offered or produced to him, conceals from him any settlement, deed, will or other instrument material to the title, or any encumbrance on the title, or

(b) falsifies any pedigree on which the title depends,
is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding two years.

(2) No proceedings shall be instituted under this section without the consent of the Attorney General. R.S., c. C-34, s. 343.

CROSS-REFERENCES

“Property” and “Attorney General” are defined in s. 2. Section 583(h) provides that a count in an indictment is not insufficient by reason only that it does not state that the required consent has been obtained. [As to notes concerning sufficiency of consent, see s. 583.]

Other offences relating to registers are found ss. 377 and 378 and the offence of fraudulent registration of title is in s. 386 and of fraudulent sale of real property in s. 387. By virtue of s. 583, an indictment which otherwise complies with s. 581 is not insufficient by reason only that: para. (b), it fails to name the person who owns or has a special property or interest in property mentioned in the count or para. (c), it charges an intent to defraud without naming or describing the person whom it was intended to defraud. Also note s. 588 which deems certain persons to have a property interest in property of which they have the management, control or custody. Under s. 586, no count alleging fraud is insufficient by reason only that it does not set out in detail the nature of the fraud. However, under s. 587(1)(b), the court may order particulars of any fraud that is alleged.

The accused may elect his mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2). Release pending trial is determined by s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by the officer in charge pursuant to s. 498.

SYNOPSIS

This section describes the indictable offence of concealing any settlement, deed, will or other instrument material to title, concealing any encumbrance on the title (para. (1)(a)), or falsifying any pedigree on which the title depends (para. (1)(b)). The accused must be a vendor or mortgagor of property or a chose in action or a solicitor or agent for the vendor or mortgagor, and must have been served with a written demand for an abstract of title by or on behalf of the purchaser or mortgagee prior to the completion of the purchase or mortgage. In proceedings under paragraph (1)(a), the accused must both intend to defraud and to induce the purchaser or mortgagee to accept the title offered. Subsection (2) requires the consent of the Attorney General for the institution of proceedings under this section. The maximum term of imprisonment for this offence is two years.

FRAUDULENT REGISTRATION OF TITLE.

386. Every one who, as principal or agent, in a proceeding to register title to real property, or in a transaction relating to real property that is or is proposed to be registered, knowingly and with intent to deceive,

(a) makes a material false statement or representation,

(b) suppresses or conceals from a judge or registrar, or any person employed by or assisting the registrar, any material document, fact, matter or information, or

(c) is privy to anything mentioned in paragraph (a) or (b),

is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding five years. R.S., c. C-34, s. 344.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The accused may elect his mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2). Release pending trial is determined by s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by the officer in charge pursuant to s. 498.

Related offences: s. 380, fraud; s. 385, fraudulent concealment of title document; s. 387, fraudulent sale of real property.

SYNOPSIS

This section describes the indictable offence of knowingly, and with intent to deceive, making a material false statement or representation, of suppressing or concealing from a judge, a registrar, or any person assisting the registrar, any material document, fact, matter or information, or of being privy to any of these activities, in a proceeding to register title to real property. The accused must be either the principal or agent in the real estate transaction. The maximum term of imprisonment upon conviction is five years.

FRAUDULENT SALE OF REAL PROPERTY.

387. Every one who, knowing of an unregistered prior sale or of an existing unregistered grant, mortgage, hypothec, privilege or encumbrance of or on real property, fraudulently sells the property or any part thereof is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding two years. R.S., c. C-34, s. 345.

CROSS-REFERENCES

While there is no definition of "fraudulently" which is universally applicable, generally speaking, it refers to conduct which is dishonest and morally wrong: R. v. DeMarco (1973), 13 C.C.C. (2d) 369 (Ont. C.A.).

The accused may elect his mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2). Release pending trial is determined by s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by the officer in charge pursuant to s. 498.

Related offences: s. 380, fraud; s. 385, fraudulent concealment of title documents; s. 386, fraudulent registration of title.

SYNOPSIS

This section describes the fraudulent sale of real estate. Any person who fraudulently sells property, either in whole or in part, knowing of the existence of an unregistered prior sale or an existing unregistered grant, mortgage or other encumbrance on real property, is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to a maximum term of two years' imprisonment.

MISLEADING RECEIPT.

388. Every one who wilfully

- (a) with intent to mislead, injure or defraud any person, whether or not that person is known to him, gives to a person anything in writing that purports to be a receipt for or an acknowledgment of property that has been delivered to or received by him, before the property referred to in the purported receipt or acknowledgment has been delivered to or received by him, or
  - (b) accepts, transmits or uses a purported receipt or acknowledgment to which paragraph (a) applies,
- is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding two years. R.S., c. C-34, s. 346.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term "person" is defined in s. 35 of the Interpretation Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. I-21. The term "property" is defined in s. 2.

Note that s. 391 provides that where an offence is committed under this section by a person who acts in the name of a corporation, firm or partnership, no person other than the person who does the act by means of which the offence is committed or who is secretly privy to it is guilty of the offence.

The accused may elect his mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2). Release pending trial is determined by s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by the officer in charge pursuant to s. 498.

SYNOPSIS

This section describes the offence of dealing with a misleading receipt. Every person who wilfully, with intent to mislead, injure, or defraud another person, gives to any person anything in writing that purports to be a receipt for property prior to the delivery of that property is guilty of an offence. Any person who wilfully accepts, transmits or uses a receipt as described above is also guilty of an offence. The offence is indictable and carries a maximum term of two years' imprisonment.

FRAUDULENT DISPOSAL OF GOODS ON WHICH MONEY ADVANCED / Saving.

389. (1) Every one who

- (a) having shipped or delivered to the keeper of a warehouse or to a factor, an agent or a carrier, anything on which the consignee thereof has advanced money or has given valuable security, thereafter, with intent to deceive, defraud or injure the consignee, disposes of it in a manner that is different from and inconsistent with any agreement that has been made in that behalf between him and the consignee, or
- (b) knowingly and wilfully aids or assists any person to make a disposition of anything to which paragraph (a) applies for the purpose of deceiving, defrauding or injuring the consignee, is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding two years.

(2) No person is guilty of an offence under this section where, before disposing of anything in a manner that is different from and inconsistent with any agreement that has been made in that behalf between him and the consignee, he pays or tenders to the consignee the full amount of money or valuable security that the consignee has advanced. R.S., c. C-34, s. 347.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term "valuable security" is defined in s. 2.

By virtue of s. 583, an indictment which otherwise complies with s. 581 is not insufficient by reason only that: para. (b), it fails to name the person who owns or has a special property or interest in property mentioned in the count or para. (c), it charges an intent to defraud without naming or describing the person whom it was intended to defraud. Also note s. 588 which deems certain persons to have a property interest in property of which they have the management, control or custody. Under s. 586, no count alleging fraud is insufficient by reason only that it does not set out in detail the nature of the fraud. However, under s. 587(1)(b), the court may order particulars of any fraud that is alleged.

Note that s. 391 provides that where an offence is committed under this section by a person who acts in the name of a corporation, firm or partnership, no person other than the person who does the act by means of which the offence is committed or who is secretly privy to it is guilty of the offence.

The accused may elect his mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2). Release pending trial is determined by s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by the officer in charge pursuant to s. 498.

SYNOPSIS

This section describes the offence of fraudulently disposing of goods that have been shipped or delivered to the keeper of a warehouse or to a factor, an agent or a carrier. Every person who has shipped to one of the above-named individuals goods upon which the consignee has advanced money, and who, with intent to defraud or injure the consignee, disposes of the goods in a fashion that is inconsistent with any agreement made between himself and the consignee, is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to a maximum term of two years' imprisonment. A person who knowingly and wilfully aids or assists another person to commit the offence described above for the purpose of deceiving, defrauding or injuring the consignee, is also guilty of the offence and subject to the same punishment. Subsection (2) provides a defence to the charge where a person pays back the full amount of money advanced by the consignee prior to disposing of anything in a fashion that contravenes their agreement.

FRAUDULENT RECEIPTS UNDER BANK ACT.

390. Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding two years who

- (a) wilfully makes a false statement in any receipt, certificate or acknowledgment for anything that may be used for a purpose mentioned in the Bank Act; or
- (b) wilfully,
  - (i) after giving to another person,
  - (ii) after a person employed by him has, to his knowledge, given to another person, or
  - (iii) after obtaining and endorsing or assigning to another person, any receipt, certificate or acknowledgment for anything that may be used for a purpose mentioned in the Bank Act, without the consent in writing of the holder or endorsee or the production and delivery of the receipt, certificate or acknowledgment, alienates or parts with, or does not deliver to the holder or owner the property mentioned in the receipt, certificate or acknowledgment. R.S., c. C-34, s. 348.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term "person" is defined in s. 35 of the Interpretation Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. I-21. The term "property" is defined in s. 2.

Note that s. 391 provides that where an offence is committed under this section by a person who acts in the name of a corporation, firm or partnership, no person other than the person who does the act by means of which the offence is committed or who is secretly privy to it is guilty of the offence.

The accused may elect his mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2). Release pending trial is determined by s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by the officer in charge pursuant to s. 498.

SYNOPSIS

This section describes the offence of fraudulently dealing in receipts made for a purpose mentioned in the Bank Act. Paragraph (a) states that any person who wilfully makes a false statement in a receipt or other similar document that may be used for a purpose mentioned in the Bank Act commits an indictable offence and is liable to a maximum term of imprisonment of two years. Paragraph (b) also makes it an offence punishable on the same terms for a person to wilfully dispose of or fail to deliver the relevant property to a person to whom the accused has given or endorsed over a Bank Act receipt mentioning that property. The accused can raise the defence of written consent by the holder or endorsee of the receipt, or produce and deliver the receipt.

ANNOTATIONS

The words “receipt, certificate or acknowledgment for anything that may be used for a purpose mentioned in the Bank Act” have the same meaning in both paras. (a) and (b) and refer to documents which are evidence of title to property and which may be transferred by endorsement or delivery: R. v. Dubois (1979), 45 C.C.C. (2d) 531 (Ont. C.A.).

SAVING.

391. Where an offence is committed under section 388, 389 or 390 by a person who acts in the name of a corporation, firm or partnership, no person other than the person who does the act by means of which the offence is committed or who is secretly privy to the doing of that act is guilty of the offence. R.S., c. C-34, s. 349.

SYNOPSIS

This section makes it clear that in proceedings under ss. 388, 389 or 390, only the person who actually commits an offence, or who is secretly privy to the commission of the offence, can be convicted, even if that person is acting in the name of a corporation, firm or partnership.

DISPOSAL OF PROPERTY TO DEFRAUD CREDITORS.

392. Every one who,

(a) with intent to defraud his creditors,

(i) makes or causes to be made a gift, conveyance, assignment, sale, transfer or delivery of his property, or

(ii) removes, conceals or disposes of any of his property, or

(b) with intent that any one should defraud his creditors, receives any property by means of or in relation to which an offence has been committed under paragraph (a),

is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding two years. R.S., c. C-34, s. 350.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term “property” is defined in s. 2.

By virtue of s. 583, an indictment which otherwise complies with s. 581 is not insufficient by reason only that: para. (b), it fails to name the person who owns or has a special property or interest in property mentioned in the count or para. (c), it charges an intent to defraud without naming or describing the person whom it was intended to defraud. Also note s. 588 which deems certain persons to have a property interest in property of which they have the management, control or custody.

Reference should also be made to the offences created by the Bankruptcy Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. B-2.

The accused may elect his mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2). Release pending trial is determined by s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by the officer in charge pursuant to s. 498.

SYNOPSIS

This section describes the offence of disposing of property in order to defraud creditors. Every person who makes a gift, assignment or transfer of his property, or who conceals or disposes of it with the intent to defraud his creditors commits an indictable offence under para. (a). Similarly, a person who receives any property that has been dealt with in a fashion described in para. (a) with the intent that anyone should defraud his creditors is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to the same punishment of a maximum term of two years' imprisonment.

ANNOTATIONS

The giving of a third mortgage comes within the meaning of the words "makes an assignment" in this section: R. v. Ehresman (1980), 58 C.C.C. (2d) 574, 121 D.L.R. (3d) 505 (B.C.C.A.).

The word "conceals" in para. (a)(ii) is used in its primary sense of a positive act of secreting. Thus, the mere failure of a bankrupt to disclose the existence of property to the trustee and Official Receiver, as required by the Bankruptcy Act, R.S.C. 1970, c. B-3, does not constitute an offence under para. (a)(ii): R. v. Goulis (1981), 60 C.C.C. (2d) 347, 20 C.R. (3d) 360 (Ont. C.A.).

FRAUD IN RELATION TO FARES, ETC. / Idem / Fraudulently obtaining transportation.

393. (1) Every one whose duty it is to collect a fare, toll, ticket or admission who wilfully

(a) fails to collect it,

(b) collects less than the proper amount payable in respect thereof, or

(c) accepts any valuable consideration for failing to collect it or for collecting less than the proper amount payable in respect thereof, is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding two years.

(2) Every one who gives or offers to a person whose duty it is to collect a fare, toll, ticket or admission fee any valuable consideration

(a) for failing to collect it, or

(b) for collecting an amount less than the amount payable in respect thereof,

is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding two years.

(3) Every one who, by any false pretence or fraud, unlawfully obtains transportation by land, water or air is guilty of an offence punishable on summary conviction. R.S., c. C-34, s. 351.

CROSS-REFERENCES

By virtue of s. 583, an indictment which otherwise complies with s. 581 is not sufficient by reason only that: para. (b), it fails to name the person who owns or has a special property or interest in property mentioned in the count or para. (c), it charges an intent to defraud without naming or describing the person whom it was intended to defraud. Under s. 586, no count alleging false pretences or fraud is insufficient by reason only that it does not set out in detail the nature of the false pretences or fraud. However, under s. 587(1)(b), the court may order particulars of any false pretence or fraud that is alleged.

The offences in subssecs. (1) and (2) are indictable offences, but, by virtue of s. 553(c)(viii), are offences over which a provincial court judge has absolute jurisdiction and does not depend on the consent of the accused. That is, the accused does not have an election as to mode of trial, although the provincial court judge may, by virtue of s. 555(1), elect to continue the proceedings as a preliminary inquiry, in which case, the accused is deemed to have elected trial by judge and jury pursuant to s. 565(1)(a). The trial of the offence in subsec. (3) is conducted by a summary conviction court pursuant to Part XXVII. The punishment for the offence in subsec. (3) is as set out in s. 787 and the limitation period is set out in s. 786(2). For all offences under this section, release pending trial is determined by s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by a peace officer under s. 496, 497 or by the officer in charge under s. 498.

Also see s. 454 which creates the offence of producing, etc., or possession of slugs to be fraudulently used in substitution for coins or tokens of value.

SYNOPSIS

This section describes the offence of fraud in relation to fares. Subsection (1) states that any person who has a duty to collect a fare, toll, ticket or admission and who wilfully fails to collect it, collects less than the full amount, or accepts valuable consideration for failing to collect, or collecting less than the proper amount, is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to a term of imprisonment not exceeding two years. Subsection (2) makes it an offence to give or offer to a person whose duty it is to collect a fare, toll, ticket or admission any valuable consideration for failing to collect the amount payable. This offence is indictable and carries a maximum term of imprisonment of two years. Subsection (3) describes the summary conviction offence of unlawfully obtaining transportation by any false pretence or fraud.

FRAUD IN RELATION TO MINERALS / Seizure and forfeiture.

394. (1) Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding five years who

- (a) being the holder of a lease or licence issued
  - (i) under an Act relating to the mining of precious metals, or
  - (ii) by the owner of land that is supposed to contain precious metals, by a fraudulent device or contrivance defrauds or attempts to defraud any person of any precious metals or money payable or reserved by the lease or licence, or fraudulently conceals or makes a false statement with respect to the amount of precious metals procured by him;
- (b) sells or purchases any rock, mineral or other substance that contains precious metals or unsmelted, untreated, unmanufactured or partly smelted, partly treated or partly manufactured precious metals, unless he establishes that he is the owner or agent of the owner or is acting under lawful authority; or
- (c) has in his possession or knowingly has on his premises
  - (i) any rock or mineral of a value of fifty-five cents per kilogram or more,
  - (ii) any mica of a value of fifteen cents per kilogram or more, or
  - (iii) any precious metals, that there are reasonable grounds to believe have been stolen or have been dealt with contrary to this section, unless he establishes that he is lawfully in possession thereof.

(2) Where a person is convicted of an offence under this section, the court may order anything by means of or in relation to which the offence was committed, on such conviction, to be forfeited to Her Majesty in right of the province in which the proceedings take place. R.S., c. C-34, s. 352; R.S.C. 1985, c. 27, (1st Supp.), s. 186.

CROSS-REFERENCES

While there is no definition of “fraudulently” which is universally applicable, generally speaking, it refers to conduct which is dishonest and morally wrong: R. v. DeMarco (1973), 13 C.C.C. (2d) 369 (Ont. C.A.). By virtue of s. 583, an indictment which otherwise complies with s. 581 is not insufficient by reason only that: para. (b), it fails to name the person who owns or has a special property or interest in property mentioned in the count or para. (c), it charges an intent to defraud without naming or describing the person whom it was intended to defraud. Under s. 586, no count alleging fraud is insufficient by reason only that it does not set out in detail the nature of the fraud. However, under s. 587(1)(b), the court may order particulars of any fraud that is alleged.

Other offences relating to mines are found in s. 396.

Section 395 provides for the issuance of a search warrant to search for precious metals or rock alleged to be unlawfully deposited or held contrary to law.

SYNOPSIS

This section describes the offence of fraud in relation to minerals. Subsection (1)(a) states that any person who holds a lease or a licence issued either under an Act relating to the mining of precious metals or by the owner of the land, and who defrauds or attempts to defraud any person of precious metals or money payable under the lease or licence, or who fraudulently conceals or makes a false statement with respect to the amount of precious metals procured by him, commits an indictable offence. The criminal activity described in subsec. (1)(a) must be accomplished by means of a fraudulent device or contrivance. Subsection (1)(b) makes it an indictable offence for a person to sell or purchase any rock, mineral or other substance containing precious metals in the state described therein unless that person establishes that he is either the owner or an authorized agent with respect to that substance. Subsection (1)(c) states that any person who is in possession of any of the precious metals or other items described therein that there are reasonable grounds to believe have been stolen, or dealt with in a fashion contrary to this section, is guilty of an indictable offence. The accused may escape criminal liability under subsec. (1)(c) if he can establish lawful entitlement to the possession of the items described therein. The maximum term of imprisonment upon conviction for each of the above three offences is five years. Subsection (2) allows the court to order that anything by means of, or in relation to which, an offence under this section was committed be forfeited to Her Majesty in right of the province in which the proceedings took place.

ANNOTATIONS

The reverse onus in subsec. (1)(b) infringes s. 11(d) of the Charter. However, rather than strike down the reverse onus entirely, it is appropriate to read down the provision to impose an evidentiary burden on the accused. Accordingly, the words "he establishes that" should be replaced with the words "in the absence of evidence which raises a reasonable doubt that": R. v. Laba, [1994] 3 S.C.R. 965, 94 C.C.C. (3d) 385, 34 C.R. (4th) 360.

SEARCH FOR PRECIOUS METALS / Power to seize / Appeal.

395. (1) Where an information in writing is laid under oath before a justice by any person having an interest in a mining claim, that any precious metals or rock, mineral or other substance containing precious metals is unlawfully deposited in any place or held by any person contrary to law, the justice may issue a warrant to search any of the places or persons mentioned in the information.

(2) Where, on search, anything mentioned in subsection (1) is found, it shall be seized and carried before the justice who shall order

(a) that it be detained for the purposes of an inquiry or a trial; or

(b) if it is not detained for the purposes of an inquiry or a trial,

(i) that it be restored to the owner, or

(ii) that it be forfeited to Her Majesty in right of the province in which the proceedings take place if the owner cannot be ascertained.

(3) An appeal lies from an order made under paragraph (2)(b) in the manner in which an appeal lies in summary conviction proceedings under Part XXVII and the provisions of that Part relating to appeals apply to appeals under this subsection. R.S., c. C-34, s. 353.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term “justice” is defined in s. 2.

It is highly doubtful whether this section comports with the minimum constitutional requirements in s. 8 of the Charter as explained in Hunter v. Southam Inc. (1984), 14 C.C.C. (3d) 97 (S.C.C.). In particular, there is no requirement that there be reasonable and probable grounds to believe that either an offence has been committed or that evidence or contraband would be found in the place sought to be searched. See Re Vella and The Queen (1984), 14 C.C.C. (3d) 513 (Ont. H.C.J.), considering a similar provision [s. 199] in relation to disorderly houses. It is suggested that, in the circumstances, a warrant should be sought under s. 487 or 487.1 where there are grounds to believe an offence under s. 394 or 396 has been committed.

SYNOPSIS

This section sets out a scheme for obtaining a warrant to search for precious metals. Subsection (1) requires that an information in writing and under oath be laid before a justice by a person having an interest in a mining claim. The information must state that the precious metals, or other specified substances are unlawfully held by a person or in a place. The justice may issue a warrant to search any of the places or persons in the information. Subsection (2) provides that anything found as a result of a search conducted under subsec. (1) must be seized and carried before the justice who shall order that it be detained for inquiry or trial, or that it be restored to the owner, or forfeited to Her Majesty in right of the province in which the proceedings took place if the owner cannot be ascertained. Subsection (3) provides a right of appeal from any order that the items seized be given to the owner or Her Majesty.

OFFENCES IN RELATION TO MINES / Presumption.

396. (1) Every one who

- (a) adds anything to or removes anything from any existing or prospective mine, mining claim or oil well with a fraudulent intent to affect the result of an assay, a test or a valuation that has been made or is to be made with respect to the mine, mining claim or oil well, or
- (b) adds anything to, removes anything from or tampers with a sample or material that has been taken or is being or is about to be taken from any existing or prospective mine, mining claim or oil well for the purpose of being assayed, tested or otherwise valued, with a fraudulent intent to affect the result of the assay, test or valuation, is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding ten years.

(2) For the purposes of proceedings under subsection (1), evidence that

- (a) something has been added to or removed from anything to which subsection (1) applies, or
  - (b) anything to which subsection (1) applies has been tampered with,
- is, in the absence of any evidence to the contrary, proof of a fraudulent intent to affect the result of an assay, a test or a valuation. R.S., c. C-34, s. 354.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The accused may elect his mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2). Release pending trial is determined by s. 515.

Other offences relating to mines are found in s. 394.

Section 395 provides for the issuance of a search warrant to search for precious metals or rock alleged to be unlawfully deposited or held contrary to law.

SYNOPSIS

This section describes two offences in relation to mines. Both offences relate to specified activities that would affect the result of a test or valuation of a mine, a mining claim or an oil well. Both offences also require that the accused have the fraudulent intent to affect the results of the test. These offences are indictable and carry a maximum term of 10 years' imprisonment. Subsection (2) creates a presumption that the prosecution may rely on to prove, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, the fraudulent intent required under subsec. (1). Evidence of the addition to, the removal from, or the tampering with anything to which subsec. (1) applies proves the criminal intent required for conviction under this section.

Falsification of Books and Documents

BOOKS AND DOCUMENTS / Privy.

397. (1) Every one who, with intent to defraud,

- (a) destroys, mutilates, alters, falsifies, or makes a false entry in, or
  - (b) omits a material particular from, or alters a material particular in,
- a book, paper, writing, valuable security or document is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding five years.

(2) Every one who, with intent to defraud his creditors, is privy to the commission of an offence under subsection (1) is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding five years. R.S., c. C-34, s. 355.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms "valuable security" and "writing" are defined in s. 2. The term "document" is not defined for this Part but reference might be made to the definition in s. 321 for Part IX. By virtue of s. 583, an indictment which otherwise complies with s. 581 is not insufficient by reason only that: para. (c), it charges an intent to defraud without naming or describing the person whom it was intended to defraud. Under s. 586, no count alleging fraud is insufficient by reason only that it does not set out in detail the nature of the fraud. However, under s. 587(1)(b), the court may order particulars of any fraud that is alleged.

The accused may elect his mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2). Release pending trial is determined by s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by the officer in charge pursuant to s. 498.

This offence resembles the forgery and uttering offences and therefore see cross-references under ss. 266 to 268. Also see s. 392, disposal of property with intent to defraud creditors.

SYNOPSIS

This section describes the offence of destroying, mutilating, altering, falsifying, or omitting or altering a material particular in a book, paper, writing, valuable security or document. The accused must engage in the above-described activity with the intent to defraud. This is an indictable offence with a maximum term of five years' imprisonment. Subsection (2) states that every person who, with the intent to defraud his creditors, is privy to the offence described above is also guilty of an indictable offence which carries a maximum term of five years' imprisonment.

FALSIFYING EMPLOYMENT RECORD.

398. Every one who, with intent to deceive, falsifies an employment record by any means, including the punching of a time clock, is guilty of an offence punishable on summary conviction. R.S., c. C-34, s. 356.

CROSS-REFERENCES

Trial of this offence is conducted by a summary conviction court pursuant to Part XXVII.

The punishment is as set out in s. 787 and the limitation period is set out in s. 786(2).

Release pending trial is determined by s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by a peace officer under s. 496, 497 or by the officer in charge under s. 498.

SYNOPSIS

This section describes the offence of falsifying an employment record. It states that every person who, with the intent to deceive, falsifies an employment record by any means, including the punching of a time clock, is guilty of a summary conviction offence.

FALSE RETURN BY PUBLIC OFFICER.

399. Every one who, being entrusted with the receipt, custody or management of any part of the public revenues, knowingly furnishes a false statement or return of

(a) any sum of money collected by him or entrusted to his care, or

(b) any balance of money in his hands or under his control, is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding five years. R.S., c. C-34, s. 357.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The accused may elect his mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2). Release pending trial is determined by s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by the officer in charge pursuant to s. 498.

Related offences: s. 122, breach of trust by public officer; s. 336, criminal breach of trust; s. 337, public servant refusing to deliver property.

SYNOPSIS

This section describes the offence of making a false return by a public officer. The offence is committed where a person entrusted with public revenues knowingly furnishes a false statement of any sum or balance of money entrusted to or controlled by him. The offence is indictable, with a maximum punishment of five years' imprisonment.

FALSE PROSPECTUS, ETC. / Definition of "company".

400. (1) Every one who makes, circulates or publishes a prospectus, a statement or an account, whether written or oral, that he knows is false in a material particular, with intent

(a) to induce persons, whether ascertained or not, to become shareholders or partners in a company,

(b) to deceive or defraud the members, shareholders or creditors, whether ascertained or not, of a company, or

(c) to induce any person to

(i) entrust or advance anything to a company, or

(ii) enter into any security for the benefit of a company,

is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding ten years.

(2) In this section, "company" means a syndicate, body corporate or company, whether existing or proposed to be created. R.S., c. C-34, s. 358; 1994, c. 44, s. 26.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term "person" is defined in s. 35 of the Interpretation Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. I-21.

By virtue of s. 583, an indictment which otherwise complies with s. 581 is not insufficient by reason only that: para. (c), it charges an intent to defraud without naming or describing the person whom it was intended to defraud. Under s. 586, no count alleging fraud is insufficient by reason only that it does not set out in detail the nature of the fraud. However, under s. 587(1)(b), the court may order particulars of any fraud that is alleged.

Other offences relating to trading in securities, etc., are in ss. 380(2) and 382 to 384.

The accused may elect his mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2). Release pending trial is determined by s. 515.

SYNOPSIS

This section describes offences in relation to a false prospectus. Anyone who makes, circulates or publishes a prospectus, statement or account, whether written or oral, which he knows is false in a material particular, commits an indictable offence, if his purpose in so doing is one of those listed in subsec. (1)(a) to (d). Those purposes are: to induce anyone to become a shareholder or partner in a company; to deceive or defraud members, shareholders or creditors of a company; to induce anyone to entrust or advance anything to a company; or to enter into any security for the benefit of a company. The maximum punishment for this offence is imprisonment for 10 years.

ANNOTATIONS

The falsity, which need not amount to a false pretence, may be found in a statement of purposes, which the author never had any intention of carrying out. Furthermore, for a para. (c) offence, a count is not duplicitious merely because it expresses the alternative modes of carrying out the offence by making, circulating or publishing a false prospectus, and the phrase "any person" includes all unascertained persons of the class of people to whom it was intended to give the prospectus at the time of its preparation: Cox and Paton v. The Queen, [1963] 2 C.C.C. 148, 40 C.R. 52 (S.C.C.) (5:0).

A material omission may render a statement false: R. v. Colucci, [1965] 4 C.C.C. 56, 46 C.R. 256 (Ont. C.A.).

Where the defence is that the false material particular was a mistaken belief as to the correctness of that particular the jury must determine whether the belief was an honest one which negated the guilty knowledge required to be proven by the Crown: R. v. Davidson (1971), 3 C.C.C. (2d) 509, [1971] 4 W.W.R. 731, sub nom. Davidson v. The Queen (B.C.C.A.) (2:1).

The intent to defraud is not an element of the para. (a) offence which only requires falsity in a material particular, the accused's knowledge of it, and an overt act with the intent to induce members of the public to become shareholders: R. v. Scallen (1974), 15 C.C.C. (2d) 441 (B.C.C.A.).

OBTAINING CARRIAGE BY FALSE BILLING / Forfeiture.

401. (1) Every one who, by means of a false or misleading representation, knowingly obtains or attempts to obtain the carriage of anything by any person into a country, province, district or other place, whether or not within Canada, where the importation or transportation of it is, in the circumstances of the case, unlawful is guilty of an offence punishable on summary conviction.

(2) Where a person is convicted of an offence under subsection (1), anything by means of or in relation to which the offence was committed, on such conviction, in addition to any punishment that is imposed, is forfeited to Her Majesty and shall be disposed of as the court may direct. R.S., c. C-34, s. 359.

CROSS-REFERENCES

Trial of this offence is conducted by a summary conviction court pursuant to Part XXVII.

The punishment is as set out in s. 787 and the limitation period is set out in s. 786(2).

Release pending trial is determined by s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by a peace officer under s. 496, 497 or by the officer in charge under s. 498.

Section 414 provides for a presumption as to the port of shipment where an offence relates to imported goods.

The similar offence of fraudulently obtaining food and lodging is in s. 364 and fraud in relation to fares, etc., is in s. 393.

SYNOPSIS

This section describes the offence of obtaining carriage by false billing. Anyone knowingly obtaining or attempting to obtain the unlawful carriage or importation of anything to any place within or outside Canada by means of a false or misleading representation, commits a summary conviction offence. Upon conviction, anything by means of, or in relation to which the offence is committed is forfeited to the Crown, to be disposed of as the court directs.

TRADER FAILING TO KEEP ACCOUNTS / Saving.

- 402. (1) Every one who, being a trader or in business,
- (a) is indebted in an amount exceeding one thousand dollars,
  - (b) is unable to pay his creditors in full, and
  - (c) has not kept books of account that, in the ordinary course of the trade or business in which he is engaged, are necessary to exhibit or explain his transactions, is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding two years.

- (2) No person shall be convicted of an offence under this section

- (a) where, to the satisfaction of the court or judge, he
  - (i) accounts for his losses, and
  - (ii) shows that his failure to keep books was not intended to defraud his creditors; or
- (b) where his failure to keep books occurred at a time more than five years prior to the day on which he was unable to pay his creditors in full. R.S., c. C-34, s. 360.

CROSS-REFERENCES

Related offences respecting defrauding creditors and keeping books of account are found in ss. 392 and 397. The general offence of fraud is defined in s. 380. Also see the offence of theft by failing to account defined in s. 330.

The accused may elect his mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2). Release pending trial is determined by s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by the officer in charge pursuant to s. 498.

SYNOPSIS

This section describes the offence of failing to keep accounts. Any trader or person in business who owes more than $1,000, cannot pay his creditors in full, and has not kept ordinary books of account, commits an indictable offence, with a maximum punishment of two years' imprisonment. Subsection (2) creates a defence where the accused can account for his losses and show that his failure to keep books was not fraudulent, or where his failure occurred more than five years prior to his inability to pay his creditors.

Personation*PERSONATION WITH INTENT.

- 403. Every one who fraudulently personates any person, living or dead,
- (a) with intent to gain advantage for himself or another person,
  - (b) with intent to obtain any property or an interest in any property, or
  - (c) with intent to cause disadvantage to the person whom he personates or another person,
- is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding ten years or an offence punishable on summary conviction. R.S., c. C-34, s. 361; 1994, c. 44, s. 27.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term "property" is defined in s. 2.

While there is no definition of "fraudulently" which is universally applicable, generally speaking, it refers to conduct which is dishonest and morally wrong. R. v. DeMarco (1973), 13 C.C.C. (2d) 369 (Ont. C.A.).

The accused may elect his mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2). Release pending trial is determined by s. 515.

Related offences: s. 130, personating a peace officer; s. 140, public mischief; s. 380, fraud; s. 404, personation at examination; s. 405, acknowledging instrument, including recognizance of bail, in false name.

SYNOPSIS

This section describes the offence of personation. The offence is committed where a person fraudulently personates any person, whether living or dead, with the intention: to gain an advantage for anyone; to obtain property; or to cause a disadvantage to anyone, including the person personated. The offence is a Crown option offence, and has a maximum punishment of 10 years' imprisonment when Crown proceeds by indictment. Where the Crown proceeds by way of summary conviction, then the punishment is prescribed by s. 787 and the limitation period is as set out in s. 786(2).

ANNOTATIONS

The word "advantage" in para. (a) is to be given its ordinary meaning and includes that which advances or serves or which gives profit and is thus not restricted to a pecuniary or economic advantage. Thus a personation to avoid arrest comes within this section: Rozon v. The Queen (1974), 28 C.R.N.S. 232 (Que. C.A.).

An impersonation in Canada to United States immigration authorities in order to obtain clearance to board an aircraft bound for the United States comes within this section. The offence is completely committed in Canada. Further, "advantage" is not confined to an economic or proprietary advantage and would include such a clearance. It does not matter that the ultimate effect of commission of the offence would be breach of the laws of a friendly country: R. v. Hetsberger (1980), 51 C.C.C. (2d) 257 (Ont. C.A.).

The word "person" in this section refers to a human being and does not include a fictitious person: R. v. Northrup (1982), 1 C.C.C. (3d) 210, 41 N.B.R. (2d) 610 (C.A.).

PERSONATION AT EXAMINATION.

404. Every one who falsely, with intent to gain advantage for himself or some other person, personates a candidate at a competitive or qualifying examination held under the authority of law or in connection with a university, college or school or who knowingly avails himself of the results of such personation is guilty of an offence punishable on summary conviction. R.S., c. C-34, s. 362.

CROSS-REFERENCES

Trial of this offence is conducted by a summary conviction court pursuant to Part XXVII.

The punishment is as set out in s. 787 and the limitation period is set out in s. 786(2).

Release pending trial is determined by s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by a peace officer under s. 496, 497 or by the officer in charge under s. 498.

Related offences: s. 130, personating a peace officer; s. 140, public mischief; s. 403, personation with intent; s. 405, acknowledging instrument, including recognizance of bail, in false name.

As to meaning of "advantage", consider cases noted under s. 403.

SYNOPSIS

This section describes the offence of personation at an examination. Anyone who falsely personates a candidate at an examination held under the authority of law or in connection with a school in order to gain an advantage for anyone, or who makes use of the results of such personation, commits a summary conviction offence.

ACKNOWLEDGING INSTRUMENT IN FALSE NAME.

405. Every one who, without lawful authority or excuse, the proof of which lies on him, acknowledges, in the name of another person before a court or a judge or other person authorized to receive the acknowledgment, a recognizance of bail, a confession of judgment, a consent to judgment or a judgment, deed or other instrument, is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding five years. R.S., c. C-34, s. 363.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The accused may elect his mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2). Release pending trial is determined by s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by the officer in charge pursuant to s. 498.

Related offences: s. 130, personating a peace officer; s. 403, personation with intent; s. 404, personation at examination.

SYNOPSIS

This section describes the offence of acknowledging an instrument in a false name. The offence is committed where a person acknowledges before a court or other authorized person any of a variety of legal documents in the name of another person. A defence is available where the accused can establish that he committed the act with lawful authority or excuse. The offence is indictable, and punishable by a maximum term of five years' imprisonment.

ANNOTATIONS

To make out the offence under this section where the recognizance purports to be issued by an officer in charge pursuant to s. 503(2), other than the officer for the time being in command of the police force responsible for the lock-up or other place where the accused is taken after arrest, the Crown must prove that the accused acknowledged the recognizance in a name other than his own, that he acknowledged it before a person who is an officer in charge of the lock-up or place at the time the accused was taken to that place to be detained in custody and that the officer in charge is a peace officer who has been designated for the purpose of Part XVI by the officer for the time being in command of the police force responsible for the lock-up or other place to which the accused was taken after arrest: R. v. Gendron (1985), 22 C.C.C. (3d) 312 (Ont. C.A.).

Forgery of Trade-marks and Trade Descriptions

FORGING TRADE-MARK.

406. For the purposes of this Part, every one forges a trade-mark who

- (a) without the consent of the proprietor of the trade-mark, makes or reproduces in any manner that trade-mark or a mark so nearly resembling it as to be calculated to deceive; or
- (b) falsifies, in any manner, a genuine trade-mark. R.S., c. C-34, s. 364.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term trade-mark is defined in s. 2 of the Trade-marks Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. T-13. The offences created in this Part relating to trade-marks and trade-names are found in ss. 407 to 411 and punished pursuant to s. 412. Some of those offences resemble the general fraud offence which is defined in s. 380 and forgery as defined in ss. 366 to 368.

OFFENCE.

407. Every one commits an offence who, with intent to deceive or defraud the public or any person, whether ascertained or not, forges a trade-mark. R.S., c. C-34, s. 365.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term "person" is defined in s. 35 of the Interpretation Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. I-21. The term trade-mark is defined in s. 2 of the Trade-marks Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. T-13.

Forging a trade-mark is defined in s. 406. By virtue of s. 583, an indictment which otherwise complies with s. 581 is not insufficient by reason only that: para. (c), it charges an intent to defraud without naming or describing the person whom it was intended to defraud. Under s. 586, no count alleging fraud is insufficient by reason only that it does not set out in detail the nature of the fraud. However, under s. 587(1)(b), the court may order particulars of any fraud that is alleged.

The punishment for this offence is set out in s. 412 and therefore see notes under that section with respect to mode of trial and release pending trial. Section 412(2) also provides for forfeiture of anything by means of or in relation to which a person commits an offence under this section.

This offence resembles the general forgery offence and therefore see ss. 366 to 368.

PASSING OFF.

408. Every one commits an offence who, with intent to deceive or defraud the public or any person, whether ascertained or not,

- (a) passes off other wares or services as and for those ordered or required; or
- (b) makes use, in association with wares or services, of any description that is false in a material respect regarding
  - (i) the kind, quality, quantity or composition,
  - (ii) the geographical origin, or
  - (iii) the mode of the manufacture, production or performance of those wares or services. R.S., c. C-34, s. 366.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term "person" is defined in s. 35 of the Interpretation Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. I-21.

By virtue of s. 583, an indictment which otherwise complies with s. 581 is not insufficient by reason only that: para. (c), it charges an intent to defraud without naming or describing the person whom it was intended to defraud. Under s. 586, no count alleging fraud is insufficient by reason only that it does not set out in detail the nature of the fraud. However, under s. 587(1)(b), the court may order particulars of any fraud that is alleged.

The punishment for this offence is set out in s. 412 and therefore see notes under that section with respect to mode of trial and release pending trial. Section 412(2) also provides for forfeiture of anything by means of or in relation to which a person commits an offence under this section.

Reference should also be made to the Trade-marks Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. T-13.

SYNOPSIS

This section describes the offence of "passing off". This offence is committed where a person, with the intention of deceiving any person or the public, passes off wares or services as being those actually ordered or required, or uses a description which is false in any of the material particulars enumerated in para. (b) in association with those wares or services.

INSTRUMENTS FOR FORGING TRADE-MARK / Saving.

409. (1) Every one commits an offence who makes, has in his possession or disposes of a die, block, machine or other instrument, designed or intended to be used in forging a trade-mark.

(2) No person shall be convicted of an offence under this section where he proves that he acted in good faith in the ordinary course of his business or employment. R.S., c. C-34, s. 367.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term trade-mark is defined in the Trade-marks Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. T-13. Forging a trade-mark is defined in s. 406. Possession is defined in s. 4(3). The punishment for this offence is set out in s. 412 and therefore see notes under that section with respect to mode of trial and release pending trial. Section 412(2) also provides for forfeiture of anything by means of or in relation to which a person commits an offence under this section.

SYNOPSIS

This section creates the offence of dealing with instruments for forging a trade mark. The offence is committed where any person makes, possesses or disposes of an instrument designed or intended to be used in forging a trade mark. A defence exists where the accused establishes that he acted in good faith in the ordinary course of his business or employment.

ANNOTATIONS

While the Crown need not show that the trade-mark was or is registered it must prove it to be a trade-mark as defined by the Trade Marks Act: R. v. Strong Cobb Arner of Canada Ltd. (1973), 15 C.C.C. (2d) 288, 2 O.R. (2d) 220 (H.C.J.), affd 16 C.C.C. (2d) 150, 2 O.R. (2d) 692 (C.A.).

OTHER OFFENCES IN RELATION TO TRADE-MARKS.

- 410. Every one commits an offence who, with intent to deceive or defraud,
- (a) defaces, conceals or removes a trade-mark or the name of another person from anything without the consent of that other person; or
  - (b) being a manufacturer, dealer, trader or bottler, fills any bottle or siphon that bears the trade-mark or name of another person, without the consent of that other person, with a beverage, milk, by-product of milk or other liquid commodity for the purpose of sale or traffic. R.S., c. C-34, s. 368.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term trade-mark is defined in s. 2 of the Trade-marks Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. T-13. The term “person” is defined in s. 35 of the Interpretation Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. I-21. By virtue of s. 583, an indictment which otherwise complies with s. 581 is not insufficient by reason only that: para. (c), it charges an intent to defraud without naming or describing the person whom it was intended to defraud. Under s. 586, no count alleging fraud is insufficient by reason only that it does not set out in detail the nature of the fraud. However, under s. 587(1)(b), the court may order particulars of any fraud that is alleged.

The punishment for this offence is set out in s. 412 and therefore see notes under that section with respect to mode of trial and release pending trial. Section 412(2) also provides for forfeiture of anything by means of or in relation to which a person commits an offence under this section.

SYNOPSIS

This section creates additional offences in relation to trade marks. Paragraph (a) provides that an offence is committed where any person defaces, conceals or removes a trade mark or the name of another person from anything without consent, and with the intention to deceive or defraud. Paragraph (b) provides that an offence is committed where a manufacturer, dealer, trader or bottler for the purpose of sale or traffic, fills a bottle or siphon bearing a trade mark, or the name of a person, with any liquid commodity without consent, and with the intention to deceive or defraud.

USED GOODS SOLD WITHOUT DISCLOSURE.

411. Every one commits an offence who sells, exposes or has in his possession for sale, or advertises for sale, goods that have been used, reconditioned or remade and that bear the trade-mark or the trade-name of another person, without making full disclosure that the goods have been reconditioned, rebuilt or remade for sale and that they are not then in the condition in which they were originally made or produced. R.S., c. C-34, s. 369.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms "trade-mark" and "trade-name" are defined in s. 2 of the Trade-marks Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. T-13. The term "goods" is defined in s. 379. Possession is defined in s. 4(3). The term "person" is defined in s. 35 of the Interpretation Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. I-21.

The punishment for this offence is set out in s. 412 and therefore see notes under that section with respect to mode of trial and release pending trial. Section 412(2) also provides for forfeiture of anything by means of or in relation to which a person commits an offence under this section.

SYNOPSIS

This section describes the offence of selling used goods without appropriate disclosure. The offence is committed where a person sells, exposes for sale, possesses for sale or advertises goods bearing a trade mark or trade name of another person without disclosing that the goods were used, reconditioned or remade for sale.

PUNISHMENT / Forfeiture.

412. (1) Every one who commits an offence under section 407, 408, 409, 410 or 411 is guilty of

- (a) an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding two years; or
- (b) an offence punishable on summary conviction.

(2) Anything by means of or in relation to which a person commits an offence under section 407, 408, 409, 410 or 411 is, unless the court otherwise orders, forfeited on the conviction of that person for that offence. R.S., c. C-34, s. 370.

CROSS-REFERENCES

Where the prosecution elects to proceed by indictment for these offences then the accused may elect his mode of trial under s. 536(2). Where the prosecution elects to proceed by way of summary conviction then the proceedings are conducted by a summary conviction court pursuant to Part XXVII. The punishment is then as set out in s. 787 [although see s. 719(b) where the accused is a corporation] and the limitation period is set out in s. 786(2).

Release pending trial for the offences is determined under s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by a peace officer under s. 496, 497 or by the officer in charge under s. 498.

SYNOPSIS

This section provides that the offences described in ss. 407 to 411 may be prosecuted by indictment, with a maximum punishment of imprisonment for two years, or by summary conviction. Anything by means of or in relation to which any of these offences is committed is forfeited upon conviction, unless the court orders otherwise.

FALSELY CLAIMING ROYAL WARRANT.

413. Every one who falsely represents that goods are made by a person holding a royal warrant, or for the service of Her Majesty, a member of the Royal Family or a public department is guilty of an offence punishable on summary conviction. R.S., c. C-34, s. 371.

CROSS-REFERENCES

“Her Majesty” is defined in s. 35 of the Interpretation Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. I-21. The term “public department” is defined in s. 2. The term “goods” is defined in s. 379.

Trial of this offence is conducted by a summary conviction court pursuant to Part XXVII.

The punishment is as set out in s. 787 [although see s. 719(b) where the accused is a corporation] and the limitation period is set out in s. 786(2).

Release pending trial is determined by s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by a peace officer under s. 496, 497 or by the officer in charge under s. 498.

PRESUMPTION FROM PORT OF SHIPMENT.

414. Where, in proceedings under this Part, the alleged offence relates to imported goods, evidence that the goods were shipped to Canada from a place outside Canada is, in the absence of any evidence to the contrary, proof that the goods were made or produced in the country from which they were shipped. R.S., c. C-34, s. 372.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term “goods” is defined in s. 379.

SYNOPSIS

This section creates a presumption concerning the origin of goods in proceedings under Part X. Evidence that goods were shipped into Canada from another country is proof that the goods were produced in that country, in the absence of evidence to the contrary.

Wreck

OFFENCES IN RELATION TO WRECK.

415. Every one who

- (a) secretes wreck, defaces or obliterates the marks on wreck or uses any means to disguise or conceal the fact that anything is wreck, or in any manner conceals the character of wreck, from a person who is entitled to inquire into the wreck,
- (b) receives wreck, knowing that it is wreck, from a person other than the owner thereof or a receiver of wreck, and does not within forty-eight hours thereafter inform the receiver of wreck thereof,
- (c) offers wreck for sale or otherwise deals with it, knowing that it is wreck, and not having a lawful authority to sell or deal with it,
- (d) keeps wreck in his possession knowing that it is wreck, without lawful authority to keep it, for any time longer than the time reasonably necessary to deliver it to the receiver of wreck, or
- (e) boards, against the will of the master, a vessel that is wrecked, stranded or in distress unless he is a receiver of wreck or a person acting under orders of a receiver of wreck,

is guilty of

- (f) an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding two years, or
- (g) an offence punishable on summary conviction. R.S., c. C-34, s. 373.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term “wreck” is defined in s. 2. The term “master” is defined in s. 2 of the Canada Shipping Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. S-9. The term "receiver of wreck" refers to a person appointed under s. 423 of the Canada Shipping Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. S-9 or a person acting under s. 424 of that Act. The Canada Shipping Act contains additional offences respecting wreck. In addition, s. 439(2) of that Act enacts a presumption applicable in "any indictment or prosecution of an accused for receiving, secreting or disguising any wreck, for having the possession thereof, for selling or dealing therewith or for defacing or obliterating marks thereon" and s. 439(3) permits evidence to be adduced of a prior conviction "on any indictment or prosecution of an accused for receiving, secreting, defacing, possessing, selling, dealing with or concealing the character of any wreck." The wide terms in which these provisions are cast would appear to make them applicable (assuming their constitutionality) to a prosecution under this section.

Where the prosecution elects to proceed by indictment then the accused may elect his mode of trial under s. 536(2). Where the prosecution elects to proceed by way of summary conviction then the proceedings are conducted by a summary conviction court pursuant to Part XXVII. The punishment is then as set out in s. 787 [although see s. 719(b) where the accused is a corporation] and the limitation period is set out in s. 786(2). Release pending trial is determined under s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by a peace officer under s. 496, 497 or by the officer in charge under s. 498.

Also see s. 438 which makes it an offence to interfere with the saving of a wrecked vessel.

SYNOPSIS

This section describes a series of offences in relation to wreck. "Wreck" is defined in s. 2 and includes the cargo, stores and parts of a vessel which are separated from it, and the property of persons who belong to, are on board or have left a wrecked vessel. An offence is committed where anyone secretes, disguises or conceals the character of wreck, knowingly receives wreck from a person other than the owner or a receiver of wreck without informing the receiver within 48 hours, knowingly deals with wreck without lawful authority, knowingly keeps wreck in possession without lawful authority longer than the time reasonably necessary to deliver it to the receiver; or, not being a receiver of wreck or a person acting under a receiver's orders, boards a wrecked, stranded or distressed vessel against the will of the master. The offence may be prosecuted by indictment or summarily. The maximum term of punishment on indictment is two years.

Public Stores

DISTINGUISHING MARK ON PUBLIC STORES.

416. The Governor in Council may, by notice to be published in the Canada Gazette, prescribe distinguishing marks that are appropriated for use on public stores to denote the property of Her Majesty therein, whether the stores belong to Her Majesty in right of Canada or to Her Majesty in any other right. R.S., c. C-34, s. 374.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term "Her Majesty" is defined in s. 35 of the Interpretation Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. I-21. The terms "property" and "public stores" are defined in s. 2.

APPLYING OR REMOVING MARKS WITHOUT AUTHORITY / Unlawful transactions in public stores / Definition of "distinguishing mark".

417. (1) Every one who,
- (a) without lawful authority, the proof of which lies on him, applies a distinguishing mark to anything, or
  - (b) with intent to conceal the property of Her Majesty in public stores, removes, destroys or obliterates, in whole or in part, a distinguishing mark, is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding two years.

(2) Every one who, without lawful authority, the proof of which lies on him, receives, possesses, keeps, sells or delivers public stores that he knows bear a distinguishing mark is guilty of

(a) an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding two years; or

(b) an offence punishable on summary conviction.

(3) For the purposes of this section, “distinguishing mark” means a distinguishing mark that is appropriated for use on public stores pursuant to section 416. R.S., c. C-34, s. 375.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term “Her Majesty” is defined in s. 35 of the Interpretation Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. I-21. The terms “property” and “public stores” are defined in s. 2. Possession is defined in s. 4(3). Under s. 421(1), evidence that a person was at any time performing duties in the Canadian Forces [defined in s. 2] is, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, proof that his enrolment in the Canadian Forces prior to that time was regular. Under s. 421(2), an accused charged with the offence under subsec. (2) is presumed to have known that the stores bore a distinguishing mark if he was at the time of the offence in the service or employment of Her Majesty or was a dealer in marine stores or in old metals.

The accused may elect his mode of trial for the offence under subsec. (1) pursuant to s. 536(2). Release pending trial is determined by s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by the officer in charge pursuant to s. 498. Where the prosecution elects to proceed by indictment for the offence under subsec. (2) then the accused may elect his mode of trial under s. 536(2). Where the prosecution elects to proceed by way of summary conviction then the proceedings are conducted by a summary conviction court pursuant to Part XXVII. The punishment is then as set out in s. 787 [although see s. 719(b) where the accused is a corporation] and the limitation period is set out in s. 786(2). Release pending trial for the offence under subsec. (2) is determined under s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by a peace officer under s. 496, 497 or by the officer in charge under s. 498.

Related offences concerning public stores are in ss. 418 and 420.

SYNOPSIS

This section describes offences with respect to distinguishing marks prescribed pursuant to s. 416. An offence is committed contrary to subsec. (1) where anyone applies a distinguishing mark without lawful authority, the onus of proof of which lies on him, or removes, destroys or obliterates a distinguishing mark in whole or in part, with intent to conceal Her Majesty’s ownership. The offence is indictable, with a maximum term of imprisonment of two years. An offence is committed contrary to subsec. (2) where anyone knowingly receives, possesses, keeps, sells, or delivers public stores bearing a distinguishing mark without lawful authority, the proof of which lies on the accused. This offence may be prosecuted by indictment, with a maximum term of two years’ imprisonment, or by summary conviction.

SELLING DEFECTIVE STORES TO HER MAJESTY / Offences by officers and employees of corporations.

418. (1) Every one who knowingly sells or delivers defective stores to Her Majesty or commits fraud in connection with the sale, lease or delivery of stores to Her Majesty or the manufacture of stores for Her Majesty is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding fourteen years.

(2) Every one who, being a director, an officer, an agent or an employee of a corporation that commits, by fraud, an offence under subsection (1),

(a) knowingly takes part in the fraud, or

(b) knows or has reason to suspect that the fraud is being committed or has been or is about to be committed and does not inform the responsible government, or a department thereof, of Her Majesty, is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding fourteen years. R.S., c. C-34, s. 376.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term "Her Majesty" is defined in s. 35 of the Interpretation Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. I-21.

Under s. 421(1), evidence that a person was at any time performing duties in the Canadian Forces (defined in s. 2) is, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, proof that his enrolment in the Canadian Forces prior to that time was regular.

The accused may elect his mode of trial for the offence under subsec. (1) pursuant to s. 536(2). Release pending trial is determined by s. 515.

Related offences concerning public stores are in ss. 417 and 420.

SYNOPSIS

This section describes the offence of selling defective stores to Her Majesty. An indictable offence is committed where a person knowingly sells or delivers defective stores to Her Majesty, or commits fraud in connection with the sale, lease, or delivery of stores to, or manufacture of stores for Her Majesty. The maximum term of imprisonment is 14 years. Subsection (2) provides that an officer, director, employee or agent of a corporation committing this offence by fraud is also guilty of an indictable offence with a maximum term of imprisonment of 14 years if he knowingly participates in the fraud, or knows or has reason to suspect that the fraud has been, is being or is about to be committed and fails to inform the responsible government department.

UNLAWFUL USE OF MILITARY UNIFORMS OR CERTIFICATES.

419. Every one who without lawful authority, the proof of which lies on him,

(a) wears a uniform of the Canadian Forces or any other naval, army or air force or a uniform that is so similar to the uniform of any of those forces that it is likely to be mistaken therefor,

(b) wears a distinctive mark relating to wounds received or service performed in war, or a military medal, ribbon, badge, chevron or any decoration or order that is awarded for war services, or any imitation thereof, or any mark or device or thing that is likely to be mistaken for any such mark, medal, ribbon, badge, chevron, decoration or order,

(c) has in his possession a certificate of discharge, certificate of release, statement of service or identity card from the Canadian Forces or any other naval, army or air force that has not been issued to and does not belong to him, or

(d) has in his possession a commission or warrant or a certificate of discharge, certificate of release, statement of service or identity card, issued to an officer or person in or who has been in the Canadian Forces or any other naval, army or air force, that contains any alteration that is not verified by the initials of the officer who issued it, or by the initials of some officer thereto lawfully authorized, is guilty of an offence punishable on summary conviction. R.S., c. C-34, s. 377.

CROSS-REFERENCES

Under s. 421(1), evidence that a person was at any time performing duties in the Canadian Forces (defined in s. 2) is, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, proof that his enrolment in the Canadian Forces prior to that time was regular.

Trial of this offence is conducted by a summary conviction court pursuant to Part XXVII. The punishment is as set out in s. 787 and the limitation period is set out in s. 786(2). Release pending trial is determined by s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by a peace officer under s. 496, 497 or by the officer in charge under s. 498.

The offence of personation with intent is found in s. 403 and of personating a police officer in s. 130.

SYNOPSIS

This section describes the offence of unlawful use of military uniforms or certificates or imitations thereof. The wearing or, in certain cases, possession of a wide variety of military apparel, marks, certificates, commissions and warrants without lawful authority, the proof of which lies on the accused, is a summary conviction offence.

MILITARY STORES / Exception.

420. (1) Every one who buys, receives or detains from a member of the Canadian Forces or a deserter or an absentee without leave therefrom any military stores that are owned by Her Majesty or for which the member, deserter or absentee without leave is accountable to Her Majesty is guilty of

- (a) an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding five years; or
- (b) an offence punishable on summary conviction.

(2) No person shall be convicted of an offence under this section where he establishes that he did not know and had no reason to suspect that the military stores in respect of which the offence was committed were owned by Her Majesty or were military stores for which the member, deserter or absentee without leave was accountable to Her Majesty. R.S., c. C-34, s. 378.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term “military” is defined in s. 2.

Under s. 421(1), evidence that a person was at any time performing duties in the Canadian Forces (defined in s. 2) is, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, proof that his enrolment in the Canadian Forces prior to that time was regular.

Where the prosecution elects to proceed by indictment then the accused may elect his mode of trial under s. 536(2). Where the prosecution elects to proceed by way of summary conviction then the proceedings are conducted by a summary conviction court pursuant to Part XXVII. The punishment is then as set out in s. 787 [although see s. 719(b) where the accused is a corporation] and the limitation period is set out in s. 786(2). Release pending trial is determined under s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by a peace officer under s. 496, 497 or by the officer in charge under s. 498.

Related offences concerning public stores are in ss. 417 and 418.

Other offences relating to deserters are in ss. 54 and 62.

SYNOPSIS

This section describes the offence of unauthorized use of military stores. An offence is committed where a person buys, receives or detains military stores of Her Majesty from a member of the Canadian Forces, a deserter or an absentee without leave of the forces. The offence may be prosecuted by indictment, with a maximum term of imprisonment of five years, or by summary conviction. Subsection (2) creates a defence where the accused establishes that he did not know and had no reason to suspect that the stores were owned by Her Majesty.

EVIDENCE OF ENLISTMENT / Presumption when accused a dealer in stores.

421. (1) In proceedings under sections 417 to 420, evidence that a person was at any time performing duties in the Canadian Forces is, in the absence of any evidence to the contrary, proof that his enrolment in the Canadian Forces prior to that time was regular.

(2) An accused who is charged with an offence under subsection 417(2) shall be presumed to have known that the stores in respect of which the offence is alleged to have been committed bore a distinguishing mark within the meaning of that subsection at the time the offence is alleged to have been committed if he was, at that time, in the service or employment of Her Majesty or was a dealer in marine stores or in old metals. R.S., c. C-34, s. 379.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term "Canadian Forces" is defined in s. 2. The term "Her Majesty" is defined in s. 35 of the Interpretation Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. I-21.

SYNOPSIS

This section creates certain presumptions relating to ss. 417 to 420. By virtue of subsec. (1), in proceedings under ss. 417 to 420, evidence that a person performed duties in the armed forces is proof of his earlier regular enrolment in the absence of evidence to the contrary. By virtue of subsec. (2), if the accused was in the service or employment of Her Majesty, or was a dealer in marine stores or old metals at the time he is alleged to have committed an offence contrary to s. 417(2), he is presumed to know that the stores in question bore a distinguishing mark at the time.

Breach of Contract, Intimidation and Discrimination Against Trade Unionists

CRIMINAL BREACH OF CONTRACT / Saving / Consent required.

422. (1) Every one who wilfully breaks a contract, knowing or having reasonable cause to believe that the probable consequences of doing so, whether alone or in combination with others, will be

- (a) to endanger human life,
- (b) to cause serious bodily injury,
- (c) to expose valuable property, real or personal, to destruction or serious injury,
- (d) to deprive the inhabitants of a city or place, or part thereof, wholly or to a great extent, of their supply of light, power, gas or water, or
- (e) to delay or prevent the running of any locomotive engine, tender, freight or passenger train or car, on a railway that is a common carrier,

is guilty of

- (f) an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding five years, or
- (g) an offence punishable on summary conviction.

(2) No person wilfully breaks a contract within the meaning of subsection (1) by reason only that

- (a) being the employee of an employer, he stops work as a result of the failure of his employer and himself to agree on any matter relating to his employment, or
- (b) being a member of an organization of employees formed for the purpose of regulating relations between employers and employees, he stops work as a result of the failure of the employer and a bargaining agent acting on behalf of the organization to agree upon any matter relating to the employment of members of the organization, if, before the stoppage of work occurs, all steps provided by law with respect to the settlement of industrial disputes are taken and any provision for the final settlement of differences, without stoppage of work, contained in or by law deemed to be contained in a collective agreement is complied with and effect given thereto.

(3) No proceedings shall be instituted under this section without the consent of the Attorney General. R.S., c. C-34, s. 380.

CROSS-REFERENCES

“Attorney General” is defined in s. 2. Section 583(h) provides that a count in an indictment is not insufficient by reason only that it does not state that the required consent has been obtained. [As to notes concerning sufficiency of consent, see s. 583.]

Where the prosecution elects to proceed by indictment then the accused may elect his mode of trial under s. 536(2). Where the prosecution elects to proceed by way of summary conviction then the proceedings are conducted by a summary conviction court pursuant to Part XXVII. The punishment is then as set out in s. 787 [although see s. 719(b) where the accused is a corporation] and the limitation period is set out in s. 786(2). Release pending trial is determined under s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by a peace officer under s. 496, 497 or by the officer in charge under s. 498.

Also see s. 466 which creates the offence of conspiracy in restraint of trade.

SYNOPSIS

This section describes the offence of criminal breach of contract. The offence is committed where a person wilfully breaches a contract, knowing or having reasonable cause to believe that the consequences will endanger life, cause serious bodily injury, expose valuable property to destruction or serious injury, deprive people wholly or substantially of light, power, gas, or water, or delay or prevent the running of a common carrier railway. These consequences may flow from a breach by the accused or by the accused in combination with others. The offence may be prosecuted by indictment, with a maximum term of punishment of five years’ imprisonment, or by summary conviction. Subsection (2) provides that a contract is not broken within the meaning of this section where an employee lawfully stops work because matters relating to his employment are not agreed upon, or where he stops work as part of a lawful work stoppage by a union. Proceedings under this section may only be instituted with the consent of an Attorney General.

INTIMIDATION / Exception.

423. (1) Every one who, wrongfully and without lawful authority, for the purpose of compelling another person to abstain from doing anything that he has a lawful right to do, or to do anything that he has a lawful right to abstain from doing,

- (a) uses violence or threats of violence to that person or his spouse or children, or injures his property,
  - (b) intimidates or attempts to intimidate that person or a relative of that person by threats that, in Canada or elsewhere, violence or other injury will be done to or punishment inflicted on him or a relative of his, or that the property of any of them will be damaged,
  - (c) persistently follows that person about from place to place,
  - (d) hides any tools, clothes or other property owned or used by that person, or deprives him of them or hinders him in the use of them,
  - (e) with one or more other persons, follows that person, in a disorderly manner, on a highway,
  - (f) besets or watches the dwelling-house or place where that person resides, works, carries on business or happens to be, or
  - (g) blocks or obstructs a highway,
- is guilty of an offence punishable on summary conviction.

(2) A person who attends at or near or approaches a dwelling-house or place, for the purpose only of obtaining or communicating information, does not watch or beset within the meaning of this section. R.S., c. C-34, s. 381; 1980-81-82-83, c. 125, s. 22.

CROSS-REFERENCES

Where the offence, although committed outside Canada, is in relation to a demand for nuclear material, see s. 7(3.4).

Trial of this offence is conducted by a summary conviction court pursuant to Part XXVII. The punishment is as set out in s. 787 and the limitation period is set out in s. 786(2). Release pending trial is determined by s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by a peace officer under s. 496, 497 or by the officer in charge under s. 498. In some circumstances, the accused found guilty of this offence would be liable to the discretionary order prohibiting possession of firearms, ammunition or explosives.

An alternative to this offence is the procedure for requiring the offender to enter into a recognizance to keep the peace either at common law or pursuant to s. 810. Other related offences: s. 175, causing disturbance; s. 264, criminal harassment; s. 264.1, uttering threats; s. 346, extortion; s. 423, intimidation and watching and besetting; s. 424, threat to commit offence against internationally protected person; s. 371, sending false telegram, etc., with intent to defraud; s. 372, conveying false messages, harassing or indecent telephone calls.

SYNOPSIS

This section describes the offence of intimidation. The offence is committed where a person intending to compel someone to abstain from doing something he has a right to do, or to do something that he has the right to abstain from doing, wrongfully and without authority: uses violence or threats of violence against the person or his spouse or children; injures his property; intimidates or attempts to intimidate the person or a relative by threats of violence or injury to property; persistently follows the person; hides or deprives the person of the use of his property; with another or others follows the person in a disorderly manner on a highway; watches or besets the residence, work place or other place where the person happens to be; or blocks a highway. The offence may be prosecuted by summary conviction. By virtue of s. (2), where a person approaches a place for the sole purpose of obtaining or communicating information, he does not watch or beset within the meaning of this section.

ANNOTATIONS

A picket line, staffed by non-employees, advocating a collective bargaining agreement was held to be just as effective an interference with contractual relations as any other restraint might be and on the facts was held to involve the proposition that the defendants were in breach of subsec. #### THREAT TO COMMIT OFFENCE AGAINST INTERNATIONALLY PROTECTED PERSON.

424. Every one who threatens to commit an offence under section 235, 266, 279 or 279.1 against an internationally protected person or who threatens to commit an offence under section 431 is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding five years. 1974-75-76, c. 93, s. 33; R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 55.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term “internationally protected person” is defined in s. 2. Section 7(10) provides for admissibility of a certificate from the Secretary of State for External Affairs stating any fact relevant to the question of whether any person is a person who is entitled, pursuant to international law, to special protection from any attack on his person, freedom or dignity.

This offence may be the basis for an application for an authorization to intercept private communications by reason of s. 183 and a warrant to conduct video surveillance under s. 487.01(5).

Section 7(3) enacts special jurisdictional rules for commission of this offence outside Canada when the offence is in relation to an internationally protected person or property referred to in s. 431 [official premises, etc.].

The accused may elect his mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2). Release pending trial is determined by s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by the officer in charge pursuant to s. 498. In some circumstances, the accused found guilty of this offence would be liable to the discretionary order prohibiting possession of firearms, ammunition or explosives.

SYNOPSIS

This section describes the offence of threatening to commit an offence against an internationally protected person. A person charged under this section must have threatened to commit the offences described in ss. 235, 266, 279 or 279.1, and the threats must be directed against an internationally protected person. A person who threatens to commit the offence under s. 431 of attacking the premises, residence or transport of an internationally protected person is also guilty of an offence under this section. This offence is indictable and carries a maximum term of five years' imprisonment.

OFFENCE BY EMPLOYERS.

425. Every one who, being an employer or the agent of an employer, wrongfully and without lawful authority

- (a) refuses to employ or dismisses from his employment any person for the reason only that the person is a member of a lawful trade union or of a lawful association or combination of workmen or employees formed for the purpose of advancing, in a lawful manner, their interests and organized for their protection in the regulation of wages and conditions of work,
- (b) seeks by intimidation, threat of loss of position or employment, or by causing actual loss of position or employment, or by threatening or imposing any pecuniary penalty, to compel workmen or employees to abstain from belonging to a trade union, association or combination to which they have a lawful right to belong, or
- (c) conspires, combines, agrees or arranges with any other employer or his agent to do anything mentioned in paragraph (a) or (b), is guilty of an offence punishable on summary conviction. R.S., c. C-34, s. 382.

CROSS-REFERENCES

Trial of this offence is conducted by a summary conviction court pursuant to Part XXVII. The punishment is as set out in s. 787 and the limitation period is set out in s. 786(2). Release pending trial is determined by s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by a peace officer under s. 496, 497 or by the officer in charge under s. 498.

The related offence of intimidation is found in s. 423. With respect to the offence in para. (c), see the saving provisions with respect to refusing to work and trade combinations in s. 467.

SYNOPSIS

This section describes several offences relating to labour disputes with which an employer can be charged. Any person who is either an employer or an agent of an employer and who wrongfully and without lawful authority refuses to hire or continue the employment of another person because he is a member of a lawful trade union or association, or who, employing the methods described in para. (b), attempts to keep his employees from joining a union or association to which they have a lawful right to belong is guilty of a summary conviction offence. Paragraph (c) imposes liability to summary conviction upon any person who conspires, combines, agrees or arranges with the employer or his agent to do any of the things described above.

ANNOTATIONS

Para. (a) – The “reason only” means the primary reason, the causa causans, the reason behind the act in question, and may be inferred from the attitudes or decisions not expressly outlined in detail: R. ex rel. Perreault v. Alex Pelletier And Sons Ltd. (1960), 33 C.R. 84 (Que. Mag. Ct.).

A charge under this subsection was dismissed where police officers, called by the employer, removed employees from the employer’s premises but without instructions to do so from the employer. There was held to be no dismissal either directly or indirectly by the employer: R. v. J. Alepin Freres Ltee., [1965] 3 C.C.C. 1, [1965] S.C.R. 359.

Para. (b) – The offence of seeking to compel workmen or employees to abstain from belonging to a trade union is the prohibited activity expressed in two methods which may both be incorporated into one charge: R. v. Hickey, ex p. Hebb Motors Ltd. et al., [1965] 2 C.C.C. 170 (N.S.S.C.).

Secret Commissions

---

SECRET COMMISSIONS / Privy to offence / Punishment / Definition of “agent” and “principal”.

426. (1) Every one commits an offence who

(a) corruptly

(i) gives, offers or agrees to give or offer to an agent, or

(ii) being an agent, demands, accepts or offers or agrees to accept from any person, any reward, advantage or benefit of any kind as consideration for doing or forbearing to do, or for having done or forborne to do, any act relating to the affairs or business of his principal or for showing or forbearing to show favour or disfavour to any person with relation to the affairs or business of his principal; or

(b) with intent to deceive a principal, gives to an agent of that principal, or, being an agent, uses with intent to deceive his principal, a receipt, an account, or other writing

(i) in which the principal has an interest,

(ii) that contains any statement that is false or erroneous or defective in any material particular, and

(iii) that is intended to mislead the principal.

(2) Every one commits an offence who is knowingly privy to the commission of an offence under subsection (1).

(3) A person who commits an offence under this section is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding five years.

(4) In this section “agent” includes an employee, and “principal” includes an employer. R.S., c. C-34, s. 383; R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 56.

CROSS-REFERENCES

This offence may be the basis for an application for an authorization to intercept private communications by reason of s. 183 and is an enterprise crime offence for the purposes of Part XII.2.

The accused may elect his mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2). Release pending trial is determined by s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by a peace officer under s. 496, 497 or by the officer in charge under s. 498.

This offence is often charged with the offence of fraud defined in s. 380. Other forms of breach of trust are as follows: s. 122, breach of trust by public officer; s. 330, theft by person required to account; s. 331, theft by person holding power of attorney; s. 332, theft of money held under direction; s. 336, criminal breach of trust; s. 384, broker selling for his own account.

SYNOPSIS

This section describes the offence of giving secret commissions. Subsection (1)(a) states that a person who corruptly gives, offers or agrees to give or offer to an agent, or who, being an agent, corruptly demands, accepts or offers or agrees to accept any reward, advantage or benefit of any kind in return for doing or not doing an act, or for showing favour or disfavour to another person, in relation to the business of his principal, commits this indictable offence. Subsection (1)(b) describes another form of this offence which involves the giving to an agent or the using by an agent of a receipt, account, or other writing in which the principal has an interest and in which a false, erroneous or defective statement, intended to mislead the principal, is contained. In order to be convicted of an offence under subsec. (1)(b), the accused must have the intent to deceive a principal. Subsection (2) makes it an offence for a person to be knowingly privy to an offence under subsec. (1). The maximum term of imprisonment for offences under this section is 5 years.

ANNOTATIONS

Elements of offence – Where the person charged with the offence under subsec. (1)(a)(ii) is the agent, then the Crown must establish as elements of the actus reus the existence of an agency relationship; the accepting by an agent of a benefit as consideration for doing or forbearing to do any act in relation to the affairs of the agent's principals; and the failure by the agent to make adequate and timely disclosure of the source, amount and nature of the benefit. The requisite mens rea is proof that the agent was aware of the agency relationship; that the agent knowingly accepted the benefit as consideration for an act to be undertaken in relation to the affairs of the principal; and that the agent was aware of the extent of the disclosure to the principal or lack thereof. If the accused was aware that some disclosure was made, then it will be for the court to determine whether in all the circumstances of the particular case it was in fact adequate and timely. The term “corruptly” means secretly or without requisite disclosure. There is no requirement of any corrupt bargain. Thus, it is possible to convict the agent who has accepted or taken a reward despite the innocence of the giver of the reward or benefit. The non-disclosure will be established if the Crown demonstrates that adequate and timely disclosure of the source, amount and nature of the benefit has not been made by the agent to the principal. A general and vague disclosure that the agent is receiving commissions will not meet the objective of the section. The agent must disclose the nature of the benefit which is being received, the amount of that benefit calculated to the best of the agent's ability and the source of the benefit. It may not be possible for the agent to be exact as to the amount of commission which will be received and it will, therefore, be sufficient if a reasonable effort is made to alert the principal as to the approximate amount and source of commission to be received. The disclosure must be timely in the sense that the principal must be aware of the benefit as soon as possible. The disclosure must be made at the point when the reward may influence the agent in relation to the principal's affairs and it is essential then that the agent clearly disclose to the principal as promptly as possible the source and amount or approximate amount of the benefit: R. v. Kelly (1992), 73 C.C.C. (3d) 385, 92 D.L.R. (4th) 643, [1992] 4 W.W.R. 640 (S.C.C.); R. v. Arnold (1992), 73 C.C.C. (3d) 31, 137 N.R. 360 (S.C.C.).

The evil to which this section is directed is secret transactions with an agent concerning the affairs of his principal, and it is no defence that the accused believed that he had a right to have a certain thing done by the agent's principal: R. v. Brown (1956), 116 C.C.C. 287, 24 C.R. 404 (Ont. C.A.) (2:1).

Meaning of "agent" – While the offence, contrary to subsec. (1)(a)(i), requires proof that the person who was offered the secret commission was in fact an agent, the agent need not have a specific principal at the time of the prohibited offer, nor need the agent intend to carry out the purpose for which the offer was made: R. v. Wile (1990), 58 C.C.C. (3d) 85, 79 C.R. (3d) 32, 74 O.R. (2d) 289 (C.A.).

The mere giving of advice with respect to investments does not establish an agency relationship: R. v. Arnold (1994), 88 C.C.C. (3d) 92, 129 N.S.R. (2d) 356 (N.S.C.A.).

Trading Stamps

ISSUING TRADING STAMPS / Giving to purchaser of goods.

427. (1) Every one who, by himself or his employee or agent, directly or indirectly issues, gives, sells or otherwise disposes of, or offers to issue, give, sell or otherwise dispose of trading stamps to a merchant or dealer in goods for use in his business is guilty of an offence punishable on summary conviction.

(2) Every one who, being a merchant or dealer in goods, by himself or his employee or agent, directly or indirectly gives or in any way disposes of, or offers to give or in any way dispose of, trading stamps to a person who purchases goods from him is guilty of an offence punishable on summary conviction. R.S., c. C-34, s. 384.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms "goods" and "trading stamps" are defined in s. 379.

Trial of these offences is conducted by a summary conviction court pursuant to Part XXVII. The punishment is as set out in s. 787 [although see s. 719(b) where the accused is a corporation] and the limitation period is set out in s. 786(2). Release pending trial is determined by s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by a peace officer under s. 496, 497 or by the officer in charge under s. 498.

Also see lottery offences in s. 207.

SYNOPSIS

This section makes it a summary conviction offence to give, sell or issue, or to offer to give, sell or issue trading stamps to a merchant or dealer in goods for use in his business. Subsection (2) further makes it an offence for a merchant or dealer in goods to distribute trading stamps to purchasers.

ANNOTATIONS

The vendor's right to substitute an equal or better premium than the one claimed by the customer upon redemption of coupons did not make the arrangement a trading stamp scheme: R. v. Kleckner, [1963] 1 C.C.C. 64, 39 C.R. 77 (Sask.C.A.).

To be trading stamps the Crown must prove that the stamps were intended to represent a discount on the price of goods, and accordingly bonus coupons given only to cash as opposed to credit customers based on the amount paid are not trading stamps: R. v. Lloyd H. Alford & Son Ltd., [1965] 3 C.C.C. 70, 45 C.R. 279 (Ont.H.C.J.).

Part XI / WILFUL AND FORBIDDEN ACTS IN RESPECT OF CERTAIN PROPERTY

Interpretation

DEFINITION OF “PROPERTY”

428. In this Part, “property” means real or personal corporeal property. R.S., c. C-34, s. 385.

CROSS-REFERENCES

In addition to the definition of this section, see s. 2 and notes to that section. For definition of “wilfully”, see s. 429.

SYNOPSIS

This section defines the term “property” for the purposes of Part XI of the Code. The definition is more restricted than the one found in s. 2 of the Code and encompasses real or personal corporeal property.

WILFULLY CAUSING EVENT TO OCCUR / Colour of right / Interest.

429. (1) Every one who causes the occurrence of an event by doing an act or by omitting to do an act that it is his duty to do, knowing that the act or omission will probably cause the occurrence of the event and being reckless whether the event occurs or not, shall be deemed, for the purposes of this Part, wilfully to have caused the occurrence of the event.

(2) No person shall be convicted of an offence under sections 430 to 446 where he proves that he acted with legal justification or excuse and with colour of right.

(3) Where it is an offence to destroy or to damage anything,

(a) the fact that a person has a partial interest in what is destroyed or damaged does not prevent him from being guilty of the offence if he caused the destruction or damage; and

(b) the fact that a person has a total interest in what is destroyed or damaged does not prevent him from being guilty of the offence if he caused the destruction or damage with intent to defraud. R.S., c. C-34, s. 386.

CROSS-REFERENCES

For other notes on the meaning of “colour of right”, see s. 322 and with respect to mistake generally, see s. 19. With respect to subsec. (3)(b), note that where the accused is charged with an offence under s. 433 or 434, then s. 435 enacts a presumption of intent to defraud where the accused is the holder of or is named as the beneficiary under a policy of fire insurance relating to the property, and where intent to defraud is material.

SYNOPSIS

This section contains three provisions relevant to Part XI of the Code. Subsection (1) states that any person who does something (or fails to do something which it is his or her duty to do) knowing that this action or inaction will probably cause the occurrence of an event and who is reckless as to the outcome of his action, is deemed, for the purposes of this Part of the Code, to have wilfully caused the occurrence of the event. Subsection (2) makes it clear that no person who proves that he acted with legal justification or excuse and with colour of right shall be convicted of an offence under ss. 430 to 446. Subsection (3)(a) provides that where it is an offence to destroy or damage anything, a person who causes damage or destruction can be found guilty, notwithstanding the fact that he has a partial interest in that thing. Subsection (3)(a) states that a person who has a total interest in the damaged property can be found guilty of an offence if he caused the damage or destruction with the intent to defraud.

ANNOTATIONS

Application of definition of “wilfully” [subsec. (1)] – In view of this extended definition of “wilfully” an information containing an allegation of unlawfully damaging property is valid: R. v. Rese, [1968] 1 C.C.C.363, 2 C.R.N.S.99 (Ont.C.A.).

Legal justification or excuse and colour of right [subsec. (2)] – To come within this exception the accused must show that he believed in a state of facts which, if it actually existed, would constitute a legal justification or excuse: R. v. Ninos And Walker, [1964] 1 C.C.C.326, 48 M.P.R.383 (N.S.S.C. in Banco).

Where the accused shot and killed a dog which he had accidentally wounded in an attempt to frighten it off his land which he had turned into a wildlife refuge it was held that the first shot was justified as it was not done with the intent to wound or kill the dog and that the second shot, which was done for humanitarian reasons to put the dog out of its misery, was also justified. The accused’s honest belief (proved to be wrong at trial) that the dog could not be saved provided him with a colour of right. The Court left open the question whether the intentional shooting of dogs to protect wildlife would itself constitute a lawful justification or excuse: R. v. Comber (1975), 28 C.C.C. (2d) 444 (Ont. Co. Ct.).

The word “and” in this subsection should be read as “or” so it is sufficient if the accused establishes that he acted either with legal justification or excuse, or with a colour of right. Colour of right means an honest belief in a state of fact which, if it existed, would be a legal justification or excuse: R. v. Creaghan (1982), 1 C.C.C. (3d) 449, 31 C.R. (3d) 277 (Ont. C.A.).

It would seem that placing the onus on the accused to prove the legal justification or excuse is unconstitutional as violating s. 11(d) of the Charter: R. v. Gamey (1993), 80 C.C.C. (3d) 117, 85 Man. R. (2d) 41 (C.A.).

Destruction or damage to person’s own property [subsec. (3)] – Where a trustee’s interest is only a bare legal title the trustee does not have any sufficient interest in the property to remove the application of this paragraph: R. v. Griffith, [1987] 2 W.W.R. 564 (Man. Q.B.).

Mischief

MISCHIEF / Mischief in relation to data / Punishment / Idem / Idem / Idem / Offence / Saving / Idem / Definition of “data”.

430. (1) Every one commits mischief who wilfully

- (a) destroys or damages property;
- (b) renders property dangerous, useless, inoperative or ineffective;
- (c) obstructs, interrupts or interferes with the lawful use, enjoyment or operation of property; or
- (d) obstructs, interrupts or interferes with any person in the lawful use, enjoyment or operation of property.

(1.1) Every one commits mischief who wilfully

- (a) destroys or alters data;
- (b) renders data meaningless, useless or ineffective;
- (c) obstructs, interrupts or interferes with the lawful use of data; or
- (d) obstructs, interrupts or interferes with any person in the lawful use of data or denies access to data to any person who is entitled to access thereto.

- (2) Every one who commits mischief that causes actual danger to life is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for life.
- (3) Every one who commits mischief in relation to property that is a testamentary instrument or the value of which exceeds five thousand dollars
- (a) is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding ten years; or
  - (b) is guilty of an offence punishable on summary conviction.
- (4) Every one who commits mischief in relation to property, other than property described in subsection (3),
- (a) is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding two years; or
  - (b) is guilty of an offence punishable on summary conviction.
- (5) Everyone who commits mischief in relation to data
- (a) is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding ten years; or
  - (b) is guilty of an offence punishable on summary conviction.
- (5.1) Every one who wilfully does an act or wilfully omits to do an act that it is his duty to do, if that act or omission is likely to constitute mischief causing actual danger to life, or to constitute mischief in relation to property or data,
- (a) is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding five years; or
  - (b) is guilty of an offence punishable on summary conviction.
- (6) No person commits mischief within the meaning of this section by reason only that
- (a) he stops work as a result of the failure of his employer and himself to agree on any matter relating to his employment; or
  - (b) he stops work as a result of the failure of his employer and a bargaining agent acting on his behalf to agree on any matter relating to his employment; or
  - (c) he stops work as a result of his taking part in a combination of workmen or employees for their own reasonable protection as workmen or employees.
- (7) No person commits mischief within the meaning of this section by reason only that he attends at or near or approaches a dwelling-house or place for the purpose only of obtaining or communicating information.
- (8) In this section, “data” has the same meaning as in section 342.1. R.S., c. C-34, s. 387; 1972, c. 13, s. 30; R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 57; 1994, c. 44, s. 28.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term “property” is defined in s. 428. The term “wilfully” is defined in s. 429(1). The defence of legal justification or excuse and colour of right is set out in s. 429(2). Where the accused has an interest in the thing destroyed, see s. 429(3).

The offence in subsec. (2) is an indictable offence for which the accused may elect his mode of trial under s. 536(2). Release pending trial is determined under s. 515. Where the prosecution elects to proceed by indictment for the offence under subsec. (3) then the accused may elect his mode of trial under s. 536(2). Release pending trial is determined under s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by a peace officer under s. 496, 497 or by the officer in charge under s. 498. Where the prosecution elects to proceed by way of summary conviction then the proceedings are conducted by a summary conviction court pursuant to Part XXVII. The punishment is then as set out in s. 787 and the limitation period is set out in s. 786(2). Where the prosecution elects to proceed by indictment for the offence under subsec. (4) then, by virtue of s. 553(a)(v), it is an offence over which a provincial court judge has absolute jurisdiction and does not depend on the consent of the accused. That is, the accused does not have an election as to mode of trial, although the provincial court judge may, by virtue of s. 555(1), elect to continue the proceedings as a preliminary inquiry, in which case, the accused is deemed to have elected trial by judge and jury pursuant to s. 565(1)(a). As well, under s. 555(2), where, in the course of the trial, evidence establishes that the subject-matter of the offence is a testamentary instrument or that its value exceeds $5,000 then the provincial court judge shall put the accused to his election under s. 536(2). Where the prosecution elects to proceed by way of summary conviction then the proceedings are conducted by a summary conviction court pursuant to Part XXVII. The punishment is then as set out in s. 787 and the limitation period is set out in s. 786(2). Release pending trial is determined by s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by a peace officer under s. 496, 497 or by the officer in charge under s. 498. The value of a valuable security is determined in accordance with s. 4(2) and of a postal card or stamp in accordance with s. 4(1). The term "testamentary instrument" is defined in s. 2. Where the prosecution elects to proceed by indictment for the offence under subsec. (5) or (5.1) then the accused may elect his mode of trial under s. 536(2). Where the prosecution elects to proceed by way of summary conviction then the proceedings are conducted by a summary conviction court pursuant to Part XXVII. The punishment is then as set out in s. 787 and the limitation period is set out in s. 786(2). Release pending trial for the offences in subsec. (5) or (5.1) is determined under s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by a peace officer under s. 496, 497 or by the officer in charge under s. 498.

Using a computer facility with intent to commit an offence under this section is an offence under s. 342.1(1)(c). The offence of public mischief [i.e., misleading a peace officer] is in s. 140.

SYNOPSIS

This section describes the offence of mischief in its various forms. It also sets out the punishment that will be applied after a finding of guilt under this section. Every person who wilfully does any of the things listed in subsec. (1) or (1.1) commits the offence of mischief. The punishment for this offence, depending on the circumstances of the case, can be life imprisonment. Subsections (6) and (7) provide exemptions from the offence of mischief for the specific actions described therein. Subsection (6) would appear to apply to a situation involving a labour dispute.

ANNOTATIONS

Mischief to property [subsec. (1)] – The gravamen of this offence is the commission of mischief and an information that sets out the alternative modes in para. (c) is not duplicious: R. v. Hibbs (1973), 10 C.C.C. (2d) 513, 22 C.R.N.S. 37 (Alta. S.C.).

This subsection defines one offence of mischief which has been classified for sentencing purposes by application of subsecs. (2), (3), or (4): R. v. Lebrun (1988), 65 C.R. (3d) 280 (Que. C.A.).

The offence under para. (a) of this subsection is a general intent offence for which intoxication as a result of voluntary consumption of alcohol or drugs is not a defence: R. v. Schmidtke (1985), 19 C.C.C. (3d) 390, 44 C.R. (3d) 392 (Ont. C.A.).

The offence in para. (a) requires proof that the property was rendered less suited for its intended purpose or that at least temporarily the usefulness or the value of the property was impaired. Putting a poster on a lamp-post did not impair the use or value of the property and could not amount to the offence: R. v. Quickfall (1993), 78 C.C.C. (3d) 563, [1993] R.J.Q. 468 (C.A.), leave to appeal to S.C.C. refused 83 C.C.C. (3d) vi.

A person who as part of a labour dispute forms part of a human barricade so as to block access to the premises, in violation of an injunction limiting the number of picketers, may be found guilty of the offence under para. (c) either as a principal or a party though he neither says nor does anything other than stand shoulder to shoulder with other persons: R. v. Mammolita (1983), 9 C.C.C. (3d) 85 (Ont. C.A.).

However, members of a trade union lawfully on strike may picket an employer's place of business with the purpose of bringing economic pressure to bear on that employer and subsec. (1)(c) should not be interpreted so as to make this lawful activity an offence. The offence requires proof of some physical act on the part of the accused which operates as, or has the effect of causing, some sort of obstruction, interruption, or interference with the use or enjoyment or potential use or enjoyment of the property that goes beyond the mere communication of information through picketing. The fact that persons may be persuaded voluntarily not to do business with the owner or that the employer's attention is diverted from his business to deal with the actions of the accused is simply the inevitable consequence of the give and take of the economic pressures that are necessarily incidental to any labour dispute: R. v. Dooling (1994), 94 C.C.C. (3d) 525, 124 Nfld. & P.E.I.R. 149 (Nfld. S.C.).

The offence under subsec. (1)(c) is aimed at the act of or entitlement to possession of property. Conduct of the accused in playing music too loudly, thus interfering with his neighbour's ability to sleep, does not amount to interference with the possessory rights so as to amount to an offence under subsec. (1)(c): R. v. Phoenix (1991), 64 C.C.C. (3d) 252 (B.C. Prov. Ct.).

The term "any person" in para. (d) includes employees or invitees and is not limited to the owner or leaseholder: R. v. Biggin (1980), 55 C.C.C. (2d) 408, 30 O.R. (2d) 280 (C.A.).

Prior to the enactment of this subsection it had already been held that the gist of the offences created by paras. (c) and (d) of subsec. (1) is the interference with the enjoyment of the property rather than its physical alteration. Thus the unlawful encrypting of computer tapes so that the data stored on those tapes cannot be accessed by the owners could constitute an offence under subsec. (1): R. v. Turner (1984), 13 C.C.C. (3d) 430 (Ont. H.C.J.).

In R. v. Drapeau (1995), 96 C.C.C. (3d) 554, 37 C.R. (4th) 180, 66 Q.A.C. 280 (C.A.) a majority of the court held that the accused could not be convicted of the offence under subsec. (1)(d) based on his conduct in watching or staring at his neighbours and by making objectionable noises. Beauregard J.A. held that there was a doubt that the accused intended to interfere with the complainants' enjoyment of their land. Fish J.A. held that the term "enjoyment" must be restricted to the entitlement or exercise of a right in relation to property. It could not apply to conduct which merely diminishes the pleasure derived from a property by its owner. Chamberland J.A. dissenting would have upheld the accused's conviction on the basis that "enjoyment" should include the satisfaction which the property can provide to the owner.

Actual danger to life [subsec. (2)] – The actual danger to life must be the direct result of a deliberate act of mischief and not just merely incidental thereto: R. v. Nairn (1955), 112 C.C.C. 272, 36 M.P.R. 151 (Nfld. S.C.).

There is no requirement that the actual danger to life be caused by the damage as opposed to the act which caused the damage: R. v. Humphrey (1986), 21 O.A.C. 36 (C.A.).

Punishment [subsecs. (3) and (4)] – Other than a testamentary instrument it is the value of the property damaged not the amount of the damage which determines whether the charge lies under this subsection or subsec. (4). Accordingly the information should allege either the value of the property or make reference to subsec. (3) or (4): R. v. Sargent and Hinds (1986), 55 C.R. (3d) 78 (Ont. Prov. Ct.).

An information which merely fails to allege the value of the property still discloses an offence known to law and is capable of amendment to allege the value of the property: R. v. Fediash (1988), 44 C.C.C. (3d) 233, 70 Sask. R. 107 (Q.B.).

Saving [subsec. (7)] – This subsection does not provide a defence to a person who trespasses on private property in order to communicate his message: R. v. Waters (1990), 54 C.C.C. (3d) 40, 51 Sask. R. 126 (Q.B.).

ATTACK ON PREMISES, RESIDENCE OR TRANSPORT OF INTERNATIONALLY PROTECTED PERSON.

431. Every one who commits an attack on the official premises, private accommodation or means of transport of an internationally protected person that is likely to endanger the life or liberty of such person is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding fourteen years. 1974-75-76, c. 93, s. 34; R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 58.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term "internationally protected person" is defined in s. 2. Section 7(10) provides for admissibility of a certificate from the Secretary of State for External Affairs stating any fact relevant to the question of whether any person is a person who is entitled, pursuant to international law, to special protection from any attack on his person, freedom or dignity.

While this offence may not be the basis for an application for an authorization to intercept private communications by reason of s. 183, an authorization can be obtained for the related offence under s. 424.

Section 7(3) enacts special jurisdictional rules for commission of this offence outside Canada when the offence is in relation to an internationally protected person or property referred to in this section. A threat to commit an offence under this section is an offence under s. 424.

The accused may elect his mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2). Release pending trial is determined by s. 515. A person convicted of the offence in this section may be liable to the mandatory prohibition order in s. 100(1) for possession of firearms, ammunition and explosives.

SYNOPSIS

This section describes the offence of attacking the official premises, private accommodation or means of transport of an internationally protected person. The attack must be likely to endanger the life or liberty of such a protected person. The offence is indictable and carries a maximum term of 14 years. This offence is relevant to s. 424.

Arson and Other Fires

ARSON / Disregard for human life.

433. Every person who intentionally or recklessly causes damage by fire or explosion to property, whether or not that person owns the property, is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for life where

- (a) the person knows that or is reckless with respect to whether the property is inhabited or occupied; or
- (b) the fire or explosion causes bodily harm to another person. R.S., c. C-34, s. 389; 1990, c. 15, s. 1.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term "bodily harm" is not defined in this section. Some assistance may, however, be obtained from the definition of "bodily harm" in s. 267(2). The term "property" is defined in s. 428. The term "recklessly" is not defined, but reference might be made to Sansregret v. The Queen (1985), 18 C.C.C. (3d) 223, 45 C.R. (3d) 193, [1985] 1 S.C.R. 570 where recklessness was defined as being found "in the attitude of one who, aware that there is danger that his conduct could bring about the result prohibited by the criminal law, nevertheless persists, despite the risk. It is, in other words, the conduct of one who sees the risk and who takes the chance." The defence of legal justification or excuse and colour of right is set out in s. 429(2).

This offence may be the basis for an application for an authorization to intercept private communications by reason of s. 183 and a warrant to conduct video surveillance under s. 487.01. Arson is an enterprise crime offence for the purposes of Part XII.2.

Section 17 limits the availability of the statutory defence of compulsion by threats to the offence of “arson”.

The accused may elect this mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2). Release pending trial is determined by s. 515.

Related offences: s. 81, using explosives; s. 434, intentionally or recklessly causing damage by fire or explosion to property not wholly owned by accused; s. 434.1, intentionally or recklessly causing damage by fire or explosion to property wholly owned by accused; s. 435, causing damage by fire or explosion with intent to defraud; s. 436, causing fire or explosion through negligence; s. 436.1, possession of incendiary material.

SYNOPSIS

The section creates the offence of intentionally or recklessly causing damage to property by fire or explosion. It must be shown either that: (1) the accused knew, or was reckless as to whether or not the property was inhabited or occupied; or (2) bodily harm to another person resulted from the fire or explosion. It is irrelevant whether or not the accused owns the property. This is an indictable offence carrying a maximum sentence of life imprisonment.

ANNOTATIONS

The offence contrary to s. 434 is not included in the offence of arson as described in this section. The offence of mischief under s. 430 is, however, an included offence: R. v. Pascal (1994), 90 C.C.C. (3d) 575, 70 W.A.C. 279, 95 Man. R. (2d) 279 (C.A.).

ARSON / Damage to property.

434. Every person who intentionally or recklessly causes damage by fire or explosion to property that is not wholly owned by that person is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding fourteen years. R.S., c. C-34, s. 390; 1990 c. 15, s. 1.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term “property” is defined in s. 428. The term “recklessly” is not defined but reference might be made to Sansregret v. The Queen (1985), 18 C.C.C. (3d) 223, 45 C.R. (3d) 193, [1985] 1 S.C.R. 570 where recklessness was defined as being found “in the attitude of one who, aware that there is danger that his conduct could bring about the result prohibited by the criminal law, nevertheless persists, despite the risk. It is, in other words, the conduct of one who sees the risk and who takes the chance.” The defence of legal justification or excuse and colour of right is set out in s. 429(2).

This offence may be the basis for a conviction for constructive murder under s. 230.

Section 17 limits the availability of the statutory defence of compulsion by threats to the offence of “arson”.

The accused may elect his mode of trial under s. 536(2). Release pending trial is determined under s. 515.

Related offences: s. 81, using explosives; s. 433, intentionally or recklessly causing damage by fire or explosion to property where bodily harm is caused or where person knows property is occupied; s. 434.1, intentionally or recklessly causing damage by fire or explosion to property wholly owned by accused; s. 435, causing damage by fire or explosion with intent to defraud; s. 436, causing fire or explosion through negligence; s. 436.1, possession of incendiary material.

SYNOPSIS

The section creates the offence of willfully or recklessly causing damage by fire or explosion to property that the accused does not wholly own. This is an indictable offence carrying a maximum sentence of 14 years.

ARSON / Own property.

434.1. Every person who intentionally or recklessly causes damage by fire or explosion to property that is owned, in whole or in part, by that person is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding fourteen years, where the fire or explosion seriously threatens the health, safety or property of another person. 1990, c. 15, s. 1.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term "property" is defined in s. 428. The term "recklessly" is not defined but reference might be made to Sansregret v. The Queen (1985), 18 C.C.C. (3d) 223, 45 C.R. (3d) 193, [1985] 1 S.C.R. 570 where recklessness was defined as being found "in the attitude of one who, aware that there is danger that his conduct could bring about the result prohibited by the criminal law, nevertheless persists, despite the risk. It is, in other words, the conduct of one who sees the risk and who takes the chance." The defence of legal justification or excuse and colour of right is set out in s. 429(2).

Section 17 limits the availability of the statutory defence of compulsion by threats to the offence of "arson".

The accused may elect his mode of trial under s. 536(2). Release pending trial is determined under s. 515.

Related offences: s. 81, using explosives; s. 433, intentionally or recklessly causing damage by fire or explosion to property where bodily harm is caused or where person knows property is occupied; s. 434, intentionally or recklessly causing damage by fire or explosion to property not wholly owned by accused; s. 435, causing damage by fire or explosion with intent to defraud; s. 436, causing fire or explosion through negligence; s. 436.1, possession of incendiary material.

SYNOPSIS

The section creates the offence of willfully or recklessly causing damage by fire or explosion to property owned, in whole or in part, by the accused, where the fire or explosion seriously threatens the health, safety or property of another person. This is an indictable offence carrying a maximum sentence of 14 years.

ARSON FOR FRAUDULENT PURPOSE / Holder or beneficiary of fire insurance policy.

435. (1) Every person who, with intent to defraud any other person, causes damage by fire or explosion to property, whether or not that person owns, in whole or in part, the property, is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding ten years.

(2) Where a person is charged with an offence under subsection (1), the fact that the person was the holder of or was named as a beneficiary under a policy of fire insurance relating to the property in respect of which the offence is alleged to have been committed is a fact from which intent to defraud may be inferred by the court. R.S., c. C-34, s. 391; 1990, c. 15, s. 1.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term "property" is defined in s. 428. Section 17 limits the availability of the statutory defence of compulsion by threats to the offence of "arson". The accused may elect his mode of trial under s. 536(2). Release pending trial is determined under s. 515.

Related offences: s. 81, using explosives; s. 433, intentionally or recklessly causing damage by fire or explosion to property where bodily harm is caused or where person knows property is occupied; s. 434, intentionally or recklessly causing damage by fire or explosion to property not wholly owned by accused; s. 434.1, intentionally or recklessly causing damage by fire or explosion to property wholly owned by accused; s. 436, causing fire or explosion through negligence; s. 436.1, possession of incendiary material.

SYNOPSIS

The section creates the offence of causing damage to property by fire or explosion with the intent to defraud another person. It is irrelevant whether or not the accused owns the property, in whole or in part. By subsec. (2), a court may infer intention to defraud from the fact that the accused is the holder of, or named beneficiary under, a policy of fire insurance in respect of damaged property. This is an indictable offence carrying a maximum sentence of 10 years.

ANNOTATIONS

Application of inference – It was held in relation to former s. 435 that the presumption did not apply where the accused were insured only in respect to loss of personal property within the burned premises: R. v. Drouin and Drouin (1972), 10 C.C.C. (2d) 381, 33 D.L.R. (3d) 615 (S.C.C.).

ARSON BY NEGLIGENCE / Non-compliance with prevention laws.

436. (1) Every person who owns, in whole or in part, or controls property is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding five years where, as a result of a marked departure from the standard of care that a reasonably prudent person would use to prevent or control the spread of fires or to prevent explosions, that person is a cause of a fire or explosion in that property that causes bodily harm to another person or damage to property.

(2) Where a person is charged with an offence under subsection (1), the fact that the person has failed to comply with any law respecting the prevention or control of fires or explosions in the property is a fact from which a marked departure from the standard of care referred to in that subsection may be inferred by the court. R.S., c. C-34, s. 392; 1990, c. 15, s. 1.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term “bodily harm” is not defined in this section. Some assistance may, however, be obtained from the definition of “bodily harm” in s. 267(2). The term “property” is defined in s. 428. The defence of legal justification or excuse and colour of right is set out in s. 429(2). The standard of liability in this section resembles the test adopted for the criminal negligence offences in ss. 220 and 221. Thus, see notes under those sections and s. 219.

Section 17 limits the availability of the statutory defence of compulsion by threats to the offence of “arson”.

The accused may elect his mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2). Release pending trial is determined by s. 515.

Related offences; s. 81, using explosives; s. 434, intentionally or recklessly causing damage by fire or explosion to property not wholly owned by accused; s. 434.1, intentionally or recklessly causing damage by fire or explosion to property wholly owned by accused; s. 435, causing damage by fire or explosion with intent to defraud; s. 436.1, possession of incendiary material.

SYNOPSIS

The section creates the offence of being a cause of any fire or explosion in a property owned, in whole or in part, or controlled by the accused where: (1) a marked departure from the standard of care that a reasonably prudent person would use, to prevent or control the spread of fires or to prevent explosions, is shown to be the cause of the fire or explosion; and (2) the fire or explosion resulted in bodily harm to another person, or damage to property. By subsec. (2), a court may infer marked departure from the subsec. (1) standard of care, from the fact that the accused has failed to comply with any law respecting the prevention or control of fires or explosions in the property. This is an indictable offence carrying a maximum sentence of five years.

ANNOTATIONS

This provision imposes a duty to prevent or control the spread of fires and thus an accused may be convicted under this section even if the fire may have originally been caused by an agency other than that of the accused. The section does, however, require proof of a causal connection between the accused's breach of duty, the resulting spread of the fire, and the injury or damage: R. v. Harricharan (1995), 98 C.C.C. (3d) 145, 23 O.R. (3d) 233, 82 O.A.C. 221 (C.A.).

POSSESSION OF INCENDIARY MATERIAL.

436.1 Every person who possesses any incendiary material, incendiary device or explosive substance for the purpose of committing an offence under any of sections 433 to 436 is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding five years. 1990, c. 15, s. 1.

CROSS-REFERENCES

Possession is defined in s. 4(3). For definition of "explosive substance", see s. 2. The accused may elect his mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2). Release pending trial is determined by s. 515.

Related offences: s. 81, using explosives; s. 82, possession of explosive substance without lawful excuse; s. 434, intentionally or recklessly causing damage by fire or explosion to property not wholly owned by accused; s. 434.1, intentionally or recklessly causing damage by fire or explosion to property wholly owned by accused; s. 435, causing damage by fire or explosion with intent to defraud; s. 436, causing fire or explosion through negligence.

SYNOPSIS

The section creates the offence of possessing any incendiary material or device, or explosive substance for the purpose of committing a ss. 433 to 436 offence. This is an indictable offence carrying a maximum term of five years.

Other Interference with Property

FALSE ALARM OF FIRE.

437. Every one who wilfully, without reasonable cause, by outcry, ringing bells, using a fire alarm, telephone or telegraph, or in any other manner, makes or circulates or causes to be made or circulated an alarm of fire is guilty of

- (a) an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding two years; or
- (b) an offence punishable on summary conviction. R.S., c. C-34, s. 393; 1972, c. 13, s. 31.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term "wilfully" is defined in s. 429(1). The defence of legal justification or excuse and colour of right is set out in s. 429(2).

Where the prosecution elects to proceed by indictment on this offence then the accused may elect his mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2). Where the prosecution elects to proceed by way of summary conviction then the trial of this offence is conducted by a summary conviction court pursuant to Part XXVII. The limitation period is set out in s. 786(2). In either case, release pending trial is determined by s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by a peace officer under s. 496, 497 or by the officer in charge under s. 498.

SYNOPSIS

This section describes the offence of raising a false alarm of fire. Every person who wilfully and without reasonable cause makes or circulates, or causes to be made or circulated, an alarm of fire is guilty of an offence punishable on summary conviction or by indictment. A person convicted of the indictable offence is liable to a maximum term of two years' imprisonment.

INTERFERING WITH SAVING OF WRECKED VESSEL / Interfering with saving of wreck.

438. (1) Every one who wilfully prevents or impedes, or who wilfully endeavours to prevent or impede,

(a) the saving of a vessel that is wrecked, stranded, abandoned or in distress, or

(b) a person who attempts to save a vessel that is wrecked, stranded, abandoned or in distress,

is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding five years.

(2) Every one who wilfully prevents or impedes or wilfully endeavours to prevent or impede the saving of wreck is guilty of an offence punishable on summary conviction. R.S., c. C-34, s. 394.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term "wreck" is defined in s. 2. The term "wilfully" is defined in s. 429(1). The defence of legal justification or excuse and colour of right is set out in s. 429(2).

For the offence under subsec. (1), the accused may elect his mode of trial under s. 536(2). Release pending trial is determined under s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by the officer in charge under s. 498.

Trial of the offence under subsec. (2) is conducted by a summary conviction court pursuant to Part XXVII. The punishment is as set out in s. 787 and the limitation period is set out in s. 786(2). Release pending trial is determined by s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by a peace officer under s. 496, 497 or by the officer in charge under s. 498. Other offences in relation to wreck are in s. 415 and see cross-references under that section.

SYNOPSIS

This section describes the offence of interfering with the saving of a wrecked vessel. Any person who wilfully prevents or impedes, or who wilfully endeavours to prevent or impede the saving of a vessel that is wrecked, stranded, abandoned or in distress is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to a maximum term of five years. Subsection (2) makes it a summary conviction offence to wilfully prevent or impede the saving of wreck.

INTERFERING WITH MARINE SIGNAL, ETC. / Idem.

439. (1) Every one who makes fast a vessel or boat to a signal, buoy or other sea-mark that is used for purposes of navigation is guilty of an offence punishable on summary conviction.

(2) Every one who wilfully alters, removes or conceals a signal, buoy or other sea-mark that is used for purposes of navigation is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding ten years. R.S., c. C-34, s. 395.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term "wilfully" is defined in s. 429(1). The defence of legal justification or excuse and colour of right is set out in s. 429(2).

Trial of the offence under subsec. (1) is conducted by a summary conviction court pursuant to Part XXVII. The punishment is as set out in s. 787 and the limitation period is set out in s. 786(2). Release pending trial is determined by s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by a peace officer under s. 496, 497 or by the officer in charge under s. 498.

For the offence under subsec. (2), the accused may elect his mode of trial under s. 536(2). Release pending trial is determined under s. 515.

SYNOPSIS

This section describes the offence of interfering with a marine signal. The summary conviction offence is committed by fastening a boat or vessel to a sea-mark used for navigation. A person who wilfully alters, removes or conceals a sea-mark that is used for navigation is guilty of the indictable form of the offence and is liable upon conviction to a maximum term of 10 years imprisonment.

REMOVING NATURAL BAR WITHOUT PERMISSION.

440. Every one who wilfully and without the written permission of the Minister of Transport, the burden of proof of which lies on the accused, removes any stone, wood, earth or other material that forms a natural bar necessary to the existence of a public harbour, or that forms a natural protection to such a bar, is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding two years. R.S., c. C-34, s. 396.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term "wilfully" is defined in s. 429(1). The defence of legal justification or excuse and colour of right is set out in s. 429(2).

The accused may elect his mode of trial under s. 536(2). Release pending trial is determined under s. 515 although the accused is eligible for release by the officer in charge under s. 498.

Release pending trial is determined under s. 515 although the accused is eligible for release by the officer in charge under s. 498.

SYNOPSIS

In this section, an occupant of a dwelling-house or other building commits an indictable offence if he wilfully and to the prejudice of a mortgagee or owner demolishes or removes any part of the building or severs from the freehold any fixture. The maximum term of imprisonment upon conviction is five years.

ANNOTATIONS

The offence under this section is complete when any of the specified acts, done with the requisite intent, negatively affect the security interest of the mortgagee. The interest of the mortgagee may still be inchoate before any steps have been taken by the mortgagee to realize on its security: R. v. Lundgard (1991), 63 C.C.C. (3d) 368, [1991] 4 W.W.R. 259, 79 Alta. L.R. (2d) 153 (C.A.).

INTERFERING WITH BOUNDARY LINES.

442. Every one who wilfully pulls down, defaces, alters or removes anything planted or set up as the boundary line or part of the boundary line of land is guilty of an offence punishable on summary conviction. R.S., c. C-34, s. 398.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term “wilfully” is defined in s. 429(1). The defence of legal justification or excuse and colour of right is set out in s. 429(2).

The related offence of interfering with boundary marks is in s. 443.

Trial of this offence is conducted by a summary conviction court pursuant to Part XXVII. The punishment is as set out in s. 787 and the limitation period is set out in s. 786(2). Release pending trial is determined by s. 515 although the accused is eligible for release by a peace officer under ss. 496, 497, or by the officer in charge under s. 498.

SYNOPSIS

This section describes the summary conviction offence of interfering with a boundary line. A person who wilfully defaces, alters or removes anything that forms a part of a boundary line is guilty of an offence under this section.

INTERFERING WITH INTERNATIONAL BOUNDARY MARKS, ETC. / Saving provision.

- 443. (1) Every one who wilfully pulls down, defaces, alters or removes
- (a) a boundary mark lawfully placed to mark any international, provincial, county or municipal boundary, or
  - (b) a boundary mark lawfully placed by a land surveyor to mark a limit, boundary or angle of a concession, range, lot or parcel of land,
- is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding five years.
- (2) A land surveyor does not commit an offence under subsection (1) where, in his operations as a land surveyor,
- (a) he takes up, when necessary, a boundary mark mentioned in paragraph (1)(b) and carefully replaces it as it was before he took it up; or
  - (b) he takes up a boundary mark mentioned in paragraph (1)(b) in the course of surveying for a highway or other work that, when completed, will make it impossible or impracticable for that boundary mark to occupy its original position, and he establishes a permanent record of the original position sufficient to permit such position to be ascertained. R.S., c. C-34, s. 399.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term “wilfully” is defined in s. 429(1). The terms “county” and “province” are defined in s. 35 of the Interpretation Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. I-21. The defence of legal justification or excuse and colour of right is set out in s. 429(2). Section 476 enacts special rules of territorial jurisdiction where an offence is committed on the boundary between territorial divisions.

The accused may elect his mode of trial under s. 536(2). Release pending trial is determined under s. 515 although the accused is eligible for release by the officer in charge under s. 498.

The related summary conviction offence of interfering with boundary lines is in s. 442.

SYNOPSIS

This section describes the offence of interfering with international and other boundary marks. Any person who wilfully defaces, alters or removes a boundary mark lawfully placed to mark an international, provincial, county or municipal boundary, or a boundary mark lawfully placed by a land surveyor, is guilty of an indictable offence and subject to a maximum term of five years’ imprisonment. Subsection (2) describes specific circumstances in which a land surveyor who takes up boundary marks is not criminally liable under this section.

Cattle and Other Animals

INJURING OR ENDANGERING CATTLE.

444. Every one who wilfully

- (a) kills, maims, wounds, poisons or injures cattle, or
  - (b) places poison in such a position that it may easily be consumed by cattle,
- is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding five years. R.S., c. C-34, s. 400.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term "wilfully" is defined in s. 429(1). The term "cattle" is defined in s. 2. The defence of legal justification or excuse and colour of right is set out in s. 429(2).

The related offence of injuring animals other than cattle is in s. 445. Other offences in relation to animals are set out in ss. 446 and 447.

ANNOTATIONS

"Heifer" is included in the word "cattle": R. v. Allen (1974), 17 C.C.C. (2d) 549, 8 N.B.R. (2d) 131 (S.C.App.Div.).

This section covers the killing of stray cattle not shown to have been owned by anyone: R. v. Brown (1984), 11 C.C.C. (3d) 191 (B.C.C.A.).

The expanded definition of "wilfully" in s. 429(1) applies to this offence and "wilfully" in this section is not simply limited to an "evil intent": R. v. Dupont (1976), 22 N.R. at p. 519 (Alta. S.C. App. Div.), affd [1978] 1 S.C.R. 1017, 11 A.R. 148.

INJURING OR ENDANGERING OTHER ANIMALS.

445. Every one who wilfully and without lawful excuse

- (a) kills, maims, wounds, poisons or injures dogs, birds or animals that are not cattle and are kept for a lawful purpose, or
  - (b) places poison in such a position that it may easily be consumed by dogs, birds or animals that are not cattle and are kept for a lawful purpose,
- is guilty of an offence punishable on summary conviction. R.S., c. C-34, s. 401.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term "wilfully" is defined in s. 429(1). The term "cattle" is defined in s. 2. The defence of legal justification or excuse and colour of right is set out in s. 429(2).

Trial of these offences is conducted by a summary conviction court pursuant to Part XXVII. The punishment is as set out in s. 787 [although see s. 719(b) where the accused is a corporation] and the limitation period is set out in s. 786(2). Release pending trial is determined by s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by a peace officer under s. 496, 497 or by the officer in charge under s. 498.

The related offence of injuring cattle is in s. 444. Other offences in relation to animals are set out in ss. 446 and 447.

SYNOPSIS

This section describes the offence of injuring or endangering animals other than cattle. Any person who wilfully and without lawful excuse kills, maims, wounds, injures or poisons dogs, birds or animals other than cattle that are kept for a lawful purpose or who places poison in a position that it might be easily consumed by those creatures, is guilty of a summary conviction offence.

ANNOTATIONS

These provisions are designed to protect domesticated or domestic animals and do not apply to stray animals, the words “kept for a lawful purpose” contemplating a keeper of the animal and a measure of control exercised by that person: R. v. Deschamps (1978), 43 C.C.C. (2d) 45 (Ont. Prov. Ct.).

Once the dog that the defendant believed had been worrying his sheep had left the scene and was no longer a danger he had no justification for wounding it: R. v. Etherington, [1963] 2 C.C.C.230 (Ont. Mag. Ct.).

An accused would have a defence to a charge under this section involving the injury to a police service dog where the use of the dog in the circumstances constituted excessive use of force: R. v. Barr (1982), 1 C.C.C. (3d) 47 (Alta. Prov. Ct.).

Cruelty to Animals

CAUSING UNNECESSARY SUFFERING / Punishment / Failure to exercise reasonable care as evidence / Presence at baiting as evidence / Order of prohibition / Breach of order.

446. (1) Every one commits an offence who

- (a) wilfully causes or, being the owner, wilfully permits to be caused unnecessary pain, suffering or injury to an animal or a bird;
- (b) by wilful neglect causes damage or injury to animals or birds while they are being driven or conveyed;
- (c) being the owner or the person having the custody or control of a domestic animal or a bird or an animal or a bird wild by nature that is in captivity, abandons it in distress or wilfully neglects or fails to provide suitable and adequate food, water, shelter and care for it;
- (d) in any manner encourages, aids or assists at the fighting or baiting of animals or birds;
- (e) wilfully, without reasonable excuse, administers a poisonous or an injurious drug or substance to a domestic animal or bird or an animal or a bird wild by nature that is kept in captivity or, being the owner of such an animal or a bird, wilfully permits a poisonous or an injurious drug or substance to be administered to it;
- (f) promotes, arranges, conducts, assists in, receives money for or takes part in any meeting, competition, exhibition, pastime, practice, display or event at or in the course of which captive birds are liberated by hand, trap, contrivance or any other means for the purpose of being shot when they are liberated; or
- (g) being the owner, occupier, or person in charge of any premises, permits the premises or any part thereof to be used for a purpose mentioned in paragraph (f).

(2) Every one who commits an offence under subsection (1) is guilty of an offence punishable on summary conviction.

(3) For the purposes of proceedings under paragraph (1)(a) or (b), evidence that a person failed to exercise reasonable care or supervision of an animal or a bird thereby causing it pain, suffering, damage or injury is, in the absence of any evidence to the contrary, proof that the pain, suffering, damage or injury was caused or was permitted to be caused wilfully or was caused by wilful neglect, as the case may be.

(4) For the purpose of proceedings under paragraph (1)(d), evidence that an accused was present at the fighting or baiting of animals or birds is, in the absence of any evidence to the contrary, proof that he encouraged, aided or assisted at the fighting or baiting.

(5) Where an accused is convicted of an offence under subsection (1), the court may, in addition to any other sentence that may be imposed for the offence, make an order prohibiting the accused from owning or having the custody or control of an animal or a bird during any period not exceeding two years.

(6) Every one who owns or has the custody or control of an animal or a bird while he is prohibited from doing so by reason of an order made under subsection (5) is guilty of an offence punishable on summary conviction. R.S., c. C-34, s. 402; 1974-75-76, c. 93, s. 35.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term "wilfully" is defined in s. 429(1). The defence of legal justification or excuse and colour of right is set out in s. 429(2).

Trial of these offences is conducted by a summary conviction court pursuant to Part XXVII. The punishment is as set out in s. 787 [although see s. 719(b) where the accused is a corporation] and the limitation period is set out in s. 786(2). Release pending trial is determined by s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by a peace officer under s. 496, 497 or by the officer in charge under s. 498.

The related offence of keeping a cockpit is in s. 447. Other offences in relation to animals are set out in ss. 444 and 445.

SYNOPSIS

This section describes the summary conviction offence of cruelty to animals or birds. Subsection (1) describes the kinds of activities which will attract criminal liability under this section. Subsection (3) contains an evidentiary provision which is applicable in proceedings under subsec. (1)(a) or (b). Evidence that a person failed to exercise reasonable care or supervision of an animal or bird, the result of which is pain, suffering or injury to that animal or bird, is, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, proof that such suffering or pain was caused wilfully or by wilful neglect. Evidence that an accused person was present at the fighting or baiting of animals or birds is, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, proof of the offence described in subsec. (1)(d). In addition to any other sentence imposed upon conviction under subsec. (1), under subsec. (5) the judge may prohibit the accused from owning an animal or bird for a maximum period of two years. Subsection (6) makes it a summary conviction offence for any person to own an animal or bird in contravention of a judge's order under subsec. (5).

ANNOTATIONS

Subsec. (1)(a) – "Unnecessary" in this context means that man in the pursuit of his legitimate purposes is obliged not to inflict pain, suffering or injury which is not inevitable taking into account the purpose sought and the circumstances of the particular case. Thus while euthanasia of stray animals is itself justified, where the method used by the accused causes pain and suffering which was not inevitable in view of alternative economically feasible methods available, the accused should be convicted: R. v. Menard (1978), 43 C.C.C. (2d) 458, 4 C.R. (3d) 333 (Que. C.A.).

Subsec. (1)(d) – In Pitts v. Miller (1874), L.R.9 Q.B.380 (Q.B.) Cockburn, C.J., considered baiting in terms of an animal either tied to a stake or unable to escape, and Quain, J., relied upon dictionary definitions of attacking with violence or harassing with the help of others.

Subsec. (1)(f) – The mischief sought to be prevented in this paragraph is cruelty to birds by their sudden release for the purpose of being shot at: Prefontaine v. The Queen (1973), 26 C.R.N.S. 367 (Que. C.A.).

KEEPING COCKPIT / Confiscation.

447. (1) Every one who builds, makes, maintains or keeps a cockpit on premises that he owns or occupies, or allows a cockpit to be built, made, maintained or kept on such premises is guilty of an offence punishable on summary conviction.

(2) A peace officer who finds cocks in a cockpit or on premises where a cockpit is located shall seize them and take them before a justice who shall order them to be destroyed. R.S., c. C-34, s. 403.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term “peace officer” is defined in s. 2. This offence applies to a person who may be described as the keeper of the cockpit. The offence, if any, committed by another person is described in s. 446(1)(d) and not the presumption of encouragement, aiding or assisting in s. 446(4).

Trial of this offence is conducted by a summary conviction court pursuant to Part XXVII. The punishment is as set out in s. 787 and the limitation period is set out in s. 786(2). Release pending trial is determined by s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by a peace officer under s. 496, 497 or by the officer in charge under s. 498.

SYNOPSIS

This section makes it a summary conviction offence for a person to build or maintain, or to allow to be built or maintained, a cockpit on premises which that person owns or occupies. Subsection (2) empowers a peace officer who finds cocks in a cockpit, or on premises where there is a cockpit, to seize the birds and take them before a justice, who must order them destroyed.

Part XII / OFFENCES RELATING TO CURRENCYInterpretation

DEFINITIONS / “counterfeit money” / “counterfeit token of value” / “current” / “utter”.

448. In this Part,

“counterfeit money” includes

- (a) a false coin or false paper money that resembles or is apparently intended to resemble or pass for a current coin or current paper money,
- (b) a forged bank-note or forged blank bank-note, whether complete or incomplete,
- (c) a genuine coin or genuine paper money that is prepared or altered to resemble or pass for a current coin or current paper money of a higher denomination,
- (d) a current coin from which the milling is removed by filing or cutting the edges and on which new milling is made to restore its appearance,
- (e) a coin cased with gold, silver, or nickel, as the case may be, that is intended to resemble or pass for a current gold, silver or nickel coin, and
- (f) a coin or a piece of metal or mixed metals that is washed or coloured by any means with a wash or material capable of producing the appearance of gold, silver or nickel and that is intended to resemble or pass for a current gold, silver or nickel coin;

“counterfeit token of value” means a counterfeit excise stamp, postage stamp or other evidence of value, by whatever technical, trivial or deceptive designation it may be described, and includes genuine coin or paper money that has no value as money;

“current” means lawfully current in Canada or elsewhere by virtue of a law, proclamation or regulation in force in Canada or elsewhere as the case may be;

“utter” includes sell, pay, tender and put off. R.S., c. C-34, s. 406.

CROSS-REFERENCES

In addition to the definitions in this section, see s. 2 and notes to that section. The term “bank-note” is defined in s. 2. Section 461(2) provides for admission of a certificate of an examiner of counterfeit money as proof that any money, coin or bank-note is counterfeit or genuine, as the case may be, and is or is not, as the case may be, current in Canada or elsewhere. Section 462 provides that counterfeit money, counterfeit tokens of value and anything used or intended to be used to make counterfeit money or tokens of value belong to Her Majesty. Section 462(2) gives a peace officer power to seize and detain these items.

Making

MAKING.

449. Every one who makes or begins to make counterfeit money is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding fourteen years. R.S., c. C-34, s. 407.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term “counterfeit money” is defined in s. 448. Section 461(1) enacts a conclusive presumption as to when the offence is complete. Section 461(2) provides for admission of a certificate of an examiner of counterfeit money as proof that any money, coin or bank-note is counterfeit or genuine and is or is not, as the case may be, current in Canada or elsewhere.

This offence may be the basis for an application for an authorization to intercept private communications by reason of s. 183 and is an enterprise crime offence for the purposes of Part XII.2.

The accused may elect his mode of trial under s. 536(2). Release pending trial is determined under s. 515. Section 462 provides that counterfeit money and anything used or intended to be used to make counterfeit money belong to Her Majesty. Section 462(2) gives a peace officer power to seize and detain these items.

Possession

POSSESSION, ETC., OF COUNTERFEIT MONEY.

450. Every one who, without lawful justification or excuse, the proof of which lies on him,

- (a) buys, receives or offers to buy or receive,
- (b) has in his custody or possession, or
- (c) introduces into Canada,

counterfeit money is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding fourteen years. R.S., c. C-34, s. 408.

CROSS-REFERENCES

Possession is defined in s. 4(3). The term “counterfeit money” is defined in s. 448. Section 461(1) enacts a conclusive presumption as to when the offence is complete. Section 461(2) provides for admission of a certificate of an examiner of counterfeit money as proof that any money, coin or bank-note is counterfeit or genuine and is or is not, as the case may be, current in Canada or elsewhere.

This offence may be the basis for an application for an authorization to intercept private communications by reason of s. 183 and is an enterprise crime offence for the purposes of Part XII.2.

The accused may elect his mode of trial under s. 536(2). Release pending trial is determined under s. 515. Section 462 provides that counterfeit money and anything used or intended to be used to make counterfeit money belong to Her Majesty. Section 462(2) gives a peace officer power to seize and detain these items.

SYNOPSIS

This section describes the indictable offence of buying, receiving, offering to buy or receive, possessing or bringing into Canada counterfeit money. A person who is charged under this section and who has dealt with counterfeit money in a fashion described above, bears the onus of proving that he had lawful justification or excuse for his actions. The maximum term of imprisonment upon conviction is 14 years.

ANNOTATIONS

In Robinson v. The Queen (1973), 10 C.C.C. (2d) 505, 34 D.L.R. (3d) 1 (S.C.C.) it was held per Ritchie, J. (Abbott, Judson, Spence and Laskin, JJ., concurring), that it was no defence that the accused was in possession of counterfeit U.S. 1941/42 dimes (the genuine coins, because of some imperfections upon minting, having a numismatic value of between $100 and $800 each) for the purpose of sale as a numismatic curiosity and not for circulation as legal tender. The coins' primary characteristic was that they were intended to resemble a current coin within the definition of s.448 of the Code. On the question of lawful justification or excuse upon the accused Laskin, J., agreed with Ritchie, J., on the merits that there was no evidence to support such a finding, but held that if evidence of a want of intention by the accused to use the counterfeit coins as currency had been led then the accused could be said to have discharged the shifting burden cast upon him by the section.

The offence under para. (b) does not require proof of an intention to use the money as currency: R. v. Duane (1984), 12 C.C.C. (3d) 368, 57 A.R. 227 (C.A.), affirmed 22 C.C.C. (3d) 448n (S.C.C.) (7:0).

It is not necessary as a foundation to the opinion of the Crown's expert witness as to the bank-note being counterfeit that he first prove the authenticity of the bank-note copied: R. v. Gagnon (1975), 31 C.R.N.S. 332 (Ont. Co. Ct.).

Proof that the accused knew of the counterfeit nature of the bills is an essential element of the "possession" required for the offence and the burden of proof is on the Crown to prove such knowledge beyond a reasonable doubt; lack of such knowledge is not a matter of "lawful excuse" which the accused has to prove. It is only after the Crown has proved possession, including knowledge of the counterfeit nature of the money, that the issue of lawful justification or excuse, arises: R. v. Santeramo (1976), 32 C.C.C. (2d) 35, 36 C.R.N.S. 1 (Ont. C.A.). Folld: R. v. Freng (1993), 86 C.C.C. (3d) 91 (B.C.C.A.).

HAVING CLIPPINGS, ETC.

451. Every one who, without lawful justification or excuse, the proof of which lies on him, has in his custody or possession

(a) gold or silver filings or clippings,

(b) gold or silver bullion, or

(c) gold or silver in dust, solution or otherwise, produced or obtained by impairing, diminishing or lightening a current gold or silver coin, knowing that it has been so produced or obtained, is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding five years. R.S., c. C-34, s. 409.

CROSS-REFERENCES

Possession is defined in s. 4(3). The term “current” is defined in s. 448. Section 461(2) provides for admission of a certificate of an examiner of counterfeit money as proof that any coin is or is not, as the case may be, current in Canada or elsewhere.

The accused may elect his mode of trial under s. 536(2). Release pending trial is determined under s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by the officer in charge under s. 498.

The related offence of clipping or uttering clipped coin is in s. 455.

SYNOPSIS

This section describes the offence of possessing gold or silver filings, clippings, bullion or dust in any form, which has been produced by diminishing a current gold or silver coin. The prosecution must prove that the accused knew that the gold or silver was produced or obtained in the fashion described above. As in s. 450, the accused must prove lawful justification or excuse for the knowing possession of the items set out in this section. This is an indictable offence with a maximum term of five years' imprisonment.

Uttering

---

UTTERING, ETC., COUNTERFEIT MONEY

452. Every one who, without lawful justification or excuse, the proof of which lies on him,

(a) utters or offers to utter counterfeit money or uses counterfeit money as if it were genuine, or

(b) exports, sends or takes counterfeit money out of Canada,
is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding fourteen years. R.S., c. C-34, s. 410.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms “counterfeit money” and “utter” are defined in s. 448. Section 461(1) enacts a conclusive presumption as to when the offence is complete. Section 461(2) provides for admission of a certificate of an examiner of counterfeit money as proof that any money, coin or bank-note is counterfeit or genuine and is or is not, as the case may be, current in Canada or elsewhere.

This offence may be the basis for an application for an authorization to intercept private communications by reason of s. 183 and is an enterprise crime offence for the purposes of Part XII.2.

The accused may elect his mode of trial under s. 536(2). Release pending trial is determined under s. 515. Section 462 provides that counterfeit money and anything used or intended to be used to make counterfeit money belong to Her Majesty. Section 462(2) gives a peace officer power to seize and detain these items.

The related offence of uttering coin that is not current is in s. 453.

SYNOPSIS

This section describes the offences of uttering or offering to utter counterfeit money, or using it as though it were genuine, and of exporting counterfeit money out of Canada. This is an indictable offence with a maximum term of 14 years' imprisonment.

ANNOTATIONS

Uttering counterfeit money includes the sale of counterfeit money as counterfeit to be put into circulation as currency notwithstanding the immediate purchaser is not deceived as to the genuineness of the money: R. v. Kelly and Lauzon (1979), 48 C.C.C. (2d) 560 (Ont. C.A.).

UTTERING COIN.

453. Every one who, with intent to defraud, knowingly utters

(a) a coin that is not current, or

(b) a piece of metal or mixed metals that resembles in size, figure or colour a current coin for which it is uttered,

is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding two years. R.S., c. C-34, s. 411.

CROSS-REFERENCES

Possession is defined in s. 4(3). The terms “current” and “utter” are defined in s. 448. Section 461(2) provides for admission of a certificate of an examiner of counterfeit money as proof that any coin is or is not, as the case may be, current in Canada or elsewhere. By virtue of s. 583, an indictment which otherwise complies with s. 581 is not insufficient by reason only that: para. (c), it charges an intent to defraud without naming or describing the person whom it was intended to defraud.

The accused may elect his mode of trial under s. 536(2). Release pending trial is determined under s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by the officer in charge under s. 498.

SYNOPSIS

This section describes the offence of knowingly uttering a coin that is not current, or a piece of metal that resembles a current coin in size, figure or colour. A person charged under this section must have an intent to defraud to be convicted. The offence is indictable and carries a maximum term of two years’ imprisonment.

SLUGS AND TOKENS.

454. Every one who without lawful excuse, the proof of which lies on him,

(a) manufactures, produces or sells, or

(b) has in his possession anything that is intended to be fraudulently used in substitution for a coin or token of value that any coin or token-operated device is designed to receive is guilty of an offence punishable on summary conviction. R.S., c. C-34, s. 412; 1972, c. 13, s. 32.

CROSS-REFERENCES

Possession is defined in s. 4(3). While there is no definition of “fraudulently” which is universally applicable, generally speaking, it refers to conduct which is dishonest and morally wrong: R. v. DeMarco (1973), 13 C.C.C. (2d) 369 (Ont. C.A.). This offence supplements the offence of fraudulently obtaining transportation in s. 393(3). Note also the offence of possession of instruments for breaking into coin-operated devices in s. 352. Trial of this offence is conducted by a summary conviction court pursuant to Part XXVII. The punishment is as set out in s. 787 and the limitation period is set out in s. 786(2). Release pending trial is determined by s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by a peace officer under s. 496, 497 or by the officer in charge under s. 498.

SYNOPSIS

This section describes the summary conviction offence of manufacturing, producing, selling or possessing slugs or tokens. A person charged under this section must have the intent that these items be fraudulently used in substitution for a coin or a valuable token in a coin or token-operated device. Like ss. 450 and 451, the accused bears the onus of proving that the possession of these slugs and tokens for the purposes described in the section was with lawful excuse.

ANNOTATIONS

For the offence of possession the accused must be aware of the article’s potential fraudulent use: R. v. Kolot (1975), 27 C.C.C. (2d) 79 (B.C. Co.Ct.).

Subway fare boxes monitored by operators who may scrutinize tickets and refuse entry do not constitute "token-operated devices". Furthermore, a subway ticket is not a token of value that a "token-operated device is designed to receive": R. v. Aeso (unreported, February 14, 1996, Ont. Ct. (Prov. Div.)) [096/057/054-7 pp.].

Defacing or Impairing

CLIPPING AND UTTERING CLIPPED COIN.

455. Every one who

- (a) impairs, diminishes or lightens a current gold or silver coin with intent that it should pass for a current gold or silver coin, or
- (b) utters a coin knowing that it has been impaired, diminished or lightened contrary to paragraph (a),

is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding fourteen years. R.S., c. C-34, s. 413.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms "current" and "utter" are defined in s. 448. Section 461(2) provides for admission of a certificate of an examiner of counterfeit money as proof that any coin is or is not, as the case may be, current in Canada or elsewhere.

The accused may elect his mode of trial under s. 536(2). Release pending trial is determined under s. 515.

The related offence of possession of clippings or filings is in s. 451.

SYNOPSIS

This section describes the offences of diminishing, impairing or lightening a current gold or silver coin with intent that it should pass for a current gold or silver coin, and of uttering a coin, knowing that it has been so diminished, impaired or lightened. These are indictable offences with a maximum of 14 years' imprisonment.

DEFACING CURRENT COINS.

456. Every one who

- (a) defaces a current coin, or
- (b) utters a current coin that has been defaced,

is guilty of an offence punishable on summary conviction. R.S., c. C-34, s. 414.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms "current" and "utter" are defined in s. 448. Section 461(2) provides for admission of a certificate of an examiner of counterfeit money as proof that any coin is or is not, as the case may be, current in Canada or elsewhere.

Trial of this offence is conducted by a summary conviction court pursuant to Part XXVII. The punishment is as set out in s. 787 and the limitation period is set out in s. 786(2). Release pending trial is determined by s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by a peace officer under s. 496, 497 or by the officer in charge under s. 498.

PRINTING CIRCULARS, ETC., IN LIKENESS OF NOTES / Printing anything in likeness of bank-note, etc. / When no conviction under subsection (2).

457. (1) Every one who designs, engraves, prints or in any manner makes, executes, issues, distributes, circulates or uses any business or professional card, notice, placard, circular, handbill or advertisement in the likeness or appearance of

- (a) a current bank-note or current paper money, or

(b) any obligation or security of a government or a bank, is guilty of an offence punishable on summary conviction.

(2) Every one who publishes or prints anything in the likeness or appearance of

(a) all or part of a current bank-note or current paper money, or

(b) all or part of any obligation or security of a government or a bank, is guilty of an offence punishable on summary conviction.

(3) No person shall be convicted of an offence under subsection (2) where it is established that, in publishing or printing anything to which that subsection applies,

(a) no photography was used at any stage for the purpose of publishing or printing it, except in connection with processes necessarily involved in transferring a finished drawing or sketch to a printed surface;

(b) except for the word “Canada”, nothing having the appearance of a word, letter or numeral was a complete word, letter or numeral;

(c) no representation of a human face or figure was more than a general indication of features, without detail;

(d) no more than one colour was used; and

(e) nothing in the likeness or appearance of the back of a current bank-note or current paper money was published or printed in any form. R.S., c. C-34, s. 415.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term “current” is defined in s. 448. “Bank-note” is defined in s. 2. “Bank” is defined in s. 35 of the Interpretation Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. I-21. Section 461(2) provides for admission of a certificate of an examiner of counterfeit money as proof that any money or bank-note is or is not, as the case may be, current in Canada or elsewhere.

Trial of these offences is conducted by a summary conviction court pursuant to Part XXVII. The punishment is as set out in s. 787 [although see s. 719(b) where the accused is a corporation] and the limitation period is set out in s. 786(2). Release pending trial is determined by s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by a peace officer under s. 496, 497 or by the officer in charge under s. 498.

SYNOPSIS

This section describes the offence of making, issuing, publishing, printing, or circulating anything that has a likeness to or the appearance of a current banknote, current paper money, or any obligation or security of a government or a bank. The offence is punishable by summary conviction. The section stipulates that no person shall be convicted of printing or publishing a likeness where all of the provisions set out in subsec. 3(a) to (e) are met.

ANNOTATIONS

The act of importing and distributing goods, with the likeness or appearance of current bank-notes, to wholesalers and retailers comes within the prohibition against publishing in subsec. (2): R. v. Gifcraft Ltd. (1984), 13 C.C.C. (3d) 192 (Ont. H.C.J.).

Instruments or Materials

MAKING, HAVING OR DEALING IN INSTRUMENTS FOR COUNTERFEITING.

458. Every one who, without lawful justification or excuse, the proof of which lies on him,

(a) makes or repairs,

(b) begins or proceeds to make or repair,

(c) buys or sells, or

(d) has in his custody or possession, any machine, engine, tool, instrument, material or thing that he knows has been used or that he knows is adapted and intended for use in making counterfeit money or counterfeit tokens of value is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding fourteen years. R.S., c. C-34, s. 416.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms “counterfeit money” and “counterfeit tokens of value” are defined in s. 448. Possession is defined in s. 4(3). Section 461(2) provides for admission of a certificate of an examiner of counterfeit money as proof that any money, coin or bank-note is counterfeit or genuine, as the case may be, and is or is not, as the case may be, current in Canada or elsewhere. Section 461(1) enacts a conclusive presumption as to when the offence is complete. Section 462 provides that counterfeit money, counterfeit tokens of value and anything used or intended to be used to make counterfeit money or tokens of value belong to Her Majesty. Section 462(2) gives a peace officer power to seize and detain these items. The accused may elect his mode of trial under s. 536(2). Release pending trial is determined under s. 515.

SYNOPSIS

This section describes the offence of possessing, making or repairing, beginning to make or repair, or buying or selling any instrument, material or thing that has been used or is intended to be used to make counterfeit money or valuable tokens. The prosecution must establish that the accused knows the use to which these items have been or are intended to be put. The section requires the accused to establish lawful justification or excuse for the acts described in paras. (a) to (d) and may thus be challenged under s. 11(d) of the Charter. The offence is indictable and carries a maximum term of 14 years' imprisonment.

CONVEYING INSTRUMENTS FOR COINING OUT OF MINT.

459. Every one who, without lawful justification or excuse, the proof of which lies on him, knowingly conveys out of any of Her Majesty's mints in Canada,

(a) any machine, engine, tool, instrument, material or thing used or employed in connection with the manufacture of coins,

(b) a useful part of anything mentioned in paragraph (a), or

(c) coin, bullion, metal or a mixture of metals,

is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding fourteen years. R.S., c. C-34, s. 417.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The accused may elect his mode of trial under s. 536(2). Release pending trial is determined under s. 515.

SYNOPSIS

This section describes the offence of conveying certain items out of any of Her Majesty's mints in Canada. The accused person must establish lawful justification or excuse for any of the actions described in the section – a provision which could be challenged under the Charter. Any person who knowingly conveys out of the mint any machine, engine, tool, instrument, material or thing used in connection with the manufacture of coins, a useful part of any of these items, or coin, bullion, metal, or a mixture of metals, commits this indictable offence and is liable to a maximum term of 14 years' imprisonment.

Advertising and Trafficking in Counterfeit Money or Counterfeit Tokens of Value

ADVERTISING AND DEALING IN COUNTERFEIT MONEY, ETC. / Fraudulent use of money genuine but valueless.

460. (1) Every one who

- (a) by an advertisement or any other writing, offers to sell, procure or dispose of counterfeit money or counterfeit tokens of value or to give information with respect to the manner in which or the means by which counterfeit money or counterfeit tokens of value may be sold, procured or disposed of, or
  - (b) purchases, obtains, negotiates or otherwise deals with counterfeit tokens of value, or offers to negotiate with a view to purchasing or obtaining them,
- is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding five years.

(2) No person shall be convicted of an offence under subsection (1) in respect of genuine coin or genuine paper money that has no value as money unless, at the time when the offence is alleged to have been committed, he knew that the coin or paper money had no value as money and he had a fraudulent intent in his dealings with or with respect to the coin or paper money. R.S., c. C-34, s. 418.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms “counterfeit money” and “counterfeit tokens of value” are defined in s. 448. The term “writing” is defined in s. 2. Section 461(2) provides for admission of a certificate of an examiner of counterfeit money as proof that any money, coin or bank-note is counterfeit or genuine, as the case may be, and is or is not, as the case may be, current in Canada or elsewhere. Section 461(1) enacts a conclusive presumption as to when the offence is complete. Section 462 provides that counterfeit money, counterfeit tokens of value and anything used or intended to be used to make counterfeit money or tokens of value belong to Her Majesty. Section 462(2) gives a peace officer power to seize and detain these items. The accused may elect his mode of trial under s. 536(2). Release pending trial is determined under s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by the officer in charge under s. 498.

SYNOPSIS

This section describes the offence of dealing in counterfeit money or counterfeit tokens.

Subsection (1)(a) provides that any person who, by advertisement or other writing offers to sell, obtain or dispose of counterfeit items, or to give information on how to sell, obtain or dispose of such things is guilty of an offence.

Subsection (1)(b) similarly makes it an offence to purchase, obtain, negotiate or offer to negotiate the purchase of such counterfeit items.

Subsection (2) provides that a person who deals in genuine coin or paper money that has no value is not guilty of an offence under subsec. (1), unless he knew that the items had no value and he had a fraudulent intent in his dealings. The offence is indictable and carries a maximum term of five years imprisonment.

Special Provisions as to Proof

WHEN COUNTERFEIT COMPLETE / Certificate of examiner of counterfeit / Cross-examination and notice.

461. (1) Every offence relating to counterfeit money or counterfeit tokens of value shall be deemed to be complete notwithstanding that the money or tokens of value in respect of which the proceedings are taken are not finished or perfected or do not copy exactly the money or tokens of value that they are apparently intended to resemble or for which they are apparently intended to pass.

(2) In any proceedings under this Part, a certificate signed by a person designated as an examiner of counterfeit by the Solicitor General of Canada, stating that any coin, paper money or bank-note described therein is counterfeit money or that any coin, paper money or bank-note described therein is genuine and is or is not, as the case may be, current in Canada or elsewhere, is evidence of the statements contained in the certificate without proof of the signature or official character of the person appearing to have signed the certificate.

(3) Subsections 258(6) and (7) apply, with such modifications as the circumstances require, in respect of a certificate described in subsection (2). R.S., c. C-34, s. 419; 1992, c. 1, s. 58.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms "counterfeit money", "counterfeit tokens of value" and "current" are defined in s. 448. The term "bank-note" is defined in s. 2.

With respect to subsec. (2), note that s. 25(1) of the Interpretation Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. I-21, provides that "where an enactment provides that a document is evidence of a fact without anything in the context to indicate that the document is conclusive evidence, then, in any judicial proceedings, the document is admissible in evidence and the fact is deemed to be established in the absence of any evidence to the contrary".

With respect to subsec. (3), subsections 258(6) and (7) require that the party intending to introduce the certificate give reasonable notice of his intention and a copy of the certificate and give the judge power to order that the examiner be produced for the purposes of cross-examination.

SYNOPSIS

This section sets out certain special provisions in relation to proving offences relating to counterfeiting.

Subsection (1) provides that counterfeiting offences are complete, even if the counterfeit money or tokens are not finished, perfected or are not exact copies of the genuine articles.

Subsection (2) provides that any certificate signed by a person designated by the Solicitor General of Canada as an examiner of counterfeit is evidence of the statements relating to the genuineness or currency of the money without proof of the signature or official character of the person appearing to have signed the certificate.

ANNOTATIONS

On a charge contrary to s. 450 (b) the Crown may establish a prima facie case by having a police officer testify that he has been employed as an examiner of counterfeit bills and that having compared the bills with genuine bills he was of the opinion that they were counterfeit and that if they had been genuine, they would be lawfully current. It is not necessary that the Crown produce a certificate signed by a person designated as an examiner of counterfeit by the Solicitor General of Canada nor that it lead some documentary evidence or call some official from the Bank of Canada who was in a position to make reference to the proper law or proper proclamation or regulation pursuant to this section: R. v. MacIntosh (1971), 5 C.C.C. (2d) 239, 16 C.R.N.S. 119 (Ont.C.A.).

Similarly a member of the R.C.M.P. designated as an examiner of counterfeit by the Solicitor-General of Canada may give a viva voce opinion based on his training and experience that certain bills are not genuine and were intended to resemble paper money which was current legal tender in the United States: R. v. Serratore (1980), 53 C.C.C. (2d) 106 (Ont. C.A.).

Forfeiture

OWNERSHIP / Seizure.

462. (1) Counterfeit money, counterfeit tokens of value and anything that is used or is intended to be used to make counterfeit money or counterfeit tokens of value belong to Her Majesty.

(2) A peace officer may seize and detain

- (a) counterfeit money,
- (b) counterfeit tokens of value, and
- (c) machines, engines, tools, instruments, materials or things that have been used or that have been adapted and are intended for use in making counterfeit money or counterfeit tokens of value, and anything seized shall be sent to the Minister of Finance to be disposed of or dealt with as he may direct, but anything that is required as evidence in any proceedings shall not be sent to the Minister until it is no longer required in those proceedings. R.S., c. C-34, s. 420.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms “counterfeit money” and “counterfeit tokens of value” are defined in s. 448. “Her Majesty” is defined in s. 35 of the Interpretation Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. I-21. The normal search warrant provisions are found in ss. 487 and 487.1.

SYNOPSIS

This section describes a procedure for seizing counterfeit money, tokens of value and instruments designed or adapted for use in counterfeiting.

Subsection (2) states that a peace officer may seize and detain any of these items and shall send them to the Minister of Finance for disposal unless they are needed as evidence in any proceedings.

Subsection (1) makes it clear that any of the items described in this section belong to Her Majesty.

This section creates a power to seize, without warrant, which might attract scrutiny under s. 8 of the Charter.

Part XII.1 / INSTRUMENTS AND LITERATURE FOR ILLICIT DRUG USE

Interpretation

462.1. In this Part,

“consume” includes inhale, inject into the human body, masticate and smoke;

“illicit drug” means a narcotic, drug or other substance whose import, export, cultivation, sale or possession is prohibited pursuant to the Narcotic Control Act, controlled pursuant to Part III of the Food and Drugs Act or restricted pursuant to Part IV of the Food and Drugs Act;

NOTE: Definition “illicit drug” replaced 1996, Bill C-8, s. 67 (to come into force by order of the Governor in Council). The text, which is not yet in force as of May 15, 1996 and also may change before receiving Royal Assent, is therefor printed in lightface italics and reads as follows:

“illicit drug” means a controlled substance or precursor the import, export, production, sale or possession of which is prohibited or restricted pursuant to the Controlled Drugs and Substances Act;

“illicit drug use” means the importation, exportation, cultivation, sale or possession of a narcotic, drug or other substance contrary to the Narcotic Control Act or Part III or IV of the Food and Drugs Act or a regulation made thereunder;

NOTE: Definition “illicit drug use” replaced 1996, Bill C-8, s. 67 (to come into force by order of the Governor in Council). The text, which is not yet in force as of May 15, 1996 and also may change before receiving Royal Assent, is therefor printed in lightface italics and reads as follows:

“illicit drug use” means the importation, exportation, production, sale or possession of a controlled substance or precursor contrary to the Controlled Drugs and Substances Act or a regulation made under that Act;

“instrument for illicit drug use” means anything designed primarily or intended under the circumstances for consuming or to facilitate the consumption of an illicit drug, but does not include a “device” as that term is defined in section 2 of the Food and Drugs Act;

“literature for illicit drug use” means any printed matter or video describing or depicting, and designed primarily or intended under the circumstances to promote, encourage or advocate the production, preparation or consumption of illicit drugs;

“sell” includes offer for sale, expose for sale, have in possession for sale and distribute, whether or not the distribution is made for consideration. R.S.C. 1985, c. 50 (4th Supp.), s. 1.

CROSS-REFERENCES

In addition to the definitions of this section, see s. 2 and notes to that section.

ANNOTATIONS

The prohibition in this Part in relation to “literature for illicit drug use” violates s. 2(b) of the Charter and is of no force and effect. Accordingly, the definition of “literature for illicit drug use” must be severed from the section: Iorfida v. MacIntyre (1994), 93 C.C.C. (3d) 395, 21 O.R. (3d) 186, 24 C.R.R. (2d) 293 (Gen. Div.).

Offence

OFFENCE.

462.2. Every one who knowingly imports into Canada, exports from Canada, manufactures, promotes or sells instruments or literature for illicit drug use is guilty of an offence and is liable on summary conviction

- (a) for a first offence, to a fine not exceeding one hundred thousand dollars or to imprisonment for a term not exceeding six months or to both; or
  - (b) for a second or subsequent offence, to a fine not exceeding three hundred thousand dollars or to imprisonment for a term not exceeding one year or to both.
- R.S.C. 1985, c. 50 (4th Supp.), s. 1.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms “illicit drug use”, “sell”, “literature for illicit drug use”, and “instrument for illicit drug use” are defined in s. 462.1.

The trial of this offence is conducted by a summary conviction court pursuant to Part XXVII. The limitation period is set out in s. 786(2). Release pending trial is determined by s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by a peace officer under s. 496, 497 or by the officer in charge under s. 498.

Where the prosecution seeks the higher penalty prescribed by para. (b), it must comply with the provisions of s. 665. Section 667 provides one method of proof of the prior conviction. No reference to the prior conviction may be made in the information by virtue of s. 664.

SYNOPSIS

This section describes the offence of knowingly importing into Canada, exporting from Canada, manufacturing, promoting, or selling instruments or literature for illicit drug use. The offence is a summary one, punishable on a first conviction by a maximum fine of $100,000 and/or a term of imprisonment not exceeding six months. For every offence following a first conviction, the punishment increases to a maximum fine of $300,000 and/or a term of imprisonment not exceeding one year.

ANNOTATIONS

The prohibition in this section in relation to literature for illicit drug use violates s. 2(b) of the Charter and is of no force and effect. Accordingly, the words “or literature” must be severed from the section: Iorfida v. MacIntyre (1994), 93 C.C.C. (3d) 395, 21 O.R. (3d) 186, 24 C.R.R. (2d) 293 (Gen. Div.).

Part XII.2 / PROCEEDS OF CRIME

Interpretation

DEFINITIONS / “designated drug offence” / “enterprise crime offence” / “judge” / “proceeds of crime”.

462.3. In this Part,
“designated drug offence” means

- (a) an offence against section 39, 44.2, 44.3, 48, 50.2 or 50.3 of the Food and Drugs Act,
- (b) an offence against section 4, 5, 6, 19.1 or 19.2 of the Narcotic Control Act, or
- (c) a conspiracy or an attempt to commit, being an accessory after the fact in relation to, or any counselling in relation to, an offence referred to in paragraph (a) or (b);

NOTE: Definition “designated drug offence” repealed 1996, Bill C-8, s. 68(1) (to come into force by order of the Governor in Council, but not in force as of May 15, 1996 but has not yet received Royal Assent).

NOTE: Definition “designated substance offence” enacted 1996, Bill C-8, s. 68(2) (to come into force by order of the Governor in Council). The text, which is not yet in force as of May 15, 1996 and also may change before receiving Royal Assent, is therefore printed in lightface italics and reads as follows:

designated substance offence” means

- (a) an offence under Part I of the Controlled Drugs and Substances Act, except subsection 4(1) of that Act, or
- (b) a conspiracy or an attempt to commit, being an accessory after the fact in relation to, or any counselling in relation to, an offence referred to in paragraph (a)

“enterprise crime offence” means

- (a) an offence against any of the following provisions, namely,
  - (i) section 119 (bribery of judicial officers, etc.),

NOTE: Paragraph (a)(i) of the definition “enterprise crime offence” replaced 1995, c. 39, s. 151(1) by subparas. (i) to (i.5) (to come into force by order of the Governor in Council). The text, which is not yet in force and therefor printed in lightface italics, reads as follows:

- (i) subsection 99(1) (weapons trafficking),
  - (i.1) subsection 100(1) (possession for purpose of weapons trafficking),
  - (i.2) subsection 102(1) (making automatic firearm),
  - (i.3) subsection 103(1) (importing or exporting knowing it is unauthorized),
  - (i.4) subsection 104(1) (unauthorized importing or exporting),
  - (i.5) section 119 (bribery of judicial officers, etc.).
- (ii) section 120 (bribery of officers),
- (iii) section 121 (frauds upon the government),
- (iv) section 122 (breach of trust by public officer),
- (v) section 163 (corrupting morals),
- (v.1) section 163.1 (child pornography),
- (vi) subsection 201(1) (keeping gaming or betting house),
- (vii) section 202 (betting, pool-selling, book-making, etc.),
- (viii) section 210 (keeping common bawdy-house),
- (viii.1) section 347 (criminal interest rate),
- (ix) section 212 (procuring),
- (x) section 235 (punishment for murder),
- (xi) section 334 (punishment for theft),
- (xii) section 344 (punishment for robbery),
- (xiii) section 346 (extortion),
- (xiii.1) section 347 (criminal interest rate),
- (xiv) section 367 (punishment for forgery),
- (xv) section 368 (uttering forged document),
- (xvi) section 380 (fraud),
- (xvii) section 382 (fraudulent manipulation of stock exchange transactions),
- (xviii) section 426 (secret commissions),
- (xix) section 433 (arson),
- (xx) section 449 (making counterfeit money),
- (xxi) section 450 (possession, etc., of counterfeit money),
- (xxii) section 452 (uttering, etc., counterfeit money), or
- (xxiii) section 462.31 (laundering proceeds of crime),
- (b) an offence against section 354 (possession of property obtained by crime), committed in relation to any property, thing or proceeds obtained or derived directly or indirectly as a result of

NOTE: Paragraph (b) of the definition “enterprise crime offence” amended 1995, c. 39, s. 151(2) (to come into force by order of the Governor in Council) by replacing the portion before subpara. (i). The text, which is not yet in force and therefor printed in lightface italics, reads as follows:

- (b) an offence against subsection 96(1) (possession of weapon obtained by commission of offence) or section 354 (possession of property obtained by crime), committed in relation to any property, thing or proceeds obtained or derived directly or indirectly as a result of
  - (i) the commission in Canada of an offence referred to in paragraph (a) or a designated drug offence, or
  - (ii) an act or omission anywhere that, if it had occurred in Canada, would have constituted an offence referred to in paragraph (a) or a designated drug offence,

NOTE: Paragraph (b)(i) and (ii) amended 1996, Bill C-8, s. 70(a) (to come into force by order of the Governor in Council, but not in force as of May 15, 1996 and also may change before receiving Royal Assent) by replacing the expression “designated drug offence” with the expression “designated substance offence”.

(b.1) an offence against section 126.1 or 126.2 or subsection 233(1) or 240(1) of the Excise Act or section 153, 159, 163.1 or 163.2 of the Customs Act, or

(c) a conspiracy or an attempt to commit, being an accessory after the fact in relation to, or any counselling in relation to, an offence referred to in paragraph (a), (b) or (b.1);

“judge” means a judge as defined in section 552 or a judge of a superior court of criminal jurisdiction;

“proceeds of crime” means any property, benefit or advantage, within or outside Canada, obtained or derived directly or indirectly as a result of

(a) the commission in Canada of an enterprise crime offence or a designated drug offence, or

(b) an act or omission anywhere that, if it had occurred in Canada, would have constituted an enterprise crime offence or a designated drug offence, or R.S.C. 1985, c. 42 (4th Supp.), s. 2; 1993, c. 25, s. 95; 1993, c. 37, s. 32; 1993, c. 46, s. 5; 1994, c. 44, s. 29.

NOTE: Definition “proceeds of crime” amended 1996, Bill C-8, s. 70(b) (to come into force by order of the Governor in Council, but not in force as of May 15, 1996 and also may change before receiving Royal Assent) by replacing the expression “designated drug offence” with the expression “designated substance offence” in paras. (a) and (b).

Editor’s Note: We believe that the word “or” at the end of para. (b) in the definition “proceeds of crime” should have been deleted by 1993, c. 37, s. 32(b).

CROSS-REFERENCES

The scope of what is considered an attempt is set out in s. 24 of the Criminal Code. The meaning of being an accessory after the offence is found in s. 23. Section 22 determines the meaning of counselling. The definition of “enterprise crime offence” sets out descriptive cross-references following the list of section numbers included in this definition. Section 3 explains the limited use to which descriptive cross-references may be put, namely, that they are for convenience only and are not to be used to interpret the meaning of the section. Section 2 (the general definition provision) sets out the meaning of “property” and “superior court of criminal jurisdiction”. These definitions, together with much of the rest of this Part, are incorporated into the Narcotic Control Act by s. 19.3 of that Act, and into the Food and Drugs Act by s. 44.4 of that Act regarding controlled drugs and s. 51 regarding restricted drugs.

SYNOPSIS

This section provides definitions for the new proceeds of crime provisions of the Criminal Code. In particular, the section provides definitions for the terms “designated drug offence” (consisting of certain offences against the Food and Drugs Act and Narcotic Control Act, as well as conspiracies, attempts, being an accessory and counselling with respect to these offences), and “enterprise crime offences” (consisting of certain specified offences against the Criminal Code).

The term “proceeds of crime” is also defined, and encompasses any property, benefit or advantage within or outside Canada, obtained or derived directly or indirectly as a result of an enterprise crime or designated drug offence or conduct that would have constituted such an offence if it had occurred in Canada.

Offence

LAUNDERING PROCEEDS OF CRIME / Punishment.

462.31. (1) Every one commits an offence who uses, transfers the possession of, sends or delivers to any person or place, transports, transmits, alters, disposes of or otherwise deals with, in any manner and by any means, any property or any proceeds of any property with intent to conceal or convert that property or those proceeds and knowing that all or a part of that property or of those proceeds was obtained or derived directly or indirectly as a result of

- (a) the commission in Canada of an enterprise crime offence or a designated drug offence; or
- (b) an act or omission anywhere that, if it had occurred in Canada, would have constituted an enterprise crime offence or a designated drug offence.

NOTE: Subsection (1)(a) and (b) amended 1996, Bill C-8, s. 70(c) (to come into force by order of the Governor in Council, but not in force as of May 15, 1996 and also may change before receiving Royal Assent) by replacing the expression “designated drug offence” with the expression “designated substance offence”.

(2) Every one who commits an offence under subsection (1)

- (a) is guilty of an indictable offence and is liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding ten years; or
- (b) is guilty of an offence punishable on summary conviction. R.S.C. 1985, c. 42 (4th Supp.), s. 2.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The meaning of “property” and “person” are contained in s. 2.

The terms “designated drug offence” and “enterprise crime offence” are defined in s. 462.3. Section 4(3) sets out what being in “possession” means in this Act.

This offence has been added to the list of offences in relation to which, according to s. 183, an authorization for interception of private communications must be obtained.

If the accused is prosecuted by indictment under s. 462.31(2)(a), the accused has a right to make an election under s. 536(2). If tried by summary conviction, Part XXVII will govern the procedure and s. 787(1) sets out the maximum punishment upon conviction as six months imprisonment or a $2,000 fine, or both [except in the case of a corporation, see s. 719(b)].

The equivalent provision in the Food and Drugs Act, dealing with controlled drugs is s. 44.3 and regarding restricted drugs is s. 50.3. The similar section in the Narcotic Control Act is s. 19.2.

SYNOPSIS

This section describes the offence of laundering the proceeds of crime. The offence is committed when a person deals with any property, or any proceeds of property, in any manner and by any means, with the intent to conceal or convert it, knowing that the property or proceeds were, in whole or in part, obtained or derived directly or indirectly as a result of the conduct described in the definition of the term “proceeds of crime”.

The offence may be prosecuted by indictment, with a maximum punishment of imprisonment for 10 years, or by summary conviction.

Search, Seizure and Detention of Proceeds of Crime

---

SPECIAL SEARCH WARRANT / Procedure / Execution of warrant in other territorial jurisdictions / Detention and record of property seized / Notice / Undertaking by Attorney General.

462.32. (1) Subject to subsection (3), where a judge, on application of the Attorney General, is satisfied by information on oath in Form 1 that there are reasonable grounds to believe that there is in any building, receptacle or place any property in respect of which an order of forfeiture may be made under subsection 462.37(1) or 462.38(2), the judge may issue a warrant authorizing a person named therein or a peace officer to search the building, receptacle or place for that property and to seize that property and any other property in respect of which that person or peace officer believes, on reasonable grounds, that an order of forfeiture may be made under that subsection.

(2) An application for a warrant under subsection (1) may be made ex parte and shall be made in writing.

(3) Subsections 487(2) to (4) and section 488 apply, with such modifications as the circumstances require, to a warrant issued under this section.

(4) Every person who executes a warrant issued by a judge under this section shall

- (a) detain or cause to be detained the property seized, taking reasonable care to ensure that the property is preserved so that it may be dealt with in accordance with the law;
- (b) as soon as practicable after the execution of the warrant but within a period not exceeding seven days thereafter, prepare a report in Form 5.3, identifying the property seized and the location where the property is being detained and cause the report to be filed with the clerk of the court; and
- (c) cause a copy of the report to be provided, on request, to the person from whom the property was seized and to any other person who, in the opinion of the judge, appears to have a valid interest in the property.

(5) Before issuing a warrant under this section in relation to any property, a judge may require notice to be given to and may hear any person who, in the opinion of the judge, appears to have a valid interest in the property unless the judge is of the opinion that giving such notice before the issuance of the warrant would result in the disappearance, dissipation or reduction in value of the property or otherwise affect the property so that all or a part thereof could not be seized pursuant to the warrant.

(6) Before issuing a warrant under this section, a judge shall require the Attorney General to give such undertakings as the judge considers appropriate with respect to the payment of damages or costs, or both, in relation to the issuance and execution of the warrant. R.S.C. 1985, c. 42 (4th Supp.), s. 2.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms “property”, “Attorney General”, “peace officer”, “clerk of the court” and “person” are defined in s. 2. “Judge” is defined in s. 462.3.

Sections 487 to 489 deal with search warrants generally, and telewarrants are dealt with in s. 487.1. Form 5.3 has been created to report of what property is seized under a search warrant authorized by this section. Section 462.35 provides that such warrants automatically expire after six months unless the Attorney General brings an application to extend the life of the warrant within that time. In addition, any person with an interest in the property seized under this type of warrant may apply under s. 463.24 to examine the property or to have the property returned.

Section 462.34 provides that if a warrant is issued under this section and the accused is later committed to trial for an enterprise crime offence (as defined in s. 462.3) a copy of the report of what was seized shall be forwarded to the clerk of the court in which the accused is ordered to stand trial.

SYNOPSIS

This section provides for special search warrants with respect to property which falls into the category of proceeds of crime and which is subject to forfeiture under this Part.

An application for such a search warrant must be brought in writing, by an Attorney General, to a judge as defined in s. 462.3 (generally, a superior, district or county court judge). It may be made ex parte.

Where information on oath in Form 1 satisfies the judge that such property is in a building, receptacle or place, he may issue a warrant, which may be in Form 5, authorizing a named person or a peace officer to search for that property in that place, and to seize it and any other property which he believes, on reasonable grounds, falls within this provision.

The backing and time of execution provisions in ss. 487 and 488 apply to these special warrants.

Subsection (4) requires that a person executing a warrant under this section must detain and preserve the property seized and prepare a report within seven days of seizure which shall be given to the court, the person from whom the seizure was made and any other person whom the issuing judge decides has an apparent valid interest in the property.

Subsection (5) provides that, prior to issuing a warrant, a judge may require that notice be given to and may hear any person who, in the judge's opinion, appears to have a valid interest in the property, unless he believes that notice would result in disappearance, dissipation or reduction in value of the property, or otherwise affect the property so that all or part of it could not be seized.

Subsection (6) compels a judge, before issuing a warrant, to require the Attorney General to give such undertaking as the judge considers appropriate with respect to the payment of damages or costs in relation to the warrant.

  - (b) it ceases to be in force under section 462.35; or
  - (c) an order of forfeiture or restoration of the property is made under subsection 462.37(1), 462.38(2) or 462.41(3) or any other provision of this or any other Act of Parliament.
- (11) Any person on whom an order made under subsection (3) is served in accordance with this section and who, while the order is in force, acts in contravention of or fails to comply with the order is guilty of an indictable offence or an offence punishable on summary conviction. R.S.C. 1985, c. 42 (4th Supp.), s. 2; 1993, c. 37, s. 21.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms “property”, “person” and “Attorney General” are defined in s. 2. “Judge” is defined in s. 462.3. Section 4(3) sets out when a person is in possession. Section 482 gives courts the power to make their own rules of court.

The offence created by 462.33(11) is one for which an application to intercept private communications may be made under s. 183. As there is no specified punishment if the prosecution is by way of indictment, s. 730 provides that the maximum period of imprisonment upon conviction is five years. In addition, an accused prosecuted by indictment would have a right to make an election under s. 536(2). If tried by summary conviction, Part XXVII will govern the procedure, and s. 787(1) sets out the maximum punishment upon conviction as six months imprisonment or a $2,000 fine, or both.

This provision is incorporated into the Food and Drugs Act, dealing with controlled drugs using s. 44.4 and regarding restricted drugs is s. 51. This provision is incorporated into the Narcotic Control Act through s. 19.3 of that Act.

Section 462.35 provides for the automatic expiry of a restraint order made under this section after six months unless the Attorney General has, within that time, successfully applied for an extension of the order.

Section 462.36 provides that if the court makes a restraint order and the accused is later committed to trial for an enterprise crime offence (as defined in s. 462.3) a copy of the restraint order shall be forwarded to the clerk of the court in which the accused is ordered to stand trial.

If notice is given under subsec. (8), the court may use s. 462.4(b) to set aside any conveyance or transfer of property relating to the property subject to the restraint order unless the transaction was made for valuable consideration to a purchaser acting in good faith and without notice of the order.

Section 462.43 provides for the residual disposal of property seized under a restraint order.

SYNOPSIS

This section provides for the issuance of restraint orders with respect to property which falls into the definition of "proceeds of crime" and is subject to forfeiture under this part.

An application for such an order must be made in writing by an Attorney General to a judge as defined in s. 462.3 (generally a superior, district or county court judge). It may be made ex parte and shall be accompanied by an affidavit sworn on information or belief. The affidavit must identify the offence in question; the person believed to be in possession of the property; the grounds for the belief that the property is subject to forfeiture, and its description.

If the judge is satisfied that reasonable grounds exist to believe that the property is subject to forfeiture, the judge may make an order in writing prohibiting any dealing with or disposing of any interest in the property. He may also appoint a manager and order that possession be given to that person if the Attorney General so requests and circumstances so require. He may also impose such conditions as he thinks fit. Before making a restraint order, the judge may require notice be given to and may hear any person who in the judge's opinion appears to have a valid interest in the property unless he believes that giving such notice would result in the disappearance, dissipation or reduction in value of the property, or otherwise affect the property so that all or part of it could not be subject to an order of forfeiture.

Subsection (7) compels the judge, before making an order, to require the Attorney General to give such undertakings as the judge considers appropriate with respect to the payment of damages or costs in relation to the warrant.

A copy of an order must be served on the person to whom it is addressed, and a copy shall be registered in accordance with provincial law.

An order remains in effect until its revocation, variation or automatic expiry, or until an order of forfeiture or restoration is made.

Subsection (11) creates an offence triable by indictment or on summary conviction for contravening or failing to comply with a restraint order which has been served as required.

ANNOTATIONS

A restraint order under this section is not a seizure within the meaning of s. 8 of the Charter: Serrano v. Canada (1992), 73 C.C.C. (3d) 437, 91 D.L.R. (4th) 747, 8 O.R. (3d) 673 (Gen. Div.).

The use of the word "may" in subsec. (2)(c) simply refers to the judicial power to make a forfeiture order, but does not permit the making of the order merely on the basis of a reasonable possibility. Rather, the affiant must depose his affirmative belief in the existence of the grounds which would justify a forfeiture order: Serrano v. Canada, supra.

APPLICATION FOR REVIEW OF SPECIAL WARRANTS AND RESTRAINT ORDERS / Notice to Attorney General / Terms of examination order / Order of restoration of property or revocation or variation of order / Hearing / Conditions to be satisfied / Saving provision / Form of recognizance.

462.34. (1) Any person who has an interest in property that was seized under a war- warrant issued pursuant to section 462.32 or in respect of which a restraint order was made under subsection 462.33(3) may, at any time, apply to a judge

(a) for an order under subsection (4); or

(b) for permission to examine the property.

(2) Where an application is made under paragraph (1)(a),

(a) the application shall not, without the consent of the Attorney General, be heard by a judge unless the applicant has given to the Attorney General at least two clear days notice in writing of the application; and

(b) the judge may require notice of the application to be given to and may hear any person who, in the opinion of the judge, appears to have a valid interest in the property.

(3) A judge may, on an application made to the judge under paragraph (1)(b), order that the applicant be permitted to examine property subject to such terms as appear to the judge to be necessary or desirable to ensure that the property is safeguarded and preserved for any purpose for which it may subsequently be required.

(4) On an application made to a judge under paragraph (1)(a) in respect of any property and after hearing the applicant and the Attorney General and any other person to whom notice was given pursuant to paragraph (2)(b), the judge may order that the property or a part thereof be returned to the applicant or, in the case of a restraint order made under subsection 462.33(3), revoke the order, vary the order to exclude the property or any interest in the property or part thereof from the application of the order or make the order subject to such reasonable conditions as the judge thinks fit,

(a) if the applicant enters into a recognizance before the judge, with or without sureties, in such amount and with such conditions, if any, as the judge directs and, where the judge considers it appropriate, deposits with the judge such sum of money or other valuable security as the judge directs;

(b) if the conditions referred to in subsection (6) are satisfied; or

(c) for the purpose of

(i) meeting the reasonable living expenses of the person who was in possession of the property at the time the warrant was executed or the order was made or any person who, in the opinion of the judge, has a valid interest in the property and of the dependants of that person,

(ii) meeting the reasonable business and legal expenses of a person referred to in subparagraph (i), or

(iii) permitting the use of the property in order to enter into a recognizance under Part XVI.

(5) For the purpose of determining the reasonableness of legal expenses referred to in subparagraph (4)(c)(ii), a judge shall hold an in camera hearing and without the presence of the Attorney General.

(6) An order under paragraph (4)(b) in respect of property may be made by a judge if the judge is satisfied

(a) where the application is made by

(i) a person charged with an enterprise crime offence or a designated drug offence, or

NOTE: Subsection (6)(a)(i) amended 1996, Bill C-8, s. 70(d) (to come into force by order of the Governor in Council, but not in force as of May 15, 1996 and also may change before receiving Royal Assent) by replacing the expression “designated drug offence” with the expression “designated substance offence”.

(ii) any person who acquired title to or a right of possession of that property from a person referred to in subparagraph (i) under circumstances that give rise to a reasonable inference that the title or right was transferred from that person for the purpose of avoiding the forfeiture of the property, that a warrant should not have been issued pursuant to section 462.32 or a restraint order under subsection 462.33(3) should not have been made in respect of that property, or

- (b) in any other case, that the applicant is the lawful owner of or lawfully entitled to possession of the property and appears innocent of any complicity in an enterprise crime offence or designated drug offence or of any collusion in relation to such an offence, and that the property will no longer be required for the purpose of any investigation or as evidence in any proceeding.

(7) Section 354 of this Act, sections 44.2 and 50.2 of the Food and Drugs Act and section 19.1 of the Narcotic Control Act do not apply to a person who comes into possession of any property or thing that, pursuant to an order made under paragraph (4)(c), was returned to any person after having been seized or was excluded from the application of a restraint order made under subsection 462.33(3).

NOTE: Subsection (7) replaced 1996, Bill C-8, s. 69 (to come into force by order of the Governor in Council). The text, which is not yet in force as of May 15, 1996 and also may change before receiving Royal Assent, is therefor printed in lightface italics and reads as follows:

Saving provision.

(7) Section 354 of this Act and subsection 8(1) of the Controlled Drugs and Substances Act do not apply to a person who comes into possession of any property or thing that, pursuant to an order made under paragraph (4)(c), was returned to any person after having been seized or was excluded from the application of a restraint order made under subsection 462.33(3).

(8) A recognizance entered into pursuant to paragraph (4)(a) may be in Form 32. R.S.C. 1985, c. 42 (4th Supp.), s. 2.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms “property”, “person” and “Attorney General” are defined in s. 2. “Judge”, “designated drug offence” and “enterprise crime offence” are defined in s. 462.3.

If the Attorney General is required to return documents as part of a successful application under this section, copies can be made, pursuant to s. 462.46, of such documents before they are returned, and may be used as evidence as if they were the originals. Section 462.45 provides that an order returning property pursuant to s. 462.34(4) is suspended if an appeal from such an order or an application for restoration is made.

SYNOPSIS

This section provides for an application to a judge, as defined in s. 462.3, for an order returning property seized under s. 462.32, revoking a restraint order made under s. 462.34, or permitting the examination of seized or restrained property on such terms as the judge may require. Two clear days’ notice must be given the Attorney General, unless the judge requires notice to be given to and hearing accorded to other interested parties.

The judge may also exclude property from the warrant or order if: the warrant or order should not have been issued with respect to that property; the property belongs to an innocent third party and the property is not required for evidence; the property is required for reasonable living, business or legal expenses; or the applicant enters into a recognizance.

Possession of property returned or excluded pursuant to this section is not an offence.

ANNOTATIONS

Application – These provisions do not apply to money seized from the accused at the time of his arrest and not pursuant to the provisions in this Part: R. v. Galas (1990), 57 C.C.C. (3d) 353 (B.C.S.C.).

Similarly, these provisions do not apply to funds seized pursuant to a warrant issued under s. 487 albeit the accused is charged with offences contrary to ss. 19.1 and 19.2 of the Narcotic Control Act and the warrant was issued in relation to a conspiracy to commit the offence under s. 19.1 Unless the property is seized under the provisions of this Part then the remedial measures contained therein cannot be invoked: Giles v. Canada (Department of Justice) (1991), 63 C.C.C. (3d) 184 (B.C.S.C.); R. Gaudreau (1994), 90 C.C.C. (3d) 436, 120 Sask. R. 270, 68 W.A.C. 270 (C.A.).

General – The review under this section is not a de novo hearing. The reviewing judge is required to determine only whether the authorizing judge, on the basis of the evidence presented, could have made the restraint order, giving due consideration to whether there might have been fraud, non-disclosure or any relevant new evidence which would determine whether the order should continue in force: R. v. Fremanco Ltd. (1995), 135 Nfld. & P.E.I.R. 327 (Nfld. S.C.).

Legal expenses – The application to vary the order must be made by the client, not the lawyer. On the hearing of the application, the client, who is still facing charges, cannot be examined as to the source of his assets. Further, the client should not be required to answer any questions which may assist the Crown to prosecute him on further charges in other proceedings. Once the accused has established that the variation is required to meet legal expenses, then the judge will hold an in camera hearing in the absence of Crown counsel to determine the amount which should be released from the restraint order: R. v. Morra (1992), 77 C.C.C. (3d) 380, 17 C.R. (4th) 325, 11 C.R.R. (2d) 379 (Ont. Ct. (Gen. Div.)).

AUTOMATIC EXPIRATION OF SPECIAL WARRANTS AND RESTRAINT ORDERS.

462.35. Where property has been seized under a warrant issued pursuant to section 462.32 or a restraint order has been made under section 462.33 in relation to property, the property shall not be detained or the order shall not continue in force, as the case may be, for a period of more than six months after the time of the seizure or the making of the order, as the case may be, unless, before the expiration of that period, the Attorney General establishes to the satisfaction of a judge that the property may be required after the expiration of that period for the purpose of section 462.37 or 462.38 or any other provision of this or any other Act of Parliament respecting forfeiture or for the purpose of any investigation or as evidence in any proceeding. R.S.C. 1985, c. 42 (4th Supp.), s. 2.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms “property”, and “Attorney General” are defined in s. 2. “Judge” is defined in s. 462.3.

If a successful application is not made by the Attorney General to extend the length of a restraint order or a search warrant issued under s. 462.32, the property seized will be disposed of under s. 462.32 or 462.43. If the Attorney General is required to return documents under this section, copies can be made, pursuant to s. 462.46, of such documents before they are returned, and may be used as evidence as if they were the originals.

Unlike most of the provisions in this Part, there is no right of appeal from a decision under this section.

SYNOPSIS

This section provides for the automatic expiry of warrants and restraint orders after six months, unless a judge, prior to the expiration of the six-month period, is satisfied by the Attorney General that the property may be required after the expiration of that period for the purpose of ss. 462.37, 462.38, any other provision of the Code, or any other federal Act respecting forfeiture, or for the purpose of any investigation or as evidence in any proceeding, extends the time. This section also pertains to property seized or restrained under ss. 462.32 and 462.33.

FORWARDING TO CLERK WHERE ACCUSED TO STAND TRIAL.

462.36. Where a judge issues a warrant under section 462.32 or makes a restraint order under section 462.33 in respect of any property, the clerk of the court shall, when an accused is ordered to stand trial for an enterprise crime offence, cause to be forwarded to the clerk of the court to which the accused has been ordered to stand trial a copy of the report filed pursuant to paragraph 462.32(4)(b) or of the restraint order in respect of the property. R.S.C. 1985, c. 42 (4th Supp.), s. 2.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms “property” and “clerk of the court” are defined in s. 2. “Judge” and “enterprise crime offence” are defined in s. 462.3.

SYNOPSIS

This section provides for the transmission to the clerk of the court, to which an accused has been ordered to stand trial for an enterprise crime offence, of a copy of the report filed under s. 462.32(4)(b), or the restraint order under s. 462.33, with respect to the seized or restrained property.

Forfeiture of Proceeds of Crime

ORDER OF FORFEITURE OF PROPERTY ON CONVICTION / Proceeds of crime derived from other offences / Fine instead of forfeiture / Imprisonment in default of payment of fine / Fine option program not available to offender.

462.37. (1) Subject to this section and sections 462.39 to 462.41, where an offender is convicted or discharged under section 736 of an enterprise crime offence and the court imposing sentence on the offender, on application of the Attorney General, is satisfied, on a balance of probabilities, that any property is proceeds of crime and that the enterprise crime offence was committed in relation to that property, the court shall order that the property be forfeited to Her Majesty to be disposed of as the Attorney General directs or otherwise dealt with in accordance with the law.

NOTE: Subsection (1) amended 1995, c. 22, s. 10 (to come into force by order of the Governor in Council) by replacing the reference to s. 736 with s. 730.

(2) Where the evidence does not establish to the satisfaction of the court that the enterprise crime offence of which the offender is convicted or discharged under section 736 was committed in relation to property in respect of which an order of forfeiture would otherwise be made under subsection (1) but the court is satisfied, beyond a reasonable doubt, that that property is proceeds of crime, the court may make an order of forfeiture under subsection (1) in relation to that property.

NOTE: Subsection (2) amended 1995, c. 22, s. 10 (to come into force by order of the Governor in Council) by replacing the reference to s. 736 with s. 730.

(3) Where a court is satisfied that an order of forfeiture under subsection (1) should be made in respect of any property of an offender, but that that property or any part thereof or interest therein cannot be made subject to such an order and, in particular,

- (a) cannot, on the exercise of due diligence, be located,
- (b) has been transferred to a third party,
- (c) is located outside Canada,
- (d) has been substantially diminished in value or rendered worthless, or
- (e) has been commingled with other property that cannot be divided without difficulty, the court may, instead of ordering that property or part thereof or interest therein to be forfeited pursuant to subsection (1), order the offender to pay a fine in an amount equal to the value of that property, part or interest.

(4) Where a court orders an offender to pay a fine pursuant to subsection (3), the court shall

(a) impose, in default of payment of that fine, a term of imprisonment

- (i) not exceeding six months, where the amount of the fine does not exceed ten thousand dollars,
- (ii) of not less than six months and not exceeding twelve months, where the amount of the fine exceeds ten thousand dollars but does not exceed twenty thousand dollars,
- (iii) of not less than twelve months and not exceeding eighteen months, where the amount of the fine exceeds twenty thousand dollars but does not exceed fifty thousand dollars,
- (iv) of not less than eighteen months and not exceeding two years, where the amount of the fine exceeds fifty thousand dollars but does not exceed one hundred thousand dollars,
- (v) of not less than two years and not exceeding three years, where the amount of the fine exceeds one hundred thousand dollars but does not exceed two hundred and fifty thousand dollars,
- (vi) of not less than three years and not exceeding five years, where the amount of the fine exceeds two hundred and fifty thousand dollars but does not exceed one million dollars, or
- (vii) of not less than five years and not exceeding ten years, where the amount of the fine exceeds one million dollars; and

(b) direct that the term of imprisonment imposed pursuant to paragraph (a) be served consecutively to any other term of imprisonment imposed on the offender or that the offender is then serving.

(5) Section 718.1 does not apply to an offender against whom a fine is imposed pursuant to subsection (3). R.S.C. 1985, c. 42 (4th Supp.), s. 2.

NOTE: Subsection (5) amended 1995, c. 22, s. 10 (to come into force by order of the Governor in Council) by replacing the reference to s. 718.1 with s. 736.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms “property” and “Attorney General” are defined in s. 2. The terms “enterprise crime offence” and “proceeds of crime” are defined in s. 462.3.

Section 462.39 provides for an inference to be drawn that the property was obtained as a result of an “enterprise crime offence” if the conditions of that section are satisfied. Section 462.41 requires that notice be given to any person who may have a valid interest in the property before an order is made for the forfeiture of the property. In addition, before any property is forfeited under this section, the court may set aside any improper conveyances, using its powers under s. 462.4. Section 462.42 allows persons with a valid interest in the property which is to be forfeited to apply to have their interest declared not affected by any forfeiture, and to either retrieve the portion of the property in which they have an interest or an equivalent sum of money. Section 462.43 provides for the disposal of any residual property remaining after all persons with a valid interest have had their claims determined. If documents are returned under s. 462.37, the Attorney General has the right to make copies before returning the documents and to use them as evidence as if they were originals, pursuant to s. 462.46.

Section 673, which defines "sentence" for the purpose of indictable offences, includes an order under this section so that s. 683 permits an appeal to the appropriate appellate court. Section 462.45 provides that a forfeiture order is not to be carried out for 30 days and is stayed if it is under appeal, an application is made for restoration of the property or there are any proceedings in which the right to seize the property is questioned.

Section 44.4 of the Food and Drugs Act incorporates this section into that Act with respect to controlled drugs, and s. 51 with respect to restricted drugs. Sections 43 to 44 also deal with other forfeiture provisions and applications for restoration in relation to controlled drugs, as does s. 51 regarding restricted drugs. Section 19.3 of the Narcotic Control Act performs the same function in that Act. For other sections in the Narcotic Control Act dealing with forfeiture and requests for restoration, see ss. 15 to 19.

SYNOPSIS

This section deals with the forfeiture of proceeds of crime after an accused person has been convicted of an enterprise crime offence.

Subsection (1) provides for an order, for the forfeiture of property, by the judge imposing sentence when a person is found guilty of an enterprise crime offence. If the Attorney General satisfies the judge, on a balance of probabilities, that any property is the proceeds of crime, and that the enterprise crime offence which is the subject of the trial was committed in relation to such property, he shall order its forfeiture.

Subsection (2) provides that where, in the proceedings described in subsec. (1), the connection between the offence and the property is not established, but the judge is satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the property is proceeds of crime, he may order its forfeiture.

Where an order should be made under subsec. (1), but the property cannot be found after the exercise of due diligence, it has been transferred, it is outside Canada, or it has been diminished or commingled, the court may, instead of ordering forfeiture, impose a fine of equal value to such property on the offender.

Subsection (4) provides a sliding scale for consecutive imprisonment in lieu of payment of the fine.

ANNOTATIONS

The trial judge at the time of sentencing erred in refusing to make an order under subsec. (1) with respect to certain monies seized from the accused at the time of his arrest, in part because the judge believed that the monies had been given the accused by his mother. The entitlement claims of other persons to the proceeds are not to be dealt with in conjunction with a sentence hearing but rather pursuant to s. 462.42 after the order of forfeiture has been made: R. v. Pawlyk (1991), 65 C.C.C. (3d) 63, 4 C.R. (4th) 388, 72 Man. R. (2d) 1 (C.A.).

The forfeiture order is part of the sentence and, once the order has been made, the trial judge is functus. Thus, the judge had no jurisdiction to subsequently vacate a portion of the order on the application of the mortgagee: R. v. Sterling (1992), 71 C.C.C. (3d) 222 (B.C.S.C.). Contra: Wilson v. Canada (1993), 86 C.C.C. (3d) 464, 25 C.R. (4th) 239, 15 O.R. (3d) 645 (C.A.) where it was held that third party claims can be considered at the sentence hearing in view of s. 462.41.

It was not appropriate to impose a fine under subsec. (3) where the proceeds had been used by the accused to enter into a recognizance and then for lawyer fees. If the Crown had moved to seize the funds, they would have been available for these purposes in any event by an application under s. 462.34: R. v. Gagnon (1993), 80 C.C.C. (3d) 508, 139 A.R. 264 (Q.B.).

In view of the provisions of subsec. (3) and (4) a lawyer, representing the accused, who has taken an assignment of seized funds is in a potential conflict of interest. If the court makes an order in favour of the lawyer then the accused is liable to have a fine (and jail in default) imposed in the equivalent amount. On the other hand, it would be inappropriate for the lawyer to wait until after sentencing and then make a claim under s. 462.42 in an effort to circumvent the scheme of the legislation: R. v. Wilson, supra.

APPLICATION FOR FORFEITURE / Order of forfeiture of property / Person deemed absconded.

462.38. (1) Where an information has been laid in respect of an enterprise crime offence, the Attorney General may make an application to a judge for an order of forfeiture under subsection (2) in respect of any property.

(2) Subject to sections 462.39 to 462.41, where an application is made to a judge under subsection (1), the judge shall, if the judge is satisfied that

- (a) any property is, beyond a reasonable doubt, proceeds of crime,
- (b) proceedings in respect of an enterprise crime offence committed in relation to that property were commenced, and
- (c) the accused charged with the offence referred to in paragraph (b) has died or absconded, order that the property be forfeited to Her Majesty to be disposed of as the Attorney General directs or otherwise dealt with in accordance with the law.

(3) For the purposes of this section, a person shall be deemed to have absconded in connection with an enterprise crime offence if

- (a) an information has been laid alleging the commission of the offence by the person,
- (b) a warrant for the arrest of the person has been issued in relation to that information, and
- (c) reasonable attempts to arrest the person pursuant to the warrant have been unsuccessful during the period of six months commencing on the day the warrant was issued, and the person shall be deemed to have so absconded on the last day of that period of six months. R.S.C. 1985, c. 42 (4th Supp.), s. 2.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms “property”, “person” and “Attorney General” are defined in s. 2. The terms “judge” and “enterprise crime offence” are defined in s. 462.3.

Section 462.39 provides for an inference to be drawn that the property was obtained as a result of an “enterprise crime offence” if the conditions of that section are satisfied. Section 462.41 requires that notice be given to any person who may have a valid interest in the property before an order is made for the forfeiture of the property. In addition, before any property is forfeited under this section, the court may set aside any improper conveyances using its powers under s. 462.4. Section 462.42 allows persons with a valid interest in the property which is to be forfeited to apply to have their interest declared not affected by any forfeiture, and to either retrieve the portion of the property in which they have an interest or an equivalent sum of money. Section 462.43 provides for the disposal of any residual property remaining after all persons with a valid interest have had their claims determined. If documents are returned under 462.37, the Attorney General has the right to make copies before returning the documents and to use them as evidence as if they were originals, pursuant to s. 462.46.

Section 462.44 provides for a right of appeal from a forfeiture order. In addition, s. 673, which defines “sentence” for the purpose of indictable offences, includes an order under this section so that s. 683 permits an appeal to the appropriate appellate court. Section 462.45 provides that a forfeiture order is not to be carried out for 30 days and is stayed if it is under appeal, an application is made for restoration of the property or there are any proceedings in which the right to seize the property is questioned.

Section 44.4 of the Food and Drugs Act incorporates this section into that Act with respect to controlled drugs, and s. 51 with respect to restricted drugs. Section 19.3 of the Narcotic Control Act performs the same function in that Act.

SYNOPSIS

This section provides for an in rem forfeiture hearing for proceeds of crime in certain circumstances. The Attorney General may apply for such a hearing if an information has been laid in respect of an enterprise crime offence. On such an application, the judge shall order forfeiture if the Attorney General establishes that the property is, beyond reasonable doubt, proceeds of crime, that related enterprise crime proceedings were commenced, and that the accused has died or absconded.

Subsection (3) deems a person to have absconded if an information has been laid, a warrant issued, and reasonable attempts to arrest have been unsuccessful during the six-month period after the issuance of the warrant.

In establishing that any property which was seized is beyond a reasonable doubt the "proceeds of crime", there is no burden on the Crown to prove that the funds seized were the proceeds of any specific illegal transaction such as sale of narcotics. Thus, the fact that the funds or other property are proceeds of crime may be established by circumstantial evidence. The hearing under s. 462.38 is in its nature between a criminal trial proper where the strict rules of evidence apply and a sentence hearing. Thus, while it must be proved beyond a reasonable doubt that the property was the proceeds of crime, the fact that proceedings in respect of an enterprise crime offence had been commenced and that the accused absconded need only be proved on a balance of probabilities. Similarly, bearing in mind the standard of proof beyond a reasonable doubt as to the source of the funds sought to be forfeited, the general rule that all relevant evidence is admissible applies and the effect of exclusionary rules of evidence is to be left to the judge hearing the application. This includes the weight, if any, to be accorded to hearsay evidence, bearing in mind its reliability and the explanation for not making better evidence available: R. v. Clymore (1992), 74 C.C.C. (3d) 217 (B.C.S.C.).

Where the prerequisites set out in subsec. (3) have been met so that the accused is deemed to have absconded, then the requirement is subsec. (1)(c) has been made out even if, in the course of the proceedings, the accused's whereabouts become known. Thus, in this case, the accused had still absconded for the purpose of the Crown's application, even if during the course of the proceedings his whereabouts were discovered as a result of his arrest by American authorities while apparently attempting to import drugs into that country. There was no requirement that the Crown attempt to extradite the accused before the end of the proceedings under this section. His status as an absconding accused continues for the purpose of this section: R. v. Clymore, supra.

Although the proceedings under this section lead only to the forfeiture of property, it would be open to the accused to rely on s. 8 of the Charter and to argue for exclusion of the funds seized, on the basis that his right to protection against unreasonable search and seizure was violated: R. v. Clymore, supra.

INFERENCE.

462.39. For the purpose of subsection 462.37(1) or 462.38(2), the court may infer that property was obtained or derived as a result of the commission of an enterprise crime offence where evidence establishes that the value, after the commission of that offence, of all the property of the person alleged to have committed the offence exceeds the value of all the property of that person before the commission of that offence and the court is satisfied that the income of that person from sources unrelated to enterprise crime offences or designated drug offences committed by that person cannot reasonably account for such an increase in value. R.S.C. 1985, c. 42 (4th Supp.), s. 2.

NOTE: Amended 1996, Bill C-8, s. 70(f) (to come into force by order of the Governor in Council, but not in force as of May 15, 1996 and also may change before receiving Royal Assent) by replacing the expression “designated drug offence” with the expression “designated substance offence”.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms “property” and “person” are defined in s. 2. The terms “enterprise crime offence” and “designated drug offence” are defined in s. 462.3. This section is incorporated into the Food and Drugs Act, relating to controlled drugs in s. 44.3 and to restricted drugs in s. 51. Section 19.3 of the Narcotic Control Act serves the same purpose in that Act.

SYNOPSIS

This section provides that the court may infer in forfeiture hearings under this Part that property was obtained or derived from an enterprise crime offence where it is established that the value of all of a person’s property after the commission of such an offence exceeds the previous value, and that unrelated legitimate income cannot reasonably account for the increase.

VOIDABLE TRANSFERS.

462.4. A court may,

- (a) prior to ordering property to be forfeited under subsection 462.37(1) or 462.38(2), and
- (b) in the case of property in respect of which a restraint order was made under section 462.33, where the order was served in accordance with subsection 462.33(8), set aside any conveyance or transfer of the property that occurred after the seizure of the property or the service of the order under section 462.33, unless the conveyance or transfer was for valuable consideration to a person acting in good faith and without notice. R.S.C. 1985, c. 42 (4th Supp.), s. 2.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term “property” is defined in s. 2. This property could have been seized by a warrant issued under s. 462.32.

This section is incorporated into the Food and Drugs Act, relating to controlled drugs in s. 43.4 and restricted drugs in s. 51. Section 19.3 of the Narcotic Control Act serves the same purpose in that Act.

SYNOPSIS

This section provides that, prior to ordering forfeiture, a court may void any transfers of seized or restrained property. The court is authorized to so order in the case of restrained property if the order was served and unless the transfer was made for valuable consideration to a person acting in good faith and without notice.

462.41. (1) Before making an order under subsection 462.37(1) or 462.38(2) in relation to any property, a court shall require notice in accordance with subsection (2) to be given to and may hear any person who, in the opinion of the court, appears to have a valid interest in the property.

(2) A notice given under subsection (1) shall

- (a) be given or served in such manner as the court directs or as may be prescribed by the rules of the court;
- (b) be of such duration as the court considers reasonable or as may be prescribed by the rules of the court; and

(c) set out the enterprise crime offence charged and a description of the property.

(b) a person who acquired title to or a right of possession of that property from a person referred to in paragraph (a) under circumstances that give rise to a reasonable inference that the title or right was transferred for the purpose of avoiding the forfeiture of the property, is the lawful owner or is lawfully entitled to possession of any property or any part thereof that would otherwise be forfeited pursuant to subsection 462.37(1) or 462.38(2) and that the person appears innocent of any complicity in an offence referred to in paragraph (a) or of any collusion in relation to such an offence, the court may order that the property or part thereof be returned to that person. R.S.C. 1985, c. 42 (4th Supp.), s. 2.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms "property" and "person" are defined in s. 2. The terms "enterprise crime offence" and "designated drug offence" are defined in s. 462.3. The powers of a court to make rules is stated in s. 482.

Persons who receive notice under this section and seek to prevent their property from being forfeited can apply under s. 462.42 for relief from forfeiture.

This Part of the Criminal Code does not provide for any right of appeal from an order made under s. 462.42(3) and, unlike an order made under s. 462.37, this type of order does not come within the definition of "sentence" for appeal purposes under s. 673 (dealing with indictable offences). However, if a proceeding is brought, under which the restoration of the property under s. 462.41(3) is challenged, s. 462.45 will stay the restoration pending the completion of the further proceedings to determine the validity of the restoration order.

If documents are ordered returned under 462.41(3), the Attorney General has the right to make copies before returning the documents and to use them as evidence as if they were originals, pursuant to s. 462.46.

This section is incorporated into the Food and Drugs Act, relating to controlled drugs in s. 43.4 and restricted drugs in s. 51. Section 19.3 of the Narcotic Control Act serves the same purpose in that Act.

SYNOPSIS

This section provides for notice to and the hearing of interested parties before forfeiture is ordered, and for the return of property to such persons if they are innocent of complicity.

Before making a forfeiture order, whether after a conviction or in an in rem proceeding, a court must require notice to be given in accordance with subsec. (2) to any person whom the court believes has a valid interest in the property in question, and may hear such person.

Where the court is satisfied that a person is the lawful owner of, or is entitled to possession of, all or part of the property in question, and appears innocent of complicity of collusion in an enterprise crime or designated drug offence, the court may order it returned to that person, unless that person was charged with an enterprise crime or derived his interest in the property from such persons, in circumstances giving rise to a reasonable inference that the transfer was made to avoid forfeiture.

ANNOTATIONS

Where the process under this section makes otherwise forfeitable property not subject to forfeiture, the judge may impose a fine equivalent pursuant to s. 462.37: Wilson v. Canada (1993), 86 C.C.C. (3d) 464, 25 C.R. (4th) 239, 15 O.R. (3d) 645 (C.A.).

- (b) a person who acquired title to or a right of possession of that property from a person referred to in paragraph (a) under circumstances that give rise to a reasonable inference that the title or right was transferred from that person for the purpose of avoiding the forfeiture of the property, may, within thirty days after that forfeiture, apply by notice in writing to a judge for an order under subsection (4).

- (2) The judge to whom an application is made under subsection (1) shall fix a day not less than thirty days after the date of filing of the application for the hearing thereof.

- (3) An applicant shall serve a notice of the application made under subsection (1) and of the hearing thereof on the Attorney General at least fifteen days before the day fixed for the hearing.

- (4) Where, on the hearing of an application made under subsection (1), the judge is satisfied that the applicant is not a person referred to in paragraph (1)(a) or (b) and appears innocent of any complicity in any enterprise crime offence or designated drug offence that resulted in the forfeiture or of any collusion in relation to any such offence, the judge may make an order declaring that the interest of the applicant is not affected by the forfeiture and declaring the nature and extent of the interest.

NOTE: Subsection (4) amended 1996, Bill C-8, s. 70(i) (to come into force by order of the Governor in Council, but not in force as of May 15, 1996 and also may change before receiving Royal Assent) by replacing the expression “designated drug offence” with the expression “designated substance offence”.

- (5) An applicant or the Attorney General may appeal to the court of appeal from an order under subsection (4) and the provisions of Part XXI with respect to procedure on appeals apply, with such modifications as the circumstances require, to appeals under this subsection.

- (6) The Attorney General shall, on application made to the Attorney General by any person who has obtained an order under subsection (4) and where the periods with respect to the taking of appeals from that order have expired and any appeal from that order taken under subsection (5) has been determined,

- (a) direct that the property or the part thereof to which the interest of the applicant relates be returned to the applicant; or
 (b) direct that an amount equal to the value of the interest of the applicant, as declared in the order, be paid to the applicant. R.S.C. 1985, c. 42 (4th Supp.), s. 2.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms "property", "person" and "Attorney General" are defined in s. 2. The terms "judge", "enterprise crime offence" and "designated drug offence" are defined in s. 462.3.

This section is incorporated into the Food and Drugs Act, relating to controlled drugs in s. 43.4 and to restricted drugs in s. 51. Section 19.3 of the Narcotic Control Act serves the same purpose in that Act.

SYNOPSIS

This section provides for written applications by innocent third parties for relief from forfeiture under this part within 30 days after such forfeiture is ordered.

Such application may be brought by any person who claims an interest in forfeited property, other than a person described in subsec. 1(a) or (b), that is, a person who was charged with an enterprise crime or designated drug offence in relation to the property, or a person who acquired his interest from such person, in circumstances giving rise to a reasonable inference that the transfer was made to avoid forfeiture.

A judge to whom such application is made shall fix a hearing date not less than 30 days after the application is filed. The Attorney General is entitled to at least 15 days notice of the hearing.

The judge hearing the application may make an order declaring the nature and extent of the applicant's interest, and also declaring that it is not affected by the forfeiture, if he is satisfied that the applicant was not a person described in subsec. 1(a) or (b) and that he appears innocent of complicity or collusion in the offence that resulted in the forfeiture.

Appeals are available from orders under this section to the Court of Appeal.

Upon the application of a person who has obtained an order under this section, if the appeal period has expired and any appeal has been determined, the Attorney General is required to direct the return of the property or the repayment of its value as declared in the order to the applicant.

ANNOTATIONS

Even where the applicant has met the conditions in this section, the judge has a discretion to refuse to make a declaration in favour of the applicant. In exercising the discretion, the judge must consider whether the innocent third party should suffer so that the goal of divesting the accused of his proceeds of crime can be achieved: Wilson v. Canada (1993), 86 C.C.C. (3d) 464, 25 C.R. (4th) 239, 15 O.R. (3d) 645 (C.A.).

In R. v. Wilson, supra, the accused and his wife had assigned their interest in seized funds to their lawyers for the payment of legal fees. At the time of sentencing, an order was made forfeiting those funds pursuant to s. 462.37. Once that order was made, any interest that the accused and his wife had in the funds was extinguished as was the interest that the lawyers had. Accordingly, they had no assertable interest in the funds within the meaning of this section.

The victim of an offence who had served a garnishee summons upon a company holding funds owed to the accused, before the Attorney General applied for forfeiture of those funds, was entitled to an order declaring an interest in those funds: R. v. Tatarchuk, [1993] 1 W.W.R. 349, 4 Alta. L.R. (3d) 300 (Q.B.).

RESIDUAL DISPOSAL OF PROPERTY SEIZED OR DEALT WITH PURSUANT TO SPECIAL WARRANTS OR RESTRAINT ORDERS.

462.43. Where property has been seized under a warrant issued pursuant to section 462.32, a restraint order has been made under section 462.33 in relation to any property or a recognizance has been entered into pursuant to paragraph 462.34(4)(a) in relation to any property and a judge, on application made to the judge by the Attorney General or any person having an interest in the property or on the judge's own motion, after notice given to the Attorney General and any other person having an interest in the property, is satisfied that the property will no longer be required for the purpose of section 462.37, 462.38 or any other provision of this or any other Act of Parliament respecting forfeiture or for the purpose of any investigation or as evidence in any proceeding, the judge

- (a) in the case of a restraint order, shall revoke the order;
- (b) in the case of a recognizance, shall cancel the recognizance; and
- (c) in the case of property seized under a warrant issued pursuant to section 462.32 or property under the control of a person appointed pursuant to subparagraph 462.33(3)(b)(i),
  - (i) if possession of it by the person from whom it was taken is lawful, shall order that it be returned to that person,
  - (ii) if possession of it by the person from whom it was taken is unlawful and the lawful owner or person who is lawfully entitled to its possession is known, shall order that it be returned to the lawful owner or the person who is lawfully entitled to its possession, or
  - (iii) if possession of it by the person from whom it was taken is unlawful and the lawful owner or person who is lawfully entitled to its possession is not known, may order that it be forfeited to Her Majesty, to be disposed of as the Attorney General directs, or otherwise dealt with in accordance with the law. R.S.C. 1985, c. 42 (4th Supp.), s. 2.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms “property”, “person” and “Attorney General” are defined in s. 2.

If documents are returned under s. 462.43, the Attorney General has the right to make copies before returning the documents and to use them as evidence as if they were originals, pursuant to s. 462.46.

Section 462.44 provides a right of appeal from a decision made under this section. Section 462.45 provides that a forfeiture order is not to be carried out for 30 days and is stayed if it is under appeal, an application is made for restoration of the property or there are any proceedings in which the right to seize the property is questioned.

SYNOPSIS

This section provides for the revocation of restraint orders, the cancellation of any recognizances, and the return of seized property (or its forfeiture where the owner is not known), on application by the Attorney General or an interested party, where the property is no longer required for the purposes of this Part, or of any Act of Parliament, or for any investigation or as evidence.

APPEALS FROM ORDERS UNDER SUBSECTION 462.38(2) OR SECTION 462.43.

462.44. Any person who considers himself aggrieved by an order made under subsection 462.38(2) or section 462.43 may appeal from the order as if the order were an appeal against conviction or against a judgment or verdict of acquittal, as the case may be, under Part XXI and that Part applies, with such modifications as the circumstances require, to such an appeal. R.S.C. 1985, c. 42 (4th Supp.), s. 2.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term “person” is defined in s. 2.

Section 462.45 provides that any order for forfeiture or restoration is stayed if an appeal is brought.

Section 462.44 does not refer to orders made pursuant to s. 462.37 as they come within the definition of “sentence” under s. 673 (applicable to indictable offences), and s. 689(1) provides for the stay of such orders pending the appeal.

Section 462.42 provides an avenue for those not implicated in the “designated drug offence” or the “enterprise crime offence” to seek relief from a forfeiture order.

This section is incorporated into the Food and Drugs Act, relating to controlled drugs in s. 43.4

and to restricted drugs in s. 51. Section 19.3 of the Narcotic Control Act serves the same purpose in that Act.

SYNOPSIS

This section provides for appeals from in rem forfeiture decisions, and decisions under s. 462.43, as if they were appeals from convictions or acquittal in proceedings by indictment.

SUSPENSION OF FORFEITURE PENDING APPEAL.

462.45. Notwithstanding anything in this Part, the operation of an order of forfeiture or restoration of property under subsection 462.34(4), 462.37(1), 462.38(2) or 462.41(3) or section 462.43 is suspended pending

- (a) any application made in respect of the property under any of those provisions or any other provision of this or any other Act of Parliament that provides for the restoration or forfeiture of such property,
- (b) any appeal taken from an order of forfeiture or restoration in respect of the property, or
- (c) any other proceeding in which the right of seizure of the property is questioned, and property shall not be disposed of within thirty days after an order of forfeiture is made under any of those provisions. R.S.C. 1985, c. 42 (4th Supp.), s. 2.

NOTE: Amended 1996, Bill C-8, s. 70(j) (to come into force by order of the Governor in Council, but not in force as of May 15, 1996 and also may change before receiving Royal Assent) by replacing the expression "designated drug offence" with the expression "designated substance offence".

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term "property" is defined in s. 2. Section 490(12), which also deals with the return, forfeiture and disposition of seized property, contains a similar provision requiring a 30 day stay of all such orders, in addition to stays pending any appeals or similar challenges to the order made under that section. If the order appealed from is made under s. 462.37(1), s. 689(1) stays the operation of the order if it was made in relation to an indictable offence and an appeal is launched against the order.

SYNOPSIS

This section provides for the automatic suspension of forfeiture or restoration orders pending applications or appeals under this Part, or other proceedings in which the right of seizure is questioned. In addition, it also stipulates that property may not be disposed of 30 days after being ordered forfeit.

COPIES OF DOCUMENTS RETURNED OR FORFEITED / Probative force.

462.46. (1) Where any document is returned or ordered to be returned, forfeited or otherwise dealt with under subsection 462.34(3) or (4), 462.37(1), 462.38(2) or 462.41(3) or section 462.43, the Attorney General may, before returning the document or complying with the order, cause a copy of the document to be made and retained.

(2) Every copy made under subsection (1) shall, if certified as a true copy by the Attorney General, be admissible in evidence and, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, shall have the same probative force as the original document would have had if it had been proved in the ordinary way. R.S.C. 1985, c. 42 (4th Supp.), s. 2.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term "Attorney General" is defined in s. 2.

This provision is quite similar to the power given under s. 490(13) and (14) to use photocopies of documents returned to their owner although those provisions require the Attorney General to certify that the copies are true before they may be admitted as if they were original documents.

This section is incorporated into the Food and Drugs Act, relating to controlled drugs in s. 43.4 and to restricted drugs in s. 51. Section 19.3 of the Narcotic Control Act serves the same purpose in that Act.

SYNOPSIS

This section permits the Attorney General to make and retain copies of documents returned or ordered to be returned, forfeited or otherwise dealt with under this Part. Such copies, if certified by the Attorney General, are admissible in evidence, and have the same probative force as the original, in the absence of evidence to the contrary.

Disclosure Provisions

NO CIVIL OR CRIMINAL LIABILITY INCURRED BY INFORMANTS.

462.47. For greater certainty but subject to section 241 of the Income Tax Act, a person is justified in disclosing to a peace officer or the Attorney General any facts on the basis of which that person reasonably suspects that any property is proceeds of crime or that any person has committed or is about to commit an enterprise crime offence or a designated drug offence. R.S.C. 1985, c. 42 (4th Supp.), s. 2.

NOTE: Amended 1996, Bill C-8, s. 70(j) (to come into force by order of the Governor in Council, but not in force as of May 15, 1996 and also may change before receiving Royal Assent) by replacing the expression “designated drug offence” with the expression “designated substance offence”.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms “property”, “peace officer”, “person” and “Attorney General” are defined in s. 2. The terms “enterprise crime offence”, “proceeds of crime” and “designated drug offence” are defined in s. 462.3.

SYNOPSIS

This section clarifies that, subject to s. 241 of the Income Tax Act, a person may disclose to a peace officer or the Attorney General information resulting in a reasonable suspicion that property is proceeds of crime, or that a person has committed or is about to commit an enterprise crime or designated drug offence.

DISCLOSURE OF INCOME TAX INFORMATION / Application / Order for disclosure of information / Service of order / Extension of period for compliance with order / Objection to disclosure of information / Determination of objection / Judge may examine information / Limitation period / Appeal to Federal Court of Appeal / Limitation period for appeal / Special rules for hearings / Ex parte representations / Copies / Further disclosure / Form / Definitions of “police officer”.

462.48. (1) The Attorney General may, for the purposes of an investigation in relation to

- (a) a designated drug offence, or
- (b) an offence against section 354 or 462.31 where the offence is alleged to have been committed in relation to any property, thing or proceeds obtained or derived directly or indirectly as a result of
  - (i) the commission in Canada of a designated drug offence, or
  - (ii) an act or omission anywhere that, if it had occurred in Canada, would have constituted a designated drug offence, make an application in accordance with subsection (2) for an order for disclosure of information under subsection (3).

NOTE: Subsection (1)(a) and (b) amended 1996, Bill C-8, s. 70(k) (to come into force by order of the Governor in Council, but not in force as of May 15, 1996 and also may change before receiving Royal Assent) by replacing the expression “designated drug offence” with the expression “designated substance offence”.

(2) An application under subsection (1) shall be made ex parte in writing to a judge and be accompanied by an affidavit sworn on the information and belief of the Attorney General or a person specially designated by the Attorney General for that purpose deposing to the following matters, namely,

- (a) the offence or matter under investigation;
- (b) the person in relation to whom the information or documents referred to in paragraph (c) are required;
- (c) the type of information or book, record, writing, return or other document obtained by or on behalf of the Minister of National Revenue for the purposes of the Income Tax Act to which access is sought or that is proposed to be examined or communicated; and
- (d) the facts relied on to justify the belief, on reasonable grounds, that the person referred to in paragraph (b) has committed or benefited from the commission of an offence referred to in paragraph (1)(a) or (b) and that the information or documents referred to in paragraph (c) are likely to be of substantial value, whether alone or together with other material, to the investigation for the purposes of which the application is made.

(3) Where the judge to whom an application under subsection (1) is made is satisfied

- (a) of the matters referred to in paragraph (2)(d), and
- (b) that there are reasonable grounds for believing that it is in the public interest to allow access to the information or documents to which the application relates, having regard to the benefit likely to accrue to the investigation if the access is obtained, the judge may, subject to such conditions as the judge considers advisable in the public interest, order the Deputy Minister of National Revenue or any person specially designated in writing by that Deputy Minister for the purposes of this section

- (c) to allow a police officer named in the order access to all such information and documents and to examine them, or
- (d) where the judge considers it necessary in the circumstances, to produce all such information and documents to the police officer and allow the police officer to remove the information and documents from the possession of that person, within such period as the judge may specify after the expiration of seven clear days following the service of the order pursuant to subsection (4).

(4) A copy of an order made by a judge under subsection (3) shall be served on the person to whom the order is addressed in such manner as the judge directs or as may be prescribed by rules of court.

(5) A judge who makes an order under subsection (3) may, on application of the Minister of National Revenue, extend the period within which the order is to be complied with.

(6) The Minister of National Revenue or any person specially designated in writing by that Minister for the purposes of this section may object to the disclosure of any information or document in respect of which an order under subsection (3) has been made by certifying orally or in writing that the information or document should not be disclosed on the ground that

- (a) the Minister of National Revenue is prohibited from disclosing the information or document by any bilateral or international treaty, convention or other agreement respecting taxation to which the Government of Canada is a signatory;
  - (b) a privilege is attached by law to the information or document;
  - (c) the information or document has been placed in a sealed package pursuant to law or an order of a court of competent jurisdiction; or
  - (d) disclosure of the information or document would not, for any other reason, be in the public interest.
- (7) Where an objection to the disclosure of information or a document is made under subsection (6), the objection may be determined, on application, in accordance with subsection (8), by the Chief Justice of the Federal Court, or by such other judge of that court as the Chief Justice may designate to hear such applications.
- (8) A judge who is to determine an objection pursuant to subsection (7) may, if the judge considers it necessary to determine the objection, examine the information or document in relation to which the objection is made and shall grant the objection and order that disclosure of the information or document be refused where the judge is satisfied of any of the grounds mentioned in subsection (6).
- (9) An application under subsection (7) shall be made within ten days after the objection is made or within such greater or lesser period as the Chief Justice of the Federal Court, or such other judge of that court as the Chief Justice may designate to hear such applications, considers appropriate.
- (10) An appeal lies from a determination under subsection (7) to the Federal Court of Appeal.
- (11) An appeal under subsection (10) shall be brought within ten days from the date of the determination appealed from or within such further time as the Federal Court of Appeal considers appropriate in the circumstances.
- (12) An application under subsection (7) or an appeal brought in respect of that application shall
- (a) be heard in camera; and
  - (b) on the request of the person objecting to the disclosure of information, be heard and determined in the National Capital Region described in the schedule to the National Capital Act.
- (13) During the hearing of an application under subsection (7) or an appeal brought in respect of that application, the person who made the objection in respect of which the application was made or the appeal was brought shall, on the request of that person, be given the opportunity to make representations ex parte.
- (14) Where any information or document is examined or provided under subsection (3), the person by whom it is examined or to whom it is provided or any officer of the Department of National Revenue may make, or cause to be made, one or more copies thereof and any copy purporting to be certified by the Minister of National Revenue or an authorized person to be a copy made pursuant to this subsection is evidence of the nature and content of the original information or document and has the same probative force as the original information or document would have had if it had been proved in the ordinary way.
- (15) No person to whom information or documents have been disclosed or provided pursuant to this subsection or pursuant to an order made under subsection (3) shall further disclose the information or documents except for the purposes of the investigation in relation to which the order was made.
- (16) An order made under subsection (3) may be in Form 47.

(17) In this section, “police officer” means any officer, constable or other person employed for the preservation and maintenance of the public peace. R.S.C. 1985, c. 42 (4th Supp.), s. 2; 1994, c. 13, s. 7.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms “property” and “Attorney General” are defined in s. 2. The terms “designated drug offence” and “judge” are defined in s. 462.3. Section 46 of the Federal Court Act gives that court the power to make rules of court. The meaning of “clear days” (see s. 462.3) is to be determined by referring to s. 27(1) of the Interpretation Act.

This section is incorporated into the Food and Drugs Act, relating to controlled drugs in s. 43.4 and to restricted drugs in s. 51. Section 19.3 of the Narcotic Control Act serves the same purpose in that Act.

SYNOPSIS

This section authorizes ex parte applications in writing by an Attorney General to a judge for an order that the Deputy Minister of National Revenue, or his designate, allow access to a peace officer, or produce information and documents.

The Attorney General must depose by affidavit sworn on his information and belief, or that of his designate, that the information is sought for the purpose of an investigation in relation to a designated drug offence (or certain related offences). The Attorney General must also identify the person in relation to whom the information or documents are required, as well as the type of information sought, and set out the facts relied upon to justify the belief on reasonable grounds that the person has committed or benefited from the offence. Finally, the Attorney General must state that the information or documents are likely to be of substantial value.

In determining whether to grant the order the judge shall consider the facts attested to in the affidavit, the public interest and the likely benefit to the investigation.

Where an order is issued, it may be subject to such terms as the judge considers advisable in the public interest. The order shall also set out the period of its validity (commencing seven days after service), and shall provide for service in some manner on the person to whom it is addressed.

The section further provides for objection by the Minister of National Revenue or his/her designate to the disclosure of information and for extension of time to comply, and for certain appeals.

Where information or documents are examined or provided, they may be copied. Copies certified by the Minister of National Revenue may be used in evidence. No person to whom information or documents have been disclosed or provided can make further disclosure except for the purpose of the particular investigation.

Specific Rules of Forfeiture

---

SPECIFIC FORFEITURE PROVISIONS UNAFFECTED BY THIS PART / Priority for restitution to victims of crime.

462.49. (1) This Part does not affect the operation of any other provision of this or any other Act of Parliament respecting the forfeiture of property.

(2) The property of an offender may be used to satisfy the operation of a provision of this or any other Act of Parliament respecting the forfeiture of property only to the extent that it is not required to satisfy the operation of any other provision of this or any other Act of Parliament respecting the restitution or compensation of persons affected by the commission of offences. R.S.C. 1985, c. 42 (4th Supp.), s. 2.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term “property” is defined in s. 2. Provisions regarding restitution of property are to be found in s. 491.1 and those regarding compensation to victims of crime are in ss. 725, 726 and 727 to 727.9.

This section is incorporated into the Food and Drugs Act relating to controlled drugs in s. 43.4 and to restricted drugs in s. 51. Section 19.3 of the Narcotic Control Act serves the same purpose in that Act.

SYNOPSIS

This section clarifies that this Part does not affect the operation of other forfeiture provisions in the Code or in any other Act of Parliament. It also provides that the property of an offender may be used to satisfy such other forfeiture provisions only to the extent not required to satisfy orders for restitution or compensation of victims of crime made pursuant to federal enactment.

RegulationsREGULATIONS.

462.5. The Attorney General may make regulations governing the manner of disposing of or otherwise dealing with, in accordance with the law, property forfeited under this Part. R.S.C. 1985, c. 42 (4th Supp.), s. 2.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms “property” and “Attorney General” are defined in s. 2.

This section is incorporated into the Food and Drugs Act, relating to controlled drugs in s. 43.4 and restricted drugs in s. 51. Section 19.3 of the Narcotic Control Act serves the same purpose in that Act.

Part XIII / ATTEMPTS – CONSPIRACIES – ACCESSORIES*ATTEMPTS, ACCESSORIES.

463. Except where otherwise expressly provided by law, the following provisions apply in respect of persons who attempt to commit or are accessories after the fact to the commission of offences:

- (a) every one who attempts to commit or is an accessory after the fact to the commission of an indictable offence for which, on conviction, an accused is liable to be sentenced to death or to imprisonment for life is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding fourteen years;
- (b) every one who attempts to commit or is an accessory after the fact to the commission of an indictable offence for which, on conviction, an accused is liable to imprisonment for fourteen years or less is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term that is one-half of the longest term to which a person who is guilty of that offence is liable;
- (c) every one who attempts to commit or is an accessory after the fact to the commission of an offence punishable on summary conviction is guilty of an offence punishable on summary conviction; and
- (d) every one who attempts to commit or is an accessory after the fact to the commission of an offence for which the offender may be prosecuted by indictment or for which he is punishable on summary conviction
  - (i) is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not

- exceeding a term that is one-half of the longest term to which a person who is guilty of that offence is liable, or
- (ii) is guilty of an offence punishable on summary conviction. R.S., c. C-34, s. 421; R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 59.

CROSS-REFERENCES

Attempt is defined in s. 24. Accessory after the fact is defined in s. 23. Also see s. 23.1.

The offence of attempted murder is punishable under s. 239, of accessory after the fact to murder under s. 240. As to mode of trial for these offences, see the cross-references under those sections. Note that where the substantive offence, for example theft of goods of a value not exceeding $1,000, is within the absolute jurisdiction of a provincial court judge by virtue of s. 553, then an attempt to commit or being an accessory after the fact to the commission of the offence is, by virtue of s. 553(b), also within the absolute jurisdiction of the provincial court judge. For notes concerning the operation of that section as it applies to the particular offence, see the cross-references under the section creating the substantive offence.

Similarly, for other offences, the rights of election and mode of trial generally follow the substantive offence and therefore see notes under the section creating the substantive offence. Note however that attempted murder, unlike murder, is not within the exclusive jurisdiction of the superior court under s. 469.

See s. 7 enacting territorial jurisdictional rules respecting offences committed on aircraft, offences in relation to nuclear material, attempt to commit or being an accessory after the fact to the offence in s. 269.1 (torture), war crimes and crimes against humanity.

Under s. 586, no count that alleges an attempt by fraudulent means is insufficient by reason only that it does not set out in detail the nature of the fraudulent means. Section 587(1) however gives the court power to order that further particulars be provided of the alleged attempt by fraudulent means.

SYNOPSIS

This section sets out a general scheme of punishment for attempting to commit, or being an accessory after the fact, to the commission of all offences which are not otherwise expressly dealt with by law.

Paragraph (a) provides that a person who attempts to commit or is an accessory after the fact to the commission of an indictable offence which carries a maximum punishment of life imprisonment, is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to a term of imprisonment not exceeding 14 years.

Paragraph (b) provides that a person who attempts to commit, or is an accessory after the fact to the commission of an indictable offence which carries a maximum term of 14 years' imprisonment or less, is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding one-half the maximum punishment set out for the actual commission of that offence.

Paragraph (c) provides that any person who attempts to commit, or is an accessory after the fact to the commission of a summary conviction offence is also guilty of a summary conviction offence.

Paragraph (d) states that any person who attempts to commit, or is an accessory after the fact to the commission of a hybrid offence is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to a term of imprisonment that is half the maximum provided for the actual commission of the offence, or is guilty of a summary conviction offence.

COUNSELLING OFFENCE THAT IS NOT COMMITTED.

464. Except where otherwise expressly provided by law, the following provisions apply in respect of persons who counsel other persons to commit offences, namely,

- (a) every one who counsels another person to commit an indictable offence is, if the offence is not committed, guilty of an indictable offence and liable to the same punishment to which a person who attempts to commit that offence is liable; and

- (b) every one who counsels another person to commit an offence punishable on summary conviction is, if the offence is not committed, guilty of an offence punishable on summary conviction. R.S., c. C-34, s. 422; R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 60.

CROSS-REFERENCES

“Counsel” is defined in s. 22(3). The liability of a person who counsels commission of an offence and an offence is committed is defined in s. 22(1) and (2). Punishment for attempt to commit an offence is set out in s. 463 with the exception of attempted murder (s. 239) and thus see cross-references under s. 463. Note that where the substantive offence, for example theft of goods of a value not exceeding $1000, is within the absolute jurisdiction of a provincial court judge by virtue of s. 553, then counselling the offence is by virtue of s. 553(b) also within the absolute jurisdiction of the provincial court judge. Presumably, that provision would also apply to counselling an offence listed in s. 553 which is not committed. For counselling all other indictable offences which are not committed, the accused would have an election as to mode of trial under s. 536(2). For the offence in para. (b), the trial of the offence is conducted by a summary conviction court pursuant to Part XXVII. The limitation period is set out in s. 786(2).

See s. 7 enacting special territorial jurisdictional rules respecting offences committed on aircraft, offences in relation to nuclear material, counselling the offence in s. 269.1 (torture), war crimes and crimes against humanity.

SYNOPSIS

This section makes it an offence to counsel another person to commit an offence, where that offence is not committed.

Paragraph (a) states that every one who counsels another person to commit an indictable offence, provided that the offence is not committed, is him/herself guilty of an indictable offence and liable to the same punishment as would be imposed for an attempt to commit that offence.

Paragraph (b) likewise makes it a summary conviction offence to counsel another person to commit an offence punishable on summary conviction, given that the offence is not committed.

ANNOTATIONS

The accused was properly convicted of procuring the death of his wife where he accepted the offer of an undercover police officer posing as a contract killer and agreed to pay the officer for the killing. Further, although the officer had no intention of carrying out the plan and the accused's acts had no influence on the officer's conduct or state of mind, the accused was properly convicted of the full offence under this section rather than merely an attempt: R. v. Glubisz (1979), 47 C.C.C. (2d) 232, 9 C.R. (3d) 300 (B.C.C.A.). Similarly, R. v. Walia (No. 1) (1975), 9 C.R. (3d) 293 (B.C.C.A.).

A person may be convicted of this offence although the person counselled would only be a party to the offence if it were committed: Re Meikle and The Queen (1983), 9 C.C.C. (3d) 91 (Ont. H.C.J.).

“Procure” means to instigate, persuade or solicit. The offence is complete when the solicitation or incitement occurs even though it is immediately rejected by the person solicited and it is no defence to the charge that the accused subsequently renounces the criminal purpose: R. v. Gonzague (1983), 4 C.C.C. (3d) 505, 34 C.R. (3d) 169 (Ont. C.A.).

CONSPIRACY / Conspiracy to commit offences / Idem / Jurisdiction / Appearance of accused at trial / here previously tried outside Canada.

465. (1) Except where otherwise expressly provided by law, the following provisions apply in respect of conspiracy:

- (a) every one who conspires with any one to commit murder or to cause another person to be murdered, whether in Canada or not, is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to a maximum term of imprisonment for life;
- (b) every one who conspires with any one to prosecute a person for an alleged offence, knowing that he did not commit that offence, is guilty of an indictable offence and liable
  - (i) to imprisonment for a term not exceeding ten years, if the alleged offence is one for which, on conviction, that person would be liable to be sentenced to death or to imprisonment for life or for a term not exceeding fourteen years, or
  - (ii) to imprisonment for a term not exceeding five years, if the alleged offence is one for which, on conviction, that person would be liable to imprisonment for less than fourteen years; and
- (c) every one who conspires with any one to commit an indictable offence not provided for in paragraph (a) or (b) is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to the same punishment as that to which an accused who is guilty of that offence would, on conviction, be liable; and
- (d) every one who conspires with any one to commit an offence punishable on summary conviction is guilty of an offence punishable on summary conviction.

(2) [Repealed. R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 61(3).]

(3) Every one who, while in Canada, conspires with any one to do anything referred to in subsection (1) in a place outside Canada that is an offence under the laws of that place shall be deemed to have conspired to do that thing in Canada.

(4) Every one who, while in a place outside Canada, conspires with any one to do anything referred to in subsection (1) in Canada shall be deemed to have conspired in Canada to do that thing.

(5) Where a person is alleged to have conspired to do anything that is an offence by virtue of subsection (3) or (4), proceedings in respect of that offence may, whether or not that person is in Canada, be commenced in any territorial division in Canada, and the accused may be tried and punished in respect of that offence in the same manner as if the offence had been committed in that territorial division.

(6) For greater certainty, the provisions of this Act relating to

- (a) requirements that an accused appear at and be present during proceedings, and
  - (b) the exceptions to those requirements,
- apply to proceedings commenced in any territorial division pursuant to subsection (5).

(7) Where a person is alleged to have conspired to do anything that is an offence by virtue of subsection (3) or (4) and that person has been tried and dealt with outside Canada in respect of the offence in such a manner that, if the person had been tried and dealt with in Canada, he would be able to plead autrefois acquit, autrefois convict or pardon, the person shall be deemed to have been so tried and dealt with in Canada. R.S., c. C-34, s. 423; 1974-75-76, c. 93, s. 36; 1980-81-82-83, c. 125, s. 23; R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 61.

CROSS-REFERENCES

Trial of the offence of conspiracy to commit the offences listed in s. 469(a), namely: s. 47, treason; s. 49, alarming Her Majesty; s. 51, intimidating Parliament or a legislature; s. 53, inciting to mutiny; s. 61, seditious offences; s. 74, piracy; s. 75, piratical acts; s. 235, murder, is by the superior court of criminal jurisdiction (defined in s. 2) by virtue of ss. 468 and 469. By virtue of s. 522, only a judge of the superior court of criminal jurisdiction may release an accused charged with any of those offences. For the offence described in subsec. (1)(b), the accused has his election as to mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2) and release is determined by s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by the officer in charge pursuant to s. 498 for the offence described in para. (b)(ii). For conspiracy to commit all other indictable offences, including the indictable offences within the absolute jurisdiction of a provincial court judge under s. 553, the accused has his election as to mode of trial under s. 536(2). Release pending trial is determined by s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by the officer in charge pursuant to s. 498 where the substantive offence is punishable by five years imprisonment or less.

For conspiracy to commit a summary conviction offence (para. (d)) then the proceedings are conducted by a summary conviction court pursuant to Part XXVII. The punishment is then as set out in s. 787 [although see s. 719(b) where the accused is a corporation] and the limitation period is set out in s. 786(2). Release pending trial is determined under s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by a peace officer under s. 496, 497 or by the officer in charge under s. 498.

In addition to the special jurisdictional rules in subsecs. (3) to (6), see s. 7 respecting offences committed on aircraft, offences in relation to nuclear material, conspiracy to commit the offence in s. 269.1 (torture), war crimes and crimes against humanity.

The procedure respecting the pleas of autrefois is found in ss. 607 to 610.

Under s. 586, no count that alleges a conspiracy by fraudulent means is insufficient by reason only that it does not set out in detail the nature of the fraudulent means. Section 587(1), however, gives the court power to order that further particulars be provided of the alleged conspiracy by fraudulent means.

See s. 467, a saving provision in respect of refusing to work and trade combinations.

SYNOPSIS

This section sets out various offences of conspiracy and provides for punishment upon conviction for each of these offences.

Subsection (1) states that the provisions contained therein apply except where otherwise expressly provided by law.

Subsection (1)(a) provides that any person who conspires with another person to commit murder anywhere is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to a maximum term of life imprisonment.

Subsection (1)(b) sets out the punishments applied to a person who is guilty of conspiring to prosecute another person for an alleged offence, knowing that that person did not commit the offence.

Subsection (1)(c) and (d) described the offences of conspiracy to commit either an indictable or a summary conviction offence and the punishment upon conviction for these offences.

Subsection (3) states that any person who, while in Canada, conspires to do anything described in subsec. (1) in a place outside Canada that is against the law in that place is deemed to have committed the conspiracy in Canada.

Subsection (4) provides that a person who conspires to do anything referred to in subsec. (1) in Canada while outside Canada is deemed to have committed the offence of conspiracy in Canada.

Subsection (5) states that proceedings against any person under subsecs. (3) or (4) may be commenced anywhere in Canada and that the accused may be tried and punished in the same manner as if the offence had been committed in that location.

Subsection (6) clarifies that, subject to certain exceptions the accused must appear and be present during proceedings commenced under subsec. (5).

Subsection (7) states that if a person has been tried and dealt with outside Canada in relation to offences under subsecs. (3) and (4), in such a manner that would, in Canada, give rise to the pleas of autrefois acquit, autrefois convict, or pardon, the person shall be deemed to have been so tried and dealt with in Canada.

ANNOTATIONS

Meaning of conspiracy – The essential elements of a conspiracy are an agreement by two or more persons to commit a criminal offence, or to achieve a lawful object by commission of a criminal offence; an intention by two or more persons to agree, and an intention to put this common design into effect. It is not necessary that there be proof of any overt act in furtherance of the conspiracy, to complete the crime. Where there are alleged to be only two conspirators and one of them had no intention of carrying out the common design, then there is no proof of a conspiracy: R. v. O'Brien (1954), 110 C.C.C. 1, [1954] S.C.R. 666, 19 C.R. 371 (3:2).

On the trial of a charge contrary to para. (1)(c) of conspiracy to commit a specified indictable offence the Crown must establish an intention by the accused to enter into an agreement to commit that offence. Mere recklessness with respect to the subject of the agreement is not sufficient where the evidence indicates that a number of courses of actions were being considered only some of which were illegal: R. v. Lessard (1982), 10 C.C.C. (3d) 61 (Que. C.A.).

Aiding and abetting pursuant to a common intent and design in the commission of a substantive offence is not necessarily the same thing as conspiring to commit the same offence, and accordingly an acquittal of the conspiracy is not inconsistent with a conviction on the substantive count: Koury v. The Queen, [1964] 2 C.C.C. 97, 42 C.R. 210 (S.C.C.) (6:3).

It was held in R. v. Cotroni; Papalia v. The Queen (1979), 45 C.C.C. (2d) 1, 93 D.L.R. (3d) 161, 7 C.R. (3d) 185 (S.C.C.) (7:0), that to have a conspiracy it was essential that there be an agreement between the co-conspirators, and that there must be a common purpose of a single enterprise. In this case although there was in the most general terms an adventure with a common object, namely to possess certain extorted funds, there was no general agreement, rather, two competing and mutually exclusive objects: the agreement of one group of conspirators being to relieve the others of the extorted funds. There were therefore two separate conspiracies revealed by the evidence and since only one took place in Ontario, the venue of the trial, it was to be assumed that it was this conspiracy which was embraced by the indictment.

Conspiracy rests in the joint decision of two or more persons to pursue a common object. In the absence of such common object, mutual conduct which involves the commission of one or more offences does not render those involved liable as conspirators. Thus, before an accused could be convicted of conspiracy to commit fraud arising out of a scheme involving submission of false refund claims by a co-worker, in which the accused participated on one occasion only, there must be evidence that the accused was not only aware of the general scheme but had made its object her own and agreed to work with her co-worker in achieving that object: R. v. Cebulak (1988), 46 C.C.C. (3d) 437 (Ont. H.C.J.).

Party to conspiracy – To constitute a conspiracy the conspirators must not only agree but must agree to do something and mere knowledge of, discussion of or passive acquiescence in a plan of criminal conduct is not of itself sufficient. However, an accused can become a party to the offence of conspiracy (as opposed to a participant in the conspiracy) by virtue of s. 21 if, for example, at any time prior to the attainment of the conspiracy's object he abetted or encouraged any of the conspirators to pursue its object: R. v. McNamara et al. (No. 1) (1981), 56 C.C.C. (2d) 193 (Ont. C.A.), at pp. 452-4.

Conspiracy between spouses – A husband and wife cannot be found guilty of conspiring together as in law they are considered as one person: Kowbel v. The Queen (1954), 110 C.C.C. 47, 18 C.R. 380 (S.C.C.) (4:1).

Effect of acquittal of co-conspirator or where co-conspirator cannot be convicted – Where two alleged co-conspirators are tried separately the acquittal of one does not necessarily invalidate the conviction of the other. Moreover, where the evidence against one of two conspirators is substantially stronger the better course is to direct separate trials, particularly when a damaging statement admissible only against the one is to be tendered by the Crown. Of course when substantially the same evidence is admissible against jointly-tried conspirators as a matter of logic (although not any imperative rule of law) both should be either convicted or acquitted: Guimond v. The Queen (1979), 44 C.C.C. (2d) 481, 26 N.R. 91 (S.C.C.) (7:2).

Moreover, even where one of the two parties to the agreement cannot, as a matter of law, be convicted of the conspiracy, such as the prostitute on a charge of conspiracy to live on the avails of her prostitution, the other person may be convicted of conspiracy: R. v. Murphy and Bieneck (1981), 60 C.C.C. (2d) 1, 21 C.R. (3d) 39 (Alta. C.A.).

Proof of conspiracy alleged – Although the gravamen of the offence of conspiracy to import narcotics is the agreement to import narcotics rather than a particular narcotic, where the Crown has chosen to particularize the narcotic, in this case heroin, the Crown was required to prove that offence and not some other conspiracy. To allow the Crown to prove some other offence characterized by different particulars would be to undermine the purpose of providing particulars: that purpose is to permit the accused to be reasonably informed of the transaction alleged against him, thus giving him the possibility of a full defence and a fair trial. In this case, it was not appropriate to amend the indictment on appeal to remove reference to the term “heroin”. No such amendment was sought at trial and the trial had proceeded originally on the basis that the Crown must prove a conspiracy relating to heroin and, on this basis, one of the accused took the stand and testified that he was only involved in a conspiracy relating to cocaine. It would be unfair and prejudicial to the accused after that course of events to permit an amendment fundamentally and retroactively changing the nature of what the Crown must prove: R. v. Saunders (1990), 56 C.C.C. (3d) 220, 108 N.R. 234, [1990] 1 S.C.R. 1020, 77 C.R. (3d) 397.

Conspiracy having more than one object – An agreement to commit a number of indictable offences is only one conspiracy transaction: R. v. Krueger, [1966] 3 C.C.C. 127, 55 W.W.R. 624 (Sask.C.A.) and R. v. Addison ex p. Mooney, [1970] 1 C.C.C. 127, [1969] 2 O.R. 674 (C.A.).

A single conspiracy may have more than one illegal object, and it is proper to allege in one count a conspiracy to commit several crimes. If the Crown proves a conspiracy to do any of the prohibited acts alleged in the indictment as the objects of the conspiracy then that is sufficient to support a conviction. In fact, where there is but one agreement and not separate agreements as to the different unlawful objects there can be only one conviction. On the other hand, where the prosecution proves only that some of those accused had conspired with one of their number for their own purposes no common purpose such as that alleged has been established. However, where the evidence establishes the conspiracy alleged against two or more accused or against one accused and an unknown person, where the indictment alleges that the accused conspired together with persons unknown, it is immaterial that the evidence also discloses another wider conspiracy to which the accused or some of them were also parties: R. v. Paterson, Ackworth and Kovach (1985), 18 C.C.C. (3d) 137, 44 C.R. (2d) 150 (Ont. C.A.), affd 39 C.C.C. (3d) 575, 60 C.R. (3d) 107 (S.C.C.) (7:0).

Indictments charging conspiracy may raise problems as to whether a conspiracy count has charged the accused with two or more conspiracies, which raises an issue of duplicity. In the alternative, the count may charge only one conspiracy but the proof at trial may demonstrate that there was more than one conspiracy. In the latter case, the issue is whether the Crown has proved the conspiracy charged despite the evidence of a second conspiracy. In determining this issue, the court will have regard to the wording of the indictment and may also look to the opening of the Crown. In order to find that a specific conspiracy lies within the scope of the indictment, it is sufficient if the evidence adduced demonstrates that the conspiracy proven included some of the accused; established that it occurred at some time within the time frame alleged in the indictment; and had as its object the type of crime alleged: R. v. Douglas (1991), 63 C.C.C. (3d) 29, [1991] 1 S.C.R. 301, 3 C.R. (4th) 246 (5:0).

Multiple convictions ["Kienapple rule"] – The doctrine in Kienapple v. The Queen (1974), 15 C.C.C. (2d) 524, 26 C.R.N.S. 1 (S.C.C.) which precludes multiple convictions for the same delict does not prevent a conviction for conspiracy and for a substantive offence which also formed some of the evidence relied upon by the Crown in proof of the conspiracy: Sheppe v. The Queen (1980), 51 C.C.C. (2d) 481, [1980] 2 S.C.R. 22, 15 C.R. (3d) 381 (7:0).

Conspiracy and attempt – It was held in R. v. Dungey (1979), 51 C.C.C. (2d) 86 (Ont. C.A.) that there is no offence known to law of attempt to conspire to commit a further substantive offence such as fraud. The Court left open the question whether it would be possible to have an attempted conspiracy where the conspiracy is the substantive offence.

Conspiracy to commit the offence contrary to s. 139(2) of attempting to obstruct justice is an offence known to law: R. v. May (1984), 13 C.C.C. (3d) 257 (Ont. C.A.), leave to appeal to S.C.C. refused December 20, 1984.

Effect of withdrawal from conspiracy – It is no defence that an accused having agreed to carry out the unlawful act with the intention to carry out the common design later withdraws from the conspiracy, since the offence is already complete: R. v. O'Brien, supra.

Co-conspirator's exception to hearsay rule – The case of R. v. Baron and Wertman (1976), 31 C.C.C. (2d) 525, 73 D.L.R. (3d) 213 (Ont. C.A.) contains a detailed review of the law of evidence which permits evidence of the acts and declarations of one conspirator done in furtherance of the conspiracy to be admitted against other co-conspirators. Martin, J.A., for the Court suggests that the following procedure be followed:

1. At the end of the whole case the trial Judge must decide as a matter of law, whether there is any admissible evidence against an accused from his own acts and declarations, that he is a participant in the conspiracy charged.
2. If there is no evidence directly admissible against an accused connecting him with the conspiracy the trial Judge must direct the jury to acquit that accused.
3. If the trial Judge concludes that there is some evidence admissible directly against an accused that he was a party to the conspiracy, he will instruct the jury that they must first find from evidence admissible directly against an accused (that is by evidence other than the acts and declarations of alleged co-conspirators) that he was a party to the conspiracy charged. The trial Judge will then instruct the jury that if they find from such evidence that the accused was a party to the conspiracy the acts and declarations of alleged co-conspirators in furtherance of the conspiracy may be used as evidence against him. . .
4. As a general rule, it would be desirable for the trial Judge to then refer the jury to the principal evidence admissible directly against each accused from which they may find that such accused was a party to the conspiracy but the jury should be instructed that it is for them to say if the evidence has this effect.
5. Finally, he must instruct the jury that on the whole of the evidence they must be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the accused was a member of the conspiracy.

In R. v. Filiault and Kane (1981), 63 C.C.C. (2d) 321 (Ont. C.A.), affd 15 C.C.C. (3d) 352n, [1984] 1 S.C.R. 389 (7:0) it was held that in determining whether the condition in rule (1), supra, was met the trial Judge is entitled to view the accused's own acts and declarations against the picture provided by the acts of the alleged co-conspirators. The Judge is not required to view the accused's acts and declarations in isolation, divorced from the context in which they occurred.

Hearsay evidence is inadmissible on the initial determination whether the alleged conspiracy or alleged common design existed: R. v. Jamieson (1989), 48 C.C.C. (3d) 287, 90 N.S.R. (2d) 164 (C.A.).

In charging the jury on the applicability of the co-conspirator's exception to the hearsay rule the trial Judge should instruct them to consider whether on all the evidence they are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the conspiracy charged in the indictment existed. If they conclude that a conspiracy as alleged did exist, they must then review the evidence and decide whether, on the basis of the evidence directly received against the accused, a probability is raised that he was a member of the conspiracy. If this conclusion is reached, they then become entitled to apply the hearsay exception and consider evidence of the acts and declarations performed and made by the co-conspirators in furtherance of the objects of the conspiracy as evidence against the accused on the issue of his guilt. They should be told, however, that the ultimate determination of guilt is for them alone and that the mere fact that they have found sufficient evidence directly admissible against the accused to enable them to consider his participation in the conspiracy probable, and to apply the hearsay exception, does not make a conviction automatic: R. v. Carter (1982), 67 C.C.C. (2d) 568, 31 C.R. (3d) 97, [1982] 1 S.C.R. 938 (5:0).

Conspiracy to commit offence outside Canada [subsec. (3)] – In Gunn v. The Queen (1982), 66 C.C.C. (2d) 294, 27 C.R. (3d) 120, [1982] 1 S.C.R. 522, the Supreme Court of Canada, having allowed the accused's appeal from the decision of the Manitoba Court of Appeal (1980), 54 C.C.C. (2d) 163, 4 Man. R. (2d) 269 sub nom. R. v. Apaya and Gunn on other grounds, did not find it necessary to give any direction in detail as to how the charge of conspiracy involving breach of foreign criminal law as envisaged by this subsection should be framed. However, it was held that the statutory fiction of a conspiracy in Canada in violation of foreign law can only become operative if a breach of the foreign law is charged.

And in R. v. Baldini and Gullekson (1984), 39 C.R. (3d) 43, 31 Alta. L.R. (2d) 69 (C.A.), the court considered that the charge should also make specific reference to subsec. (3).

Although the accused had agreed to supply narcotics to an undercover police officer in the United States, there was a substantial link between the offence alleged and Canada. Thus, inter alia, the accused were in Canada for the negotiations with the officer and when the agreement was finally made. Accordingly, there was no need for the Crown to charge the accused under subsec. (3), but could rely on the general conspiracy provisions in subsec. (1)(c): R. v. Douglas (1989), 51 C.C.C.(3d) 129, 72 C.R. (3d) 309 (Ont. C.A.).

The accused could properly be convicted of conspiracy to traffic in narcotics without reference to subsec. (3) where the evidence showed that they agreed in Canada to sell or offered to sell narcotics to a third person, even if the deal was to be completed in the United States. Under the Narcotic Control Act, a simple offer to sell can constitute trafficking and the absence of delivery of the drug or receipt of the proceeds in Canada is not relevant: R. v. Rowbotham; R. v. Roblin (1992), 76 C.C.C. (3d) 542 (Ont. C.A.).

Conspiracy outside Canada to commit offence in Canada [subsec. (4)] – Where the indictment alleges that the conspiracy actually took place in Canada it is not open to the Crown to rely on the provisions of subsec. (4) to prove all the components of the charge. If the agreement took place wholly outside Canada the indictment must so allege: R. v. Dass (1979), 47 C.C.C. (2d) 194, 8 C.R. (3d) 224 (Man. C.A.), leave to appeal to S.C.C. refused 30 N.R. 609n, 4 Man. R. (2d) 86n.

Territorial jurisdiction [subsec. (5)] – An offence is “an offence by virtue of subsection ... (4)” although it could also be tried in Canada, albeit in another province, at common law. Subsection (4) is not restricted to cases which would not have been offences against Canadian law before the passage of that provision: R. v. Lai and Lau (1985), 24 C.C.C. (3d) 237 (B.C.C.A.).

CONSPIRACY IN RESTRAINT OF TRADE / Trade union, exception.

466. (1) A conspiracy in restraint of trade is an agreement between two or more persons to do or to procure to be done any unlawful act in restraint of trade.

(2) The purposes of a trade union are not, by reason only that they are in restraint of trade, unlawful within the meaning of subsection (1). R.S., c. C-34, s. 424.

CROSS-REFERENCES

Conspiracy in restraint of trade is a common law offence. As this section does not create an offence and with the repeal of s. 465(2) (common law conspiracy), it is entirely possible that the offence of conspiracy in restraint of trade can no longer be charged nor punished and that resort must be had to the substantive offences in other parts of the Code such as ss. 422 to 425 or to the offences under Part VI of the Competition Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. C-34.

SYNOPSIS

This section provides a definition of conspiracy in restraint of trade.

Subsection (1) states that such a conspiracy is an agreement between two or more persons to do, or arrange to have done, any unlawful act in restraint of trade.

Subsection (2) specifically provides that a trade union does not commit an offence under this section only by reason of the fact that its purposes are in restraint of trade.

SAVING / Definition of "trade combination".

467. (1) No person shall be convicted of the offence of conspiracy by reason only that he

(a) refuses to work with a workman or for an employer; or

(b) does any act or causes any act to be done for the purpose of a trade combination, unless that act is an offence expressly punishable by law.

(2) In this section, "trade combination" means any combination between masters or workmen or other persons for the purpose of regulating or altering the relations between masters or workmen, or the conduct of a master or workman in or in respect of his business, employment or contract of employment or service. R.S., c. C-34, s. 425.

CROSS-REFERENCES

These provisions would appear to apply to any conspiracy offence, not just those punishable under s. 465. Thus see, for example, s. 425(c).

SYNOPSIS

This section provides an exception to the general offence of conspiracy.

Subsection (1) states that no person shall be convicted of conspiracy by reason only that he refuses to work with a workman or for an employer, or that he does any lawful act for the purpose of trade combination.

Subsection (2) defines the term "trade combination" for the purposes of subsec. (1).

Part XIV / JURISDICTION

General

SUPERIOR COURT OF CRIMINAL JURISDICTION.

468. Every superior court of criminal jurisdiction has jurisdiction to try any indictable offence. R.S., c. C-34, s. 426.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term “superior court of criminal jurisdiction” is defined in s. 2.

Note on mode of trial – The scheme of the Criminal Code is to classify offences as purely indictable (e.g., robbery, s. 344), purely summary (e.g., soliciting, s. 213) or hybrid, i.e., the prosecution may elect whether to proceed by way of summary conviction or by indictment (e.g., assault, s. 266). The effect of s. 468 is that the superior court of criminal jurisdiction may try any purely indictable offence or any hybrid offence where the prosecution elects to proceed by way of indictment. Other courts of criminal jurisdiction (defined in s. 2) may, however, try indictable offences except those offences listed in s. 469 (e.g., murder, s. 235). The offences listed in s. 469 may only be tried by the superior court of criminal jurisdiction with a jury subject to a re-election in conformity with s. 473. Indictable offences not listed in s. 469 fall into two categories. For the majority of the indictable offences not listed in s. 469, the accused may elect his mode of trial as set out in s. 536(2) and, within limits, may change his election (see, e.g., s. 561). While the Attorney General is given a narrow discretion to override this election and require a jury trial under s. 568 in the circumstances defined therein and, in addition, a provincial court judge has a discretion to override or not record an accused’s election for trial by provincial court judge and hold a preliminary inquiry (see, for example, ss. 555 and 567), the thrust of the provisions is to give the accused the right to determine the manner of trial. [In those provinces which still maintain two levels of courts in addition to the provincial court, it is in the discretion of the Crown whether to place the indictment in the superior court or the other court, however described, e.g., county court, where the accused elects trial other than by provincial court judge.] The other group of offences are those offences listed in s. 553 (e.g., keeping common bawdy house, s. 210(1)) which fall within the absolute jurisdiction of a provincial court judge, meaning that the accused does not have a normal election as to the mode of trial under s. 536(2). Nevertheless, the other courts with jurisdiction to try indictable offences have jurisdiction to try the offences listed in s. 553, if the provincial court judge elects not to try the offence and requires that the case proceed by way of preliminary inquiry pursuant to s. 555(1), or in the course of the trial it is disclosed that, in fact, the offence is not one over which the provincial court judge has absolute jurisdiction, in which case, the accused must then be put to his election under s. 536(2). [For example, a charge of theft of goods of a value not exceeding $1,000 where the evidence discloses that the value of the goods exceeds $1,000.]

For all summary conviction offences, meaning purely summary conviction or hybrid offences, where the prosecution elects to proceed by way of summary conviction, only the summary conviction court (defined in s. 785) may try the accused. The procedure for trial of summary conviction offences generally resembles trial of an indictable offence by a provincial court judge but that procedure, including special rights of appeal, is set out in Part XXVII.

ANNOTATIONS

A superior court of criminal jurisdiction has the right to try those offences within the absolute jurisdiction of a provincial court judge: R. v. Holliday (1973), 12 C.C.C. (2d) 56, [1973] 5 W.W.R.363 (Alta.S.C.App.Div.).

COURT OF CRIMINAL JURISDICTION / Accessories / Corrupting justice / Attempts / Conspiracy.

469. Every court of criminal jurisdiction has jurisdiction to try an indictable offence other than

- (a) an offence under any of the following sections:
  - (i) section 47 (treason),
  - (ii) section 49 (alarming Her Majesty),
  - (iii) section 51 (intimidating Parliament or a legislature),
  - (iv) section 53 (inciting to mutiny),
  - (v) section 61 (seditious offences),
  - (vi) section 74 (piracy),
  - (vii) section 75 (piratical acts), or
  - (viii) section 235 (murder);

- (b) the offence of being an accessory after the fact to high treason or treason or murder;
- (c) an offence under section 119 (bribery) by the holder of a judicial office;
- (d) the offence of attempting to commit any offence mentioned in subparagraphs (a)(i) to (vii); or
- (e) the offence of conspiring to commit any offence mentioned in paragraph (a). R.S., c. C-34, s. 427; 1972, c. 13, s. 33; 1974-75-76, c. 93, s. 37, c. 105, s. 29; R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 62.

CROSS-REFERENCES

Note that s. 3 provides that the descriptions in parenthesis after the section number are inserted for convenience of reference only and are no part of the provision.

The term "court of criminal jurisdiction" is defined in s. 2. Only the superior court of criminal jurisdiction has jurisdiction to try the offences listed in this section. As well, only a judge of the superior court of criminal jurisdiction may release an accused pending trial for these offences, by virtue of s. 522. The ordinary mode of trial for these offences is by virtue of the combined effect of ss. 468 and 471, by way of jury. However, provision is made for re-election for trial by judge alone under s. 473.

As to mode of trial generally, see the note under s. 468.

ANNOTATIONS

Neither the superior Court of criminal jurisdiction nor the Court of criminal jurisdiction have jurisdiction to try a summary conviction offence ab initio: R. v. Rahim (1977), 36 C.C.C. (2d) 533 (Ont. Co. Ct.).

JURISDICTION OVER PERSON.

470. Subject to this Act, every superior court of criminal jurisdiction and every court of criminal jurisdiction that has power to try an indictable offence is competent to try an accused for that offence

- (a) if the accused is found, is arrested or is in custody within the territorial jurisdiction of the court; or
- (b) if the accused has been ordered to be tried by
  - (i) that court, or
  - (ii) any other court, the jurisdiction of which has by lawful authority been transferred to that court. R.S., c. C-34, s. 428; R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 101(3).

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms "superior court of criminal jurisdiction" and "court of criminal jurisdiction" are defined in s. 2. The effect of this section is to overcome the common law rule that a criminal court's jurisdiction to try the accused was strictly local and subject to a statutory exception, e.g., for offences committed at sea, the court had no jurisdiction to try an accused for an offence committed in some other country. In the circumstances set out in this section, the court can try the accused, although the offence was not committed within the territorial division (defined in s. 2), provided that the accused is found, arrested or is in custody within the territorial jurisdiction (defined by provincial legislation) of the court or has been ordered to be tried by that court, e.g., by an order for change of venue under s. 599. [Note that this section deals only with territorial jurisdiction over the person of the accused, some other section must be resorted to to ensure that the information or indictment is also before the court, e.g., as in s. 599(4) where an order for a change of venue is made. An alternative is by laying the information under s. 504.]

In addition to this section, a court may also acquire territorial jurisdiction over an accused by reason of special statutory provisions such as those found in s. 7, s. 465(5), or ss. 477 to 481. Sections 478 and 479 are especially useful in providing that offences committed in a number of different divisions or provinces may, with consent of the Crown, be transferred to the jurisdiction where the accused is for guilty pleas. Further, s. 476 attempts to resolve difficult issues of territorial jurisdiction where an offence is committed near the border of a territorial division, such as on a bridge between two divisions.

As to mode of trial, see the note under s. 468.

SYNOPSIS

This section provides that every superior court of criminal jurisdiction and every court of criminal jurisdiction that has power to try an indictable offence is also competent to try a person for that offence: (a) if the person is physically found within the territorial jurisdiction of the court; or (b) if the person has been ordered to be tried by that court, or any other court, the jurisdiction of which has been lawfully transferred to that court.

ANNOTATIONS

Where proceedings were properly commenced under permissible territorial jurisdiction of a Justice and the accused was committed for trial to a particular Court of criminal jurisdiction that Court has jurisdiction to hear and determine the charges even though the offence was committed in another territorial division within the same province: R. v. McMorris And Francis (1971), 4 C.C.C. (2d) 268, [1971] 3 O.R. 748 (Ont. Co. Ct.).

Where an accused appears and enters a plea the Court before which he appears has jurisdiction by virtue of para. (a) in that the accused is “in custody within the territorial jurisdiction of the Court” notwithstanding the offence was not committed in that territorial division. Alternatively, if an objection is taken to the Court’s jurisdiction and the objection is overruled then the accused has been “ordered to be tried by that Court” within the meaning of para. (b)(i) and the Court by virtue of that section has jurisdiction: R. v. Rice, ex p. Katz and Laviuch et al., [1968] 3 C.C.C. 85, 63 W.W.R. 64 (Man. C.A.).

Where the accused is briefly in custody in the county and appears in the same county for his preliminary hearing he is “in custody” and is “found” in the county for the purposes of this section and the County Court of that county has jurisdiction to try him notwithstanding the offence is not committed in that county. Further, in British Columbia, as the Provincial Court has jurisdiction to hold a preliminary hearing in any part of the province a committal for trial to a County Court of a particular county where the preliminary hearing is held by the Provincial Court Judge will vest that County Court with jurisdiction under para. (b): Re Falkner and The Queen (1977), 37 C.C.C. (2d) 330 (B.C.S.C.), affd 40 C.C.C. (2d) 117 (C.A.).

At common law the accused has a prima facie right to be tried in the county in which the offence was committed and this rule, in the absence of a court-ordered change of venue, continues except as modified by this section. However, the words “is in custody within the territorial jurisdiction of the court” do not give the Court of one county jurisdiction where the accused, arrested in another county where the offence was committed, is merely brought to the former county in custody and then released on bail. If this section were to apply in such circumstances then it would be open to the Crown to select the venue of the trial by simply arranging to have an accused held in custody in the jurisdiction of its choice: R. v. Sarazin and Sarazin (1978), 39 C.C.C. (2d) 131, 3 C.R. (3d) 97 (P.E.I.S.C.).

TRIAL BY JURY COMPULSORY.

471. Except where otherwise expressly provided by law, every accused who is charged with an indictable offence shall be tried by a court composed of a judge and jury. R.S., c. C-34, s. 429.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The Code has, of course, enacted a number of exceptions to the rule set out in this section, generally, but not always conditional on the accused’s consent to some other form of trial. As to mode of trial generally, see the note under s. 468. Also see notes under s. 11(f) of the Charter concerning the constitutional right to a jury trial.

472. [Repealed. R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 63.]

Transitional provision

Note: R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 205, proclaimed in force December 4, 1985, provides as follows:

"205. The Criminal Code, as it read immediately before the coming into force of the repeal of section 429.1 [now s. 472] made by section 63 of this Act, continues to apply to any prosecution in which the information was laid before the coming into force of that amendment."

TRIAL WITHOUT JURY / Joinder of other offences / Withdrawal of consent.

473. (1) Notwithstanding anything in this Act, an accused charged with an offence listed in section 469 may, with the consent of the accused and the Attorney General, be tried without a jury by a judge of a superior court of criminal jurisdiction.

(1.1) Where the consent of the accused and the Attorney General is given in accordance with subsection (1), the judge of the superior court of criminal jurisdiction may order that any offence be tried by that judge in conjunction with the offence listed in section 469.

(2) Notwithstanding anything in this Act, where the consent of an accused and the Attorney General is given in accordance with subsection (1), that consent shall not be withdrawn unless both the accused and the Attorney General agree to the withdrawal. R.S., c. C-34, s. 430; R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 63; 1994, c. 44, s. 30.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms "Attorney General" and "superior court of criminal jurisdiction" are defined in s. 2. Also see the note as to mode of trial under s. 468.

SYNOPSIS

This section describes the circumstances in which a person charged with an offence listed in s. 469 may have a trial without a jury. If the accused and the Attorney General consent, a s. 469 offence may be tried by judge of a superior court of criminal jurisdiction without a jury. Consent given under this section cannot be withdrawn unless both the accused and the Attorney General agree to the withdrawal.

ANNOTATIONS

Where an accused who is represented by counsel consents under this section to be tried on a charge of murder by a Judge alone there is no duty on the Judge to inquire into the accused's understanding of his choice. Specifically no such duty arises merely because the accused is only 16 years of age: R. v. Davis (No. 2) (1977), 35 C.C.C. (2d) 464, [1977] 4 W.W.R. 47 (Alta. S.C., App.Div.).

A Crown Attorney, as agent of the Attorney General, may consent to the re-election under this section. On the other hand, no re-election is required where the jury has not been empanelled and the accused merely intends to plead guilty to the offence charged or an included offence: R. v. Luis (1989), 50 C.C.C. (3d) 398 (Ont. H.C.J.).

It was held in R. v. Turpin (1989), 48 C.C.C. (3d) 8, [1989] 1 S.C.R. 1296, 69 C.R. (3d) 97 (6:0), that s. 11(f) of the Charter confers no constitutional right to be tried by a judge without a jury. The purpose of s. 11(f) is to give an accused the right to a jury trial and to ensure that if a jury trial is not of benefit to the accused, the accused may waive the constitutional right to a jury trial. However, where the Criminal Code requires a jury trial then s. 11(f) gives the accused no right to elect another mode of trial.

In R. v. Cardinal (unreported, January 31, 1996, Alta. Q.B.) [096/075/004-38 pp.], it was held that prosecutorial discretion to refuse to consent to a re-election may be reviewable pursuant to ss. 7 and 11(d) of the Charter.

ADJOURNMENT WHEN NO JURY SUMMONED / Adjournment on instruction of judge.

474. (1) Where the competent authority has determined that a panel of jurors is not to be summoned for a term or sittings of the court for the trial of criminal cases in any territorial division, the clerk of the court may, on the day of the opening of the term or sittings, if a judge is not present to preside over the court, adjourn the court and the business of the court to a subsequent day. R.S., c. C-34, s. 431.

(2) A clerk of the court for the trial of criminal cases in any territorial division may, at any time, on the instructions of the presiding judge or another judge of the court, adjourn the court and the business of the court to a subsequent day. R.S., c. C-34, s. 431; 1994, c. 44, s. 31.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms “territorial division” and “clerk of the court” are defined in s. 2. See s. 763 respecting the accused’s recognizance remaining in force.

SYNOPSIS

This section empowers the clerk of the court, where no judge is present at the opening of the term, to adjourn court proceedings to a subsequent day if the competent authority has determined that a panel of jurors is not to be summoned for a term or sittings of the court. It also provides in subsec. (2) that, on instructions of a judge, the clerk may, at any time, adjourn the court.

ACCUSED ABSCONDING DURING TRIAL / Adverse inference / Accused not entitled to re-opening / Counsel for accused may continue to act.

475. (1) Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act, where an accused, whether or not he is charged jointly with another, absconds during the course of his trial,

- (a) he shall be deemed to have waived his right to be present at his trial, and
- (b) the court may

- (i) continue the trial and proceed to a judgment or verdict and, if it finds the accused guilty, impose a sentence on him in his absence, or

- (ii) if a warrant in Form 7 is issued for the arrest of the accused, adjourn the trial to await his appearance, but where the trial is adjourned pursuant to subparagraph (b)(ii), the court may, at any time, continue the trial if it is satisfied that it is no longer in the interests of justice to await the appearance of the accused.

(2) Where a court continues a trial pursuant to subsection (1), it may draw an inference adverse to the accused from the fact that he has absconded.

(3) Where an accused reappears at his trial that is continuing pursuant to subsection (1), he is not entitled to have any part of the proceedings that was conducted in his absence re-opened unless the court is satisfied that because of exceptional circumstances it is in the interests of justice to re-open the proceedings.

(4) Where an accused has absconded during the course of his trial and the court continues the trial, counsel for the accused is not thereby deprived of any authority he may have to continue to act for the accused in the proceedings. 1974-75-76, c. 93, s. 39.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term "counsel" is defined in s. 2. A similar provision respecting an accused who absconds in the course of his preliminary inquiry is found in s. 544 and in the course of his summary conviction trial in s. 803(2). As well, an accused who fails to appear for his trial or remain at his trial may lose his right to trial by jury by virtue of s. 598.

Section 650 provides for other circumstances in which an accused may be absent from the trial.

SYNOPSIS

This section deals with the situation where an accused person absconds during the course of a trial.

Subsection (1) provides that an absconding accused, whether or not he is charged jointly with another, is deemed to have waived his right to be present at his trial. Subsection (1)(b) also provides that the court may continue the trial to its conclusion and impose a sentence on the absconding accused, or issue an arrest warrant and adjourn the trial until the accused appears. If the court adjourns the trial under subsec. (1)(b), that court may at any time continue the trial if it is satisfied that it is no longer in the interests of justice to await the appearance of the accused.

Subsection (2) allows the court to draw an adverse inference from the fact that the accused has absconded.

Subsection (3) provides that when an accused reappears at a trial that has continued in his absence, he is not entitled to have any portion of the proceedings conducted when he was not present reopened unless he establishes that because of exceptional circumstances, it is in the best interests of justice to re-open such proceedings.

Subsection (4) states that counsel for an absconding accused has the authority to continue to act for the accused during the proceedings.

ANNOTATIONS

Meaning of absconds – The word "absconds" in this section means more than mere failure to appear and imports a requirement that the accused has voluntarily absented himself from his trial for the purpose of impeding or frustrating the trial, or with the intention of avoiding its consequences. The necessary intent can however be inferred from proof that the accused deliberately absented himself. Upon proof that the accused absconded, the trial may proceed although defence counsel has been permitted to withdraw: R. v. Garofoli (1988), 41 C.C.C. (3d) 97, 64 C.R. (3d) 193 (Ont. C.A.), affd on this point 60 C.C.C. (3d) 161, 80 C.R. (3d) 317, 116 N.R. 241 (S.C.C.).

Procedure – Once the accused absconds, he has waived his right to be present as required by s. 650 and even after he has been apprehended the trial may continue in his absence until it was reasonably practicable to return him to court: R. v. Tzimopoulos, infra.

It is for the trial judge to determine whether or not the accused has absconded and in directing the jury as to the adverse inference as permitted by subsec. (2) the judge need not leave it to the jury to first determine whether the accused absconded: R. v. Tzimopoulos, infra, revd on other grounds (unreported November 22, 1990, S.C.C.).

Notwithstanding subsec. (4) in most cases it would be unfair to require defence counsel to continue to represent an accused who has absconded. This subsection does not confer any authority on counsel to continue to act, nor does it interfere with or restrict counsel's right, in accordance with professional standards, to cease to act for the accused: R. v. Garofoli (1988), 41 C.C.C. (3d) 97, 64 C.R. (3d) 193 (Ont. C.A.), revd on other grounds 60 C.C.C. (3d) 161, 80 C.R. (3d) 317, 116 N.R. 241 (S.C.C.).

Constitutional considerations – This provision does not offend the guarantee to fundamental justice in s. 7 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms: R. v. Czuczman (1986), 26 C.C.C. (3d) 43, 49 C.R. (3d) 385, 27 D.L.R. (4th) 694 (Ont. C.A.), nor the right to a fair trial under s. 11(d): R. v. Tzimopoulos (1986), 29 C.C.C. (3d) 304, 54 C.R. (3d) 1 (Ont. C.A.).

Special Jurisdiction

SPECIAL JURISDICTIONS.

476. For the purposes of this Act,

- (a) where an offence is committed in or on any water or on a bridge between two or more territorial divisions, the offence shall be deemed to have been committed in any of the territorial divisions;
- (b) where an offence is committed on the boundary of two or more territorial divisions or within five hundred metres of any such boundary, or the offence was commenced within one territorial division and completed within another, the offence shall be deemed to have been committed in any of the territorial divisions;
- (c) where an offence is committed in or on a vehicle employed in a journey, or on board a vessel employed on a navigable river, canal or inland water, the offence shall be deemed to have been committed in any territorial division through which the vehicle or vessel passed in the course of the journey or voyage on which the offence was committed, and where the center or other part of the road, or navigable river, canal or inland water on which the vehicle or vessel passed in the course of the journey or voyage is the boundary of two or more territorial divisions, the offence shall be deemed to have been committed in any of the territorial divisions;
- (d) where an offence is committed in an aircraft in the course of a flight of that aircraft, it shall be deemed to have been committed
  - (i) in the territorial division in which the flight commenced,
  - (ii) in any territorial division over which the aircraft passed in the course of the flight, or
  - (iii) in the territorial division in which the flight ended; and
- (e) where an offence is committed in respect of the mail in the course of its door-to-door delivery, the offence shall be deemed to have been committed in any territorial division through which the mail was carried on that delivery. R.S., c. C-34, s. 432; R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 186; 1992, c. 1, s. 58.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term “territorial division” is defined in s. 2. The term “mail” is defined in s. 2 of the Canada Post Corporation Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. C-10. For other notes respecting territorial jurisdiction, see cross-references under ss. 6, 7 and 470.

SYNOPSIS

This section clarifies territorial jurisdiction in a number of unusual or special sets of circumstances.

ANNOTATIONS

Offences committed in more than one division [para. (b)] – Jurisdiction in inferior courts must be established like any essential ingredient of an offence and is not presumed, as in the case of superior courts, so where the Crown in a questionable boundary case failed strictly to prove jurisdiction over the accused by a county magistrate an acquittal was ordered: R. v. O’Blenis, [1965] 2 C.C.C. 165, (N.B.S.C. App. Div.).

In Re Bigelow and The Queen (1982), 69 C.C.C. (2d) 204, 37 O.R. (2d) 304 (C.A.) the Court in holding that the effect of this paragraph was to establish a broad basis for jurisdiction over interprovincial offences reviewed the case law as to its application and drew the following conclusions: (i) this paragraph conferred jurisdiction over crimes involving continuity of operation extending over more than one province in any province where a component of the offence took place; (ii) the courts in one province have assumed jurisdiction where an overt act referable to or in furtherance of a criminal plan extending beyond that province was committed in the province; and (iii) where the act of the accused in one province generates effects in another this paragraph confers jurisdiction on the courts of the second province.

Offences committed on vehicle or vessel [para. (c)] – The word “deemed” in this paragraph means “deemed conclusively”. Thus even where evidence is led that the offence actually took place in a particular territorial division, not the division named in the indictment, as long as the vehicle passed through the territorial division named in the indictment in the course of the journey in which the offence was committed, the offence is proved: R. v. Moore and Grazier (1970), 1 C.C.C. (2d) 521, [1971] 1 W.W.R. 656 (B.C.C.A.).

WORDS AND EXPRESSIONS / Saving.

477. (1) In this section and sections 477.1 to 477.4,

- (a) “fishing zone of Canada” has the same meaning as in the Territorial Sea and Fishing Zones Act, but does not include any portion of the internal waters or territorial sea; and
- (b) unless the context otherwise requires, other words and expressions have the same meaning as in the Canadian Laws Offshore Application Act.

(2) Nothing in sections 477.1 to 477.4 limits the operation of any other Act of Parliament or the jurisdiction that a court may exercise apart from those sections. 1990, c. 44, s. 15.

OFFENCES IN, ABOVE OR BEYOND CONTINENTAL SHELF / Restriction.

477.1. (1) Every person who commits an act or omission that would be an offence under a federal law if it occurred in Canada shall be deemed to have committed that act or omission in Canada if it occurred

- (a) in a place in or above the continental shelf or in any exclusive economic zone created by Canada, where the act or omission is an offence in that place by virtue of section 5 of the Canadian Laws Offshore Application Act;
- (b) in any fishing zone of Canada;
- (c) outside Canada, on board or by means of a ship registered or licensed, or for which an identification number has been issued, pursuant to any Act of Parliament;
- (d) outside Canada, in the course of hot pursuit; or
- (e) in the case of a Canadian citizen, outside the territory of any state.

(2) Paragraph (1)(b) applies only where

- (a) the act or omission is committed by a person who is in a fishing zone of Canada in connection with the exploration, exploitation, management or conservation of the living resources thereof; and
- (b) the act or omission is committed by or in relation to a person who is a Canadian citizen or a permanent resident within the meaning of the Immigration Act. 1990, c. 44, s. 15.

CONSENT OF ATTORNEY GENERAL / Exception / Consent of Attorney General / Idem / Consent to be filed.

477.2. (1) No proceedings in respect of an offence committed by a person in or on the territorial sea shall be continued unless the consent of the Attorney General of Canada is obtained no later than eight days after proceedings are instituted, if the accused is not a Canadian citizen and the offence is alleged to have been committed on board any ship registered outside Canada.

(1.1) Subsection (1) does not apply to proceedings by way of summary conviction.

(2) No proceedings in respect of which courts have jurisdiction by virtue only of paragraph 477.1(1)(a) or (b) shall be continued unless the consent of the Attorney General of Canada is obtained no later than eight days after proceedings are instituted, if the accused is not a Canadian citizen and the offence is alleged to have been committed on board any ship registered outside Canada.

(3) No proceedings in respect of which courts have jurisdiction by virtue only of paragraph 477.1(1)(d) or (e) shall be continued unless the consent of the Attorney General of Canada is obtained no later than eight days after proceedings are instituted.

(4) The consent of the Attorney General required by subsection (1), (2) or (3) must be filed with the clerk of the court in which the proceedings have been instituted. 1990, c. 44, s. 15; 1994, c. 44, s. 32.

EXERCISING POWERS OF ARREST, ENTRY, ETC. / Arrest, search, seizure, etc. / Limitation.

477.3. (1) Every power of arrest, entry, search or seizure or other power that could be exercised in Canada in respect of an act or omission referred to in subsection 477.1(1), and in the circumstances referred to in that subsection, may be exercised

- (a) at the place or on board the ship or marine installation or structure where the act or omission occurred; or
- (b) where hot pursuit has been commenced, at any place on the seas, other than a place that is part of the territorial sea of any other state.

(2) A justice or a judge in any territorial division in Canada has jurisdiction to authorize an arrest, entry, search or seizure or an investigation or other ancillary matter related to an offence

- (a) committed in or on the territorial sea or any area of the sea that forms part of the internal waters, or in the same manner as if the offence had been committed in that territorial division.
- (b) referred to in subsection 477.1(1)

(3) Where an act or omission that is an offence by virtue only of subsection 477.1(1) is alleged to have been committed on board any ship registered outside Canada, the powers referred to in subsection (1) shall not be exercised outside Canada with respect to that act or omission without the consent of the Attorney General of Canada. 1990, c. 44, s. 15.

---

TERRITORIAL DIVISION FOR PROSECUTION / Appearance of accused at trial / Evidence / Certificate cannot be compelled.

477.4. (1) Proceedings in respect of an offence

- (a) committed in or on the territorial sea or any area of the sea that forms part of the internal waters, or
- (b) referred to in subsection 477.1(1)

may, whether or not the accused is in Canada, be commenced in any territorial division in Canada and the accused may be tried and punished in respect of that offence in the same manner as if the offence had been committed in that territorial division.

(2) For greater certainty, the provisions of this Act relating to

- (a) the requirement of the appearance of an accused at proceedings, and

(b) the exceptions to that requirement, apply to proceedings commenced in any territorial division pursuant to subsection (1) or section 481.

(3) In proceedings in respect of an offence,

(a) a certificate referred to in subsection 10(1) of the Canadian Laws Offshore Application Act, or

(b) a certificate issued by or under the authority of the Minister of Foreign Affairs containing a statement that any geographical location specified in the certificate was, at any time material to the proceedings, in a fishing zone of Canada or outside the territory of any state, is conclusive proof of the truth of the statement without proof of the signature or official character of the person appearing to have issued the certificate.

(4) A certificate referred to in subsection (3) is admissible in evidence in proceedings referred to in that subsection but its production cannot be compelled. 1990, c. 44, s. 15; 1995, c. 5, s. 25.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The definition of territorial sea is in the Territorial Sea and Fishing Zones Act, R.S.C. 1985, T-8. "Attorney General" is defined in s. 2. Section 583(h) provides that a count in an indictment is not insufficient by reason only that it does not state that the required consent has been obtained. [As to other notes concerning sufficiency of consent, see s. 583.] The term "Canadian ship" is defined in s. 2 of the Canada Shipping Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. S-9. For definition of Canadian citizen, see Citizenship Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. C-29. For other notes respecting territorial jurisdiction, see cross-references under ss. 6, 7 and 470.

SYNOPSIS

This section states that where an offence is committed by any person on Canadian seas or waters off the Canadian coast, whether or not such offence was committed on a Canadian ship, the offence is within the jurisdiction of Canadian law. The accused in this situation will be tried by the court having jurisdiction over similar offences in the closest territorial division. The offence will be tried in the same manner as it had been committed in that territorial jurisdiction.

Subsection (2) provides that consent of the Attorney General of Canada is necessary for the institution of indictable proceedings under this section against a person who is not a Canadian citizen.

ANNOTATIONS

Common law territorial jurisdiction – A ship moored to a dock in Canada is within the realm over which common law courts have exercised jurisdiction. Accordingly, the Court's jurisdiction where an offence is committed on such a ship does not depend on this section and the consent under subsec. (2) is not necessary: R. v. Prendes, [1965] 1 C.C.C.356 (B.C.S.C.).

Effect of subsec. (1) – This section gives Canadian courts jurisdiction to try offences committed on the territorial sea of Canada, although neither the accused nor the victim are Canadian citizens and the offence was committed on a foreign ship. This section is not limited to offences having extraterritorial effect such as piracy: R. v. Frisbee (1989), 48 C.C.C. (3d) 386 (B.C.C.A.), leave to appeal to S.C.C. refused 50 C.C.C. (3d) vi.

Where consent required under subsec. (2) – The consent required by subsec. (2) is necessary where the offence took place on the territorial waters of Canada even if the place was also within the boundaries of the county where the trial is taking place: Re R. and Piersanti (1979), 48 C.C.C. (2d) 161 (B.C.S.C.).

Consent is also required where the offence is a hybrid offence for such offence is deemed to be indictable by s. 34(1) of the Interpretation Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. I-21: R. v. Gallagher (1981), 62 C.C.C. (2d) 3 (B.C. Co. Ct.).

The Great Lakes are neither the “territorial sea” nor “internal waters” within the meaning of subsec. (1) and thus the consent referred to in subsec. (2) is not required where the offence is committed on the Great Lakes by a non-Canadian citizen: R. v. Farnquist (1980), 54 C.C.C. (2d) 417 (Ont. Prov. Ct.).

An offence committed in the 200-mile fishing zone, contrary to the Coastal Fisheries Protection Act, R.S.C. 1970, c. C-21, but outside the territorial sea does not come within this section and the Attorney-General’s consent is therefore not required: Re Gordon and The Queen (1980), 55 C.C.C. (2d) 197, [1980] 5 W.W.R. 519 (B.C.C.A.).

There must at least be some evidence in the case to indicate that the accused is not a Canadian citizen before the Crown must prove that the accused was a Canadian citizen and that the consent of the Attorney General was not required: R. v. Erickson (1989), 49 C.C.C. (3d) 33, 14 M.V.R. (2d) 122 (B.C.C.A.), leave to appeal to S.C.C. refused 50 C.C.C. (3d) vi, 104 N.R. 109n.

Proof of consent under subsec. (2) – Failure to obtain the necessary consent will result in a conviction being quashed: R. v. Ford; R. v. Gilkey (1956), 115 C.C.C. 113, 18 W.W.R. 563 (B.C.C.A.).

The decision to consent under this section is not an administrative decision which can be delegated to an official such as the Assistant Deputy Attorney-General: R. v. Sunila (1987), 35 C.C.C. (3d) 289, 78 N.S.R. (2d) 24 (S.C. App. Div.).

A consent given by the Deputy Attorney General is valid in view of the provision of s. 24(7)(c) of the Interpretation Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. I-21. Further, a consent referring to a charge of “murder” was sufficient to permit trial of the accused on a charge of first degree murder, there being nothing to indicate that the consent was restricted to a charge of second degree murder: R. v. Frisbee (1989), 48 C.C.C. (3d) 386 (B.C.C.A.), leave to appeal to S.C.C. refused 50 C.C.C. (3d) vi.

An objection to the validity of the form of consent cannot be raised for the first time near the conclusion of the trial just prior to the charge to the jury: R. v. Sunila (1987), 35 C.C.C. (3d) 289, 78 N.S.R. (2d) 24 (S.C. App. Div.).

OFFENCE COMMITTED ENTIRELY IN ONE PROVINCE / Exception / Idem / Where accused committed to stand trial / Definition of “newspaper”.

478. (1) Subject to this Act, a court in a province shall not try an offence committed entirely in another province.

(2) Every proprietor, publisher, editor or other person charged with the publication of a defamatory libel in a newspaper or with conspiracy to publish a defamatory libel in a newspaper shall be dealt with, indicted, tried and punished in the province where he resides or in which the newspaper is printed.

(3) An accused who is charged with an offence that is alleged to have been committed in Canada outside the province in which the accused is, may, if the offence is not an offence mentioned in section 469 and

(a) in the case of proceedings instituted at the instance of the Government of Canada and conducted by or on behalf of that Government, if the Attorney General of Canada consents, or

(b) in any other case, if the Attorney General of the province where the offence is alleged to have been committed consents, appear before a court or judge that would have had jurisdiction to try that offence if it had been committed in the province where the accused is, and where the accused consents to plead guilty and pleads guilty to that offence, the court or judge shall determine the accused to be guilty of the offence and impose the punishment warranted by law, but where the accused does not consent to plead guilty and does not plead guilty, the accused shall, if the accused was in custody prior to appearance, be returned to custody and shall be dealt with according to law.

(4) Notwithstanding that an accused described in subsection (3) has been ordered to stand trial or that an indictment has been preferred against the accused in respect of the offence to which he desires to plead guilty, the accused shall be deemed simply to stand charged of that offence without a preliminary inquiry having been conducted or an indictment having been preferred with respect thereto.

(5) In this section, “newspaper” has the same meaning as in section 297. R.S., c. C-34, s. 434; 1974-75-76, c. 93, s. 40; R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), ss. 64, 101(3); 1994, c. 44, s. 33.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term “province” is defined in s. 35 of the Interpretation Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. I-21. “Attorney General” is defined in s. 2. Section 583(h) provides that a count in an indictment is not insufficient by reason only that it does not state that the required consent has been obtained. [As to notes concerning sufficiency of consent, see s. 583.] Defamatory libel is dealt with under ss. 297 to 317. A related provision for transfer of charges between territorial divisions within the same province is in s. 479. Respecting transfer of probation orders between provinces, see s. 739. For other notes respecting territorial jurisdiction, see cross-references under ss. 6, 7 and 470.

SYNOPSIS

This section deals with offences committed within the jurisdiction of one province.

Subsection (1) provides that subject to exceptions found within the Code, a court in one province shall not try an offence entirely committed in another province.

Subsection (2) states that any person charged with the offence of publishing, or conspiring to publish, a defamatory libel in a newspaper must deal with in the province where he resides or where the newspaper is printed.

Subsection (3) provides that any person charged with an offence, other than an offence listed in s. 469, that is alleged to have been committed outside the province in which that person is, may plead guilty before a court having jurisdiction over the offence in that province and be sentenced in that location. The appropriate Attorney General must consent to this procedure.

Subsection (4) makes it clear that an accused person pleading guilty under subsec. (3), whether or not he has been ordered to stand trial, or an indictment has been preferred against him in the province where the offence was committed, shall be deemed to stand charged of that offence in the province in which the plea is entered without a preliminary inquiry having been held or an indictment preferred.

Subsection (5) gives the term “newspaper” the same meaning as is found in s. 297.

ANNOTATIONS

Subsec. (1) – In determining jurisdiction it is questionable whether civil law should be employed to locate the actus reus, particularly where the offence is of a continuing character that might occur in more than one jurisdiction: R. v. Trudel, ex p. Horbas and Myhaluk, [1969] 3 C.C.C.95, 5 C.R.N.S.342 sub nom. R. v. Horbas and Myhaluk (Man. C.A.).

Subsec. (3) – The authorities of one province did not notify the accused of an indictable offence warrant that they held for him while he was being tried, convicted and then serving his sentence in another province for other offences committed there. Upon appeal against the sentence finally imposed upon him when he was brought back for trial some years later the appellate Court indicated its disapproval of this procedure by substantially reducing the sentence: R. v. Parisien (1971), 3 C.C.C. (2d) 433, [1971] 4 W.W.R.81 (B.C.C.A.).

If the accused can show that the exercise of the discretion by the Attorney General to refuse to consent to the transfer is arbitrary, then the accused would be entitled to a remedy under s. 24 of the Charter on the basis that there has been an infringement of s. 7 of the Charter. However, if reasonable grounds exist for the exercise of the discretion one way or another and there has been a fair consideration as to whether, or in what way, the discretion should be exercised, the ultimate decision cannot be said to be arbitrary. In this case, Crown counsel provided the accused with a letter setting out several valid reasons for refusing to consent to the transfer including that, as a general rule, the accused should be sentenced in the community where the offence occurred in order for the deterrent affect of that sentence; disposition of the offence in the jurisdiction where it arose will most likely ensure the application of local provincial sentencing standards for like defences; and the more serious the offence the more appropriate it is to dispose of the case where the offence occurred: R. v. Fleming (1992), 72 C.C.C. (3d) 133 (Man. Q.B.).

OFFENCE OUTSTANDING IN SAME PROVINCE.

479. Where an accused is charged with an offence that is alleged to have been committed in the province in which he is, he may, if the offence is not an offence mentioned in section 469, and

- (a) in the case of proceedings instituted at the instance of the Government of Canada and conducted by or on behalf of that Government, the Attorney General of Canada consents, or
- (b) in any other case, the Attorney General of the province where the offence is alleged to have been committed consents, appear before a court or judge that would have had jurisdiction to try that offence if it had been committed in the place where the accused is, and where the accused consents to plead guilty and pleads guilty to that offence, the court or judge shall determine the accused to be guilty of the offence and impose the punishment warranted by law, but where the accused does not consent to plead guilty and does not plead guilty, the accused shall, if the accused was in custody prior to his appearance, be returned to custody and shall be dealt with according to law. R.S., c. C-34, s. 435; 1974-75-76, c. 93, s. 41; R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 65; 1994, c. 44, s. 34.

CROSS-REFERENCES

“Attorney General” is defined in s. 2. Section 583(h) provides that a count in an indictment is not insufficient by reason only that it does not state that the required consent has been obtained. [As to notes concerning sufficiency of consent, see s. 583.] For a related provision for transfer of charges between provinces, see s. 478. For other notes respecting territorial jurisdiction, see cross-references under ss. 6, 7 and 470. Change of venue for trial within the province but in another territorial division is governed by s. 599.

SYNOPSIS

This section allows an accused person to plead guilty to an offence, other than the one listed in s. 469, before a court or a judge within the province where the offence was committed but not within the territorial division of that province having jurisdiction over the offender. The appropriate Attorney General must consent to this procedure and the accused must, in fact, plead guilty to the offence.

OFFENCE IN UNORGANIZED TERRITORY / New territorial division.

480. (1) Where an offence is committed in an unorganized tract of country in any province or on a lake, river or other water therein, not included in a territorial division or in a provisional judicial district, proceedings in respect thereof may be commenced and an accused may be charged, tried and punished in respect thereof within any territorial division or provisional judicial district of the province in the same manner as if the offence had been committed within that territorial division or provisional judicial district.

(2) Where a provisional judicial district or a new territorial division is constituted in an unorganized tract referred to in subsection (1), the jurisdiction conferred by that subsection continues until appropriate provision is made by law for the administration of criminal justice within the provisional judicial district or new territorial division. R.S., c. C-34, s. 436.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term "territorial division" is defined in s. 2. The term "province" is defined in s. 35 of the Interpretation Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. I-21. Also see s. 481 and for other notes respecting territorial jurisdiction, see cross-references under ss. 6, 7 and 470.

SYNOPSIS

This section clarifies jurisdiction in situations where an offence is committed in an unorganized tract in any province that is not included in a territorial division or provisional judicial district.

Subsection (1) states that the trial of an offence committed in such a location may take place in any territorial division or provisional judicial district in that province.

Subsection (2) provides that when a provincial judicial district or new territorial division is constituted in an unorganized tract, subsec. (1) will continue to apply until provision for the administration of justice within that division or district is made.

OFFENCE NOT IN A PROVINCE.

481. Where an offence is committed in a part of Canada not in a province, proceedings in respect thereof may be commenced and the accused may be charged, tried and punished within any territorial division in any province in the same manner as if that offence had been committed in that territorial division. R.S., c. C-34, s. 437.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term "territorial division" is defined in s. 2. The term "province" is defined in s. 35 of the Interpretation Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. I-21. Also see s. 480 and for other notes respecting territorial jurisdiction, see cross-references under ss. 6, 7 and 470.

SYNOPSIS

This section provides that an accused who commits an offence in a part of Canada which is not a province may be tried and punished within any territorial division in any province of Canada.

Rules of Court

POWER TO MAKE RULES / Idem / Purpose of rules / Publication / Regulations to secure uniformity.

482. (1) Every superior court of criminal jurisdiction and every court of appeal may make rules of court not inconsistent with this or any other Act of Parliament, and any rules so made apply to any prosecution, proceeding, action or appeal, as the case may be, within the jurisdiction of that court, instituted in relation to any matter of a criminal nature or arising from or incidental to any such prosecution, proceeding, action or appeal.

(2) Every court of criminal jurisdiction for a province and every appeal court within the meaning of section 812 that is not a court referred to in subsection (1) may, subject to the approval of the lieutenant governor in council of the province, make rules of court not inconsistent with this Act or any other Act of Parliament, and any rules so made apply to any prosecution, proceeding, action or appeal, as the case may be, within the jurisdiction of that court, instituted in relation to any matter of a criminal nature or arising from or incidental to any such prosecution, proceeding, action or appeal.

(3) Rules under subsection (1) or (2) may be made

- (a) generally to regulate the duties of the officers of the court and any other matter considered expedient to attain the ends of justice and carry into effect the provisions of the law;
- (b) to regulate the sittings of the court or any division thereof, or of any judge of the court sitting in chambers, except in so far as they are regulated by law;
- (c) to regulate in criminal matters the pleading, practice and procedure in the court including pre-hearing conferences held pursuant to section 625.1 and proceedings with respect to judicial interim release and, in the case of rules under subsection (1), proceedings with respect to mandamus, certiorari, habeas corpus, prohibition and procedendo and proceedings on an appeal under section 830; and
- (d) to carry out the provisions of this Act relating to appeals from conviction, acquittal or sentence and, without restricting the generality of this paragraph,
  - (i) for furnishing necessary forms and instructions in relation to notices of appeal or applications for leave to appeal to officials or other persons requiring or demanding them,
  - (ii) for ensuring the accuracy of notes taken at a trial and the verification of any copy or transcript,
  - (iii) for keeping writings, exhibits or other things connected with the proceedings on the trial,
  - (iv) for securing the safe custody of property during the period in which the operation of an order with respect to that property is suspended under subsection 689(1), and
  - (v) for providing that the Attorney General and counsel who acted for the Attorney General at the trial be supplied with certified copies of writings, exhibits and things connected with the proceedings that are required for the purposes of their duties.

(4) Rules of court that are made under the authority of this section shall be published in the Canada Gazette.

(5) Notwithstanding anything in this section, the Governor in Council may make such provision as he considers proper to secure uniformity in the rules of court in criminal matters, and all uniform rules made under the authority of this subsection prevail and have effect as if enacted by this Act. R.S., c. C-34, s. 438; 1974-75-76, c. 93, s. 42; R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 66; 1994, c. 44, s. 35.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms “Attorney General”, “superior court of criminal jurisdiction”, “court of appeal”, “court of criminal jurisdiction” and “writing” are defined in s. 2. Section 745(5) makes separate provision for making of rules of procedure on applications for review of parole ineligibility of a person convicted of murder.

SYNOPSIS

This section empowers courts to make rules.

Subsection (1) states that every superior court of criminal jurisdiction and every court of appeal may make rules of court in relation to any criminal proceedings or matters incidental to a prosecution arising before it.

Subsection (2) states that every court of criminal jurisdiction for a province and every appeal court within the meaning of s. 812 that is not a court referred to in subsec. (1) may, with the approval of the Lieutenant Governor in Council of the province, make similar rules governing criminal and incidental proceedings. The rules made under both subssecs. (1) and (2) may not be inconsistent with the Code or any other Act of Parliament.

Subsection (3) sets out the matters which such rules may regulate and subsec. (4) requires publication of the rules in the Canada Gazette. Subsection (5) empowers the Governor in Council to ensure uniformity of the rules of court in criminal matters and any uniform rules made under this subsection prevail.

ANNOTATIONS

In R. v. Jacobs (1971), 2 C.C.C. (2d) 26, 16 D.L.R. (3d) 591 (S.C.C.), the Que. C.A. had, on March 24, 1969, dismissed the accused's appeal when his counsel failed to appear to argue the appeal. Subsequently, on April 18, 1969, the Court rescinded its order, and from that order the Crown appealed. It was held (5:0) that both of the Appeal Court orders, neither of which dealt with the merits of the accused's appeal, were made in the exercise of its discretionary power relating to practice concerning the proper administration of justice in criminal matters.

While subsec. (3)(c) does not authorize the making of rules which would permit the Court to award costs on an application for habeas corpus, in a criminal matter the Superior Court has the power to award costs by virtue of its inherent jurisdiction to control proceedings, to penalize abuses and to maintain its authority. However, the power to award costs arises only in circumstances similar to a contempt of Court, such as misconduct or dishonesty by a party, or a serious interference with the administration of justice: A.-G. Que. et al. v. Cronier (1981), 63 C.C.C. (2d) 437, 23 C.R. (3d) 97 (Que. C.A.).

Similarly, while the Superior Court has an inherent jurisdiction to award costs against the inferior Court, the power is to be used sparingly and only where the circumstances were akin to a contempt of Court or reveal malice or bad faith thereby creating a flagrant injustice. Moreover, before the order is made the Judge of the inferior Court is entitled to notice and an opportunity to be heard on the question of costs: Mayrand v. Cronier (1981), 63 C.C.C. (2d) 561, 23 C.R. (3d) 114 (Que. C.A.).

Where the trial judge, a judge of the district court, considers it necessary to call an expert witness, he has the power to require the Crown to pay the costs involved: Re R. and P.R.S. (1987), 38 C.C.C. (3d) 109, 60 C.R. (3d) 159 sub nom. R. v. Smigel (Ont. H.C.J.).

Part XV / SPECIAL PROCEDURE AND POWERS

General Powers of Certain Officials

OFFICIALS WITH POWERS OF TWO JUSTICES.

483. Every judge or provincial court judge authorized by the law of the province in which he is appointed to do anything that is required to be done by two or more justices may do alone anything that this Act or any other Act of Parliament authorizes two or more justices to do. R.S., c. C-34, s. 439.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms "provincial court judge" and "justice" are defined in s. 2.

SYNOPSIS

This section authorizes every judge or provincial court judge who is authorized by the law of a province to do anything required to be done by two or more justices to also act in the place of two or more justices when such a provision is found in the Code or any other Act of Parliament.

PRESERVING ORDER IN COURT.

484. Every judge or provincial court judge has the same power and authority to preserve order in a court over which he presides as may be exercised by the superior court of criminal jurisdiction of the province during the sittings thereof. R.S., c. C-34, s. 440.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms “provincial court judge”, “justice” and “superior court of criminal jurisdiction” are defined in s. 2.

For notes on the common law power over contempt of court, see notes following ss. 9 and 10.

SYNOPSIS

This section gives to every judge or provincial court judge the same power as may be exercised by the superior court of criminal jurisdiction to preserve order during the sittings of courts over which they preside.

ANNOTATIONS

A provincial court judge has the power to punish for contempt on preliminary inquiry a person who refused to rise when the Court was called to order: R. v. Hume, ex p. Hawkins, [1966] 3 C.C.C. 43, 53 D.L.R. (2d) 453, 53 W.W.R. 406 sub nom. Hawkins Habeas Corpus Application (Re) (B.C.S.C.).

This section gives a provincial court judge presiding at a preliminary hearing power to convict for contempt in the face of the Court where required to preserve order in the Court. Thus, a counsel’s refusal despite the judge’s order to remove a tape recorder from the court-room during a preliminary hearing could in certain circumstances amount to contempt: R. v. Barker (1980), 53 C.C.C. (2d) 322, [1980] 4 W.W.R. 202 (Alta. C.A.).

This section gives a provincial court judge power to cite for contempt an accused who appears for his trial in such an intoxicated condition that the trial is unable to proceed: R. v. Heer (1982), 68 C.C.C. (2d) 333, 38 B.C.L.R. 176 (S.C.).

Under this section one judge of the Alberta Provincial Court has no jurisdiction to try a contempt of court charge initiated by another judge as a result of conduct by the accused committed in the face of the court: R. v. Doz (1987), 38 C.C.C. (3d) 479, 55 Alta. L.R. (2d) 289 (S.C.C.) (7:0).

The words “order in a court” do not embrace a refusal by a witness to testify and thus this section cannot be invoked to authorize a provincial court judge presiding at a preliminary hearing to punish such refusal as a contempt of court. The judge’s only power in such circumstances is to use the procedure in s. 545: R. v. Bubley (1976), 32 C.C.C. (2d) 79, [1976] 6 W.W.R. 179 (Alta.S.C. App.Div.).

PROCEDURAL IRREGULARITIES / Summons or warrant / Dismissal for want of prosecution / Adjournment and order / Part XVI to apply.

485. (1) Jurisdiction over an offence is not lost by reason of the failure of any court, judge, provincial court judge or justice to act in the exercise of that jurisdiction at any particular time, or by reason of a failure to comply with any of the provisions of this Act respecting adjournments or remands.

(2) Where jurisdiction over an accused or a defendant is lost and has not been regained, a court, judge, provincial court judge or justice may, within three months after the loss of jurisdiction, issue a summons, or if it or he considers it necessary in the public interest, a warrant for the arrest of the accused or defendant.

(3) Where no summons or warrant is issued under subsection (2) within the period provided therein, the proceedings shall be deemed to be dismissed for want of prosecution and shall not be recommenced except in accordance with section 485.1.

(4) Where, in the opinion of the court, judge, provincial court judge or justice, an accused or a defendant who appears at a proceeding has been misled or prejudiced by reason of any matter referred to in subsection (1), the court, judge, provincial court judge or justice may adjourn the proceeding and may make such order as it or he considers appropriate.

(5) The provisions of Part XVI apply with such modifications as the circumstances require where a summons or warrant is issued under subsection (2). 1974-75-76, c. 93, s. 43; R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 67.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms "provincial court judge" and "justice" are defined in s. 2.

Calculation of a period of months is determined in accordance with s. 28 of the Interpretation Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. I-21.

SYNOPSIS

This section deals with specific examples of procedural irregularities as they relate to jurisdiction over the offender and the offence.

Subsection (1) states that jurisdiction over an offence is not lost when the court fails to exercise jurisdiction at any particular time, or when it fails to comply with any of the provisions in the Code with respect to adjournments or remands.

Subsection (2) empowers a court to issue a summons or, if necessary in the public interest, a warrant for the arrest of an accused person within three months after jurisdiction over that person has been lost and has not been regained.

Subsection (3) states that if no summons or warrant is issued within the three-month period stipulated in subsec. (2), the proceedings shall be deemed dismissed for want of prosecution. Such proceedings cannot be reinstituted except in accordance with s. 485.1.

Subsection (4) empowers a court to adjourn a proceeding and make such order as is considered appropriate when it appears that an accused person has been misled or prejudiced by reason of any matter referred to in subsec. (1).

Subsection (5) provides that the provisions of Part XVI, which deal with compelling the appearance of an accused before a justice and interim release, apply with the necessary modifications when a summons or warrant is issued under subsec. (2).

ANNOTATIONS

This section was applied to cure a failure to comply with s. 537(1)(a), the preliminary hearing having been adjourned for longer than eight days without the accused's consent. The Court noted that Doyle v. The Queen (1976), 29 C.C.C. (2d) 177, 68 D.L.R. (3d) 270, [1977] 1 S.C.R. 597, which held that adjourning a case for longer than eight days without the accused's consent resulted in a loss of jurisdiction over the person of the accused, was decided at a time when this section did not apply: Re Ulrich and The Queen (1977), 38 C.C.C. (2d) 1, [1978] 1 W.W.R. 422 (Alta. S.C.T.D.).

It was held in R. v. Krannenburg (1980), 51 C.C.C. (2d) 205, [1980] 1 S.C.R. 1053, 17 C.R. (3d) 357, [1980] 2 W.W.R. 651 (7:0) that the predecessor to this section could not cure a loss of jurisdiction which resulted when there was a proper adjournment to a fixed day but upon that day nothing happened. The court distinguished between a loss of jurisdiction "over the person" such as a remand in excess of eight days without consent, and a loss of jurisdiction "over the offence" when nothing is done on the return date of a proper adjournment. However, the recent amendment to this section with the addition of the reference to the failure to exercise jurisdiction at any particular time, may well cover the loss of jurisdiction dealt with in R. v. Krannenburg.

Where an accused did not appear, and nothing was done on the return date of an adjournment because the accused, on being remanded to a hospital for observation had been found unfit and not returned to court, the court regained jurisdiction over him on a subsequent appearance one month later. R. v. Fogarty (1988), 46 C.C.C. (3d) 289, 87 N.S.R. (2d) 422 (N.S.C.A.).

RECOMMENCEMENT WHERE DISMISSAL FOR WANT OF PROSECUTION.

485.1 Where an indictment in respect of a transaction is dismissed or deemed by any provision of this Act to be dismissed for want of prosecution, a new information shall not be laid and a new indictment shall not be preferred before any court in respect of the same transaction without

- (a) the personal consent in writing of the Attorney General or Deputy Attorney General, in any prosecution conducted by the Attorney General or in which the Attorney General intervenes; or
- (b) the written order of a judge of that court, in any prosecution conducted by a prosecutor other than the Attorney General and in which the Attorney General does not intervene. R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 67.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms “indictment” and “prosecutor” are defined in s. 2. The latter term is also defined in s. 785 for summary conviction proceedings.

SYNOPSIS

This section sets out the circumstances under which a proceeding may be recommenced after it has been dismissed for want of prosecution. No new information can be laid, or indictment preferred, in this situation unless the personal written consent of the Attorney General or the Deputy Attorney General is obtained, or, in the case of a matter that is not prosecuted by the Attorney General and in which the Attorney General has not intervened, a judge of the relevant court issues a written order.

ANNOTATIONS

This section does not apply where the indictment is quashed by the trial judge for failing to comply with the sufficiency requirements of s. 581. Thus the Attorney-General’s consent is not required to lay a new information: R. v. Richardson (1987), 39 C.C.C. (3d) 262 (N.S.C.A.).

Although the charges which were initially dismissed for want of prosecution were laid by a private prosecutor, the Attorney General may consent to the laying of a new information by agents of the Crown: R. v. Proctor & Gamble Inc. (1993), 82 C.C.C. (3d) 477, 11 Alta. L.R. (3d) 1, 11 C.E.L.R. (N.S.) 89 (C.A.).

EXCLUSION OF PUBLIC IN CERTAIN CASES / Protection of child witnesses / Support person / Witness not to be a support person / No communication while testifying / Reasons to be stated / Testimony outside court room / Condition of exclusion / Accused not to cross-examine child witness / Order restricting publication / Mandatory order on application / Failure to comply with order.

486. (1) Any proceedings against an accused shall be held in open court, but where the presiding judge, provincial court judge or justice, as the case may be, is of the opinion that it is in the interest of public morals, the maintenance of order or the proper administration of justice to exclude all or any members of the public from the court room for all or part of the proceedings, he may so order.

(1.1) For the purposes of subsections (1) and (2.3) and for greater certainty, the “proper administration of justice” includes ensuring that the interests of witnesses under the age of fourteen years are safeguarded in proceedings in which the accused is charged with a sexual offence, an offence against any of sections 271, 272 and 273 or an offence in which violence against the person is alleged to have been used, threatened or attempted.

(1.2) In proceedings referred to in subsection (1.1), the presiding judge, provincial court judge or justice may, on application of the prosecutor or a witness who, at the time of the trial or preliminary hearing, is under the age of fourteen years, order that a support person of the witness' choice be permitted to be present and to be close to the witness while testifying.

(1.3) The presiding judge, provincial court judge or justice shall not permit a witness in the proceedings referred to in subsection (1.1) to be a support person unless the presiding judge, provincial court judge or justice is of the opinion that the proper administration of justice so requires.

(1.4) The presiding judge, provincial court judge or justice may order that the support person and the witness not communicate with each other during the testimony of the witness.

(2) Where an accused is charged with an offence mentioned in section 274 and the prosecutor or the accused makes an application for an order under subsection (1), the presiding judge, provincial court judge or justice, as the case may be, shall, if no such order is made, state, by reference to the circumstances of the case, the reason for not making an order.

(2.1) Notwithstanding section 650, where an accused is charged with an offence under section 151, 152, 153, 155 or 159, subsection 160(2) or (3), or section 170, 171, 172, 173, 271, 272 or 273 and the complainant, at the time of the trial or preliminary inquiry, is under the age of eighteen years or is able to communicate evidence but may have difficulty doing so by reason of a mental or physical disability, the presiding judge or justice, as the case may be, may order that the complainant testify outside the court room or behind a screen or other device that would allow the complainant not to see the accused, if the judge or justice is of the opinion that the exclusion is necessary to obtain a full and candid account of the acts complained of from the complainant.

(2.2) A complainant shall not testify outside the court room pursuant to subsection (2.1) unless arrangements are made for the accused, the judge or justice and the jury to watch the testimony of the complainant by means of closed-circuit television or otherwise and the accused is permitted to communicate with counsel while watching the testimony.

(2.3) In proceedings referred to in subsection (1.1), the accused shall not personally cross-examine a witness who at the time of the proceedings is under the age of fourteen years, unless the presiding judge, provincial court judge or justice is of the opinion that the proper administration of justice requires the accused to personally conduct the cross-examination and, where the accused is not personally conducting the cross-examination, the presiding judge, provincial court judge or justice shall appoint counsel for the purpose of conducting the cross-examination.

(3) Subject to subsection (4), where an accused is charged with an offence under section 151, 152, 153, 155, 159, 160, 170, 171, 172, 173, 271, 272, 273, 346 or 347, the presiding judge or justice may make an order directing that the identity of the complainant or of a witness and any information that could disclose the identity of the complainant or witness shall not be published in any document or broadcast in any way.

(4) The presiding judge or justice shall,

(a) at the first reasonable opportunity, inform any witness under the age of eighteen years and the complainant to proceedings in respect of an offence mentioned in subsection (3) of the right to make an application for an order under subsection (3); and

(b) on application made by the complainant, the prosecutor or any such witness, make an order under that subsection.

(5) Every one who fails to comply with an order made pursuant to subsection (3) is guilty of an offence punishable on summary conviction. R.S., c. C-34, s. 442; 1974-75-76, c. 93, s. 44; 1980-81-82-83, c. 110, s. 74, c. 125, s. 25; R.S.C. 1985, c. 19 (3rd Supp.), s. 14; c. 23 (4th Supp.), s. 1; 1992, c. 21, s. 9; 1993, c. 45, s. 7.

(6) [Repealed. R.S.C. 1985, c. 19 (3rd Supp.), s. 14(2).]

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms “complainant”, “provincial court judge” and “justice” are defined in s. 2. Age is determined by reference to s. 30 of the Interpretation Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. I-21. The offences mentioned in s. 274 are as follows: ss. 151, 152, 153, 155, 159, 160, 170, 171, 172, 173, 212, 271, 272, and 273.

This section is one of several which enact special procedural provisions in respect of trial of sexual offences and trial of offences involving children. For other notes, see the cross-references under the particular substantive offence and the notes under s. 150.1.

The trial of the offence in subsec. (5) is conducted by a summary conviction court pursuant to Part XXVII. The punishment for the offence is then as set out in s. 787 and the limitation period is set out in s. 786(2). In either case, release pending trial is determined by s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by a peace officer under s. 496, 497 or by the officer in charge under s. 498.

SYNOPSIS

This section sets out the circumstances in which a judge may exclude the public from the court-room, permit testimony outside the court-room and make an order restricting publication.

Subsection (1) states that there is a presumption that proceedings will be held in open court. If the presiding judge is of the opinion that, for any of the reasons set out therein, the public should be excluded from the court-room, he may make such an order.

Subsections (1.2) to (1.4) provide for the role of a “support person” for the witness.

Subsection (2) provides that where an accused person is charged with any of the offences mentioned in s. 274 and either the prosecutor or the accused makes an application under subsec. (1), the judge must give his reasons for not making such an order if he so decides.

Subsection (2.1) states that where an accused is charged with any of the offences enumerated therein and the complainant is under the age of 18, the judge may order that the complainant testify outside the court-room or behind a screen or device that would prevent a view of the accused. The judge must be of the opinion that such an order is necessary in order to allow the complainant to testify fully and candidly. This subsection specifically overrides s. 650 which sets out the rights of an accused to be present during a trial and to make full answer and defence.

Subsection (2.2) requires that the accused, the court and the jury be in a position to view the evidence of a complainant testifying outside the court-room pursuant to subsec. (2.1) by means of closed-circuit television or other device.

Subsection (2.3) gives the court power to prohibit the accused from personally cross-examining the complainant where this is necessary in the proper administration of justice. Where necessary, the judge will appoint counsel to cross-examine the complainant.

Subsection (3) provides that when an accused is charged under any of the sections specified therein, the court may make an order directing that the identity of, or information that would identify the complainant or another witness not be published or broadcast.

Subsection (4) requires that the presiding judge or justice must inform any witness under the age of 18 and the complainant, at the first reasonable opportunity, of the right to make an application under subsec. (3). If such an application is made by the complainant, any witness as described in subsec. (3) or the prosecutor, the presiding judge or justice must make such an order.

Subsection (5) makes it a summary conviction offence to fail to comply with an order issued under subsec. (3).

ANNOTATIONS

Grounds for exclusion of public generally [subsec. (1)] – On the trial of a drug charge an application was made under this subsection to exclude the public while the accused testified, as she would be revealing the fact that she was a police informer. The application was refused and on appeal it was held there was no error in the refusal of the Judge to exercise his power in this section. The reason put forward was not sufficient reason to exclude the public since it had already been revealed in open Court that she was an informer and it could not be said that the disclosure that she intended to do it again added in any substantial way to whatever danger was alleged to attend her testifying in open Court. It would, however, have been preferable for the trial Judge to at least have listened to defence counsel's reasons for wishing exclusion in camera: R. v. Douglas (1977), 33 C.C.C. (2d) 395, 1 C.R. (3d) 238 (Ont. C.A.).

The mere fact that the charges are of sexual offences is not sufficient to justify an order excluding the public. Exclusion of the public in the interest of public morals relates not to the category of the offence charged but to the evidence proposed to be tendered of acts or circumstances which might reasonably be expected to offend, or to have an adverse or corrupting effect on, public morals by publicity of obscenities, perversions, or the like. Alternatively, a witness might need the reassurance of exclusion of the public in testifying to certain matters which would justify the order of exclusion on the grounds of the proper administration of justice. The discretion to exclude the public must be exercised cautiously and only as circumstances demand: R. v. Warawuk (1978), 42 C.C.C. (2d) 121, [1978] 5 W.W.R. 389 (Alta. S.C. App. Div.).

The fact that witnesses having to testify as to sexual behaviour may be embarrassed is not alone sufficient to warrant exclusion of the public: R. v. Quesnel and Quesnel (1979), 51 C.C.C. (2d) 270 (Ont. C.A.).

An order excluding the public may properly be made where the complainant in a sexual offence would otherwise be too nervous to give evidence. In such circumstances the order is necessary for the proper administration of justice: R. v. Lefebvre (1984), 17 C.C.C. (3d) 277 (Que. C.A.).

A provincial court judge has no power under this section to order a newspaper reporter to be excluded from Court so as to prevent him from publishing the names of witnesses (in this case the inmates of a bawdy-house). Such an order is a misuse of the section in attempting to prevent conduct that is not unlawful, interfering with freedom of the press; and it could not be justified on the basis of the proper administration of justice: Re F.P. Publications (Western) Ltd. and The Queen (1979), 51 C.C.C. (2d) 110, [1980] 1 W.W.R. 504 (Man. C.A.) (4:1).

It was held in R. v. Musitano et al. (1985), 24 C.C.C. (3d) 65, 25 D.L.R. (4th) 299 (Ont. C.A.), that the trial judge properly exercised his discretion in excluding the public in the interest of the proper administration of justice when conducting an inquiry in the course of the trial to determine the impartiality of several jurors.

Requirement of reasons in sexual offence cases [subsec. (2)] – The fact that the Judge is required to give reasons does not enlarge the grounds, set out in subsec. (1), for excluding the public: R. v. Brint (1979), 45 C.C.C. (2d) 560, 6 C.R. (3d) 377 (Alta. S.C. App. Div.).

Complainant testifying outside court or behind screen [subsec. (2.1)] / When order should be made – The trial judge properly exercised his discretion to permit the child, who was the 10 year old granddaughter of the accused, shy by nature and who would be required to testify to intimate matters, to testify outside the court-room: R. v. R.(M.E.) (1989), 49 C.C.C. (3d) 475, 71 C.R. (3d) 113, 90 N.S.R. (2d) 439 (C.A.). Similarly, see R. v. H.(D.) (1990), 55 C.C.C. (3d) 343 (N.B.Q.B.).

The circumstances under which a judge may make an order under this subsection do not require that exceptional and inordinate stress be caused to the child. The trial judge has a substantial latitude in deciding whether the use of the screen should be permitted and the evidence in support of the application need not take any particular form. In exercising the discretion under this subsection, the trial judge may consider evidence of the capabilities and demeanour of the child, the nature of the allegations and the circumstances of the case. It may well be that the trial judge may also consider the fact that the accused is unrepresented in determining whether or not to permit the use of the screen: R. v. Levogiannis (1991), 85 C.C.C. (3d) 327, 25 C.R. (4th) 325, 160 N.R. 371 (S.C.C.) (9:00).

Before permitting the witness to testify outside of court, the trial judge may hold a voir dire to determine whether such an order is necessary to obtain a full and candid account. On that voir dire, however, the Crown may not ask witnesses who are not qualified as experts to give their opinion on that issue: R. v. H. (B.C.) (1990), 58 C.C.C. (3d), 79 C.R. (3d) 119, 66 Man. R. (2d) 174 (C.A.).

The trial judge is not empowered to form the requisite opinion that a screen is necessary unless there is an evidential base relating to the standard of necessity set out in this subsection. The necessary evidential base was lacking, where there was merely testimony from the complainant that she did not feel comfortable talking in front of a lot of people and the accused, that she would find it easier if people were excluded from the courtroom: R. v. M. (P.) (1990), 1 O.R. (3d) 341, 42 O.A.C. 153 (C.A.).

Constitutional considerations – Subsection (2.1) violates neither ss. 7 nor 11(d) of the Charter: R. v. Levogiannis, supra.

Procedure – Ordinarily, the trial judge should instruct the jury to the effect that the use of the screen is a procedure that is allowed in cases of this kind by reason of the youth of the witness and that, since it has nothing to do with the guilt or innocence of the accused, the jury must not draw any inference of any kind from its use, and, in particular, that no adverse inference should be drawn against the accused because of the screen: R. v. Levogiannis, supra.

It was held in R. v. H. (B.C.), supra, that the trial judge erred in requiring the unrepresented accused to pose his questions to the complainant through an intermediary. The right to cross-examine is fundamental and is a right not only to frame questions but to phrase and express the questions in the manner of the examiner's choice. Even assuming that this subsection contemplates the procedure of using an intermediary, it was not shown that such a procedure was necessary in this case.

Ban on publication of identity of complainant or witness [subsecs. (3), (4)] – It was held under the predecessor to this section that the order (which was mandatory upon application by the prosecutor) must be made, at the latest, at the time the complainant begins her testimony: R. v. Calabrese and Renard (No. 3) (1981), 64 C.C.C. (2d) 71 (Que. S.C.).

While subsec. (4) infringes freedom of expression as guaranteed under s. 2(b) of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms it constitutes a reasonable limit on that freedom and is valid. Accordingly the order prohibiting publication of the identity of the complainant must be made upon application by her or by the prosecutor: Canadian Newspapers Co. v. Canada (Attorney-General) (1988), 43 C.C.C. (3d) 24, 65 C.R. (3d) 50, [1988] 1 S.C.R. 122 (6:0). [Note: This provision has since been amended to provide that the making of the order is also mandatory upon application of a witness under the age of 18 years. As well, the court left open the question whether in a proper case the accused's right to a fair trial as guaranteed by s. 11(d) of the Charter would require that the complainant's name be published.]

However, where the complainant or the prosecutor wishes to obtain a more specific order prohibiting the naming of the accused or other persons or places on the ground that such information would disclose the identity of the complainant, evidence must be provided to support the application. The order cannot properly be made merely with the consent of the prosecutor and the complainant and without any supporting evidence. However, such evidence can be supplied either by viva voce evidence, affidavit or submissions of counsel and the discretion of a judge to make a non-publication order beyond an order as to the name of the complainant is not restricted to a limited category of cases such as those of incest and other familial crimes. On the other hand, great weight should always be given by judges in the exercise of their discretion to the tradition of openness of the courts to the public and the constitutional guarantee of freedom of the media in s. 2(b) of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms: R. v. Southam Inc. (1989), 47 C.C.C. (3d) 21, 69 C.R. (3d) 229, 32 O.A.C. 274 (Ont. C.A.).

A court may not unilaterally revoke an order under this section. If, however, both the Crown and the complainant consent to a revocation of the order, then the circumstances which make the publication ban mandatory are no longer present, and, subject to any rights that the accused may have under subsec. (3), the trial judge can revoke the order: R. v. Adams (1995), 103 C.C.C. (3d) 262 (S.C.C.). See also R. v. K.(V.) (1991), 68 C.C.C. (3d) 18, 4 C.R. (4th) 338 (B.C.C.A.) holding that a publication ban continues in effect during appellate proceedings.

Publication bans other than pursuant to statute – A trial judge has jurisdiction to prohibit the publication of the names of certain witnesses where the circumstances are sufficiently compelling as where the witnesses are prison inmates who justifiably fear for their safety should their identity be disclosed: R. v. McArthur (1984), 13 C.C.C. (3d) 152, 10 C.R.R. 220 (Ont. H.C.J.).

The superior court has an inherent jurisdiction to make an order prohibiting publication of the identity of the accused where such an order is necessary to protect a trial which is then being conducted before it. As well, the superior court has power under its inherent jurisdiction to render assistance to inferior courts to enable them to administer justice fully and effectively: Re Regina and Unnamed Person (1985), 22 C.C.C. (3d) 284 (Ont. C.A.).

A person seeking a publication ban in the context of criminal proceedings under a judge's common law or legislated discretionary authority must apply to the trial judge if one has been appointed or to a judge in the court at the level the case will be heard if the level of court can be established definitively by reference to the appropriate statutory provisions. Otherwise, the request should be made to a superior court judge as the highest court that could hear the case. To seek or challenge a ban on appeal, the Crown and the accused must follow the regular avenues of appeal available to them through the Criminal Code. For a third party, such as the media, who has been affected by the publication ban, where the ban has been imposed by a provincial court judge then the third party may apply to the superior court by way of certiorari and may then follow the appellate routes prescribed in the Criminal Code. When the order has been made by a superior court judge, then the third party may apply for leave to appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada under s. 40 of the Supreme Court Act. The judge hearing the application for a ban has the discretion to direct that third parties, such as the media, be given notice in accordance with the provincial rules of criminal procedure and has the discretion to grant standing to interested third parties and determine what rights the third parties should have on the hearing of the application. A judge has the discretion at common law to impose a ban on publication to protect the fairness of the trial only where: (a) such a ban is necessary in order to prevent a real and substantial risk to the fairness of the trial, because reasonably available alternative measures will not prevent the risk; and (b) the salutary effects of the publication ban outweigh the deleterious: Dagenais v. Canadian Broadcasting Corp., [1994] 3 S.C.R. 835, 94 C.C.C. (3d) 289, 34 C.R. (4th) 269.

The rights of an adult accused to equality as protected by s. 15 of the Charter are not infringed, notwithstanding that the judge may make an order prohibiting publication of the identity of the complainant or an accused young offender. Further, s. 7 of the Charter does not give the accused a right to privacy which may be enforced by a ban on publication of his identity: R. v. D. (G.) (1991), 63 C.C.C. (3d) 134, 4 C.R. (4th) 172, 2 O.R. (3d) 498 (C.A.).

A trial judge, presiding at a retrial following the accused's successful appeal, has an inherent power to make an order prohibiting publication of aspects of the previous proceedings which could prejudice the jury hearing the retrial. Such an order does not violate the right to freedom of the press in s. 2(b) of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms: R. v. Barrow (1989), 48 C.C.C. (3d) 308, 91 N.S.R. (2d) 176 (S.C.).

Violation of publication ban [subsec. (5)] – An accused may be cited for contempt of court in the superior court for violation of an order made under this section, notwithstanding the availability of the punishment under subsec. (5): Quebec (Procureur Général) v. Publications Photo-Police Inc. (1990), 54 C.C.C. (3d) 576n, [1990] 1 S.C.R. 851 (7:0).

INFORMATION FOR SEARCH WARRANT / Endorsement of search warrant / Form / Effect of endorsement.

487. (1) A justice who is satisfied by information on oath in Form 1 that there are reasonable grounds to believe that there is in a building, receptacle or place

- (a) anything on or in respect of which any offence against this Act or any other Act of Parliament has been or is suspected to have been committed,
- (b) anything that there are reasonable grounds to believe will afford evidence with respect to the commission of an offence, or will reveal the whereabouts of a person who is believed to have committed an offence, against this Act or any other Act of Parliament, or
- (c) anything that there are reasonable grounds to believe is intended to be used for the purpose of committing any offence against the person for which a person may be arrested without warrant, may at any time issue a warrant under his hand authorizing a person named therein or a peace officer

- (d) to search the building, receptacle or place for any such thing and to seize it, and
- (e) subject to any other Act of Parliament, to, as soon as practicable, bring the thing seized before, or make a report in respect thereof to, the justice or some other justice for the same territorial division in accordance with section 489.1.

(2) Where the building, receptacle, or place in which anything mentioned in subsection (1) is believed to be in any other territorial division, the justice may issue his warrant in like form modified according to the circumstances, and the warrant may be executed in the other territorial division after it has been endorsed, in Form 28, by a justice having jurisdiction in that territorial division.

(3) A search warrant issued under this section may be in the form set out as Form 5 in Part XXVIII, varied to suit the case.

(4) An endorsement that is made on a warrant as provided for in subsection (2) is sufficient authority to the peace officers or the persons to whom it was originally directed and to all peace officers within the jurisdiction of the justice by whom it is endorsed to execute the warrant and to deal with the things seized in accordance with section 489.1 or as otherwise provided by law. R.S., c. C-34, s. 443; R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 68; 1994, c. 44, s. 36.

SYNOPSIS

This section sets out the procedure that must be followed to obtain a search warrant.

Subsection (1) makes it clear that the justice must be satisfied that there are reasonable grounds to believe that the prescribed items will be found in a building, receptacle or place. The items being searched for may include anything in respect of which an offence against an Act of Parliament has been, or is suspected of having been committed, anything that there is reasonable ground to believe will afford evidence of an offence against an Act of Parliament, anything that will reveal the whereabouts of a person believed to have committed an offence, or anything that there are reasonable grounds to believe is intended to be used for the purpose of committing an offence against the person, for which a person may be arrested without a warrant. The justice may only be satisfied of the preceding if the information that comes before him is on oath and in Form 1.

The justice may issue a warrant authorizing a person named in that warrant, or a peace officer to search the building, receptacle or place for the specified items and to seize such items. The warrant will also require that the items seized be brought before a justice or that a report be made as soon as practicable.

Subsection (2) makes it clear that if the building, receptacle or place in which the items sought are believed to be located is in another territorial division, the justice may issue the warrant in a form modified to fit the circumstances. This warrant must then be endorsed in Form 28, by a justice having jurisdiction, before it can be executed. This endorsement is sufficient authority to the person to whom the warrant was originally directed and to all peace officers within the new territorial division to execute the warrant.

ANNOTATIONS

Constitutional requirements generally – Where it is feasible to obtain prior authorization, such authorization, usually in the form of a warrant issued by a person able to act judicially and to assess the evidence as to whether the appropriate standard has been met in an entirely neutral and impartial manner, is a precondition for a valid search and seizure in conformity with s. 8 of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. The person seeking to justify a warrantless search must rebut the presumption that such search is unreasonable in violation of s. 8: Hunter et al. v. Southam Inc. (1984), 14 C.C.C. (3d) 97, 41 C.R. (3d) 97, [1984] 2 S.C.R. 145 (8:0).

This section complies with s. 8 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms: Re Times Square Book Store and The Queen (1985), 21 C.C.C. (3d) 503, 48 C.R. (3d) 132 (Ont. C.A.).

Generally speaking, conformity to law is an essential component of reasonableness, although mere minor or technical defects in the warrant would not necessarily make an ensuing search or seizure unreasonable in violation of s. 8 of the Charter of Rights. However, a search or seizure conducted under a search warrant that is invalid in substance because it was issued upon information that did not set out facts upon which a justice acting judicially could be satisfied that there were grounds for issuing the warrant under para. (1)(b), or did not meet the minimum requirements of particularity respecting the things to be searched for, is unreasonable under s. 8: R. v. Harris and Lighthouse Video Centres Ltd. (1987), 35 C.C.C. (3d) 1, 57 C.R. (3d) 356 (Ont. C.A.), leave to appeal to S.C.C. refused December 7, 1987.

In considering the validity of a search warrant, facts obtained as a result of an unreasonable search must be excised. The court must then determine whether the warrant would have been issued without the improperly obtained facts: R. v. Grant, [1993] 3 S.C.R. 223, 84 C.C.C. (3d) 173, 24 C.R. (4th) 1 (9:0).

Grounds for issuing warrant – Information supplied by a reliable informer, even though it is hearsay, may in some circumstances provide the necessary ground to justify granting of a search warrant. However, the mere statement by the informant that he was told by a reliable informer that a certain person is carrying on criminal activity or that contraband would be found at a certain place would be insufficient basis for granting a warrant. The underlying circumstances disclosed by the informer for his conclusion must be set out thus enabling the justice to satisfy himself that the requisite reasonable grounds exist: R. v. Debot (1986), 30 C.C.C. (3d) 207, 54 C.R. (3d) 120 (Ont. C.A.). A further appeal by the accused to the Supreme Court of Canada was dismissed 52 C.C.C. (3d) 193, 73 C.R. (3d) 129 (S.C.C.) (5:0). The court agreed that the appropriate standard to establish reasonable grounds for a search is one of “reasonable probability” and, in making this determination, the court must have regard to the totality of the circumstances. The court also held that the suspect’s criminal record and reputation could be taken into account provided that, inter alia, the reputation is related to the ostensible reasons for the search. Where the police rely on information from an informer, it is not necessary for the police to confirm each detail in the informer’s tip, so long as the sequence of events actually observed conforms sufficiently to the anticipated pattern to remove the possibility of innocent coincidence. On the other hand, the level of verification required may be higher where the police rely on an informant whose credibility cannot be assessed or where fewer details are provided and the risk of innocent coincidence is greater.

Information from unnamed confidential sources was not a sufficient basis for issuing the warrant where there was no evidence to substantiate the veracity of the informers, no information as to how the informers acquired this knowledge and no independent evidence to support the story of the informers: R. v. Berger (1989), 48 C.C.C. (3d) 185, 74 Sask. R. 198 (C.A.).

Before granting the warrant the justice must be satisfied, inter alia, that the grounds stated for obtaining the warrant are current and that there is a nexus between the grounds for believing an offence has been committed and that evidence of the commission of the offence will be found on the premises to be searched: R. v. Turcotte (1987), 39 C.C.C. (3d) 193, [1982] 2 W.W.R. 97 (Sask. C.A.).

Things for which warrant may be obtained – A search warrant may authorize the removal and seizure of fixtures such as doors and windows: Re Spitzer and The Queen et al. (1984), 15 C.C.C. (3d) 98 (Sask. Q.B.). Contra: R. v. Munn (No. 1) (1938), 71 C.C.C. 139, [1938] 3 D.L.R. 772, 13 M.P.R. 81 (P.E.I.S.C.).

A search warrant is not available under this section to seize funds deposited in a savings account at a bank. A credit balance in a bank account is an intangible, merely proof that the bank has certain sums on deposit, and such funds are not segregated from the bank's other assets: Re Banque Royale Du Canada and The Queen (1985), 18 C.C.C. (3d) 98, 44 C.R. (3d) 387 (Que. C.A.), leave to appeal to S.C.C. refused C.C.C. loc. cit. [However, now see s. 462.33.]

A search warrant cannot issue to forcibly remove and seize hair samples from the accused's person: R. v. Legere (1988), 43 C.C.C. (3d) 502, 89 N.B.R. (2d) 361 (N.B.C.A.). Nor can a warrant issue to seize a bandage wrapped around the accused's apparently injured hand: R. v. Miller (1987), 38 C.C.C. (3d) 252, 62 O.R. (2d) 97 (C.A.). However, it was held that the bandage could be seized under the common law power to search and seize as an incident to the arrest: R. v. Miller, supra.

A search warrant may not issue under this section to take a blood sample from an accused: R. v. Tomaso (1989), 70 C.R. (3d) 152, 33 O.A.C. 106, 14 M.V.R. (2d) 10. [Note: In the case of motor vehicle offences, now see s. 256, supra.]

Seizure of hospital records – It was held in R. v. French (1977), 37 C.C.C. (2d) 201 (Ont. C.A.), affd on other grounds 47 C.C.C. (2d) 411, [1980] 1 S.C.R. 158, that in order to obtain hospital records the provincial legislation which brought those records into existence and safeguards their use must be complied with, even where the records are sought in criminal proceedings. Thus, see R. v. Lyons (1981), 64 C.C.C. (2d) 73 (Ont. H.C.J.), where an order was made within the terms of the provincial legislation. Also see R. v. Coon (1992), 74 C.C.C. (3d) 146 (Ont. Ct. (Gen. Div.)) noted under s. 698.

In Re Waterford Hospital and The Queen (1983), 6 C.C.C. (3d) 481, 35 C.R. (3d) 348 (Nfld. C.A.), a search warrant to obtain hospital records made during a remand of the accused under s. 537(1)(c) was quashed, inter alia, because the Department of Justice could have applied under the provincial legislation to examine the records.

Where the applicable provincial legislation contained no code of procedure for obtaining medical records, a search warrant issued under this section was available to obtain the relevant records. The duty of confidentiality, which the hospital and staff owed to the accused, was not breached as the records were required to be released by law pursuant to the order of the justice: R. v. Worth (1989), 54 C.C.C. (3d) 215 (Ont. H.C.J.), affd 54 C.C.C. (3d) 223n (C.A.).

Jurisdiction of justice – A justice of the peace appointed in and for the province has jurisdiction to issue a search warrant to be executed in one county although at the time the justice is sitting in another county, and such a warrant need not be endorsed pursuant to subsec. (2): R. v. Haley (1986), 27 C.C.C. (3d) 454, 51 C.R. (3d) 363 (Ont. C.A.). Contra: Re Ciment Independant Inc., Ciment St-Laurent Inc. and The Queen (1985), 21 C.C.C. (3d) 429, 47 C.R. (3d) 83 (Que. C.A.).

A justice of the peace had jurisdiction to issue a search warrant to seize documents from a federal government department containing confidential information acquired under the Old Age Security Act (Can.) which was sought as evidence in relation to a fraud on provincial welfare authorities. The Act itself and the Privacy Act (Can.) created an exemption to the privilege and duty of non-disclosure in such circumstances. It was still open to the federal Minister to object to disclosure but this must be done under s. 37 of the Canada Evidence Act. On the other hand, in view of the confidential nature of the material sought, it would have been prudent for the justice of the peace to impose conditions and restrictions on the manner in which the warrant was executed: Canada (Procurer General) v. Belanger (1987), 42 C.C.C. (3d) 82, 61 C.R. (3d) 388 (Que. C.A.).

Search of persons/search incident of arrest – A warrant to search premises does not authorize the police to search an occupant of those premises and in the absence of some statutory or other power, such a search is unlawful and unreasonable: R. v. Mutch (1986), 26 C.C.C. (3d) 477, 22 C.R.R. 310 (Sask. Q.B.).

Police officers have the power to search an accused as an incident to a lawful arrest and to seize anything in his possession or immediate surroundings to guarantee the safety of the police and the accused, prevent the accused's escape or provide evidence against him. The existence of reasonable and probable grounds to believe that the accused is in possession of weapons or evidence is not a prerequisite to the existence of the power to search, provided, however, that the search is for a valid objective and not unrelated to the objectives of the proper administration of justice. Proper objectives are to prevent the accused evading arrest and to collect evidence. Accordingly, a search done for weapons or other dangerous articles is necessary as an elementary precaution to preclude the possibility of their use against the police, the nearby public or the accused himself. A search is also proper to collect evidence that can be used in establishing the guilt of the accused. Further, the search must not be conducted in an abusive fashion and the use of physical or psychological constraint should be proportionate to the objectives sought and the other circumstances of the situation. A "frisk" or pat down search is a relatively non-intrusive procedure and, if done for valid reasons, is not a disproportionate interference with the freedom of persons lawfully arrested: Cloutier v. Langlois (1990), 53 C.C.C. (3d) 257, 74 C.R. (3d) 316, [1990] 1 S.C.R. 158 (7:0).

Search and right to counsel – As a general rule, police proceeding to search are not obligated to suspend the search and give a person the opportunity to retain and instruct counsel, as, for example, when the search is of a home pursuant to a search warrant. Where a person is detained for a search, as in the case of a body search incident to arrest, then, immediately upon detention, the detainee has the right to be informed of the right to counsel under s. 10(b) of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. However, the police are not obligated to suspend the search incident to arrest until the detainee has the opportunity to retain counsel. The police are, however, required to suspend the search where the lawfulness of the search is dependent on the detainee's consent or where the statute gives a person a right to seek review of the decision to search: R. v. Debot (1989), 52 C.C.C. (3d) 193, [1989] 2 S.C.R. 1140, 73 C.R. (3d) 129.

Once the police have the situation clearly under control in the course of execution of a search warrant then they are required to afford an occupant of the premises, who has been arrested, an opportunity to exercise his rights under s. 10(b) of the Charter: R. v. Strachan (1988), 46 C.C.C. (3d) 479, [1988] 2 S.C.R. 980, 67 C.R. (3d) 87, [1989] 1 W.W.R. 385 (7:0).

Execution of warrant [Also see notes under s. 488] – A police officer may have the assistance of persons, who are neither named in the warrant nor peace officers, provided that the police officer remains in control of and accountable for the search: R. v. B.(J.E.) (1989), 52 C.C.C. (3d) 224 (N.S.C.A.).

An officer executing a search warrant is required to have the warrant with her [see s. 29]. However, where the officer forgot to bring the warrant through inadvertence and the accused consented to the search commencing while the warrant was being brought to his home, then it was not shown that the search was unlawful: R. v. B.(J.E.) (1989), 52 C.C.C. (3d) 224 (N.S.C.A.).

Contents of warrant – The person whose premises are being searched is entitled to know from examination of the search warrant for what reason the search is taking place and the seizing officer must know in relation to what offence or circumstances the articles are to be seized. The failure, therefore, to describe the offence sufficiently in the search warrant is fatal to the validity of the warrant. A warrant merely setting out a conspiracy to defraud certain named companies "and other financial institutions" and not alleging the means of fraud nor what the victims were defrauded of was held to be defective and was quashed and the items seized ordered to be returned: Re Alder and The Queen (1977), 37 C.C.C. (2d) 234, [1977] 5 W.W.R. 132 (Alta.S.C.T.D.).

In determining the degree of specificity required of things to be searched for, regard must be had to the nature of the offence alleged in the information to obtain the search warrant. In this case the court was required to consider the size and sophisticated nature of the target of the search as well as the continuing nature of the alleged offences and the lengthy period of time during which they were alleged to have been committed. Thus a warrant authorizing search and seizure of broad classes of documents was justified. Even where the informant did not allege the precise nexus between a thing to be searched for and an alleged offence, the justice of the peace who issued the warrant was entitled to draw reasonable inferences of such nexus from the allegations in the information. Where, by the very nature of the things to be searched for, it is not possible to describe them with precision or great particularity, it is inevitable that the executing officers will have to exercise some discretion in determining whether things found on the premises fall within the description of the things or classes of things described in the warrant: Re Church of Scientology et al. and The Queen (No. 6); Re Walsh et al. and The Queen (1987), 31 C.C.C. (3d) 449 (C.A.).

The offence for which the items are sought need not be set out in the warrant with the same precision as would be required for an indictment, provided that the person in charge of the premises is reasonably informed from the warrant as to the nature of the offence and the object of the search: Re PSI Mind Development Institute Ltd et al. and The Queen (1977), 37 C.C.C. (2d) 263 (Ont.H.C.J.).

Religious privilege / freedom of religion – While it is not the function of the court to pass on the validity of religious beliefs sincerely held by any organization, the mere fact that an organization claims to be a religion does not bar the Crown or any other litigant from seeking the assistance of the courts in the determination of either criminal or civil wrong, including resort to the investigative tool of a search warrant: Re Church of Scientology et al. and The Queen (No. 6); Re Walsh et al. and The Queen (1987), 31 C.C.C. (3d) 449 (Ont. C.A.).

There is no recognized class privilege accorded to the priest penitent relationship and so while s. 2(a) of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms may have enhanced the claim that communications made in the course of that relationship may have to be afforded privilege, its applicability must be determined on a case by case basis. The justice would have jurisdiction to issue a warrant to seize files which allegedly contained priest penitent communications where the information to obtain the warrant discloses a prima facie case of criminality and that no reasonable alternative source of obtaining the information was available: Re Church of Scientology et al. and The Queen (No. 6); Re Walsh et al. and The Queen (1987), 31 C.C.C. (3d) 449 (Ont. C.A.).

The Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms does not require the application of a strict test such as the test of scrupulous exactitude in the assessment of the particularity of the search warrant, notwithstanding that the search allegedly involved intrusion into areas of protected freedoms such as freedom of religion: Re Church of Scientology et al. and The Queen (No. 6); Re Walsh and The Queen, supra.

Freedom of expression (media) – Even where the minimum requirements set out in this section have been met, the justice has a discretion whether or not to issue the warrant and, if so, whether to attach conditions to its execution. In the case of the media and in light of the guarantee to freedom of expression in s. 2(b) of the Charter, there must be a careful consideration as to whether the warrant should issue and also the conditions which might be imposed. Ordinarily, the information to obtain the warrant should disclose whether there are alternative sources from which the information may reasonably be obtained and if there is an alternative source, that it has been investigated and all reasonable efforts to obtain the information have been exhausted. If a search will impede the media from fulfilling its functions of news gatherer and disseminator, then a warrant should only be issued where a compelling state interest is demonstrated. The fact that the information sought has already been disseminated in whole or in part, to the public by the media will ordinarily favour the granting of the warrant: C.B.C. v. New Brunswick (Attorney General) (1991), 67 C.C.C. (3d) 544, 85 D.L.R. (4th) 57, 130 N.R. 362 (S.C.C.) (6:1); C.B.C. v. Lessard (1991), 67 C.C.C. (3d) 517, 130 N.R. 321 (S.C.C.) (6:1).

Obscene material [Also see notes under s. 164] – Where a search warrant is sought in relation to allegedly obscene magazines, it is not sufficient that the justice of the peace is satisfied that the items sought could be of assistance in establishing the commission of an offence. Rather, the justice must be satisfied on reasonable and probable grounds that the magazines to be seized are obscene and can be found at the specified premises. Further, the warrant should be reasonably specific when dealing with books and magazines since sexually explicit material, however distasteful it may be, so long as it is not obscene, is entitled to the same protection as other forms of expression. On the other hand, neither the material presented in support of the application for a warrant nor the warrant itself need specify the title of each magazine or book sought to be seized: Re Times Square Book Store and The Queen (1985), 21 C.C.C. (3d) 503, 48 C.R. (3d) 132 (Ont. C.A.); R. v. Comic Legends (1987), 40 C.C.C. (3d) 203, 56 Alta. L.R. (2d) 170 (Q.B.).

Access to information (sealing orders) – Where a search warrant is executed and nothing is found then the public has no right to see either the warrant or the information. Where, however, the search warrant has been executed, and objects found as a result of the search are brought before a Justice pursuant to s. 490, then any member of the public is entitled to inspect the warrant and the information upon which it has been issued pursuant to this section, unless it is established that the ends of justice would be subverted by disclosure or that the judicial documents might be used for an improper purpose. Finally, the public has no right to attend the hearing at which application is made for the issuance of a search warrant. That hearing may be held in camera: A.-G. N.S. et al. v. MacIntyre (1982), 65 C.C.C. (2d) 129, 26 C.R. (3d) 193, [1982] 1 S.C.R. 175 (5:4).

A provincial court judge may make an order refusing access to the information where clear and convincing evidence or argument is adduced to establish that access ought to be denied in favour of a countervailing interest. An order denying access may be conditional requiring, for example, that the information be sealed only until a specific event occurs: Re A.-G. Ont. and Yanover et al. (1982), 68 C.C.C. (2d) 151, 26 C.R. (3d) 216 sub nom. Re Yanover et al.; Re Hill (Ont. Prov. Ct.). There is even power to order that an information be sealed against an interested party: Re Gerol and The Queen (1982), 69 C.C.C. (2d) 232 (Ont. Prov. Ct.).

However, it was held in Re Rideout and The Queen (1986), 31 C.C.C. (3d) 211, 61 Nfld. & P.E.I.R. 160 (Nfld. S.C.T.D.), that a judge may refuse access to the information only where the ends of justice would be subverted by disclosure or where judicial documents might be used for an improper purpose.

Although nothing is seized during the search the accused who was the object of the investigation, as an interested party, is entitled to inspect the information, the warrant and the related documentation: Re Jany and The Queen (1983), 9 C.C.C. (3d) 349 (B.C.S.C.).

An application to the Superior Court to gain access to documents relating to execution of a search warrant is premature while an application is pending in the provincial Court to have the documents sealed: Re Henderson and Jolicouer (1983), 9 C.C.C. (3d) 79 (Ont. H.C.J.).

The trial judge has jurisdiction to set aside an order made by the justice, who issued the warrant, sealing the information to obtain the warrant: R. v. Tanner (1989), 46 C.C.C. (3d) 513 (Alta. C.A.).

An application to remove an order prohibiting access to the information should be made to the trial judge rather than to the superior court: R. v. Watson (1990), 58 C.C.C. (3d) 208 (Man. Q.B.).

In British Columbia (Attorney-General) v. Pacific Press Ltd., [1988] 6 W.W.R. 536, 28 B.C.L.R. (2d) 127 (S.C.), it was held that as the justice would have been justified in making a sealing order the court would issue an injunction to restrain publication of material contained in the information. While anyone denying access to court records carries the burden that access should be restricted that burden was met in view of evidence that Crown officers believed that its publication and disclosure might impede an ongoing murder investigation resulting in a potential loss of further evidence and the destruction or hiding of other physical evidence. Also relevant was that publication of much of the material would tend to prejudice a fair trial and thus amount to contempt of court.

Disclosure of identity of confidential informers – Where an accused seeks to attack the lawfulness and reasonableness of a search of his home on the basis that there were not sufficient grounds, in the information, for the issuance of the warrant then there should be reasonable disclosure made of the information which was used to obtain the search warrant, if it is needed and requested, despite the fact that it may disclose the identity of an informer. However, upon receipt of such a request, the trial judge should review the information with the object of deleting all references to the identity of the informer. The information so edited should then be made available to the accused. If, at the conclusion of the editing procedure, the Crown still believes that the informer would become known to the accused upon production of the information, then a decision would have to be made by the Crown. The informer might by this time be willing to consent to being identified. Alternatively, the informer's identity might have become so notorious in the community or become so well known to the accused that his identification would no longer be a significant issue. If the Crown is of the view that to produce the informer would be prejudicial to the administration of justice the Crown may elect not to proceed with the evidence or to proceed on the basis of a warrantless search. In those circumstances, the trial Judge will have to consider the application of s. 24(2) of the Charter: R. v. Hunter (1987), 34 C.C.C. (3d) 14, 57 C.R. (3d) 1, 59 O.R. (2d) 364 (Ont. C.A.).

In R. v. Collins (1989), 48 C.C.C. (3d) 343, 69 C.R. (3d) 235, 32 O.A.C. 296, the court considered the related problem of disclosure of the identity of a confidential informer who is not named in the information to obtain the search warrant but whose information was the basis, at least in part, for obtaining the search warrant. It was held that the common law rules of evidence, which prohibit judicial disclosure of a police informer's identity by police officers who have learned the informer's identity in the course of their duties, were applicable. There is only one exception to this principle and that is where disclosure of the identity of the informer is necessary to demonstrate the innocence of the accused. That was not the case here, since no evidence was adduced on the voir dire either by affidavit evidence or by way of viva voce evidence which would indicate that the secret informer had any knowledge of or was involved in any way in the crime which might tend to demonstrate the innocence of the accused. To the contrary, the evidence adduced on the voir dire through the police officers indicated that the testimony of the secret informer could only tend to demonstrate the guilt rather than the innocence of the accused.

An objection, pursuant to s. 37 of the Canada Evidence Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. C-5 to disclosure of the identity of a police informer referred to in an information to obtain a search warrant, was properly upheld, although the accused sought the informer's identity to explore for evidence of an unreasonable seizure in violation of s. 8 of the Charter. The right to explore for such evidence must be exercised in accordance with the rules of evidence, including the rule prohibiting disclosure of the identity of a police informer: R. v. Archer (1989), 47 C.C.C. (3d) 567, 94 A.R. 323 (C.A.).

Review of sufficiency of warrant / When review application should be brought –

Where the sole purpose for attacking the validity of the search warrant issued by a justice of the peace is to lay a foundation for exclusion of evidence, obtained as a result of its execution, pursuant to ss. 8 and 24(2) of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, then the issue should be determined at trial and not by way of an application to the superior court prior to trial. The rule against collateral attack of orders of a superior court does not extend to the orders of an inferior court: Re Zevallos and The Queen (1987), 37 C.C.C. (3d) 79, 59 C.R. (3d) 153 (Ont. C.A.); R. v. Williams (1987), 38 C.C.C. (3d) 319, 17 B.C.L.R. (2d) 223 (Y.T.C.A.); R. v. Jamieson (1989), 48 C.C.C. (3d) 287, 90 N.S.R. (2d) 164 (C.A.); R. v. Bailey (1988), 87 N.S.R. (2d) 245, 39 C.R.R. 378 (C.A.). Contra: R. v. Komadowski (1986), 27 C.C.C. (3d) 319, [1986] 3 W.W.R. 657, 39 Man. R. (2d) 282 (C.A.), leave to appeal to S.C.C. refused C.C.C. loc. cit., 44 Man. R. (2d) 79.

Scope of review – On an application to quash a search warrant the superior court judge may not substitute his opinion as to the sufficiency of the evidence. Rather he is limited to determining whether or not there is evidence upon which the justice acting judicially could determine that a warrant should be issued and whether the warrant contained sufficient particulars of the items to be seized so that it could not be said that the discretion of the officer was substituted for that of the justice as to the items to be seized: Re Times Square Book Store and The Queen, supra; A.-G. Que. v. Mathieu (1986), 50 C.R. (3d) 156 (Que. C.A.); R. v. Turcotte, [1988] 2 W.W.R. 97 (Sask. C.A.). The enactment of the Canadian Charter of Rights has not altered the scope of review which is limited to jurisdictional error: Re Church of Scientology et al. and The Queen (No. 6); Re Walsh et al. and The Queen, supra.

In determining the validity of an information or search warrant the Court is not entitled to look at the results of the search: Re Liberal Party Of Quebec and Mierzwinski et al. (1978), 46 C.C.C. (2d) 119 (Que. S.C.).

The obtaining of a new search warrant to replace an existing warrant that is contemporaneously the subject of a motion to quash is an abuse of the process: Shumiatcher v A.-G. Of Saskatchewan, Bence, J.P. and Mathews (1960), 129 C.C.C. 270, 34 C.R. 154 (Sask. Q.B.).

Where there is an inadvertent error in the information to obtain the warrant, the issue to be determined is whether, with the erroneous part deleted, the information could have provided sufficient evidence to permit the warrant to be issued. On the other hand, where the justice of the peace has been intentionally misled, the search warrant cannot stand. Cases not clearly in the category of inadvertent error nor deliberately misleading must be considered individually to decide whether the case is one where, if the information in support of the warrant is clearly sufficient, without the erroneous part, the search warrant should be allowed to stand: R. v. Sismey (1990), 55 C.C.C. (3d) 281 (B.C.C.A.).

Procedure on review – While the judge hearing an application to quash a search warrant has jurisdiction to permit cross-examination of the informant, such procedure is not available in every case merely on the basis of a claim that the allegations in the information to obtain the warrant are untrue. Rather, the applicant must first pass a threshold test of establishing a prima facie case of deliberate falsehood or omission or reckless disregard for the truth. Further, where the judge determines that cross-examination should take place, he may properly limit that cross-examination to matters which would have a bearing on the informant's alleged fraud or reckless disregard for the truth. In particular it would not be appropriate to allow informants to be cross-examined as to their knowledge or opinion of whether the justice of the peace had read all the material placed before him before issuing the warrant. If on an application to quash a search warrant, perjury or reckless disregard for the truth or material gross negligence are found to exist, then this would be tantamount to fraud and result in the quashing of the warrant, or such portion of it as may be affected by the fraud, if the fraud were not so serious as to amount to an abuse of the process of the court. However, for the informant's misstatements and omissions in the information to obtain the warrant to constitute a reckless disregard for the truth, there must be a flagrant lack of concern for the truth or accuracy of statements made which approaches fraudulent behaviour. The lack of concern must be of an unconscionable nature which approaches, although is not deliberate, misstatement or omission. It does not include mere error of judgment or ordinary negligence or carelessness: R. v. Church of Scientology; R. v. Walsh, supra. Folld: R. v. Titan Industries Ltd. (1986), 31 C.C.C. (3d) 442 (B.C.S.C.). [It is unclear whether the strict threshold for cross-examination is appropriate in light of its rejection in the wire-tap area. See R. v. Garofoli (1990), 60 C.C.C. (3d) 161, [1990] 2 S.C.R. 1421, 80 C.R. (3d) 317.

While in the result the court did not find it necessary to decide the point, some doubt was expressed as to whether a justice of the peace was a compellable witness to testify with respect to his mental processes in exercising the judicial function whether or not to grant a search warrant: R. v. Moran (1987), 36 C.C.C. (3d) 225, 21 O.A.C. 257 (C.A.), leave to appeal to S.C.C. refused [1988] 1 S.C.R. xi. [And now see: MacKeigan v. Hickman (1989), 50 C.C.C. (3d) 449, 61 D.L.R. (4th) 688, [1989] 2 S.C.R. 796].

There is a presumption of validity with respect to a search warrant and the sworn information supporting it. Thus, where it is sought to adduce evidence from the informant or other witnesses in support of an application to set aside a search warrant, there must be allegations of deliberate falsehood or omission or a reckless disregard for the truth with respect to the material used to obtain the issuance of the warrant. Such allegations must be made out, as to the facts, to the extent of a prima facie case which may be established by inspection of the material or by affidavit, except in the most exceptional circumstances. The deliberate falsity, omission or reckless disregard alleged must be that of the affiant of the information and not that of an informer who has provided him with the alleged facts: R. v. Collins, supra.

Standing – In the absence of showing some possessory or proprietary interest either in the things seized or the premises, a third person has no standing to attempt to quash the search warrant even where the items seized relate to transactions by the applicant: R. v. Model Power (1979), 21 C.R. (3d) at p. 196 (Ont. H.C.J.), affd C.R. loc. cit. p. 195 (C.A.), leave to appeal to S.C.C. refused C.R. loc. cit., 32 N.R. 487n.

Severance of warrant – Where a search warrant is defective in part that part only may be severed: R. v. Johnson & Franklin Wholesale Distributors Ltd. (1971), 3 C.C.C. (2d) 484, 16 C.R.N.S. 107 (B.C.C.A.).

Although on an application to quash a search warrant the superior court has power to sever off bad parts of a warrant there is no authority to permit the court on a certiorari application to amend the warrant by, for example, narrowing the time period of the alleged offence to conform with the evidence disclosed in the information to obtain the warrant: R. v. Dobney Holdings (1985), 18 C.C.C. (3d) 238 (B.C.C.A.).

Return of items seized – Where the search warrant had a fatal defect it was wrong for the Judge on certiorari to allow the Crown to decide which documents should be retained, and an order will be made directing that all documents and copies be returned to the applicant: Bergeron v. Deschamps (1977), 33 C.C.C. (2d) 461, 14 N.R. 83 (9:0) (S.C.C.). The court without passing on the correctness of R. v. Black (1973), 13 C.C.C. (2d) 446, 24 C.R.N.S. 203 (B.C.S.C.), where it had been held that an order should go returning the seized goods provided they were not required as evidence, distinguished the case on the basis that in R. v. Black there was not the same fatal frailties as existed in this case. In R. v. Black the warrant was quashed because of failure of the person signing it to indicate he was a Justice of the Peace.

Even where charges have been laid and the items seized under the invalid warrant are required as evidence, the court, in quashing the warrant, has a discretion to order the items returned. This power existed prior to the Charter of Rights and Freedoms and exists as a remedy under s. 24(1): R. v. Chapman (1984), 12 C.C.C. (3d) 1, 9 D.L.R. (4th) 244, 46 O.R. (2d) 65 (C.A.).

In determining whether or not to make an order returning items seized after the warrant has been quashed the court will have regard to the conduct of the prosecuting authorities in relation to the search and seizure, the seriousness of the offence, the degree of potential cogency of the things seized in proving the charge, the nature of the defect in the warrant and the potential prejudice to the owner in being kept out of possession. In proper circumstances the court may give the authorities an opportunity to obtain a new warrant before ordering the return of the items seized: R. v. Dobney Foundry Ltd. (No. 2) (1985), 19 C.C.C. (3d) 465, [1985] 3 W.W.R. 626 (B.C.C.A.).

The court, having quashed the warrant, may in appropriate circumstances provide that the items are to be returned within a specified number of days unless the Crown obtains a fresh search warrant within that time: R. v. Dobney Foundry Ltd. (No. 3) (1986), 29 C.C.C. (3d) 285, [1987] 1 W.W.R. 281 (B.C.C.A.).

The Superior Court's inherent jurisdiction to order the return of items wrongfully seized under an invalid search warrant and which are not required as evidence also extends to items seized without a search warrant and which are wrongfully held by the police: Butler and Butler v. Canada (Solicitor General) (1981), 61 C.C.C. (2d) 512 (B.C.S.C.).

Application to other statutes – Although the Bankruptcy Act, R.S.C. 1970, c. B-3, contains its own search and seizure provisions, the authorities may also resort to this section to obtain evidence in relation to an offence under that Act. The addition of the words “or any other Act of Parliament” unambiguously show that every Act of Parliament could fall within the ambit of subsec. (1)(a) and (b): R. v. Multiform Manufacturing Co. (1990), 58 C.C.C. (3d) 257, [1990] 2 S.C.R. 624, 79 C.R. (3d) 390 (7:0).

A search warrant may be obtained under this section to search for narcotics. In such a case, however, the authorities are not entitled to rely upon the broad powers in s. 12 of the Narcotic Control Act for execution of the warrant: R. v. Grant, [1993] 3 S.C.R. 223, 84 C.C.C. (3d) 173, 24 C.R. (4th) 1.

The Narcotic Control Act does not require that any return be made when a search warrant is issued under that Act to search a dwelling house. Thus, where the police resort to a search warrant under this section to search commercial premises for narcotics then there is no need to include a direction as set out in subsec. (1)(e): R. v. Arason (1992), 78 C.C.C. (3d) 1, 13 C.R.R. (2d) 248, 37 W.A.C. 20 (B.C.C.A.).

INFORMATION FOR GENERAL WARRANT / Limitation / Search or seizure to be reasonable / Video surveillance / Other provisions to apply / Provisions to apply.

487.01 (1) A provincial court judge, a judge of a superior court of criminal jurisdiction or a judge as defined in section 552 may issue a warrant in writing authorizing a peace officer to, subject to this section, use any device or investigative technique or procedure or do any thing described in the warrant that would, if not authorized, constitute an unreasonable search or seizure in respect of a person or a person's property if

- (a) the judge is satisfied by information on oath in writing that there are reasonable grounds to believe that an offence against this or any other Act of Parliament has been or will be committed and that information concerning the offence will be obtained through the use of the technique, procedure or device or the doing of the thing;
- (b) the judge is satisfied that it is in the best interests of the administration of justice to issue the warrant; and
- (c) there is no other provision in this or any other Act of Parliament that would provide for a warrant, authorization or order permitting the technique, procedure or device to be used or the thing to be done.

(2) Nothing in subsection (1) shall be construed as to permit interference with the bodily integrity of any person.

(3) A warrant issued under subsection (1) shall contain such terms and conditions as the judge considers advisable to ensure that any search or seizure authorized by the warrant is reasonable in the circumstances.

(4) A warrant issued under subsection (1) that authorizes a peace officer to observe, by means of a television camera or other similar electronic device, any person who is engaged in activity in circumstances in which the person has a reasonable expectation of privacy shall contain such terms and conditions as the judge considers advisable to ensure that the privacy of the person or of any other person is respected as much as possible.

(5) The definition "offence" in section 183 and sections 183.1, 184.2, 184.3, 185 to 188.2, 190, 193 and 194 to 196 apply, with such modifications as the circumstances require, to a warrant referred to in subsection (4) as though references in those provisions to interceptions of private communications were read as references to observations by peace officers by means of television cameras or similar electronic devices of activities in circumstances in which persons had reasonable expectations of privacy.

(6) Subsections 487(2) and (4) apply, with such modifications as the circumstances require, to a warrant issued under subsection (1). 1993, c. 40, s. 15.

CROSS-REFERENCES

This section is part of a more or less comprehensive scheme relating to search and seizure. Interception of private communications are dealt with in Part VI. Use of telephone number recorders is regulated under s. 492.2 and use of tracking devices is regulated under s. 492.1. Section 487 deals with the granting of ordinary search warrants to seize tangible things. Provision is made in s. 487.02 for the making of an assistance order to require persons to co-operate in the carrying out of orders made under this section.

The terms "peace officer", "provincial court judge" and "superior court judge" are defined in s. 2.

SYNOPSIS

This section allows for the obtaining of a warrant in circumstances where a warrantless search or seizure would violate s. 8 of the Charter. In effect, it fills a gap noted by various courts. For example, the Supreme Court had held in R. v. Wong (1990), 60 C.C.C. (3d) 460, [1990] 3 S.C.R. 36, 1 C.R. (4th) 1 that warrantless surreptitious video surveillance by agents of the state in circumstances where the target has a reasonable expectation of privacy is a violation of s. 8 and yet no provision was made for obtaining a warrant or court authorization. A warrant for such surveillance could now be obtained under this section.

The warrant may be issued for any device or investigative technique or procedure or "any thing" except, pursuant to subsec. (2), anything which would interfere with the bodily integrity of any person. Subsection (3) permits the judge to impose appropriate conditions.

Subsection (5) makes special provision for video surveillance in circumstances where persons have a reasonable expectation of privacy. The effect of this subsection is that the authorization procedure under Part VI applies with the necessary modifications. In other words, a general warrant for this type of surveillance can only be obtained in the same circumstances as where an authorization to intercept private communications may be obtained. Thus, while a general warrant under subsec. (1) may be obtained in relation to any federal offence, a warrant in relation to video surveillance in circumstances where persons have a reasonable expectation of privacy can only be obtained for the offences listed in s. 183. To obtain the warrant, the police must meet the tests set out in Part VI rather than the test in subsec. (1) of this section. As well, the prohibition on disclosure of information from such surveillance in s. 193 is incorporated, as is the notice to targets provision in s. 196. However, there is no statutory requirement of notice of intention to introduce into evidence as required for intercepted private communications under s. 189(5). The general disclosure obligation as outlined in R. v. Stinchcombe, [1991] 3 S.C.R. 326, 9 C.R. (4th) 277, 68 C.C.C. (3d) 1, [1992] 1 W.W.R. 97 would, of course, apply in any event.

Subsection (4) requires the judge to impose conditions to protect the privacy of the targeted person and others in a case where the warrant is issued to authorize video surveillance in circumstances where persons have a reasonable expectation of privacy.

Subsection (6) makes applicable the provisions of s. 487 for “backing” the warrant if it is to be executed in another territorial division. Note that if the warrant is to be executed in another province and the investigative technique requires entry into private property or an assistance order under s. 487.02 then the warrant must be confirmed by a judge of the other province.

ANNOTATIONS

A general warrant was validly issued under this section requiring employees of the Canada Post Corporation to photocopy the outside of envelopes and packages of mailable material after it was delivered to certain post office boxes. Compliance with the warrant would not require the employees to contravene the Canada Post Corporation Act: Canada Post Corp. v. Canada (Attorney General) (1995), 95 C.C.C. (3d) 568 (Ont. Ct. (Gen. Div.)).

This section does not contemplate an anticipatory search warrant authorizing a physical search of a specified location for specified property unassociated with the use of any “specified device” or “investigative technique or procedure”. The term “any thing” must be read as being qualified by the preceding specific enumeration of “device” and “investigative technique or procedure” and in the context of the entire section as well as related amendments to the Criminal Code concerning various forms of electronic surveillance devices. A warrant for a search of a specified location for specified property unassociated with the use of any specified “device” or “investigative technique or procedure” may be issued under s. 487 of the Criminal Code which does not authorize anticipatory search warrants: R. v. Noseworthy (1995), 101 C.C.C. (3d) 447 (Ont. Ct. (Gen. Div.)).

ASSISTANCE ORDER.

487.02 Where an authorization is given under section 184.2, 184.3, 186 or 188, a warrant is issued under section 487.01 or 492.1 or subsection 492.2(1) or an order is made under subsection 492.2(2), the judge or justice who gives the authorization, issues the warrant or makes the order may order any person to provide assistance where the person’s assistance may reasonably be considered to be required to give effect to the authorization, warrant or order. 1993, c. 40, s. 15.

CROSS-REFERENCES

Although violation of an order under this section is not specifically made an offence, presumably the failure to comply could be punished under s. 127.

SYNOPSIS

This section provides for the making of an order requiring persons to assist in the execution of various authorizations and warrants. For example, the assistance of the telephone company may be required to implement an authorization under s. 186 to intercept private communications or to install a telephone number recorder under s. 492.2.

ANNOTATIONS

An assistance order could be validly made under this section requiring employees of the Canada Post Corporation to photocopy the outside of envelopes and packages of mailable material after it was delivered to certain post office boxes and requiring the employees not to divulge the existence of the warrant and the order. Canada Post Corp. v. Canada (Attorney General) (1995), 95 C.C.C. (3d) 568 (Ont. Ct. (Gen. Div.)).

EXECUTION IN ANOTHER PROVINCE.*487.03 Where

- (a) a warrant is issued under section 487.01, 487.05 or 492.1 or subsection 492.2(1) in one province,
- (b) it may reasonably be expected that the warrant is to be executed in another province, and
- (c) the execution of the warrant would require entry into or on the property of any person in the other province or would require that an order be made under section 487.02 with respect to any person in that other province, a judge or justice, as the case may be, in the other province may, on application, endorse the warrant and the warrant, after being so endorsed, has the same force in that other province as though it had originally been issued in that other province. 1993, c. 40, s. 15; 1995, c. 27, s. 1.

SYNOPSIS

This section provides that a warrant may be confirmed where it is to be executed in another province. Such confirmation is in addition to the backing procedure set out in s. 487(2) [applicable to a general warrant issued under s. 487.01] and is required where it will be necessary to enter private premises or where an assistance order is made under s. 487.02.

Editor's Note: Chap. 27: FORENSIC DNA ANALYSIS

Sections 487.04 to 487.09 create a new legislative scheme for obtaining a search warrant to seize a bodily substance for the purpose of forensic DNA analysis. The general warrant power in s. 487.01 allows a judge to issue a warrant to conduct various investigative techniques except where the technique would interfere with the "bodily integrity" of any person. Sections 487.04 to 487.09 now permit the issuance of a warrant in limited circumstances although the seizure may interfere with bodily integrity. These provisions thus fill an important gap in the legislative scheme and provide a lawful means to obtain highly probative evidence. Attempts to rely upon common law powers of search, such as consent and search incident to arrest, to obtain samples for DNA analysis have proved increasingly less useful as a result of a series of cases under s. 8 of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

The forensic DNA warrant is issued by a provincial court judge (not a justice of the peace) and can only be issued in relation to designated offences as listed in s. 487.04. The designated offences are, generally speaking, serious personal injury offences in which it is likely that DNA analysis may prove useful. Section 487.05 sets out the circumstances in which the judge may issue the warrant. The judge must not only be satisfied that there are reasonable grounds to believe that evidence will be obtained as a result of the seizure and subsequent DNA analysis, but must also be satisfied that issuance of the warrant is in the best interests of the administration of justice. The judge is specifically directed to consider the nature of the offence for which the warrant is sought and the circumstances of its commission. It is suggested that this will require the judge to, inter alia, weigh the seriousness of the offence, the likelihood that evidence will be obtained and the intrusive nature of the seizure being authorized.

Section 487.06 defines the investigative procedures which can be authorized in the warrant. These procedures are limited to plucking of individual hairs (presumably scalp and pubic hairs), taking of buccal swabs (swabbing the inside of the mouth) and taking small quantities of blood. Section 487.07 imposes special informational duties upon the police officer when executing the warrant. Section 487.07 does not specifically require the officer to inform the suspect of the right to counsel under s. 10(b) of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, except in the case of a young person. It is suggested, however, that since the suspect will be detained within the meaning of s. 10 of the Charter while the warrant is being executed, the officer is obliged to inform the suspect of the rights under s. 10. Execution of the warrant does not depend upon the consent of the suspect and, pursuant to s. 25 of the Code, the officer will be entitled to use as much force as is necessary to obtain the samples.

Sections 487.08 and 487.09 attempt to carefully circumscribe the use of evidence obtained under this scheme and reasonably protect the individual's right to privacy. Thus, the bodily substances may only be used in the course of an investigation of the designated offence and the forensic DNA evidence obtained from the analysis of the substances can only be used in connection with the investigation of designated offences. Provision is made for destruction of the samples and the results of the analysis where it is established that the person from whom the substances were seized was not the perpetrator of the offence. This will occur either as a result of the analysis itself or the eventual dismissal of the charges against the suspect (by way of acquittal, discharge at preliminary inquiry or some other similar disposition). Section 487.09(2) does, however, give a judge the power to make an order that neither the substances nor the results of the analysis be destroyed for whatever period the judge considers appropriate if the material may reasonably be required for investigation or prosecution of another designated offence. For example, although the suspect was acquitted there may be reasonable grounds to believe that he or she was involved in another designated offence. Alternatively, the evidence may be necessary to prove at the trial of someone else that the suspect was not involved in the designated offence.

Forensic DNA Analysis

---

DEFINITIONS / “Adult” / “Designated offence” / “DNA” / “Forensic DNA analysis” / “Provincial court judge” / “Young person”.

487.04. In this section and sections 487.05 to 487.09,

“adult” has the meaning assigned by subsection 2(1) of the Young Offenders Act;

“designated offence” means

- (a) an offence under any of the following provisions of this Act, namely,
  - (i) section 75 (piratical acts),
  - (ii) section 76 (hijacking),
  - (iii) section 77 (endangering safety of aircraft or airport),
  - (iv) section 78.1 (seizing control of ship or fixed platform),
  - (v) paragraph 81(2)(a) (using explosives),
  - (vi) section 151 (sexual interference),
  - (vii) section 152 (invitation to sexual touching),
  - (viii) section 153 (sexual exploitation),
  - (ix) section 155 (incest),
  - (x) subsection 212(4) (offence in relation to juvenile prostitution),
  - (xi) section 220 (causing death by criminal negligence),
  - (xii) section 221 (causing bodily harm by criminal negligence),
  - (xiii) section 231 (murder),
  - (xiv) section 236 (manslaughter),
  - (xv) section 244 (causing bodily harm with intent),
  - (xvi) section 252 (failure to stop at scene of accident),
  - (xvii) section 266 (assault),
  - (xviii) section 267 (assault with a weapon or causing bodily harm),
  - (xix) section 268 (aggravated assault),

- (xx) section 269 (unlawfully causing bodily harm),
- (xxi) section 269.1 (torture),
- (xxii) paragraph 270(1)(a) (assaulting a peace officer),
- (xxiii) section 271 (sexual assault),
- (xxiv) section 272 (sexual assault with a weapon, threats to a third party or causing bodily harm),
- (xxv) section 273 (aggravated sexual assault),
- (xxvi) section 279 (kidnapping),
- (xxvii) section 279.1 (hostage taking),
- (xxviii) section 344 (robbery),
- (xxix) subsection 348(1) (breaking and entering with intent, committing offence or breaking out),
- (xxx) subsection 430(2) (mischief that causes actual danger to life),
- (xxxi) section 433 (arson – disregard for human life), and
- (xxxii) section 434.1 (arson – own property),
- (b) an offence under any of the following provisions of the Criminal Code, as they read from time to time before July 1, 1990, namely,
  - (i) section 433 (arson), and
  - (ii) section 434 (setting fire to other substance),
- (c) an offence under the following provision of the Criminal Code, chapter C-34 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1970, as it read from time to time before January 1, 1988, namely, paragraph 153(1)(a) (sexual intercourse with step-daughter, etc.),
- (d) an offence under any of the following provisions of the Criminal Code, chapter C-34 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1970, as they read from time to time before January 4, 1983, namely,
  - (i) section 144 (rape),
  - (ii) section 146 (sexual intercourse with female under fourteen and between fourteen and sixteen), and
  - (iii) section 148 (sexual intercourse with feeble-minded, etc.), and
- (e) an attempt to commit an offence referred to in any of paragraphs (a) to (d);

“DNA” means deoxyribonucleic acid;

“forensic DNA analysis”, in relation to a bodily substance that is obtained in execution of a warrant, means forensic DNA analysis of the bodily substance and the comparison of the results of that analysis with the results of the analysis of the DNA in the bodily substance referred to in paragraph 487.05(1)(b) and includes any incidental tests associated with that analysis;

“provincial court judge”, in relation to a young person, includes a youth court judge within the meaning of subsection 2(1) of the Young Offenders Act;

“young person” has the meaning assigned by subsection 2(1) of the Young Offenders Act, 1995, c. 27, s. 1.

INFORMATION FOR WARRANT TO OBTAIN BODILY SUBSTANCES FOR FORENSIC DNA ANALYSIS / Criteria.

487.05. (1) A provincial court judge who on ex parte application is satisfied by information on oath that there are reasonable grounds to believe

- (a) that a designated offence has been committed,
- (b) that a bodily substance has been found
  - (i) at the place where the offence was committed,
  - (ii) on or within the body of the victim of the offence,
  - (iii) on anything worn or carried by the victim at the time when the offence was committed, or

- (iv) on or within the body of any person or thing or at any place associated with the commission of the offence,
  - (c) that a person was a party to the offence, and
  - (d) that forensic DNA analysis of a bodily substance from the person will provide evidence about whether the bodily substance referred to in paragraph (b) was from that person
- and who is satisfied that it is in the best interests of the administration of justice to do so may issue a warrant in writing authorizing a peace officer to obtain, or cause to be obtained under the direction of the peace officer, a bodily substance from that person, by means of an investigative procedure described in subsection 487.06(1), for the purpose of forensic DNA analysis.
- (2) In considering whether to issue the warrant, the provincial court judge shall have regard to all relevant matters, including
- (a) the nature of the designated offence and the circumstances of its commission; and
  - (b) whether there is
    - (i) a peace officer who is able, by virtue of training or experience, to obtain a bodily substance from the person, by means of an investigative procedure described in subsection 487.06(1), or
    - (ii) another person who is able, by virtue of training or experience, to obtain under the direction of a peace officer a bodily substance from the person, by means of such an investigative procedure. 1995, c. 27, s. 1.

INVESTIGATIVE PROCEDURES / Terms and conditions.

- 487.06. (1) The warrant authorizes a peace officer or another person under the direction of a peace officer to obtain and seize a bodily substance from the person by means of
- (a) the plucking of individual hairs from the person, including the root sheath;
  - (b) the taking of buccal swabs by swabbing the lips, tongue and inside cheeks of the mouth to collect epithelial cells; or
  - (c) the taking of blood by pricking the skin surface with a sterile lancet.
- (2) The warrant shall include any terms and conditions that the provincial court judge considers advisable to ensure that the seizure of a bodily substance authorized by the warrant is reasonable in the circumstances. 1995, c. 27, s. 1.

---

EXECUTION OF WARRANT / Detention of person under warrant / Respect of privacy / Execution of warrant against young person / Waiver of rights of young person.

- 487.07. (1) Before executing a warrant, a peace officer shall inform the person against whom it is to be executed of
- (a) the contents of the warrant;
  - (b) the nature of the investigative procedure by means of which a bodily substance is to be obtained from that person;
  - (c) the purpose of obtaining a bodily substance from that person;
  - (d) the possibility that the results of forensic DNA analysis may be used in evidence;
  - (e) the authority of the peace officer and any other person under the direction of the peace officer to use as much force as is necessary for the purpose of executing the warrant; and
  - (f) in the case of a young person, the rights of the young person under subsection (4).
- (2) A person against whom a warrant is executed

- (a) may be detained for the purpose of executing the warrant for a period that is reasonable in the circumstances for the purpose of obtaining a bodily substance from the person; and
  - (b) may be required by the peace officer who executes the warrant to accompany the peace officer.
- (3) A peace officer who executes a warrant against a person or a person who obtains a bodily substance from the person under the direction of the peace officer shall ensure that the privacy of that person is respected in a manner that is reasonable in the circumstances.
- (4) A young person against whom a warrant is executed has, in addition to any other rights arising from his or her detention under the warrant,
- (a) the right to a reasonable opportunity to consult with, and
  - (b) the right to have the warrant executed in the presence of counsel or a parent or, in the absence of a parent, an adult relative or, in the absence of a parent and an adult relative, any other appropriate adult chosen by the young person.

NOTE: Section 487.07(4) re-enacted by 1995, c. 27, s. 3 (to come into force when 1995, c. 19, s. 35(3) comes into force). The text, which is not yet in force and therefor printed in lightface italics, reads as follows:

Execution of warrant against young person.

- (4) A young person against whom a warrant is executed has, in addition to any other rights arising from his or her detention under the warrant,
- (a) the right to a reasonable opportunity to consult with, and*
  - (b) the right to have the warrant executed in the presence of counsel and a parent or, in the absence of a parent, an adult relative or, in the absence of a parent and an adult relative, any other appropriate adult chosen by the young person.*
- (5) A young person may waive his or her rights under subsection (4) but any such waiver
- (a) must be recorded on audio tape or video tape or otherwise; or
  - (b) must be made in writing and contain a statement signed by the young person that he or she has been informed of the right being waived. 1995, c. 27, s. 1.

LIMITATIONS ON USE OF BODILY SUBSTANCES / Limitations on use of results of forensic DNA analysis / Offence.

487.08. (1) No person shall use a bodily substance that is obtained in execution of a warrant except in the course of an investigation of the designated offence for the purpose of forensic DNA analysis.

(2) No person shall use the results of forensic DNA analysis of a bodily substance that is obtained in execution of a warrant except in the course of an investigation of the designated offence or any other designated offence in respect of which a warrant was issued or a bodily substance found in the circumstances described in paragraph 487.05(1)(b) or in any proceeding for such an offence.

(3) Every person who contravenes subsection (1) or (2) is guilty of an offence punishable on summary conviction. 1995, c. 27, s. 1.

DESTRUCTION OF BODILY SUBSTANCES, ETC. / Exception.

487.09. (1) A bodily substance that is obtained from a person in execution of a warrant and the results of forensic DNA analysis shall be destroyed forthwith after

- (a) the results of that analysis establish that the bodily substance referred to in paragraph 487.05(1)(b) was not from that person;

- (b) the person is finally acquitted of the designated offence and any other offence in respect of the same transaction otherwise than by reason of a verdict of not criminally responsible on account of mental disorder; or
- (c) the expiration of one year after
  - (i) the person is discharged after a preliminary inquiry into the designated offence or any other offence in respect of the same transaction,
  - (ii) the dismissal, for any reason other than acquittal, or the withdrawal of any information charging the person with the designated offence or any other offence in respect of the same transaction, or
  - (iii) any proceeding against the person for the offence or any other offence in respect of the same transaction is stayed under section 579 or under that section as applied by section 572 or 795, unless during that year a new information is laid or an indictment is preferred charging the person with the designated offence or any other offence in respect of the same transaction or the proceeding is recommenced.

(2) Notwithstanding subsection (1), a provincial court judge may order that a bodily substance that is obtained from a person and the results of forensic DNA analysis not be destroyed during any period that the provincial court judge considers appropriate if the provincial court judge is satisfied that the bodily substance or results might reasonably be required in an investigation or prosecution of the person for another designated offence or of another person for the designated offence or any other offence in respect of the same transaction. 1995, c. 27, s. 1.

TELEWARRANTS / Information submitted by telephone / Information submitted by other means of telecommunication / Administration of oath / Alternative to oath / Contents of information / Issuing warrant / Formalities respecting warrant and facsimiles / Issuance of warrant where telecommunication produces writing / Providing facsimile / Affixing facsimile / Report of peace officer / Bringing before justice / Proof of authorization / Duplicates and facsimiles acceptable.

487.1 (1) Where a peace officer believes that an indictable offence has been committed and that it would be impracticable to appear personally before a justice to make application for a warrant in accordance with section 256 or 487, the peace officer may submit an information on oath by telephone or other means of telecommunication to a justice designated for the purpose by the chief judge of the provincial court having jurisdiction in the matter.

(2) An information submitted by telephone or other means of telecommunication, other than a means of telecommunication that produces a writing, shall be on oath and shall be recorded verbatim by the justice, who shall, as soon as practicable, cause to be filed, with the clerk of the court for the territorial division in which the warrant is intended for execution, the record or a transcription of it, certified by the justice as to time, date and contents.

(2.1) The justice who receives an information submitted by a means of telecommunication that produces a writing shall, as soon as practicable, cause to be filed, with the clerk of the court for the territorial division in which the warrant is intended for execution, the information certified by the justice as to time and date of receipt.

(3) For the purposes of subsection (2), an oath may be administered by telephone or other means of telecommunication.

(3.1) A peace officer who uses a means of telecommunication referred to in subsection (2.1) may, instead of swearing an oath, make a statement in writing stating that all matters contained in the information are true to his or her knowledge and belief and such a statement is deemed to be a statement made under oath.

(4) An information submitted by telephone or other means of telecommunication shall include

- (a) a statement of the circumstances that make it impracticable for the peace officer to appear personally before a justice;
- (b) a statement of the indictable offence alleged, the place or premises to be searched and the items alleged to be liable to seizure;
- (c) a statement of the peace officer's grounds for believing that items liable to seizure in respect of the offence alleged will be found in the place of premises to be searched; and
- (d) a statement as to any prior application for a warrant under this section or any other search warrant, in respect of the same matter, of which the peace officer has knowledge.

(5) A justice referred to in subsection (1) who is satisfied that an information submitted by telephone or other means of telecommunication

- (a) is in respect of an indictable offence and conforms to the requirements of subsection (4),
- (b) discloses reasonable grounds for dispensing with an information presented personally and in writing, and
- (c) discloses reasonable grounds, in accordance with subsection 256(1) or paragraph 487(1)(a), (b) or (c), as the case may be, for the issuance of a warrant in respect of an indictable offence, may issue a warrant to a peace officer conferring the same authority respecting search and seizure as may be conferred by a warrant issued by a justice before whom the peace officer appears personally pursuant to subsection 256(1) or 487(1), as the case may be, and may require that the warrant be executed within such time period as the justice may order.

(6) Where a justice issues a warrant by telephone or other means of telecommunication, other than a means of telecommunication that produces a writing,

- (a) the justice shall complete and sign the warrant in Form 5.1, noting on its face the time, date and place of issuance;
- (b) the peace officer, on the direction of the justice, shall complete, in duplicate, a facsimile of the warrant in Form 5.1, noting on its face the name of the issuing justice and the time, date and place of issuance; and
- (c) the justice shall, as soon as practicable after the warrant has been issued, cause the warrant to be filed with the clerk of the court for the territorial division in which the warrant is intended for execution.

(6.1) Where a justice issues a warrant by a means of telecommunication that produces a writing,

- (a) the justice shall complete and sign the warrant in Form 5.1, noting on its face the time, date and place of issuance;
- (b) the justice shall transmit the warrant by the means of telecommunication to the peace officer who submitted the information and the copy of the warrant received by the peace officer is deemed to be a facsimile within the meaning of paragraph (6)(b);
- (c) the peace officer shall procure another facsimile of the warrant; and
- (d) the justice shall, as soon as practicable after the warrant has been issued, cause the warrant to be filed with the clerk of the court for the territorial division in which the warrant is intended for execution.

(7) A peace officer who executes a warrant issued by telephone or other means of telecommunication, other than a warrant issued pursuant to subsection 256(1), shall, before entering the place or premises to be searched or as soon as practicable thereafter, give a facsimile of the warrant to any person present and ostensibly in control of the place or premises.

(8) A peace officer who, in any unoccupied place or premises, executes a warrant issued by telephone or other means of telecommunication, other than a warrant issued pursuant to subsection 256(1), shall, on entering the place or premises or as soon as practicable thereafter, cause a facsimile of the warrant to be suitably affixed in a prominent place within the place or premises.

(9) A peace officer to whom a warrant is issued by telephone or other means of telecommunication shall file a written report with the clerk of the court for the territorial division in which the warrant was intended for execution as soon as practicable but within a period not exceeding seven days after the warrant has been executed, which report shall include

- (a) a statement of the time and date the warrant was executed or, if the warrant was not executed, a statement of the reasons why it was not executed;
- (b) a statement of the things, if any, that were seized pursuant to the warrant and the location where they are being held; and
- (c) a statement of the things, if any, that were seized in addition to the things mentioned in the warrant and the location where they are being held, together with a statement of the peace officer's grounds for believing that those additional things had been obtained by, or used in, the commission of an offence.

(10) The clerk of the court shall, as soon as practicable, cause the report, together with the information and the warrant to which it pertains, to be brought before a justice to be dealt with, in respect of the things seized referred to in the report, in the same manner as if the things were seized pursuant to a warrant issued, on an information presented personally by a peace officer, by that justice or another justice for the same territorial division.

(11) In any proceeding in which it is material for a court to be satisfied that a search or seizure was authorized by a warrant issued by telephone or other means of telecommunication, the absence of the information or warrant, signed by the justice and carrying on its face a notation of the time, date and place of issuance, is, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, proof that the search or seizure was not authorized by a warrant issued by telephone or other means of telecommunication.

(12) A duplicate or a facsimile of an information or a warrant has the same probative force as the original for the purposes of subsection (11). R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 69; 1992, c. 1, ss. 58, 59; 1994, c. 44, s. 37.

The usual provision for granting of a warrant is in s. 487 and note that, unlike s. 487, this section is restricted to cases involving allegations of commission of an indictable offence, which would, however, include a hybrid offence by virtue of s. 34(1)(a) of the Interpretation Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. I-21. Restriction on publicity, see s. 487.2. A search warrant is executed in accordance with s. 488. Execution of a warrant to search a lawyer's office is governed by s. 488.1. Section 489 provides for seizure of things not named in the warrant but which the person executing the warrant believes on reasonable grounds have been obtained by or have been used in the commission of an offence. Section 489.1 sets out the procedure for restitution of goods to the lawful owner and s. 490 sets out the procedure for detention of things which have been seized but not returned under s. 489.1. ## SYNOPSIS

This section sets out the requirements that must be met when a peace officer wishes to obtain a telewarrant.

Subsection (1) requires that the peace officer believe that an indictable offence has been committed and it is impracticable to appear personally before the justice to apply for the warrant. Under such circumstances, the peace officer may submit his sworn information by telephone or other means of telecommunication to a justice. This justice must have been designated for this purpose by the chief judge of the provincial court.

Subsection (2) states that the information referred to in subsec. (1) must be on oath, recorded verbatim by the justice, and filed with the clerk of the court having territorial jurisdiction as soon as practicable. The justice must certify the record of this information as to time, date and contents.

Subsections (2.1), (3.1) and (6.1) allow for receiving the information by use of a "fax" machine.

Subsection (4) sets out the requirements for an information or oath submitted by telephone or other means of telecommunication. Where the justice is satisfied that the requirements described in subsec. (5) have been met, that justice may issue a warrant to the peace officer authorizing the same powers as were found in ss. 256(1) or 487(1). The justice may also require that the warrant be executed within a specific time period.

Subsection (6) sets out specific obligations upon the justice and the peace officer who are involved in the application for telewarrants.

Subsection (7) requires that a peace officer who executes a telewarrant (other than a warrant under subsec. 256(1)) must give a facsimile of the warrant to any person present and apparently in control of the premises before entering. If the premises are unoccupied and the telewarrant does not relate to subsec. 256(1), the peace officer must affix the facsimile in a prominent place upon entering the premises or as soon as practicable thereafter.

Subsection (9) requires a peace officer who has executed a telewarrant to file a written report with the clerk of the court for the territorial jurisdiction in which the warrant was executed within seven days of the execution of the warrant. The report must include the things set out in paras. (a) to (c) in subsec. (9).

Subsection (10) makes it clear that the clerk of the court must place before a justice the report referred to in subsec. (9) along with the information and the warrant. There is no difference in the treatment of these items and that of similar documents produced upon personal applications for warrants.

Subsection (11) states that in any proceeding challenging a search authorized by telewarrant, the absence of a transcribed and certified information on oath or warrant is, unless there is evidence to the contrary, proof that the search and seizure was not authorized by a warrant.

ANNOTATIONS

The term "facsimile" in para. (6)(b) means a reasonable copy, being one without significant and misleading errors. Since the two documents are prepared in two different locations by two different persons, there will inevitably be differences, but if they are not significant nor misleading and could not have prejudiced the accused, then the statutory requirement has been fulfilled. Further, the failure of the officer to file the written report as required by subsec. (9) did not invalidate the warrant nor render inadmissible the results of analysis of a blood sample taken pursuant to the warrant: R. v. Skin (1988), 13 M.V.R. (2d) 130 (B.C. Co. Ct.).

RESTRICTION ON PUBLICITY / Definition of “newspaper”.

487.2 (1) Where a search warrant is issued under section 487 or 487.1 or a search is made under such a warrant, every one who publishes in any newspaper or broadcasts any information with respect to

(a) the location of the place searched or to be searched, or

(b) the identity of any person who is or appears to occupy or be in possession or control of that place or who is suspected of being involved in any offence in relation to which the warrant was issued, without the consent of every person referred to in paragraph (b) is, unless a charge has been laid in respect of any offence in relation to which the warrant was issued, guilty of an offence punishable on summary conviction.

(2) In this section, “newspaper” has the same meaning as in section 297. R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 69.

ANNOTATIONS

It has now been held that this section is of no force and effect in view of the unreasonable restrictions it places on freedom of expression as guaranteed by s. 2(b) of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms: Canadian Newspapers Co. Ltd. v. A.-G. Can. (1986), 28 C.C.C. (3d) 379, [1987] 1 W.W.R. 262, 31 D.L.R. (4th) 601 (Man. Q.B.); Canadian Newspapers Co. Ltd. v. A.-G. Can. and two other actions (1986), 29 C.C.C. (3d) 109, 53 C.R. (3d) 203, 32 D.L.R. (4th) 292 (Ont. H.C.J.).

EXECUTION OF SEARCH WARRANT.

488. A warrant issued under section 487 or 487.1 shall be executed by day, unless the justice, by the warrant, authorizes execution of it by night. R.S., c. C-34, s. 444; R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 70.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms “justice”, “day” and “night” are defined in s. 2. With respect to protection of persons executing warrants, see ss. 25 to 27. Also note s. 29(1) which imposes a duty on a person executing a warrant to have it with him, where it is feasible to do so, and produce it when requested.

ANNOTATIONS

Once the warrant has expired with the completion of the search the officers’ right to be on the premises is terminated and they become trespassers if they remain on, or return to the premises: R. v. Moran (1987), 36 C.C.C. (3d) 225 (Ont. C.A.).

In appropriate circumstances a search warrant may be issued for an extended period of time and its execution delayed for the purpose of apprehending a suspect who is at the premises only at certain times: R. v. Coull and Dawe (1986), 33 C.C.C. (3d) 186 (B.C.C.A.).

Where there is a risk of loss or destruction of evidence so that rapid action is required or where there is a real threat of violent behaviour whether directed at the police or third parties then the police may be justified in using special procedures in executing the warrant. However, the consideration of the possibility of violence must be carefully limited and should not amount to a carte blanche for the police to ignore completely all restrictions on police behaviour. The greater the departure from the standards of behaviour required by the common law and the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, then the heavier the onus on the police to show why they thought it necessary to use force in the execution of the warrant: R. v. Genest (1989), 45 C.C.C. (3d) 385, 91 N.R. 161 (S.C.C.) (7:0).

DEFINITIONS / "custodian" / "document" / "judge" / "lawyer" / "officer" / Examination or seizure of certain documents where privilege claimed / Application to judge / Disposition of application / Privilege continues / Order to custodian to deliver / Application to another judge / Prohibition / Authority to make copies / Hearing in private / Exception.

488.1 (1) In this section,

"custodian" means a person in whose custody a package is placed pursuant to subsection (2);

"document", for the purposes of this section, has the same meaning as in section 321;

"judge" means a judge of a superior court of criminal jurisdiction of the province where the seizure was made;

"lawyer" means, in the Province of Quebec, an advocate, lawyer or notary and, in any other province, a barrister or solicitor;

"officer" means a peace officer or public officer.

(2) Where an officer acting under the authority of this or any other Act of Parliament is about to examine, copy or seize a document in the possession of a lawyer who claims that a named client of his has a solicitor-client privilege in respect of that document, the officer shall, without examining or making copies of the document,

- (a) seize the document and place it in a package and suitably seal and identify the package; and
- (b) place the package in the custody of the sheriff of the district or county in which the seizure was made or, if there is agreement in writing that a specified person act as custodian, in the custody of that person.

(3) Where a document has been seized and placed in custody under subsection (2), the Attorney General or the client or the lawyer on behalf of the client, may

- (a) within fourteen days from the day the document was so placed in custody, apply, on two days notice of motion to all other persons entitled to make application, to a judge for an order
    - (i) appointing a place and a day, not later than twenty-one days after the date of the order, for the determination of the question whether the document should be disclosed, and
    - (ii) requiring the custodian to produce the document to the judge at that time and place;
  - (b) serve a copy of the order on all other persons entitled to make application and on the custodian within six days of the date on which it was made; and
  - (c) if he has proceeded as authorized by paragraph (b), apply, at the appointed time and place, for an order determining the question.
- (4) On an application under paragraph (3)(c), the judge
- (a) may, if the judge considers it necessary to determine the question whether the document should be disclosed, inspect the document;
  - (b) where the judge is of the opinion that it would materially assist him in deciding whether or not the document is privileged, may allow the Attorney General to inspect the document;
  - (c) shall allow the Attorney General and the person who objects to the disclosure of the document to make representations; and
  - (d) shall determine the question summarily and,
    - (i) if the judge is of the opinion that the document should not be disclosed, ensure that it is repackaged and resealed and order the custodian to deliver the document to the lawyer who claimed the solicitor-client privilege or to the client, or

- (ii) if the judge is of the opinion that the document should be disclosed, order the custodian to deliver the document to the officer who seized the document or some other person designated by the Attorney General, subject to such restrictions or conditions as the judge deems appropriate, and shall, at the same time, deliver concise reasons for the determination in which the nature of the document is described without divulging the details thereof.

(5) Where the judge determines pursuant to paragraph (4)(d) that a solicitor-client privilege exists in respect of a document, whether or not the judge has, pursuant to paragraph (4)(b), allowed the Attorney General to inspect the document, the document remains privileged and inadmissible as evidence unless the client consents to its admission in evidence or the privilege is otherwise lost.

(6) Where a document has been seized and placed in custody under subsection (2) and a judge, on the application of the Attorney General, is satisfied that no application has been made under paragraph (3)(a) or that following such an application no further application has been made under paragraph (3)(c), the judge shall order the custodian to deliver the document to the officer who seized the document or to some other person designated by the Attorney General.

(7) Where the judge to whom an application has been made under paragraph (3)(c) cannot act or continue to act under this section for any reason, subsequent applications under that paragraph may be made to another judge.

(8) No officer shall examine, make copies of or seize any document without affording a reasonable opportunity for a claim of solicitor-client privilege to be made under subsection (2).

(9) At any time while a document is in the custody of a custodian under this section, a judge may, on an ex parte application of a person claiming a solicitor-client privilege under this section, authorize that person to examine the document or make a copy of it in the presence of the custodian or the judge, but any such authorization shall contain provisions to ensure that the document is repackaged and that the package is resealed without alteration or damage.

(10) An application under paragraph (3)(c) shall be heard in private.

(11) This section does not apply in circumstances where a claim of solicitor-client privilege may be made under the Income Tax Act. R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 71.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms “peace officer”, “public officer”, “superior court of criminal jurisdiction” and “Attorney General” are defined in s. 2. With respect to protection of persons executing warrants, see ss. 25 to 27. Also note s. 29(1) which imposes a duty on a person executing a warrant to have it with him, where it is feasible to do so, and produce it when requested.

For notes on other search powers see s. 487.

SYNOPSIS

This section sets out a procedure for determining a claim of solicitor-client privilege in relation to documents in the possession of a lawyer.

Subsection (2) states that where a peace officer or public officer is about to examine, copy or seize a document in the possession of a lawyer who makes a claim of solicitor-client privilege, that officer must place the document in a sealed and identified package and place the package in the custody of the sheriff of the relevant district or county or another person who, by written agreement, is empowered to act as custodian.

When documents have been dealt with in accordance with subsec. (1), the Attorney General, the client or the lawyer on behalf of the client may apply within 14 days and upon two days' notice to all other parties, to a judge for an order that would deal with the documents. The judge may make an order that a date and place for the determination of the issue of privilege be set within not more than 21 days. The judge may also order that the custodian produce the documents to the judge on the date and at the location fixed for determining the issue. Paragraph (b) provides for service of the order on all parties while para. (c) authorizes the application for an order determining the issue.

Subsection (4) describes the procedure on an application for an order determining the issue.

Subsection (5) provides that when the judge decides that a document is privileged, it will remain inadmissible as evidence unless the client consents to its admission, or the privilege is otherwise lost. This is so even if the document has been inspected by the Attorney General.

Subsection (6) states that upon determination that no claim of privilege is being pursued the custodian must deliver it to the Attorney General, a designate or the seizing officer.

Subsection (7) authorizes another judge to hear applications under subsec. (3)(c) where the original judge cannot act or continue to act.

Subsection (8) makes it clear that the authorized officer must give a reasonable opportunity for a claim of solicitor-client privilege to be made before seizing or copying documents. A person claiming privilege may make an ex parte application to a judge to examine or make copies of documents that are in the custody of a custodian. Any such order must contain provisions to ensure that no damage or alteration to the documents occurs during an examination of this sort. Furthermore, the documents may only be examined under this subsection in the presence of the custodian or judge.

Subsection (10) provides that an application under subsec. (3)(c) shall be heard in private.

Subsection (11) specifically exempts any claim of solicitor-client privilege in relation to proceedings under the Income Tax Act from this section.

ANNOTATIONS

Prior to the enactment of this section, the Supreme Court of Canada in Descoteaux et al. v. Mierzwinski and A.-G. Que. et al. (1982), 70 C.C.C. (2d) 385, [1982] 1 S.C.R. 860, 28 C.R. (3d) 289 (7:0) considered at length the relationship between solicitor-client privilege and the execution of a search warrant at a solicitor's office. The holding by the Court may be summarized as follows: Although solicitor-client privilege was originally a rule of evidence, it is not necessary to wait for the trial or preliminary inquiry at which the communication is to be adduced in evidence before raising its confidentiality. The confidentiality of communications between solicitor and client may be raised in any circumstance where such communications are likely to be disclosed without the client's consent. A justice of the peace must be more demanding before authorizing the search of a lawyer's office or one of his files and, where necessary, should set out special procedures for the execution of the warrant in order to limit to what is absolutely inevitable the breach of confidentiality. Further, where the documents sought would in fact be inadmissible in evidence by reason of the solicitor-client privilege then the justice of the peace would have no jurisdiction to authorize the search pursuant to s. 443(1)(b) [now s. 487(1)(b)] of this section. In any case where the justice of the peace has the necessary jurisdiction to authorize the search because, for example, the documents, while originally subject to solicitor-client privilege, have lost that privilege as they would fall within an exception to the rule, nevertheless, the search should be limited to what is absolutely necessary in order to seize the things for which the search was authorized. Moreover, a justice of the peace has a discretion to refuse a warrant even where the conditions set out in this section have been met. Thus, where the search would interfere with rights as fundamental as freedom of the press or a solicitor's client's right to confidentiality, a justice of the peace may and should refuse to issue the warrant unless there is material to show (a) whether a reasonable alternative source of obtaining the information is or is not available, and (b) if available, that reasonable steps have been taken to obtain it from that alternative source. Where what is sought is evidence, then even where the justice of the peace is satisfied that there is such evidence on the premises of the lawyer, he should only allow a lawyer's office to be searched if, in addition, he is satisfied that there is no reasonable alternative to a search.

However, in a subsequent case, Re Bloski and The Queen (1987), 39 C.C.C. (3d) 248, 48 D.L.R. (4th) 69, 60 Sask. R. 275 (Q.B.), it was held that this section was now a complete code of procedure respecting the issuing and execution of search warrants to search a law office and in particular there was no requirement that the justice first be satisfied that alternative methods of obtaining the information had been canvassed and attempted.

R. v. Bloski, supra, was followed in Joly v. Bourdeau (1989), 51 C.C.C. (3d) 394 (Que. S.C.).

No appeal lies from the determination under this section by the superior court judge as to whether the documents should be disclosed despite the claim of solicitor client privilege: R. v. King (1992), 74 C.C.C. (3d) 191 (P.E.I.C.A.).

SEIZURE OF THINGS NOT SPECIFIED.

489. Every person who executes a warrant issued under section 462.32, 487, 487.01 or 487.1 may seize, in addition to the things mentioned in the warrant, anything that the person believes on reasonable grounds has been obtained by or has been used in the commission of an offence. R.S., c. c-34, s. 445; R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 72; c. 42 (4th Supp.), s. 3; 1993, c. 40, s. 16.

CROSS-REFERENCES

For other notes on search powers, see s. 487. With respect to protection of persons executing warrants, see ss. 25 to 27. Also note s. 29(1) which imposes a duty on a person executing a warrant to have it with him, where it is feasible to do so, and produce it when requested.

SYNOPSIS

This section authorizes the seizure of items not specified in a warrant issued under ss. 462.32, 487, 487.01 or 487.1. Where a person executing such a warrant believes on reasonable grounds that a thing, not mentioned in the warrant, has been obtained by, or has been used in the commission of an offence, he may seize that thing.

RESTITUTION OF PROPERTY OR REPORT BY PEACE OFFICER / Idem / Form.

489.1 (1) Subject to this or any other Act of Parliament, where a peace officer has seized anything under a warrant issued under section 258, 487, 487.01 or 487.1 or under section 489 or otherwise in the execution of duties under this or any other Act of Parliament, the peace officer shall, as soon as practicable,

- (a) where the peace officer is satisfied,
  - (i) that there is no dispute as to who is lawfully entitled to possession of the thing seized, and
  - (ii) that the continued detention of the thing seized is not required for the purposes of any investigation or a preliminary inquiry, trial or other proceeding, return the thing seized, on being issued a receipt therefor, to the person lawfully entitled to its possession and report to the justice who issued the warrant or some other justice for the same territorial division or, if no warrant was issued, a justice having jurisdiction in respect of the matter, that he has done so; or

(b) where the peace officer is not satisfied as described in subparagraphs (a)(i) and (ii),

(i) bring the thing seized before the justice referred to in paragraph (a), or

(ii) report to the justice that he has seized the thing and is detaining it or causing it to be detained to be dealt with by the justice in accordance with subsection 490(1).

(2) Subject to this or any other Act of Parliament, where a person, other than a peace officer, has seized anything under a warrant issued under section 487, 487.01 or otherwise in the execution of duties under this or any other Act of Parliament, that person shall, as soon as practicable,

(a) bring the thing seized before the justice who issued the warrant or some other justice for the same territorial division or, if no warrant was issued, before a justice having jurisdiction in respect of the matter, or

(b) report to the justice referred to in paragraph (a) that he has seized the thing and is detaining it or causing it to be detained, to be dealt with by the justice in accordance with subsection 490(1).

(3) A report to a justice under this section shall be in the form set out as Form 5.2 in Part XXVIII, varied to suit the case and shall include, in the case of a report in respect of a warrant issued by telephone or other means of telecommunication, the statements referred to in subsection 487.1(9). R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 72; 1993, c. 40, s. 17.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms "justice", "peace officer" and "territorial division" are defined in s. 2.

In the case of property which is not returned to the person lawfully entitled to its possession, then the provisions of s. 490 must be complied with respecting continued detention. Under s. 491.2, before any property that would otherwise be required to be used in evidence under proceedings for offences under ss. 334, 344, 348, 354, 362 or 380 is returned or otherwise dealt with under this section, a peace officer or other person under the direction of a peace officer may take and retain a photograph for use in evidence. With respect to restitution or forfeiture of contraband, see ss. 491, 491.1 and 492.

Note that the reference in this section to "section 258" is obviously in error. The reference should be to s. 256.

SYNOPSIS

This section deals with the disposition of property that has been seized by a peace officer either under a warrant issued pursuant to ss. 258, 487, 487.01, 487.1, or 489, or otherwise as a result of the execution of the peace officer's duties under any Act of Parliament.

Subsection (1)(a) provides that where the peace officer is satisfied that lawful possession is not in issue and the continued detention of the thing seized is not required for the purposes of any investigation or court proceedings, the peace officer shall, as soon as practicable, return the item seized to the person lawfully entitled to it. The peace officer must obtain a receipt for the returned item and make a report to a justice having jurisdiction.

Subsection (1)(b) states that where the peace officer is not satisfied as required in para. (a), he must bring the item seized to a justice having jurisdiction or report to the justice that the thing has been seized and is detained. The justice must then deal with the item in accordance with s. 490(1).

Subsection (2) provides a scheme for the disposition of items seized by a person other than a peace officer either under a warrant issued pursuant to ss. 487 or 489 or otherwise in the execution of that person's duties under any Act of Parliament. That person is required, as soon as practicable, to bring the items seized before a justice having jurisdiction or make a report to such a justice indicating that the item has been seized and is detained.

Any report made under this section must be in accordance with Form 5.2 in Part XXVIII, varied to suit the case. When a report is made in respect of a telewarrant, it must include the statements referred to in s. 487.1(9).

DETENTION OF THINGS SEIZED / Further detention / Idem / When accused ordered to stand trial / Where continued detention no longer required / Idem / Application for order of return / Exception / Disposal of things seized / Exception / Application by lawful owner / Order / Detention pending appeal, etc. / Copies of documents returned / Probative force / Access to anything seized / Conditions / Appeal.

490. (1) Subject to this or any other Act of Parliament, where, pursuant to paragraph 489.1(1)(b) or subsection 489.1(2), anything that has been seized is brought before a justice or a report in respect of anything seized is made to a justice, the justice shall,

- (a) where the lawful owner or person who is lawfully entitled to possession of the thing seized is known, order it to be returned to that owner or person, unless the prosecutor, or the peace officer or other person having custody of the thing seized, satisfies the justice that the detention of the thing seized is required for the purposes of any investigation or a preliminary inquiry, trial or other proceeding; or
- (b) where the prosecutor, or the peace officer or other person having custody of the thing seized, satisfies the justice that the thing seized should be detained for a reason set out in paragraph (a), detain the thing seized or order that it be detained, taking reasonable care to ensure that it is preserved until the conclusion of any investigation or until it is required to be produced for the purposes of a preliminary inquiry, trial or other proceeding.

(2) Nothing shall be detained under the authority of paragraph (1)(b) for a period of more than three months after the day of the seizure, or any longer period that ends when an application made under paragraph (a) is decided, unless

- (a) a justice, on the making of a summary application to him after three clear days' notice thereof to the person from whom the thing detained was seized, is satisfied that, having regard to the nature of the investigation, its further detention for a specified period is warranted and the justice so orders; or
- (b) proceedings are instituted in which the thing detained may be required.

(3) More than one order for further detention may be made under paragraph (2)(a) but the cumulative period of detention shall not exceed one year from the day of the seizure, or any longer period that ends when an application made under paragraph (a) is decided, unless

- (a) a judge of a superior court of criminal jurisdiction or a judge as defined in section 552, on the making of a summary application to him after three clear days' notice thereof to the person from whom the thing detained was seized, is satisfied, having regard to the complex nature of the investigation, that the further detention of the thing seized is warranted for a specified period and subject to such other conditions as the judge considers just, and he so orders; or
- (b) proceedings are instituted in which the thing detained may be required.

(4) When an accused has been ordered to stand trial, the justice shall forward anything detained pursuant to subsections (1) to (3) to the clerk of the court to which the accused has been ordered to stand trial to be detained by the clerk of the court and disposed of as the court directs.

(5) Where at any time before the expiration of the periods of detention provided for or ordered under subsections (1) to (3) in respect of anything seized, the prosecutor, or the peace officer or other person having custody of the thing seized, determines that the continued detention of the thing seized is no longer required for any purpose mentioned in subsection (1) or (4), the prosecutor, peace officer or other person shall apply to

(a) a judge of a superior court of criminal jurisdiction or a judge as defined in section 552, where a judge ordered its detention under subsection (3), or

(b) a justice, in any other case,

who shall, after affording the person from whom the thing was seized or the person who claims to be the lawful owner thereof or person entitled to its possession, if known, an opportunity to establish that he is lawfully entitled to the possession thereof, make an order in respect of the property under subsection (9).

(6) Where the periods of detention provided for or ordered under subsections (1) to (3) in respect of anything seized have expired and proceedings have not been instituted in which the thing detained may be required, the prosecutor, peace officer or other person shall apply to a judge or justice referred to in paragraph 5(a) or (b) in the circumstances set out in that paragraph, for an order in respect of the property under subsection (9) or (9.1).

(7) A person from whom anything has been seized may, after the expiration of the periods of detention provided for or ordered under subsections (1) to (3) and on three clear days notice to the Attorney General, apply summarily to

(a) a judge of a superior court of criminal jurisdiction or a judge as defined in section 552, where a judge ordered the detention of the thing seized under subsection (3), or

(b) a justice, in any other case, for an order under paragraph (9)(c) that the thing seized be returned to the applicant.

(8) A judge of a superior court of criminal jurisdiction or a judge as defined in section 552, where a judge ordered the detention of the thing seized under subsection (3), or a justice, in any other case, may allow an application to be made under subsection (7) prior to the expiration of the periods referred to therein where he is satisfied that hardship will result unless the application is so allowed.

(9) Subject to this or any other Act of Parliament, if

(a) a judge referred to in subsection (7), where a judge ordered the detention of anything seized under subsection (3), or

(b) a justice, in any other case, is satisfied that the periods of detention provided for or ordered under subsections (1) to (3) in respect of anything seized have expired and proceedings have not been instituted in which the thing detained may be required or, where those periods have not expired, that the continued detention of the thing seized will not be required for any purpose mentioned in subsection (1) or (4), he shall

(c) if possession of it by the person from whom it was seized is lawful, order it to be returned to that person; or

(d) if possession of it by the person from whom it was seized is unlawful and the lawful owner or person who is lawfully entitled to its possession is known, order it to be returned to the lawful owner or to the person who is lawfully entitled to its possession, and may, if possession of it by the person from whom it was seized is unlawful and the lawful owner or person who is lawfully entitled to its possession is not known, order it to be forfeited to Her Majesty, to be disposed of as the Attorney General directs, or otherwise dealt with in accordance with the law.

(9.1) Notwithstanding subsection (9), a judge or justice referred to in paragraph (9)(a) or (b) may, if the periods of detention provided for or ordered under subsections (1) to (3) in respect of a thing seized have expired but proceedings have not been instituted in which the thing may be required, order that the thing continue to be detained for such period as the judge or justice considers necessary if the judge or justice is satisfied

- (a) that the continued detention of the thing might reasonably be required for a purpose mentioned in subsection (1) or (4); and
- (b) that it is in the interests of justice to do so.

(10) Subject to this or any other Act of Parliament, a person, other than a person who may make an application under subsection (7), who claims to be the lawful owner or person lawfully entitled to possession of anything seized and brought before or reported to a justice under section 489.1 may, at any time, on three clear days notice to the Attorney General and the person from whom the thing was seized, apply summarily to

- (a) a judge referred to in subsection (7), where a judge ordered the detention of the thing seized under subsection (3), or
- (b) a justice, in any other case, for an order that the thing detained be returned to the applicant.

(11) Subject to this or any other Act of Parliament, on an application under subsection (10), where a judge or justice is satisfied that

- (a) the applicant is the lawful owner or lawfully entitled to possession of the thing seized, and
- (b) the periods of detention provided for or ordered under subsections (1) to (3) in respect of the thing seized have expired and proceedings have not been instituted in which the thing detained may be required or, where such periods have not expired, that the continued detention of the thing seized will not be required for any purpose mentioned in subsection (1) or (4), the judge or justice shall order that

- (c) the thing seized be returned to the applicant; or
- (d) except as otherwise provided by law, where, pursuant to subsection (9), the thing seized was forfeited, sold or otherwise dealt with in such a manner that it cannot be returned to the applicant, the applicant be paid the proceeds of sale or the value of the thing seized.

(12) Notwithstanding anything in this section, nothing shall be returned, forfeited or disposed of under this section pending any application made, or appeal taken, thereunder in respect of the thing or proceeding in which the right of seizure thereof is questioned or within thirty days after an order in respect of the thing is made under this section.

(13) The Attorney General, the prosecutor or the peace officer or other person having custody of a document seized may, before bringing it before a justice or complying with an order that the document be returned, forfeited or otherwise dealt with under subsection (1), (9) or (11), make or cause to be made, and may retain, a copy of the document.

(14) Every copy made under subsection (13) that is certified as a true copy by the Attorney General, the person who made the copy or the person in whose presence the copy was made is admissible in evidence and, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, has the same probative force as the original document would have if it had been proved in the ordinary way.

(15) Where anything is detained pursuant to subsections (1) to (3), a judge of a superior court of criminal jurisdiction or a judge as defined in section 552 may, on summary application on behalf of a person who has an interest in what is detained, after three clear days notice to the Attorney General, order that the person by or on whose behalf the application is made be permitted to examine anything so detained.

(16) An order that is made under subsection (15) shall be made on such terms as appear to the judge to be necessary or desirable to ensure that anything in respect of which the order is made is safeguarded and preserved for any purpose for which it may subsequently be required.

(17) A person who feels aggrieved by an order made under subsection (8), (9), (9.1) or (11) may appeal from the order to the appeal court, as defined in section 812, and for the purposes of the appeal the provisions of sections 814 to 828 apply with such modifications as the circumstances require. #### CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms "Attorney General", "superior court of criminal jurisdiction", "justice", "peace officer" and "prosecutor" are defined in s. 2. Calculation of a period of months is determined in accordance with s. 28 of the Interpretation Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. I-21. As to calculation of "clear days" notice, see s. 27(1) of the Interpretation Act.

Under s. 491.2, before any property that would otherwise be required to be used in evidence under proceedings for offences under ss. 334, 344, 348, 354, 362 or 380 is forfeited or otherwise dealt with under this section, a peace officer or other person under the direction of a peace officer may take and retain a photograph for use in evidence. With respect to restitution or forfeiture of contraband, see ss. 491, 491.1 and 492.

SYNOPSIS

This section provides a comprehensive scheme that governs procedure when seized items are brought before a justice or a report is made and further detention of these items is requested.

Subsection (1) stipulates that the justice must return the goods to the lawfully entitled owner, if such information is available, unless the prosecutor satisfies the justice that their detention is required for the purposes of any investigation or proceedings. When the prosecutor satisfies this burden, the justice must order the detention of the seized items, taking care to ensure their preservation until the conclusion of the investigation or until they are required for further proceedings.

Subsection (2) makes it clear that any order under subsec. (1) must have a maximum life of three months from the day of the seizure unless the justice is satisfied upon a summary application that further detention for a specified period is required or that proceedings have been initiated which may require the detained items. Three clear days' notice to the person from whom the items were seized is necessary before such an application may be made.

Subsection (3) states that more than one order under subsec. (2) may be made but that the cumulative period of detention cannot exceed one year from the date of seizure except in two circumstances. If an application on three days' notice is brought before a judge of a superior court of criminal jurisdiction or a judge as defined in s. 552, and that judge is satisfied that further detention is required due to the complex nature of the investigation, an order may be made detaining the seized items for a specified period, subject to such conditions as the judge may impose. If proceedings have been instituted in which the thing detained may be required, the cumulative period of detention may exceed one year.

Subsection (4) provides that when an accused person has been ordered to stand trial, the justice shall forward the detained items to the clerk of the court having jurisdiction. The clerk will then detain the items and dispose of them as the court directs.

Subsection (5) states that when a prosecutor determines that the detained items are no longer required for the purposes described in subsec. (1) or (4), an application to the appropriate judge or justice shall be made. The judge or justice must give any person claiming to be the lawful owner of the items an opportunity to establish this claim. An order with respect to the items will be made in accordance with subsec. (9).

Subsection (6) provides for an application by the prosecutor for an order under subsec. (9) where the period of detention has expired and proceedings have not been instituted.

Subsection (7) likewise allows a person from whom anything has been seized to make an application, on three days' notice to the Attorney General, for the return of those items after the expiration of the period of detention. A judge or a justice may allow an application under subsec. (7) to be made prior to the expiration of the ordered period of detention where he has been satisfied that hardship will result if such an application is not allowed.

Subsection (9) states that if a judge or a justice is satisfied that the detention period has expired or that the continued detention of seized goods will not be required for any of the purposes referred to in the section, he shall order those goods returned to their lawful owner. If the lawful owner cannot be determined, the judge or justice may order the seized goods to be forfeited to Her Majesty, to be disposed of as directed by the Attorney General or in accordance with law. An order under subsec. (9) is subject to the other provisions in the Code or any other Act of Parliament.

Subsection (10) sets out the requirements for an application for the return of detained goods by a person, other than the person from whom these items were seized, who claims to be the lawful owner. The judge or justice who hears this application shall, if the requirements of subsec. (1) are met, order the return of the seized items to the applicant, or where those items have been sold and cannot be returned to the applicant, order the proceeds of such sale to be paid to the applicant.

Subsection (12) states that nothing shall be returned, forfeited or disposed of under this section pending any application or appeal of the seizure or within 30 days after an order is made.

Subsections (13) and (14) grant to the Attorney General, the prosecutor, peace officer or custodian of the documents the right to make copies of documents ordered to be returned or forfeited and if such copies are certified as true copies by the Attorney General, they are admissible in evidence with the same probative force, absent evidence to the contrary, as the original document.

Subsection (15) makes provision for an application by a person who has interest in seized property to examine the detained items. Such an examination must be regulated according to subsec. (16) in such a way as to safeguard and preserve the detained items.

Subsection (17) sets out the rights of appeal for any person who is not content with an order made under subssecs. (8), (9) or (11).

ANNOTATIONS

Subsec. (1) – The initial detention order made under this subsection is not an extension of the initial judicial process authorizing a search warrant and ss. 7 and 8 of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms are not applicable. Accordingly, the hearing may be held ex parte without notice to the owner of the goods. This is the case under the former legislation: Re Church of Scientology et al. and The Queen (No. 6); Re Walsh et al. and The Queen (1987), 31 C.C.C. (3d) 449 (Ont. C.A.) and the present legislation: Re Barnable P.C.f. and The Queen (1986), 27 C.C.C. (3d) 565 (Nfld. S.C.T.D.).

Where articles have been brought before the justice pursuant to s. 489.1 having been seized in the execution of a warrant, the justice must determine whether or not the article falls within the description contained in the warrant of things which may be searched for and seized and whether it is potentially relevant to the offence set out in the warrant. On the other hand, there is no requirement in the provisions that the justice give reasons for making the detention order under this subsection and until the contrary is shown, a superior court is not entitled to infer that the justice did not decide the issues that were confided to him for determination: Re Famous Players Ltd. et al. v. Director of Investigation and Research (1986), 29 C.C.C. (3d) 251, 11 C.P.R. (3d) 161 (Ont. H.C.J.); Radok v. Joubert (1988), 44 C.C.C. (3d) 317 (B.C.S.C.).

Whether the court is proceeding under this subsection or subsec. (9), the person from whom the money was seized need only show that he was in lawful possession of the money. Upon such proof, the applicant's right to possession is presumed and the onus is then on the Crown to prove beyond a reasonable doubt that applicant is not lawfully entitled to the money by, for example, proof that the possession is tainted: R. v. Mac (1995), 97 C.C.C. (3d) 115, 80 O.A.C. 26 (C.A.).

Subsec. (2) – It is sufficient that the application for further detention is made within three months, there is no requirement that the detention order itself be made within three months: R. v. Papalia (1987), 38 C.C.C. (3d) 37 (B.C.S.C.). Contra: Canada (Attorney General) v. Mandate Erectors and Welding Ltd. (1995), 99 C.C.C. (3d) 187, 163 N.B.R. (2d) 206 (C.A.).

A justice has no jurisdiction to make an order requiring the police to make photocopies of the detained documents. Jurisdiction to deal with the items seized after their further detention has been authorized is given to a judge, as under subsec. (15): Filion v. Savard (1988), 42 C.C.C. (3d) 182 (Que. C.A.).

Where the items seized have been held by the police, but under seal pending the determination of an application in the superior court to quash the warrant, then the owner is not entitled to the return of the items although no extension was obtained after expiration of the original three month detention order. In the circumstances, the owner must be taken to have acquiesced to the continued detention, and the terms of subsec. (2) would not appear to contemplate a case where the reason for the delay is an application by the owner testing the validity of the seizure: Société Radio-Canada v. Québec (Procureur-Général) (1992), 78 C.C.C. (3d) 175, [1993] R.J.Q. 15 (C.A.), leave to appeal to S.C.C. refused 89 C.C.C. (3d) vi, 57 Q.A.C. 29n.

Subsec. (3) – An investigation is not “complex” within the meaning of this subsection merely because a large volume of documents were seized and a larger number of suspects have been identified than was initially thought to be the case. Had the authorities dedicated greater resources to the case, the investigation could have been completed within one year: Moyer (Re) (1994), 95 C.C.C. (3d) 174 (Ont. Ct. (Gen. Div.)).

Subsec. (7) – Where, prior to an application for return of moneys seized from the accused, the police have returned the moneys to the insurers of the victims of a robbery which the accused were suspected of having committed (although the charge was stayed), then the judge should decline to make an order either under this section or pursuant to the superior court's inherent jurisdiction. In such circumstances the conflicting claims are most appropriately resolved by the civil courts: R. v. Taylor (1986), 31 C.C.C. (3d) 21 (B.C.S.C.).

Subsec. (9) – The Crown may seek an order of forfeiture under this subsection of moneys alleged to be the proceeds of crime. It is not restricted to the procedure set out in Part XII.2. Further, a conviction is not a condition precedent to an order under this subsection: British Columbia (Attorney General) v. Forseth (1995), 99 C.C.C. (3d) 296, 99 W.A.C. 310 (B.C.C.A.), leave to appeal to S.C.C. refused March 21, 1996.

Subsec. (15) – It was held in relation to the predecessor to this subsection that there is no appeal from a decision made under this subsection: R. v. Stewart, [1970] 3 C.C.C. 428, 71 W.W.R. 768 (Sask.C.A.).

It was held that the word “examine” in the predecessor to this subsection includes making copies. Accordingly, a judge may order that the applicant be permitted to visually examine and make copies of documents under seizure: R. v. Sutherland (1977), 38

C.C.C. (2d) 252 (Ont. Co. Ct.). Contra: R. v. Labrador Tool Supply Ltd. (1982), 3 C.C.C. (3d) 269, 41 Nfld. & P.E.I.R. 126 (Nfld. S.C.T.D.).

Subsec. (17) – An appeal lies to the court of appeal with leave pursuant to s. 839(1) from a decision under this subsection: R. v. Church of Scientology of Toronto (1991), 63 C.C.C. (3d) 328 (Ont. C.A.).

The Attorney General may appeal an order made under this section returning goods to the person from whom they were seized: British Columbia (Attorney General) v. Forseth, supra.

FORFEITURE OF WEAPONS AND AMMUNITION / Return to lawful owners / Application of proceeds.

491. (1) Subject to subsection (2), where it is determined by a court that a weapon or ammunition was used in the commission of an offence or that a person has committed an offence under section 91 with respect to a restricted weapon, and the weapon or ammunition has been seized and detained, the weapon or ammunition is forfeited and may be dealt with as the court that makes the determination directs.

(2) If the court by which a determination referred to in subsection (1) is made is satisfied that the lawful owner of the weapon or ammunition was not a party to the offence and had no reason to believe that the weapon or ammunition would or might be used in the commission of an offence, the court shall order the weapon or ammunition returned to the lawful owner thereof or the proceeds of any sale thereof to be paid to that owner.

(3) Where any weapon or ammunition in respect of which this section applies is sold, the proceeds of the sale shall be paid to the Attorney General or, where an order is made under subsection (2), to the person who was, immediately prior to the sale, the lawful owner of the weapon or ammunition. 1972, c. 13, s. 37; 1991, c. 40, s. 30.

NOTE: Replaced 1995, c. 39, s. 152 (to come into force by order of the Governor in Council). The text, which is not yet in force and therefor printed in lightface italics, reads as follows:

FORFEITURE OF WEAPONS AND AMMUNITION / Return to lawful owner / Application of proceeds.

491. (1) Subject to subsection (2), where it is determined by a court that

- (a) a weapon, an imitation firearm, a prohibited device, any ammunition, any prohibited ammunition or an explosive substance was used in the commission of an offence and that thing has been seized and detained, or*
- (b) that a person has committed an offence that involves, or the subject-matter of which is, a firearm, a cross-bow, a prohibited weapon, a restricted weapon, a prohibited device, ammunition, prohibited ammunition or an explosive substance and any such thing has been seized and detained,*

the thing so seized and detained is forfeited to Her Majesty and shall be disposed of as the Attorney General directs.

(2) If the court by which a determination referred to in subsection (1) is made is satisfied that the lawful owner of any thing that is or may be forfeited to Her Majesty under subsection (1) was not a party to the offence and had no reasonable grounds to believe that the thing would or might be used in the commission of an offence, the court shall order that the thing be returned to that lawful owner, that the proceeds of any sale of the thing be paid to that lawful owner or, if the thing was destroyed, that an amount equal to the value of the thing be paid to the owner.

(3) Where any thing in respect of which this section applies is sold, the proceeds of the sale shall be paid to the Attorney General or, where an order is made under subsection (2), to the person who was, immediately prior to the sale, the lawful owner of the thing.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms "weapon" and "Attorney General" are defined in s. 2. Liability of a person as a party to an offence is defined in ss. 21 and 22. For other provisions respecting forfeiture of contraband, see ss. 491.1 and 492. For special provision for search and seizure of weapons, see ss. 101 to 103. Section 91 sets out the offence of unlawful possession of restricted weapons.

SYNOPSIS

This section sets out a special code for dealing with forfeiture of weapons and ammunition and their subsequent disposal.

Subsection (1) states that where a court determines that a weapon was used in the commission of an offence or the offence under s. 91 was committed and it has been seized and detained, that weapon or ammunition is forfeited and will be dealt with as the court directs. This determination is subject to the provisions of subsec. (2).

Subsection (2) provides that where the court determines that the lawful owner of the weapon or ammunition referred to in subsec. (1) was not a party to the offence and had no reason to believe that the weapon or ammunition would be so used, the court shall order the weapon returned to that person. Where the weapon or ammunition has been sold, the proceeds will be paid, either to the Attorney General, or the lawful owner described in subsec. (2).

ANNOTATIONS

Unless the lawful owner of the firearm was not a party to the offence, the trial Judge has no discretion to refuse to order forfeiture of a weapon used in the commission of an offence such as the offence of careless use of a firearm contrary to s. 86: R. v. Martins (1981), 58 C.C.C. (2d) 382 (N.W.T.S.C.).

The requirement that the weapon be "used" refers to something actively having been done with the weapon. Thus the court has no power to order forfeiture of a firearm upon a conviction for careless storage of a firearm under s. 86: R. v. Annas (1985), 17 C.C.C. (3d) 383 (Alta. Q.B.).

ORDER FOR RESTITUTION OR FORFEITURE OF PROPERTY OBTAINED BY CRIME / Idem / When certain orders not to be made / By whom order executed.

491.1 (1) Where an accused or defendant is tried for an offence and the court determines that an offence has been committed, whether or not the accused has been convicted or discharged under section 736 of the offence, and at the time of the trial any property obtained by the commission of the offence

(a) is before the court or has been detained so that it can be immediately dealt with, and

(b) will not be required as evidence in any other proceedings, section 490 does not apply in respect of the property and the court shall make an order under subsection (2) in respect of the property.

(2) In the circumstances referred to in subsection (1), the court shall order, in respect of any property,

(a) if the lawful owner or person lawfully entitled to possession of the property is known, that it be returned to that person; and

(b) if the lawful owner or person lawfully entitled to possession of the property is not known, that it be forfeited to Her Majesty, to be disposed of as the Attorney General directs or otherwise dealt with in accordance with the law.

(3) An order shall not be made under subsection (2)

(a) in the case of proceedings against a trustee, banker, merchant, attorney, factor, broker or other agent entrusted with the possession of goods or documents of title to goods, for an offence under section 330, 331, 332 or 336; or

(b) in respect of

- (i) property to which a person acting in good faith and without notice has acquired lawful title for valuable consideration,
- (ii) a valuable security that has been paid or discharged in good faith by a person who was liable to pay or discharge it,
- (iii) a negotiable instrument that has, in good faith, been taken or received by transfer or delivery for valuable consideration by a person who had no notice and no reasonable cause to suspect that an offence had been committed, or
- (iv) property in respect of which there is a dispute as to ownership or right of possession by claimants other than the accused or defendant.

(4) An order made under this section shall, on the direction of the court, be executed by the peace officers by whom the process of the court is ordinarily executed. R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 74.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms “Attorney General”, “valuable security”, “document of title”, “peace officer” and “property” are defined in s. 2.

SYNOPSIS

This section deals with the disposition of property which has been obtained by crime.

Subsection (1) describes the situation where, during the trial of an accused or defendant, the court determines that an offence has been committed and any property obtained by the commission of the offence is before the court or detained and will not be required as evidence in any other proceedings. Under such circumstances, s. 490 will not apply in respect of this property, but the court will make an order under subsec. (2) to dispose of it.

Subsection (2) states that the court shall order that the property be returned to the lawful owner, if such person is known. If the identity of the lawful owner is not known, the property will be ordered forfeit to Her Majesty, to be dealt with as the Attorney General directs or otherwise in accordance with the law.

Subsection (3) sets out the circumstances in which an order under subsec. (2) will not be made.

Subsection (4) provides that an order made under this section shall be executed, on the direction of the court, by such peace officers as normally execute process of the court.

ANNOTATIONS

It was held in R. v. Kolstad (1959), 123 C.C.C. 170, 30 C.R. 176 (Alta. C.A.), affd 125 C.C.C. 254 (S.C.C.) that money paid by the accused for the purpose of bribery and filed as an exhibit at his trial should not be paid out to the accused, but rather held in Court until further order.

PHOTOGRAPHIC EVIDENCE / Certified photograph admissible in evidence / Statements made in certificate / Secondary evidence of peace officer / Notice of intention to produce certified photograph / Attendance for examination / Production of property in court / Definition of “photograph”.

491.2. (1) Before any property that would otherwise be required to be produced for the purposes of a preliminary inquiry, trial or other proceeding in respect of an offence under section 334, 344, 348, 354, 362 or 380 is returned or ordered to be returned, forfeited or otherwise dealt with under section 489.1 or 490 or is otherwise returned, a peace officer or any person under the direction of a peace officer may take and retain a photograph of the property.

(2) Every photograph of property taken under subsection (1), accompanied by a certificate of a person containing the statements referred to in subsection (3), shall be admissible in evidence and, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, shall have the same probative force as the property would have had if it had been proved in the ordinary way.

(3) For the purposes of subsection (2), a certificate of a person stating that

- (a) the person took the photograph under the authority of subsection (1),
- (b) the person is a peace officer or took the photograph under the direction of a peace officer, and
- (c) the photograph is a true photograph shall be admissible in evidence and, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, is evidence of the statements contained in the certificate without proof of the signature of the person appearing to have signed the certificate.

(4) An affidavit or solemn declaration of a peace officer or other person stating that the person has seized property and detained it or caused it to be detained from the time that person took possession of the property until a photograph of the property was taken under subsection (1) and that the property was not altered in any manner before the photograph was taken shall be admissible in evidence and, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, is evidence of the statements contained in the affidavit or solemn declaration without proof of the signature or official character of the person appearing to have signed the affidavit or solemn declaration.

(5) Unless the court orders otherwise, no photograph, certificate, affidavit or solemn declaration shall be received in evidence at a trial or other proceeding pursuant to subsection (2), (3) or (4) unless the prosecutor has, before the trial or other proceeding, given to the accused a copy thereof and reasonable notice of intention to produce it in evidence.

(6) Notwithstanding subsection (3) or (4), the court may require the person who appears to have signed a certificate, an affidavit or a solemn declaration referred to in that subsection to appear before it for examination or cross-examination in respect of the issue of proof of any of the facts contained in the certificate, affidavit or solemn declaration.

(7) A court may order any property seized and returned pursuant to section 489.1 or 490 to be produced in court or made available for examination by all parties to a proceeding at a reasonable time and place, notwithstanding that a photograph of the property has been received in evidence pursuant to subsection (2), where the court is satisfied that the interests of justice so require and that it is possible and practicable to do so in the circumstances.

(8) In this section, "photograph" includes a still photograph, a photographic film or plate, a microphotographic film, a photostatic negative, an X-ray film, a motion picture and a videotape. R.S.C. 1985, c. 23 (4th Supp.), s. 2; 1992, c. 1, s. 58.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms "prosecutor", "peace officer" and "property" are defined in s. 2. "Prosecutor" is also defined in s. 785 for the purpose of summary conviction proceedings. Section 4(6) provides that service of any document may be proved by oral evidence or by way of affidavit.

SEIZURE OF EXPLOSIVES / Forfeiture / Application of proceeds.

492. (1) Every person who executes a warrant issued under section 487 or 487.1 may seize any explosive substance that he suspects is intended to be used for an unlawful purpose, and shall, as soon as possible, remove to a place of safety anything that he seizes by virtue of this section and detain it until he is ordered by a judge of a superior court to deliver it to some other person or an order is made pursuant to subsection (2).

(2) Where an accused is convicted of an offence in respect of anything seized by virtue of subsection (1), it is forfeited and shall be dealt with as the court that makes the conviction may direct.

(3) Where anything to which this section applies is sold, the proceeds of the sale shall be paid to the Attorney General. R.S., c. C-34, s. 447; R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 70.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms “explosive substance” and “Attorney General” are defined in s. 2. For other provisions respecting forfeiture of contraband, see ss. 491 and 491.1.

SYNOPSIS

This section sets out special provisions for seizing and disposing of explosives.

Subsection (1) provides that a person who executes a warrant under s. 487 may seize any explosives which are suspected to be held for an unlawful purpose. Such person must, as soon as possible, put these explosives in a safe place and hold them there until ordered by a judge of a superior court to deliver them to another person, or in accordance with subsec. (2).

Subsection (2) states that where a person is convicted of an offence in relation to the seized explosives, such explosives are forfeited and will be dealt with in accordance with the direction of the court that imposed the conviction.

Subsection (3) ensures that the proceeds from the sale of any explosives seized under this section will be paid to the Attorney General.

INFORMATION FOR TRACKING WARRANT / Time limit for warrant / Further warrants / Definition of “tracking device”.

492.1 (1) A justice who is satisfied by information on oath in writing that there are reasonable grounds to suspect that an offence under this or any other Act of Parliament has been or will be committed and that information that is relevant to the commission of that offence, including the whereabouts of any person, can be obtained through the use of a tracking device, may at any time issue a warrant authorizing a person named therein or a peace officer

- (a) to install, maintain and remove a tracking device in or on any thing, including a thing carried, used or worn by any person; and
- (b) to monitor, or to have monitored, a tracking device installed in or on any thing.

(2) A warrant issued under subsection (1) is valid for the period, not exceeding sixty days, mentioned in it.

(3) A justice may issue further warrants under this section.

(4) For the purposes of this section, “tracking device” means any device that, when installed in or on any thing, may be used to help ascertain, by electronic or other means, the location of any thing or person. 1993, c. 40, s. 18.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term “justice” is defined in s. 2. This section is part of a more or less comprehensive scheme relating to surreptitious electronic surveillance. Interception of private communications are dealt with in Part VI. Use of telephone number recorders as regulated under s. 492.2 and s. 487.01 would cover the use of other electronic devices such as video cameras. Provision is made in s. 487.02 for the making of an assistance order to require persons to co-operate in the carrying out of orders made under this section.

SYNOPSIS

This section provides for the granting of a warrant to authorize the use of "tracking devices", defined in subsec. (4). No doubt because of the perceived diminished expectation of privacy, the grounds for granting the warrant differ somewhat from the traditional grounds for authorizing a search or seizure in that the justice need only be satisfied that there are grounds to "suspect" that an offence has been or will be committed and that relevant evidence "can" be obtained. Enactment of this section follows the decision of the Supreme Court of Canada in R. v. Wise (1992), 70 C.C.C. (3d) 193, 11 C.R. (4th) 253, [1992] 1 S.C.R. 527 holding that the warrantless installation and monitoring of such a device in a suspect's car was a search for the purposes of s. 8 of the Charter.

The warrant may be valid for a period not exceeding 60 days, but further warrants may be issued under this section.

INFORMATION RE NUMBER RECORDER / Order re telephone records / Other provisions to apply / Definition of "number recorder".

492.2 (1) A justice who is satisfied by information on oath in writing that there are reasonable grounds to suspect that an offence under this or any other Act of Parliament has been or will be committed and that information that would assist in the investigation of that offence could be obtained through the use of a number recorder, may at any time issue a warrant authorizing a person named in it or a peace officer

- (a) to install, maintain and remove a number recorder in relation to any telephone or telephone line; and
- (b) to monitor, or to have monitored, the number recorder.

(2) When the circumstances referred to in subsection (1) exist, a justice may order that any person or body that lawfully possesses records of telephone calls originated from, or received or intended to be received at, any telephone give the records, or a copy of the records, to a person named in the order.

(3) Subsections 492.1(2) and (3) apply to warrants and orders issued under this section, with such modifications as the circumstances require.

(4) For the purposes of this section, "number recorder" means any device that can be used to record or identify the telephone number or location of the telephone from which a telephone call originates, or at which it is received or is intended to be received. 1993, c. 40, s. 18.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term "justice" is defined in s. 2. This section is part of a more or less comprehensive scheme relating to surreptitious electronic surveillance. Interception of private communications are dealt with in Part VI. Use of tracking devices as regulated under s. 492.1 and s. 487.01 would cover the use of other electronic devices such as video cameras. Provision is made in s. 487.02 for the making of an assistance order to require persons to co-operate in the carrying out of orders made under this section.

SYNOPSIS

This section provides for the granting of a warrant to authorize the use of a "number recorder" defined in subsec. (4) and sometimes referred to as dial number recorders. No doubt because of the perceived diminished expectation of privacy, the grounds for granting the warrant differ somewhat from the traditional grounds for authorizing a search or seizure in that the justice need only be satisfied that there are grounds to "suspect" that an offence has been or will be committed and that relevant evidence "can" be obtained. Enactment of this section follows some decisions holding that the use of such devices was a search or seizure for the purposes of s. 8 of the Charter. Prior to the enactment of this section, there did not appear to be any means by which a warrant could be obtained for the use of such a device.

This section actually envisages two different types of orders. Subsection (1) provides for a warrant to install and monitor the number recorder. Subsection (2) provides that the justice may order that a person in possession of records of telephone calls turn those records over to the person named in the order.

The warrant may be valid for a period not exceeding 60 days, but further warrants may be issued under the section.

Part XVI / COMPELLING APPEARANCE OF ACCUSED BEFORE A JUSTICE AND INTERIM RELEASE

Interpretation

DEFINITIONS / “accused” / “appearance notice” / “judge” / “officer in charge” / “promise to appear” / “recognizance” / “summons” / “undertaking” / “warrant”.

493. In this Part,

“accused” includes

- (a) a person to whom a peace officer has issued an appearance notice under section 496, and
- (b) a person arrested for a criminal offence;

“appearance notice” means a notice in Form 9 issued by a peace officer;

“judge” means

- (a) in the Province of Ontario, a judge of the superior court of criminal jurisdiction of the Province,
- (b) in the Province of Quebec, a judge of the superior court of criminal jurisdiction of the province or three judges of the Court of Quebec,
- (c) [Repealed. 1992, c. 51, s. 37.]
- (d) in the Provinces of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Manitoba, British Columbia, Prince Edward Island, Saskatchewan, Alberta and Newfoundland, a judge of the superior court of criminal jurisdiction of the Province,
- (e) in the Yukon Territory and the Northwest Territories, a judge of the Supreme Court;

NOTE: Definition “judge” amended 1993, c. 28, s. 78 (to come into force April 1, 1999) by re-enacting para. (e). The text of para. (e), which is not yet in force and therefore printed in lightface italics, reads as follows:

- (e) in the Yukon Territory, the Northwest Territories and Nunavut, a judge of the Supreme Court;

“officer in charge” means the officer for the time being in command of the police force responsible for the lock-up or other place to which an accused is taken after arrest or a peace officer designated by him for the purposes of this Part who is in charge of that place at the time an accused is taken to that place to be detained in custody;

“promise to appear” means a promise in Form 10;

“recognizance”, when used in relation to a recognizance entered into before an officer in charge, or other peace officer, means a recognizance in Form 11, and when used in relation to a recognizance entered into before a justice or judge, means a recognizance in Form 32;

“summons” means a summons in Form 6 issued by a justice or a judge;

“undertaking” means an undertaking in Form 11.1 or 12;

“warrant”, when used in relation to a warrant for the arrest of a person, means a warrant in Form 7 and, when used in relation to a warrant for the committal of a person, means a warrant in Form 8. R.S., c. C-34, s. 448; R.S., c. 2 (2nd Supp.), s. 5; 1972, c. 17, s. 3; 1974-75-76, c. 48, s. 25(1); 1978-79, c. 11, s. 10; R.S.C. 1985, c. 11 (1st Supp.), s. 2; c. 27 (2nd Supp.), s. 10; c. 40 (4th Supp.), s. 2; 1990, c. 16, s. 5; 1990, c. 17, s. 12; 1992, c. 51, s. 37; 1994, c. 44, s. 39.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms “peace officer”, “property”, “justice”, “superior court of criminal jurisdiction” and “Attorney General” are defined in s. 2. In addition to the definition in this section see s. 2 and notes to that section. Section 841 provides that forms varied to suit the case and forms to the like effect shall be deemed to be good, valid and sufficient in the circumstances for which, respectively, they are provided. Also note s. 841(3) requiring preprinted portions of forms to be printed in both official languages.

ANNOTATIONS

“Officer in charge” – This definition contemplates a delegation of authority by the officer for the time being in command of the police force to a police officer who is at the time in charge of the place of detention. The officer in charge of such place does not have the powers conferred and imposed under this Part unless and until he has been designated for such purposes: R. v. Gendron (1985), 22 C.C.C. (3d) 312 (Ont. C.A.).

Arrest Without Warrant and Release from Custody

ARREST WITHOUT WARRANT BY ANY PERSON / Arrest by owner, etc. of property / Delivery to peace officer.

494. (1) Any one may arrest without warrant

(a) a person whom he finds committing an indictable offence; or

(b) a person who, on reasonable grounds, he believes

(i) has committed a criminal offence, and

(ii) is escaping from and freshly pursued by persons who have lawful authority to arrest that person.

(2) Any one who is

(a) the owner or a person in lawful possession of property, or

(b) a person authorized by the owner or by a person in lawful possession of property, may arrest without warrant a person whom he finds committing a criminal offence on or in relation to that property.

(3) Any one other than a peace officer who arrests a person without warrant shall forthwith deliver the person to a peace officer. R.S., c. C-34, s. 449; R.S., c. 2 (2nd Supp.), s. 5.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term “peace officer” is defined in s. 2. Indictable offence includes a hybrid offence by virtue of s. 34(1)(a) of the Interpretation Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. I-21. See R. v. Huff (1979), 50 C.C.C. (2d) 324 (Alta. C.A.). With respect to protection of persons acting in the administration or enforcement of the law see ss. 25 to 27. Also note s. 29(2) which imposes a duty on a person making an arrest to give notice of the reason for the arrest. An additional power of arrest is given under s. 30 with respect to breach of the peace. The additional powers of arrest by peace officers are dealt with in ss. 31 and 495.

SYNOPSIS

This section describes the power of any person, whether or not he is a peace officer, to arrest another person without a warrant.

Subsection (1) grants to every person the authority to arrest without warrant another person in two sets of circumstances. If a person is found committing an indictable offence, he may be arrested without a warrant by any other person. A person who is not a peace officer may also arrest without a warrant another person whom the individual making the arrest has reasonable grounds to believe has committed a criminal offence and has escaped from, and is being freshly pursued by persons with the lawful authority to make the arrest.

Subsection (2) states that anyone who is either the owner of, in lawful possession of, or has been authorized by the owner of the person in lawful possession of property, may arrest without a warrant a person whom he finds committing a criminal offence in relation to or on that property.

Subsection (3) requires that any person, other than a peace officer, who arrests another person without a warrant, must deliver the arrested person forthwith to a peace officer.

ANNOTATIONS

Constitutional considerations – The arrest of a citizen by another private citizen is a governmental function to which the Charter of Rights applies and thus a search incident to that arrest must comply with s. 8 of the Charter: R. v. Lerke (1986), 24 C.C.C. (3d) 129, 49 C.R. (3d) 324, 25 D.L.R. (4th) 403 (Alta. C.A.).

Meaning of “forthwith” [subsec. (3)] – “Forthwith” does not mean instantly but merely as soon as is reasonably practicable under all the circumstances: R. v. Cunningham and Ritchie (1979), 49 C.C.C. (2d) 390 (Man. Co. Ct.).

ARREST WITHOUT WARRANT BY PEACE OFFICER / Limitation / Consequences of arrest without warrant.

495. (1) A peace officer may arrest without warrant

- (a) a person who has committed an indictable offence or who, on reasonable grounds, he believes has committed or is about to commit an indictable offence;
- (b) a person whom he finds committing a criminal offence; or
- (c) a person in respect of whom he has reasonable grounds to believe that a warrant of arrest or committal, in any form set out in Part XXVIII in relation thereto, is in force within the territorial jurisdiction in which the person is found.

(2) A peace officer shall not arrest a person without warrant for

- (a) an indictable offence mentioned in section 553,
- (b) an offence for which the person may be prosecuted by indictment or for which he is punishable on summary conviction, or
- (c) an offence punishable on summary conviction,

in any case where

- (d) he believes on reasonable grounds that the public interest, having regard to all the circumstances including the need to
  - (i) establish the identity of the person,
  - (ii) secure or preserve evidence of or relating to the offence, or
  - (iii) prevent the continuation or repetition of the offence or the commission of another offence, may be satisfied without so arresting the person, and

(e) he has no reasonable grounds to believe that, if he does not so arrest the person, the person will fail to attend court in order to be dealt with according to law.

(3) Notwithstanding subsection (2), a peace officer acting under subsection (1) is deemed to be acting lawfully and in the execution of his duty for the purposes of

(a) any proceedings under this or any other Act of Parliament; and

(b) any other proceedings, unless in any such proceedings it is alleged and established by the person making the allegation that the peace officer did not comply with the requirements of subsection (2). R.S., c. C-34, s. 450; R.S., c. 2 (2nd Supp.), s. 5; R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 75.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term "peace officer" is defined in s. 2. Indictable offence includes a hybrid offence by virtue of s. 34(1)(a) of the Interpretation Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. I-21. See R. v. Huff (1979), 50 C.C.C. (2d) 324 (Alta. C.A.). With respect to protection of persons acting in the administration or enforcement of the law see ss. 25 to 27. Section 28 protects the peace officer in case of arrest of the wrong person when executing a warrant. Also note s. 29(1), which requires the person executing the warrant to have it with him where feasible and produce it upon request, and s. 29(2) which imposes a duty on a person making an arrest to give notice of the warrant under which he makes the arrest and the reason for the arrest. An additional power of arrest is given under s. 31 with respect to breach of the peace. Section 10 of the Charter, as well, imposes duties with respect to reason for arrest and right to counsel and see notes under that section. A peace officer of course also may exercise the powers of arrest given to a private citizen under ss. 30 and 494.

Note on the scheme for pre-trial release – Where an officer does not arrest the person by virtue of s. 495(2) because the accused is alleged to have committed a hybrid offence, a summary conviction offence or an offence listed in s. 553 and there is not cause for arrest to, for example, establish identity, preserve evidence, prevent commission of an offence, or ensure attendance in court, then he shall issue an appearance notice under s. 496. Where the officer arrests the person but the person falls within the categories set out in s. 497(1) then he shall release him pursuant to s. 497 on an appearance notice (defined in s. 493), or with the intention of compelling his appearance by way of summons (defined in s. 493), once there is no cause for further detention. If the person is arrested and not released under s. 497 then he shall be released by the officer in charge (defined in s. 493) pursuant to s. 498 on a promise to appear or recognizance (defined in s. 493) once there is no cause for further detention. The officer in charge may release not only for the offences described in s. 495(2) but for any offence punishable by imprisonment for five years or less. While the provisions of ss. 495(2), 497 and 498 are stated in mandatory terms, in effect requiring the accused's release unless there is cause to further detain him where he is charged with one of the specified offences, s. 503(2) gives the peace officer and officer in charge a discretion to release an accused charged with other offences (except an offence listed in s. 469) on a promise to appear or recognizance, if the officer is satisfied that the accused "should be released from custody conditionally". The contents of the appearance notice, promise to appear and recognizance are described in s. 501 and may also require that the accused attend at a time and place stated therein for the purposes of the Identification of Criminals Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. I-1. Where the accused does not attend as required then a justice may issue a warrant for the accused's arrest pursuant to s. 502. In all cases where the accused is given process by the peace officer or officer in charge an information is to be laid before a justice as soon as practicable and, in any event, before the return date set out in the process pursuant to s. 505. The justice then will either confirm the process or cancel it pursuant to s. 508. Where the accused is not released by the peace officer or officer in charge then he must be taken before a justice pursuant to s. 503, usually within 24 hours. The justice will then deal with release pursuant to s. 515 unless the accused is charged with an offence listed in s. 469 such as murder. In the latter case the justice will order that the accused be detained in custody and the onus is upon the accused to bring an application under s. 522 to a judge of the superior court of criminal jurisdiction (defined in s. 2) for release pending trial. Section 503 also makes special provision for an accused who is arrested for an offence alleged to have been committed in another province.

Where the accused is not released on a form of process by a peace officer or officer in charge then an information will be laid before the justice pursuant to s. 504. Where the accused has not yet been arrested then the justice may issue a summons or warrant [both defined in s. 493] pursuant to s. 507. The contents of the summons is described in s. 509 and served in accordance with s. 509(2) and may also require that the accused attend at a time and place stated therein for the purposes of the Identification of Criminals Act. Where the accused does not attend as required then a justice may issue a warrant for the accused's arrest pursuant to s. 510. Once the person is arrested on a warrant then again he will be taken before a justice pursuant to s. 503, unless the warrant has been endorsed permitting the officer in charge to release under s. 499. The contents of the warrant are described in ss. 511 and 513. The warrant is executed pursuant to s. 513. The duties of a peace officer executing an arrest warrant are described in ss. 29 and 10 of the Charter. Further, under s. 512, notwithstanding that an accused has been released on a form of process by a peace officer or officer in charge, or a summons has been issued, a justice may issue a summons or warrant where he believes on reasonable and probable grounds that this action is necessary in the public interest. The information laid under s. 504 or s. 505 may be in Form 2 pursuant to s. 506.

Failure to attend court as required, comply with conditions in a recognizance or undertaking or attend for the purposes of the Identification of Criminals Act is an offence under s. 145. A warrant may issue under s. 512 where the accused fails to appear for court as required.

A warrant, summons, appearance notice, promise to appear, undertaking or recognizance may be issued, executed, given or entered into on a holiday by virtue of s. 20.

SYNOPSIS

This section specifies the powers of a peace officer to arrest without a warrant, and the limitations thereon.

Subsection (1) states that a peace officer may arrest without warrant any person whom he finds committing a criminal offence, any person whom he believes on reasonable grounds has committed or is about to commit an indictable offence, or any person whom he reasonably believes is the subject of a warrant of arrest or committal.

Subsection (2) limits the powers of arrest without warrant available to a peace officer. A peace officer shall not arrest a person without warrant for an indictable offence within the absolute jurisdiction of a provincial court judge, for a Crown election offence, or for a summary conviction offence, in any of the circumstances set out in subsec. 2(d) and (e). In other words, the peace officer should arrest without warrant persons committing the offences listed in paras. (a), (b) or (c) only where it is necessary to establish the identity of the person, to preserve evidence of the offence, to prevent the continuation of or repetition of the offence, or to secure the attendance of the accused in court.

Subsection (3) makes it clear that a peace officer, acting under subsec. (1), is deemed to be acting lawfully and in the execution of his duty for the purposes of any Act of Parliament, notwithstanding subsec. (2). This deeming provision also extends to any other proceedings, unless it is established that the peace officer did not comply with subsec. (2).

ANNOTATIONS

Meaning of “reasonable grounds” [para. (1)(a)] – In Kennedy v. Tomlinson et al. (1959), 126 C.C.C. 175, 20 D.L.R. (2d) 273 (Ont. C.A.) it was held that there is “a prodigious difference” between a case in which a policeman acts on his own initiative and one where he acts upon the complaint of a citizen. In the latter situation he is under a duty to make inquiry first.

For an arrest to be valid on the basis of reasonable and probable grounds, it is not sufficient for the police officer to subjectively believe that he has reasonable and probable grounds to make an arrest. Rather, it must also be shown that a reasonable person, standing in the shoes of the officer, would have believed that reasonable and probable grounds existed to make the arrest. However, the police need not go further and establish a prima facie case. An arrest which is lawfully made does not become unlawful simply because the police intend to continue their investigation after the arrest, nor does the arrest thereby constitute a violation of s. 9 of the Charter: R. v. Storrey (1990), 53 C.C.C. (3d) 316, [1990] 1 S.C.R. 241, 75 C.R. (3d) 1 (7:0).

For a peace officer to have reasonable and probable grounds his belief in the person's guilt must take into account all the information available to him. He is entitled to disregard only what he has good reason for believing is not reliable: Chartier v. A.-G. Que. (1979), 48 C.C.C. (2d) 34, [1979] 2 S.C.R. 474, 9 C.R. (3d) 97.

Finds committing criminal offence [para. (1)(b)] – Where a peace officer makes an arrest under para. (b), the validity of the arrest does not depend upon a subsequent conviction for the commission of that offence, but rather upon the circumstances which were apparent to the officer at the time: R. v. Biron (1975), 23 C.C.C. (2d) 513, 30 C.R.N.S. 109 (5:3) (S.C.C.) and R. v. Fuhr, [1975] 4 W.W.R. 403 (Alta. S.C. App. Div.).

In R. v. Stevens (1976), 33 C.C.C. (2d) 429, 18 N.S.R. (2d) 96 (S.C. App. Div.) the Court, considering R. v. Biron, supra, held that in order to arrest a person without a warrant for a summary conviction offence it is not sufficient for the arresting officer to show that he had reasonable and probable grounds to believe such offence had been, or was about to be, committed, rather he must go further and show that he found a situation in which a person was apparently committing an offence. Where the accused is acquitted on a charge of causing a disturbance on the basis that the accused was in a dwelling home at the time a charge of resisting an officer in the execution of his duty in attempting to arrest for that offence must also fail, the arrest being unlawful.

Person for whom arrest warrant outstanding [para. (1)(c)] – It is not necessary that the peace officer ascertain the nature of the offence for which the warrant is outstanding: Gamracy v. The Queen (1973), 12 C.C.C. (2d) 209, 22 C.R.N.S. 224 (S.C.C.) (3:2).

Where it was clearly feasible for a police officer to possess the warrant his failure to do so vitiated any lawful arrest: Richard v. The Queen (1974), 27 C.R.N.S. 337 (Que. S.C.).

Right to enter premises to effect arrest – The power of arrest without warrant in this paragraph may be exercised by entry on private premises without the consent of the occupier where the circumstances meet the requirements of this paragraph, and there are reasonable and probable grounds for the belief that the person sought is within the premises and proper announcement was made before entry. This latter requirement would appear to mean proper announcement of the officer's presence and purpose before entering: R. v. Landry (1986), 25 C.C.C. (3d) 1, 50 C.R. (3d) 55, [1986] 1 S.C.R. 145 (8:1). Also see: R. v. Miller (1986), 25 C.C.C. (3d) 554 (Sask. C.A.), affd 39 C.C.C. (3d) 288, 83 N.R. 239, 64 Sask. R. 320 (S.C.C.) (5:0).

However the officers were not required to make an announcement before entry where it was reasonable to infer that had they done so, evidence would have been destroyed or removed: R. v. Wong (1987), 34 C.C.C. (3d) 51, 56 C.R. (3d) 352 (Ont. C.A.).

The requirement of proper announcement before entry is not limited to a forcible entry and applies even where the officers enter private premises through an open door for the purpose of effecting an arrest, unless in the circumstances the open door can be construed as an invitation to enter: R. v. Delong (1989), 47 C.C.C. (3d) 402, 69 C.R. (3d) 147, 31 O.A.C. 339 (C.A.).

The police have the power to enter private premises to effect an arrest where they are in hot pursuit and they have a warrant for an arrest or have the power to make an arrest with warrant. This power to enter private premises to make an arrest while in hot pursuit is not limited to an arrest for an indictable offence. Nor is it necessary that the offence had been committed in the presence of the police. The essence of hot or fresh pursuit is that it must be continuous pursuit conducted with reasonable diligence so that the pursuit and capture along with the commission of the offence may be considered as forming part of a single transaction: R. v. Maccooh, [1993] 2 S.C.R. 802, 82 C.C.C. (3d) 481, 22 C.R. (4th) 70.

Search incident to arrest – Police officers have the power to search an accused as an incident to a lawful arrest and to seize anything in his possession or immediate surroundings to guarantee the safety of the police and the accused, prevent the accused's escape or provide evidence against him. The existence of reasonable and probable grounds to believe that the accused is in possession of weapons or evidence is not a prerequisite to the existence of the power to search, provided, however, that the search is for a valid objective and not unrelated to the objectives of the proper administration of justice. Accordingly, a search done for weapons or other dangerous articles is necessary as an elementary precaution to preclude the possibility of their use against the police, the nearby public or the accused himself. A search is also proper to collect evidence that can be used in establishing the guilt of the accused. Further, the search must not be conducted in an abusive fashion and the use of physical or psychological constraint should be proportionate to the objectives sought and the other circumstances of the situation. A "frisk" or pat down search is a relatively non-intrusive procedure and, if done for valid reasons, is not a disproportionate interference with the freedom of persons lawfully arrested: Cloutier v. Langlois (1990), 53 C.C.C. (3d) 257, [1990] 1 S.C.R. 158, 74 C.R. (3d) 316 (7:0).

Right to counsel on arrest – Where a person is detained for a search, as in the case of a body search incident to arrest, then, immediately upon detention, the detainee has the right to be informed of the right to counsel under s. 10(b) of the Charter. However, the police are not obligated to suspend the search incident to arrest until the detainee has the opportunity to retain counsel. The police are, however, required to suspend the search where the lawfulness of the search is dependent on the detainee's consent or where the statute gives a person a right to seek review of the decision to search: R. v. Debot (1989), 52 C.C.C. (3d) 193, [1989] 2 S.C.R. 1140, 73 C.R. (3d) 129.

Arrest to establish identity – It was held in Moore v. The Queen (1978), 43 C.C.C. (2d) 83, 90 D.L.R. (3d) 112, [1979] 1 S.C.R. 195 (5:2), which arose out of an arrest for a summary conviction provincial traffic offence for which these provisions are applicable by virtue of the provincial Summary Convictions Act, that as a constable has no power to arrest an accused for a summary conviction offence by virtue of this subsection unless, inter alia, the arrest was necessary to establish the person's identity, a constable in requesting that the person whom he finds committing such an offence identify himself is in the execution of his duty and the accused's refusal to accede to the request constitutes the offence of obstructing police under s. 129.

Arrest and arbitrary detention under s. 9 of Charter [Also see meaning of "reasonable grounds", supra] – It is not every unlawful arrest that will amount to a breach of the guarantee to protection against arbitrary detention in s. 9 of the Charter of Rights. Where the officer honestly but mistakenly believed that reasonable and probable grounds existed and there was some basis for that belief, then the arrest, although subsequently found to be unlawful, could not be said to be arbitrary: R. v. Duguay, Murphy and Sevigny (1985), 18 C.C.C. (3d) 289, 45 C.R. (3d) 140, 18 D.L.R. (4th) 32 (C.A.), affd on other grounds 46 C.C.C. (3d) 1, 67 C.R. (3d) 252, [1989] 1 S.C.R. 93. R. v. Brown, supra.

The fact that subsec. (3) deems the arrest to be unlawful is not determinative as to whether the arrest constitutes arbitrary detention within the meaning of s. 9 of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. There was, however, no breach of s. 9 by the arrest, rather than mere detention, of an impaired driver for the purpose of complying with a breathalyzer demand where such arrest was a not unreasonable means to prevent continuation or repetition of the offence and thus authorized by para. (2)(a)(iii): R. v. Cayer (1988), 6 M.V.R. (2d) 1, 66 C.R. (3d) 30 (Ont. C.A.). Folld: R. v. Baker (1988), 9 M.V.R. (2d) 165, 88 N.S.R. (2d) 250 (C.A.). Similarly, R. v. Faulkner (1988), 9 M.V.R. (2d) 137

(B.C.C.A.), where it was held that while the arrest of an accused pursuant to a policy to arrest all suspected impaired drivers would probably be arbitrary conduct, that was not the case here where it was clear that the arrest was made for the accused's own safety. Also see R. v. Scott (1990), 24 M.V.R. (2d) 204 (B.C.C.A.) and the Note by R. Libman at 24 M.V.R. (2d) 211.

Also see R. v. Keeling (1988), 10 M.V.R. (2d) 57 (B.C.C.A.), where the accused was arrested only after he had been detained as a consequence of the breathalyzer demand. In those circumstances, the imposition of the arrest, even if pursuant to the police officer's policy that he arrests all impaired drivers, was inconsequential. At all times, the accused was lawfully detained for a legitimate reason. To a similar effect is: R. v. Sieben (1989), 51 C.C.C. (3d) 343, 73 C.R. (3d) 33, [1990] 2 W.W.R. 97 (C.A.).

It was held in R. v. Fosseneuve (1995), 101 C.C.C. (3d) 61, 43 C.R. (4th) 260, 104 Man. R. (2d) 272 (Q.B.), that subsec. (2)(d) of this section is invalid to the extent that it permits an arrest without warrant for the offences mentioned therein, solely on the ground of the "public interest". However, it is valid to the extent that it permits the arrest in a public interest, limited to the needs to establish identity, secure evidence, and prevent the continuation or repetition of the offence or the commission of another offence.

Subsec. (3) – Subsection (3) must be construed to mean that no reliance can be placed on a peace officer's failure to comply with subsec. (2) to support the argument that he was not acting in the execution of his duty in making an arrest: R. v. Adams (1972), 21 C.R.N.S. 257, [1973] 1 W.W.R. 371 (Sask.C.A.). Folld R. v. McKibbin (1973), 12 C.C.C. (2d) 66 (B.C.C.A.); Re Bunn and The Queen (1986), 29 C.C.C. (3d) 133 (Man. Q.B.).

This subsection had no application to charges of assault of police under s. 270 where there was no allegation of a failure to comply with subsec. (2) but, rather, it was alleged that the officers were not in execution of their duty because, when they attempted to arrest the accused at his home, they were trespassers and the arrest was illegal: R. v. Delong (1989), 47 C.C.C. (3d) 402, 69 C.R. (3d) 147, 31 O.A.C. 339.

ISSUE OF APPEARANCE NOTICE BY PEACE OFFICER.

496. Where, by virtue of subsection 495(2), a peace officer does not arrest a person, he may issue an appearance notice to the person if the offence is

- (a) an indictable offence mentioned in section 553;
- (b) an offence for which the person may be prosecuted by indictment or for which he is punishable on summary conviction; or
- (c) an offence punishable on summary conviction. R.S., c. C-34, s. 451; R.S., c. 2 (2nd Supp.), s. 5.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term "peace officer" is defined in s. 2. The term "appearance notice" is defined in s. 493. An appearance notice may be issued or entered into on a holiday by virtue of s. 20. A warrant may issue under s. 512 where the accused fails to appear for court as required. For discussion of the pre-trial release provisions see the Note on the scheme for pre-trial release under s. 495.

SYNOPSIS

This section authorizes a peace officer to issue an appearance notice where the officer decides not to arrest a person on the basis of subsec. 495(2).

RELEASE FROM CUSTODY BY PEACE OFFICER / Where subsection (1) does not apply / Consequences of non-release.

- 497. (1) Where a peace officer arrests a person without warrant for
- (a) an indictable offence mentioned in section 553,

- (b) an offence for which the person may be prosecuted by indictment or for which he is punishable on summary conviction, or
  - (c) an offence punishable on summary conviction,
- he shall, as soon as practicable,
- (d) release the person from custody with the intention of compelling his appearance by way of summons, or
  - (e) issue an appearance notice to the person and thereupon release him,
- unless
- (f) he believes on reasonable grounds that it is necessary in the public interest, having regard to all the circumstances including the need to
    - (i) establish the identity of the person,
    - (ii) secure or preserve evidence of or relating to the offence, or
    - (iii) prevent the continuation or repetition of the offence or the commission of another offence,that the person be detained in custody or that the matter of his release from custody be dealt with under another provision of this Part, or
  - (g) he believes on reasonable grounds that, if the person is released by him from custody, the person will fail to attend in court in order to be dealt with according to law.

(2) Subsection (1) does not apply in respect of a person who has been arrested without warrant by a peace officer for an offence described in subsection 503(3).

(3) A peace officer who has arrested a person without warrant for an offence described in subsection (1) and who does not release the person from custody as soon as practicable in the manner described in paragraph (d) or (e) of that subsection shall be deemed to be acting lawfully and in the execution of his duty for the purposes of

- (a) any proceedings under this or any other Act of Parliament; and
- (b) any other proceedings, unless in any such proceedings it is alleged and established by the person making the allegation that the peace officer did not comply with the requirements of subsection (1). R.S., c. C-34, s. 452; R.S., c. 2 (2nd Supp.), s. 5.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term “peace officer” is defined in s. 2. The terms “appearance notice” and “summons” are defined in s. 493. The contents of the appearance notice are set out in s. 501. An appearance notice may be issued or entered into on a holiday by virtue of s. 20. A warrant may issue under s. 512 where the accused fails to appear for court as required. For discussion of the pre-trial release provisions see the Note on the scheme for pre-trial release under s. 495.

SYNOPSIS

This section sets out the powers of a peace officer to release a person who has been arrested without a warrant.

Subsection (1) states that where a peace officer arrests a person without a warrant for an offence set out in subsec. 495(2), the officer must, subject to the provisions described in subsec. (2)(f) and (g), as soon as practicable, release the person from custody with the intention of issuing a summons. The peace officer may also decide to issue an appearance notice to the person and then release him.

Subsection (2) makes it clear that the requirements of subsec. (1) do not apply where a person has been arrested without warrant by a peace officer for an indictable offence alleged to have been committed in Canada but in a different province.

Subsection (3) states that a peace officer is deemed to be acting lawfully and in the execution of his duties even if he does not comply with subsec. (1)(d) and (e) for the purposes set out in subsec. 3(a) and (b), unless it is established that the provisions of subsec. (1) were not complied with.

ANNOTATIONS

The continued detention of a motorist, arrested for impaired driving, until he has sobered up is authorized by para. (1)(f) of this section and does not violate the guarantee against arbitrary detention in s. 9 of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms: R. v. Williamson (1986), 25 C.C.C. (3d) 139, 40 M.V.R. 15 (Alta. Q.B.). Similarly: R. v. Pashovitz (1987), 59 C.R. (3d) 396, 59 Sask. R. 165 (C.A.).

Where the alleged breach of the Charter does not give rise to a defence, did not lead to the obtaining of evidence and could not have had a bearing on the sentence, then it ought not to be the subject of inquiry at trial, as in this case where the alleged breach of s. 9 resulted from the continued detention of the motorist several hours after it was safe for him to go: R. v. Cutforth, (1987), 40 C.C.C. (3d) 253, 61 C.R. (3d) 187, [1988] 1 W.W.R. 274 (Alta. C.A.). However, compare R. v. Davidson (1988), 46 C.C.C. (3d) 403, 88 N.S.R. (2d) 271 (C.A.).

RELEASE FROM CUSTODY BY OFFICER IN CHARGE / Where subsection (1) does not apply / Consequences of non-release.

498. (1) Where a person who has been arrested without warrant by a peace officer is taken into custody, or where a person who has been arrested without warrant and delivered to a peace officer under subsection 494(3) is detained in custody under subsection 503(1) for

- (a) an indictable offence mentioned in section 553,
- (b) an offence for which the person may be prosecuted by indictment or for which he is punishable on summary conviction,
- (c) an offence punishable on summary conviction, or
- (d) any other offence that is punishable by imprisonment for five years or less, and has not been taken before a justice or released from custody under any other provision of this Part, the officer in charge shall, as soon as practicable,
- (e) release the person with the intention of compelling his appearance by way of summons,
- (f) release the person on his giving his promise to appear,
- (g) release the person on his entering into a recognizance before the officer in charge without sureties in such amount not exceeding five hundred dollars as the officer in charge directs, but without deposit of money or other valuable security, or
- (h) if the person is not ordinarily resident in the province in which the person is in custody or does not ordinarily reside within two hundred kilometres of the place in which he is in custody, release the person on his entering into a recognizance before the officer in charge without sureties in such amount not exceeding five hundred dollars as the officer in charge directs and, if the officer in charge so directs, on his depositing with the officer in charge such sum of money or other valuable security not exceeding in amount or value five hundred dollars, as the officer in charge directs,

unless

- (i) he believes on reasonable grounds that it is necessary in the public interest, having regard to all the circumstances including the need to
  - (i) establish the identity of the person,
  - (ii) secure or preserve evidence of or relating to the offence, or
  - (iii) prevent the continuation or repetition of the offence or the commission of another offence, that the person be detained in custody or that the matter of his release from custody be dealt with under another provision of this Part, or

(j) he believes on reasonable grounds that, if the person is released by him from custody, the person will fail to attend in court in order to be dealt with according to law.

(2) Subsection (1) does not apply in respect of a person who has been arrested without warrant by a peace officer for an offence described in subsection 503(3).

(3) An officer in charge who has the custody of a person taken into or detained in custody for an offence described in subsection (1) and who does not release the person from custody as soon as practicable in the manner described in paragraph (e), (f), (g) or (h) of that subsection shall be deemed to be acting lawfully and in the execution of his duty for the purposes of

(a) any proceedings under this or any other Act of Parliament; or

(b) any other proceedings, unless in any such proceedings it is alleged and established by the person making the allegation that the officer in charge did not comply with the requirements of subsection (1). R.S., c. C-34, s. 453; R.S., c. 2 (2nd Supp.), s. 5; R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 186.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms “officer in charge”, “recognizance”, “summons” and “promise to appear” are defined in s. 493. The terms “peace officer”, “valuable security” and “justice” are defined in s. 2. Money or other valuable security deposited with the officer in charge is to be delivered to a justice under s. 500. The contents of the promise to appear and recognizance are set out in s. 501. A promise to appear or recognizance may be issued, given or entered into on a holiday by virtue of s. 20. A warrant may issue under s. 512 where the accused fails to appear for court as required. For discussion of the pre-trial release provisions see the Note on the scheme for pre-trial release under s. 495.

SYNOPSIS

This section describes the powers of an officer in charge to effect the release of a person who has been arrested without warrant by a peace officer and who has been taken into custody or detained in custody under s. 503(1) for an offence described in paras. (a), (b), (c) or (d) of subsec. (1).

Subsection (1) states that if such a person has not been taken before a justice, or released from custody under any other provision in Part XVI, the officer in charge must, subject to certain specified exceptions, release that person as soon as practicable. Paragraphs (e), (f), (g) and (h) specify the forms of release that the officer in charge may use. Paragraphs (i) and (j) describe the circumstances in which the officer in charge may decide not to release the person.

Subsection (2) makes it clear that subsec. (1) does not apply where a person has been arrested without a warrant by a peace officer for an indictable offence alleged to have been committed in a different province.

Subsection (3) provides that an officer in charge is deemed to be acting lawfully and in the execution of his duties even if he does not release the person as soon as practicable and in accordance with paras. (e), (f), (g) or (h) for the purposes described in subsec. (3)(a) or (b), unless it is established that the officer did not comply with the requirements of subsec. (1).

RELEASE FROM CUSTODY BY OFFICER IN CHARGE WHERE ARREST MADE WITH WARRANT / Additional conditions / Application to justice.

499. (1) Where a person who has been arrested with a warrant by a peace officer is taken into custody for an offence other than one mentioned in section 522, the officer in charge may, if the warrant has been endorsed by a justice under subsection 507(6),

(a) release the person on the person's giving a promise to appear;

(b) release the person on the person's entering into a recognizance before the officer in charge without sureties in the amount not exceeding five hundred dollars that the officer in charge directs, but without deposit of money or other valuable security; or

- (c) if the person is not ordinarily resident in the province in which the person is in custody or does not ordinarily reside within two hundred kilometres of the place in which the person is in custody, release the person on the person's entering into a recognizance before the officer in charge without sureties in the amount not exceeding five hundred dollars that the officer in charge directs and, if the officer in charge so directs, on depositing with the officer in charge such sum of money or other valuable security not exceeding in amount or value five hundred dollars, as the officer in charge directs.

(2) In addition to the conditions for release set out in paragraphs (1)(a), (b) and (c), the officer in charge may also require the person to enter into an undertaking in Form 11.1 in which the person, in order to be released, undertakes to do one or more of the following things:

- (a) to remain within a territorial jurisdiction specified in the undertaking;
- (b) to notify a peace officer or another person mentioned in the undertaking of any change in his or her address, employment or occupation;
- (c) to abstain from communicating with any witness or other person mentioned in the undertaking, or from going to a place mentioned in the undertaking, except in accordance with the conditions specified in the undertaking; and
- (d) to deposit the person's passport with the peace officer or other person mentioned in the undertaking.

Editor's Note: While, by 1994, c. 44, s. 40, the above provision is limited to the imposition of four conditions, there are five conditions in Form 11.1. The first condition has not been provided for, but we understand that this will be corrected by future legislation.

(3) A person who has entered into an undertaking under subsection (2) may, at any time before or at his or her appearance pursuant to a promise to appear or recognizance, apply to a justice for an order under subsection 515(1) to replace his or her undertaking, and section 515 applies, with such modifications as the circumstances require, to such a person. R.S., c. 2 (2nd Supp.), s. 5; R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 186; 1994, c. 44, s. 40.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms "officer in charge", "recognizance" and "promise to appear" are defined in s. 493. The terms "valuable security", "peace officer" and "justice" are defined in s. 2. Money or other valuable security deposited with the officer in charge is to be delivered to a justice under s. 500. The contents of the promise to appear and recognizance are set out in s. 501. A warrant, summons, appearance notice, promise to appear, undertaking or recognizance may be issued, executed, given or entered into on a holiday by virtue of s. 20. A warrant may issue under s. 512 where the accused fails to appear for court as required. For discussion of the pre-trial release provisions see the Note on the scheme for pre-trial release under s. 495.

SYNOPSIS

This section describes the powers of an officer in charge to release a person from custody when that person has been arrested with a warrant.

The provisions of this section apply only if the person arrested is in custody for: (a) an offence within the absolute jurisdiction of a provincial court judge; (b) a Crown election offence; (c) a summary conviction offence; or (d) any other indictable offence with a maximum term of five years' imprisonment.

The officer in charge may order the release of such a person on a promise to appear or a recognizance in accordance with the terms set out in paras. (e), (f) and (g) of the section.

MONEY OR OTHER VALUABLE SECURITY TO BE DEPOSITED WITH JUSTICE.

500. Where a person has, pursuant to paragraph 498(1)(h) or paragraph 499(g), deposited any sum of money or other valuable security with the officer in charge, the officer in charge shall, forthwith after the deposit thereof, cause the money or valuable security to be delivered to a justice for deposit with the justice. R.S., c. 2 (2nd Supp.), s. 5.

Editor's Note: We understand that s. 500 will be amended by future legislation by replacing the reference to para. 499 (g) with a reference to para. 499(1)(c).

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term "officer in charge" is defined in s. 493. The terms "valuable security", "peace officer" and "justice" are defined in s. 2.

SYNOPSIS

This section requires the officer in charge who has received a deposit of money or valuable security from a person pursuant to s. 498(1)(h) to ensure that such money or security is delivered forthwith to a justice for deposit.

CONTENTS OF APPEARANCE NOTICE, PROMISE TO APPEAR AND

RECOGNIZANCE / Idem / Attendance for purposes of Identification of Criminals Act / Signature of accused / Proof of issue of appearance notice.

501. (1) An appearance notice issued by a peace officer or a promise to appear given to, or a recognizance entered into before, an officer in charge or another peace officer shall

- (a) set out the name of the accused;
- (b) set out the substance of the offence that the accused is alleged to have committed; and
- (c) require the accused to attend court at a time and place to be stated therein and to attend thereafter as required by the court in order to be dealt with according to law.

(2) An appearance notice issued by a peace officer or a promise to appear given to, or a recognizance entered into before, an officer in charge or another peace officer shall set out the text of subsections 145(5) and (6) and section 502.

(3) An appearance notice issued by a peace officer or a promise to appear given to, or a recognizance entered into before, an officer in charge or another peace officer may, where the accused is alleged to have committed an indictable offence, require the accused to appear at a time and place stated in it for the purposes of the Identification of Criminals Act, and a person so appearing is deemed, for the purposes only of that Act, to be in lawful custody charged with an indictable offence.

NOTE: Subsec. (3) re-enacted by 1992, c. 47, s. 69 (to come into force by order of the Governor in Council), however, 1992, c. 47, s. 69 itself replaced by 1994, c. 44, s. 94 so that the re-enactment of subsec. (3), which is not yet in force and therefor printed in lightface italics, reads as follows:

(3) An appearance notice issued by a peace officer or a promise to appear given to, or a recognizance entered into before, an officer in charge or another peace officer may require the accused to appear at a time and place stated in it for the purposes of the Identification of Criminals Act, where the accused is alleged to have committed an indictable offence and, in the case of an offence designated as a contravention under the Contraventions Act, the Attorney General of Canada has not elected under section 50 of that Act that the proceeding be dealt with and disposed of as if it had been commenced by filing a ticket.

(4) An accused shall be requested to sign in duplicate his appearance notice, promise to appear or recognizance and, whether or not he complies with that request, one of the duplicates shall be given to the accused, but if the accused fails or refuses to sign, the lack of his signature does not invalidate the appearance notice, promise to appear or recognizance, as the case may be.

(5) The issue of an appearance notice by any peace officer may be proved by the oral evidence, given under oath, of the officer who issued it or by the officer's affidavit made before a justice or other person authorized to administer oaths or to take affidavits. R.S., c. 2 (2nd Supp.), s. 5; R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 76; 1994, c. 44, s. 41.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms "officer in charge", "appearance notice", "recognizance" and "promise to appear" are defined in s. 493. The terms "valuable security", "peace officer" and "justice" are defined in s. 2. Where the accused does not attend as required for the purpose of the Identification of Criminals Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. I-1, then a justice may issue a warrant for the accused's arrest pursuant to s. 502. A warrant may issue under s. 512 where the accused fails to appear for court as required. For discussion of the pre-trial release provisions see the Note on the scheme for pre-trial release under s. 495.

SYNOPSIS

This section describes the required contents of an appearance notice, a promise to appear and a recognizance and deals with several related issues.

Subsection (1) states that an appearance notice, a promise to appear or a recognizance must set out the name of the accused, describe the substance of the offence alleged to have been committed, and require that the accused attend court at a time and place stated therein and attend thereafter as required by the court. These documents must also set out the text of ss. 145(5) and (6) and 502.

Subsection (3) provides that a promise to appear, and appearance notice or a recognizance may also require that the accused appear at the stated time and place for the purposes of the Identification of Criminals Act. This further requirement can be imposed only where the accused is alleged to have committed an indictable offence.

Subsection (4) requires that the accused be requested to sign in duplicate the appearance notice, the promise to appear or the recognizance. Even if the accused does not comply with this request, one of the duplicate copies must be given to him. If the accused fails, or refuses to sign, the lack of a signature does not invalidate the appearance notice, the promise to appear or the recognizance.

Subsection (5) allows the issuance of an appearance notice to be proved by the sworn oral evidence of the peace officer who issued it or by that officer's duly authorized, sworn affidavit.

ANNOTATIONS

Subsec. (1)(b) – An appearance notice that merely sets out for the substance of the offence a section and paragraph number without even identifying the statute does not meet the test of sufficiency: Re Regina and Powers (1973), 10 C.C.C. (2d) 395, 21 C.R.N.S. 116 (N.B.Q.B.).

Subsec. (1)(c) – The officer in charge has no jurisdiction to designate another territorial jurisdiction other than the county in which the accused was arrested as the place he is to appear before a justice to answer to the charge: R. v. Simons (1976), 30 C.C.C. (2d) 162, 34 C.R.N.S. 273 (Ont. C.A.).

To attend Court within the meaning of this paragraph involves making one's presence known to the presiding justice, and not simply being physically present in the courtroom: Re Anderson and The Queen (1983), 9 C.C.C. (3d) 539, 37 C.R. (3d) 67 (Alta. C.A.).

Subsec. (2) – The omission in a promise to appear to set out the complete text of s. 145(5) does not affect the Court’s jurisdiction to proceed with the trial where the accused appears, whether under protest or not: R. v. Gougeon; R. v. Haesler; R. v. Gray (1980), 55 C.C.C. (2d) 218 (Ont. C.A.), leave to appeal to S.C.C. refused 35 N.R. 83n.

Subsec. (3) – The discretionary power to require an accused to attend for fingerprinting does not violate the principles of fundamental justice as guaranteed by s. 7 of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms: R. v. Beare; R. v. Higgins (1988), 45 C.C.C. (3d) 57, 66 C.R. (3d) 97, [1988] 2 S.C.R. 387.

A Crown option offence is deemed to be indictable until Crown counsel elects otherwise and thus an accused can be compelled to attend for fingerprinting in relation to such offence as provided for in the Identification of Criminals Act R.S.C. 1985, c. I-1. Moreover, it was open to the Crown to delay electing the mode of proceeding on a Crown option offence until the accused had complied with a condition in the appearance notice or promise to appear to attend for fingerprinting: Re Abarca and The Queen (1980), 57 C.C.C. (2d) 410 (Ont. C.A.); R. v. Lavoie (1990), 58 C.C.C. (3d) 246 (Que. S.C.).

FAILURE TO APPEAR.

502. Where an accused who is required by an appearance notice or promise to appear or by a recognizance entered into before an officer in charge to appear at a time and place stated therein for the purposes of the Identification of Criminals Act does not appear at that time and place, a justice may, where the appearance notice, promise to appear or recognizance has been confirmed by a justice under section 508, issue a warrant for the arrest of the accused for the offence with which he is charged. R.S., c. 2 (2nd Supp.), s. 5.

NOTE: Section 502 re-enacted by 1992, c. 47, s. 70 (to come into force by order of the Governor in Council). The unproclaimed text, printed in lightface italics, reads as follows:

502. Where an accused who is required by an appearance notice or promise to appear or by a recognizance entered into before an officer in charge to appear at a time and place stated in it for the purposes of the Identification of Criminals Act does not appear at that time and place and, in the case of an offence designated as a contravention under the Contraventions Act, the Attorney General of Canada has not elected under section 50 of that Act that the proceeding be dealt with and disposed of as if it had been commenced by filing a ticket, a justice may, where the appearance notice, promise to appear or recognizance has been confirmed by a justice under section 508, issue a warrant for the arrest of the accused for the offence with which the accused is charged.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms “officer in charge”, “appearance notice”, “recognizance” and “promise to appear” are defined in s. 493. The term “justice” is defined in s. 2. A warrant may issue under s. 512 where the accused fails to appear for court as required.

SYNOPSIS

This section describes the consequences of failing to appear for the purposes of the Identification of Criminals Act as required by a promise to appear, an appearance notice or a recognizance. Should the accused not appear at the time and place stipulated, a justice may issue a warrant for the arrest of the accused for the charged offence. The justice may only issue a warrant if the appearance notice, the promise to appear or the recognizance has been confirmed by a justice under s. 508.

ANNOTATIONS

Once the Court has become functus with respect to the original charge because it has been disposed of completely, the Justice has no power to issue a warrant under this section for failure of the accused to attend for fingerprinting as required by the appearance notice: Re McHardy and The Queen (1980), 53 C.C.C. (2d) 91, [1980] 5 W.W.R. 1 (Sask. Q.B.).

Appearance of Accused Before Justice

TAKING BEFORE JUSTICE / Conditional release / Undertaking / Application to justice / Remand in custody for return to province where offence alleged to have been committed / Interim release / Release of person about to commit indictable offence / Consequences of non-release.

503. (1) A peace officer who arrests a person with or without warrant or to whom a person is delivered under subsection 494(3) shall cause the person to be detained in custody and, in accordance with the following provisions, to be taken before a justice to be dealt with according to law, namely,

- (a) where a justice is available within a period of twenty-four hours after the person has been arrested by or delivered to the peace officer, the person shall be taken before a justice without unreasonable delay and in any event within that period, and
- (b) where a justice is not available within a period of twenty-four hours after the person has been arrested by or delivered to the peace officer, the person shall be taken before a justice as soon as possible, unless, at any time before the expiration of the time prescribed in paragraph (a) or (b) for taking the person before a justice,

- (c) the peace officer or officer in charge releases the person under any other provision of this Part, or
- (d) the peace officer or officer in charge is satisfied that the person should be released from custody, whether unconditionally under subsection (4) or otherwise conditionally or unconditionally, and so releases him.

(2) Where a peace officer or an officer in charge is satisfied that a person described in subsection (1) should be released from custody conditionally, the officer may, unless the person is detained in custody for an offence mentioned in section 522, release that person on the person's giving a promise to appear or entering into a recognizance in accordance with paragraphs 498(1)(f) to (h) and subsection (2.1).

(2.1) In addition to the conditions referred to in subsection (2), the peace officer or officer in charge may, in order to release the person, require the person to enter into an undertaking in Form 11.1 in which the person undertakes to do one or more of the following things:

- (a) to remain within a territorial jurisdiction specified in the undertaking;
- (b) to notify the peace officer or another person mentioned in the undertaking of any change in his or her address, employment or occupation;
- (c) to abstain from communicating with any witness or other person mentioned in the undertaking, or from going to a place mentioned in the undertaking, except in accordance with the conditions specified in the undertaking; or
- (d) to deposit the person's passport with the peace officer or other person mentioned in the undertaking.

Editor's Note: While, by 1994, c. 44, s. 42, the above provision is limited to the imposition of four conditions, there are five conditions in Form 11.1. The first condition has not been provided for, but we understand that this will be corrected by future legislation.

(2.2) A person who has entered into an undertaking under subsection (2.1) may, at any time before or at his or her appearance pursuant to a promise to appear or recognizance, apply to a justice for an order under subsection 515(1) to replace his or her undertaking, and section 515 applies, with such modifications as the circumstances require, to such a person.

(3) Where a person has been arrested without warrant for an indictable offence alleged to have been committed in Canada outside the province in which he was arrested, he shall, within the time prescribed in paragraph (1)(a) or (b), be taken before a justice within whose jurisdiction he was arrested and the justice,

(a) if he is not satisfied that there are reasonable grounds to believe that the person arrested is the person alleged to have committed the offence, shall release him; or

(b) if he is satisfied that there are reasonable and probable grounds to believe that the person arrested is the person alleged to have committed the offence, may remand him to the custody of a peace officer to await execution of a warrant for his arrest in accordance with section 528, but if no warrant for his arrest is so executed within a period of six days after the time he is remanded to such custody, the person in whose custody he then is shall release him.

(3.1) Notwithstanding paragraph (3)(b), a justice may, with the consent of the prosecutor, order that the person referred to in subsection (3), pending the execution of a warrant for the arrest of that person, be released

(a) unconditionally; or

(b) on any of the following terms to which the prosecutor consents, namely,

(i) giving an undertaking, or

(ii) entering into a recognizance described in any of paragraphs 515(2)(a) to (e) with such conditions described in subsection 515(4) as the justice considers desirable and to which the prosecutor consents.

(4) A peace officer or an officer in charge having the custody of a person who has been arrested without warrant as a person about to commit an indictable offence shall release that person unconditionally as soon as practicable after he is satisfied that the continued detention of that person in custody is no longer necessary in order to prevent the commission by him of an indictable offence.

(5) Notwithstanding subsection (4), a peace officer or an officer in charge having the custody of a person referred to in that subsection who does not release the person before the expiration of the time prescribed in paragraph (1)(a) or (b) for taking the person before the justice shall be deemed to be acting lawfully and in the execution of his duty for the purposes of

(a) any proceedings under this or any other Act of Parliament; or

(b) any other proceedings, unless in such proceedings it is alleged and established by the person making the allegation that the peace officer or officer in charge did not comply with the requirements of subsection (4). R.S., c. C-34, s. 454; R.S., c. 2 (2nd Supp.), s. 5; 1974-75-76, c. 93, s. 46; R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 77; 1994, c. 44, s. 42.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms “officer in charge”, “undertaking” and “recognizance” are defined in s. 493. The terms “peace officer”, “prosecutor” and “justice” are defined in s. 2. For discussion of the pre-trial release provisions see the Note on the scheme for pre-trial release under s. 495.

SYNOPSIS

This section describes the requirements placed on a peace officer to ensure that a person arrested with or without a warrant be brought before a justice to be dealt with according to law.

Subsection (1) states that where a justice is available within 24 hours of a person's arrest or delivery to a peace officer, that person shall be taken before the justice without unreasonable delay and, in any event, within that period. If a justice is not available within a period of 24 hours, the person shall be taken before a justice as soon as possible. These requirements apply unless, prior to the expiration of time periods described above, the peace officer or officer in charge releases the person under any other provision in Part XVI, under s. 503(4), or otherwise, conditionally or unconditionally.

Subsection (2) provides that where a peace officer or officer in charge is satisfied that a person described in subsec. (1) should be released upon conditions, that officer may make such a release in accordance with s. 498(1)(f) to (h). Subsection (2) may not be resorted to if the person is being held in custody pursuant to s. 522.

Subsection (3) deals with the situation in which a person has been arrested, without a warrant, for an indictable offence alleged to have been committed outside the province in which he has been apprehended. Such a person must be brought before a justice within the time periods described in subsec. (1)(a) or (b) above and the justice shall release him if there are no reasonable grounds to believe that that person committed the offence. If the justice is satisfied that there are reasonable grounds to believe that the arrested person is the person alleged to have committed the offence, the justice may remand the person in the custody of the peace officer to await the execution of an arrest warrant pursuant to s. 528. If no warrant is executed within six days of this remand, the accused person must be released.

Subsection (3.1) states that a justice may order the release of a person referred to in subsec. (3), with the consent of the prosecutor, pending the execution of the arrest warrant. Such a release may be unconditional or according to the terms set out in subsec. (3.1).

Subsection (4) states that a peace officer or officer in charge having custody of a person who has been arrested without a warrant as a person about to commit an indictable offence shall release that person unconditionally as soon as practicable after the officer is satisfied that the continued detention of that person is no longer necessary to prevent the commission of an indictable offence.

Subsection (5) makes it clear that a peace officer who has custody of a person referred to in subsec. (4) and who does not release that person within the time limits prescribed by subsec. (1)(a) and (b), is deemed to be acting lawfully and in the execution of his/her duty for the purposes specified in subsec. 5(a) and (b) unless it is established that the officer did not comply with the requirements of subsec. (4).

ANNOTATIONS

An 18-hour delay, following the arrest of the accused before he was taken before a justice, so that a line-up could be arranged, did not infringe this section nor constitute a violation of s. 9 of the Charter: R. v. Storrey (1990), 53 C.C.C. (3d) 316, [1990] 1 S.C.R. 241, 75 C.R. (3d) 1 (7:0).

The breach of this section resulting in the accused's detention for 36 hours before being brought before a justice constituted a violation of s. 9 of the Charter of Rights: R. v. Charles (1987), 36 C.C.C. (3d) 286, 59 C.R. (3d) 94 (Sask. C.A.). See, however, R. v. Tam (1995), 100 C.C.C. (3d) 196, 100 W.A.C. 40 (B.C.C.A.) in which a delay of over 24 hours rendered the detention "unlawful" contrary to this section but not "arbitrary" within the meaning of s. 9 of the Charter.

An accused arrested on the strength of Telex information of a warrant outstanding elsewhere in the province must be brought before a Justice within twenty-four hours. The Court which issued the warrant does not have exclusive jurisdiction to deal with the matter of the accused's release. If the Crown because of a lack of information is unable to proceed with the show cause hearing at that time the proper course is to apply for an adjournment for three days under s. 515 during which time the Crown can either transport the accused to the locale where the warrant was issued or obtain the necessary information: R. v. Ragan (1974), 21 C.C.C. (2d) 115, [1975] 2 W.W.R. 284 (B.C. Prov. Ct.).

The provisions of subsec. (3) are mandatory and require that the person arrested be personally brought before the justice for the identity hearing. On the hearing the onus is on the Crown. In calculating the six-day period in para. (b) neither the remand date nor the release date should be excluded. The remand order under para. (b) should provide for the accused's release unless a warrant is executed within that six-day period: Re Marshall and The Queen (1984), 13 C.C.C. (3d) 73 (Ont. H.C.J.).

Information, Summons and Warrant

IN WHAT CASES JUSTICE MAY RECEIVE INFORMATION.

504. Any one who, on reasonable grounds, believes that a person has committed an indictable offence may lay an information in writing and under oath before a justice, and the justice shall receive the information, where it is alleged

- (a) that the person has committed, anywhere, an indictable offence that may be tried in the province in which the justice resides, and that the person
  - (i) is or is believed to be, or
  - (ii) resides or is believed to reside, within the territorial jurisdiction of the justice;
- (b) that the person, wherever he may be, has committed an indictable offence within the territorial jurisdiction of the justice;
- (c) that the person has, anywhere, unlawfully received property that was unlawfully obtained within the territorial jurisdiction of the justice; or
- (d) that the person has in his possession stolen property within the territorial jurisdiction of the justice. R.S., c. C-34, s. 455; R.S., c. 2 (2nd Supp.), s. 5.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms "justice", "property" and "steal" are defined in s. 2. Indictable offence includes a hybrid offence by virtue of s. 34(1)(a) of the Interpretation Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. I-21. The determination as to whether process should issue is made in accordance with s. 507. Under s. 506 an information may be laid in Form 2. For discussion of the pre-trial release provisions see the Note on the scheme for pre-trial release under s. 495.

SYNOPSIS

This section describes the process by which any person may lay an information before a justice that another person has committed an indictable offence.

The information must be in writing and under oath. The justice must receive the information if it contains any of the allegations set out in paras. (a) to (d).

ANNOTATIONS

Constitutional considerations – This provision is intra vires Parliament, and provincial provisions such as those contained in the Youth Protection Act, 1977 (Que.), c. 20, which attempt to prevent anyone from laying an information unless the person has consent of a government official are inoperative: A.-G. Que. et al. v. Lechasseur et al. (1981), 63 C.C.C. (2d) 301, 128 D.L.R. (3d) 739 (S.C.C.) (9:0).

Duty of justice – The act of receiving an information is ministerial rather than judicial: R. v. Jean Talon Fashion Center Inc. (1975), 22 C.C.C. (2d) 223, 56 D.L.R. (3d) 296 (Que. Q.B.).

When information laid – In R. v. Southwick, ex p. Gilbert Steel Ltd., [1968] 1 C.C.C.

356, 2 C.R.N.S. 46 (Ont. C.A.) it was held that on the swearing of the written complaint the information is "laid" and becomes the commencement of criminal proceedings.

Separate informations outstanding – It does not affect the validity of either information to have two separate informations charging the same offence outstanding at the same time: R. v. Policha, ex p. Hrischuk, [1970] 5 C.C.C. 165, 11 C.R.N.S. 99 sub nom. Hrischuk v. Clark and Policha. (Sask. Q.B.).

Defects in jurat [Also see notes under s. 789] – The cases are divided as to the effect of the failure to indicate the date in the jurat upon which the information may be sworn. In Re Regina and Village of Bobcaygeon (1974), 17 C.C.C. (2d) 236 (Ont. C.A.), the court left open whether such an omission was fatal to the validity of the information, but doubted whether the trial court's power to amend an information could extend to inserting the date in the jurat. The court upheld the refusal to issue mandamus in that case to require the judge to continue with the trial since by reason of the absence of the date when the information was sworn it did not disclose that it was sworn within the applicable limitation period. The defendant and the trial judge were entitled to know by perusing the information the components of the offence, the time and place of its commission and that the informant had laid the information within the prescribed time. The information, which failed to convey to them this information, was a nullity.

However, in R. v. Government of Saskatchewan (1982), 20 Sask. R. 213 (C.A.), the court refused to follow Re Regina and Village of Bobcaygeon, supra, and held that an information was not a nullity even though, by reason of the failure to complete the jurat, it was not clear whether the information was laid within the limitation period. The court held that whether or not the prosecution was commenced within the limitation period was a matter to be decided by the trial judge upon hearing evidence.

To a similar effect is R. v. Dean (1985), 17 C.C.C. (3d) 410 (Alta. Q.B.), where the validity of the information was upheld although the year that the information was sworn was missing from the jurat. In view of the five-year limitation period, there was no possibility that the information was laid outside the limitation period. Contra: Platt v. The Queen; R. v. Cowan, [1981] 4 W.W.R. 601, 9 Man. R. (2d) 75 (Q.B.).

And in R. v. Akey (1990), 11 W.C.B. (2d) 594 (Ont. Ct. (Gen. Div.)) it was held that the absence from the jurat, of the month in which the information was sworn, did not render the information invalid when it was apparent that the information, charging Crown option offences upon which the Crown elected to proceed by way of summary conviction, must have been sworn within six months of the offence.

Illegibility of justice's signature – The illegibility in the jurat of the signature of the justice of the peace who took the information does not render the information invalid where the identity of the person signing the information appears on the face of the information. Thus, in this case, below the illegible signature were the words "A justice of the peace in and for the Province of Ontario": R. v. Kapoor (1989), 52 C.C.C. (3d) 41 (Ont. H.C.J.).

Other defects – In Zastawny v. The Queen (1970), 10 C.R.N.S. 155, 72 W.W.R. 537 (Sask. Q.B.) an information that failed to state on its face the site of the offence was quashed as not disclosing an offence within the territorial jurisdiction of the Magistrate.

Omission of the informant's name and occupation from the place indicated in Form 2 does not invalidate the information: R. v. Eddy (1982), 69 C.C.C. (2d) 568 (B.C.S.C.).

TIME WITHIN WHICH INFORMATION TO BE LAID IN CERTAIN CASES.

505. Where

- (a) an appearance notice has been issued to an accused under section 496, or
  - (b) an accused has been released from custody under section 497 or 498,
- an information relating to the offence alleged to have been committed by the accused or relating to an included or other offence alleged to have been committed by him shall be laid before a justice as soon as practicable thereafter and in any event before the time stated in the appearance notice, promise to appear or recognizance issued to or given or entered into by the accused for his attendance in court. R.S., c. 2 (2nd Supp.), s. 5.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term “justice” is defined in s. 2. The terms “appearance notice”, “recognizance” and “promise to appear” are defined in s. 493. The determination as to whether process issued by the officer should be confirmed or cancelled is made in accordance with s. 508. Under s. 506 an information may be laid in Form 2. For discussion of the pre-trial release provisions see the Note on the scheme for pre-trial release under s. 495.

SYNOPSIS

This section sets out the time periods within which informations must be laid in specified cases.

The section requires that where an appearance notice has been issued under s. 496 or an accused has been released from custody under ss. 497 or 498, an information shall be laid before a justice as soon as practicable thereafter. The information must be laid, in any event, prior to the first appearance of the accused in court.

ANNOTATIONS

It was held in R. v. Naylor (1978), 42 C.C.C. (2d) 12 (Ont. C.A.) that this section sets out two time-limits both of which are mandatory, (1) that the information be laid as soon as practicable and (2) that it be laid before the time (meaning time of day) of the appearance in Court. However, where there is a failure to comply with these time-limits while no charge of fail to appear under s. 145(5) will lie and the Court has no power to issue a warrant under s. 512(2), if the accused does appear this is sufficient to give the Court jurisdiction. The failure to follow the procedure in this section does not invalidate the information nor result in a loss of jurisdiction over the offence and the accused’s appearance in Court gives the Court jurisdiction over the person. Folld: R. v. Hrankowski (1980), 54 C.C.C. (2d) 174, [1980] 5 W.W.R. 684 (Alta. C.A.), leave to appeal to S.C.C. refused C.C.C. loc. cit., 26 A.R. 268n.

The Court has jurisdiction even if the accused appears under protest to the Court’s jurisdiction: R. v. Gougeon; R. v. Haesler; R. v. Gray (1980), 55 C.C.C. (2d) 218 (Ont. C.A.), leave to appeal to S.C.C. refused 35 N.R. 83n.

Similarly a “conditional appearance” by counsel on the required date gives the Court jurisdiction. The criminal law does not recognize “conditional” appearances: Re Harnish and The Queen (1979), 49 C.C.C. (2d) 190 (N.S.S.C. App. Div.).

The laying of an information after the time stated in the appearance notice is only an administrative failure and while that information does not qualify as an information under this section it will qualify as an information under s. 507 so that the accused’s appearance in Court brings him within the Court’s jurisdiction: Re Regina and Powers (1973), 10 C.C.C. (2d) 395, 21 C.R.N.S. 116 (N.S.Q.B.). Contra: Re Fleming and The Queen (1979), 47 C.C.C. (2d) 406 (B.C.S.C.).

The fact that an appearance notice has been given to the accused does not preclude the officer, because the return date on the notice is wrong, from subsequently invoking the procedure under s. 507 by going before a Justice and laying an information and serving the accused with a summons: R. v. Benteau (1975), 24 C.C.C. (2d) 96 (Ont. H.C.J.).

FORM

506. An information laid under section 504 or 505 may be in Form 2. R.S., c. 2 (2nd Supp.), s. 5.

CROSS-REFERENCES

Note that s. 788(1) requires that Form 2 be used to initiate summary conviction proceedings. Section 841 provides that forms varied to suit the case and forms to the like effect shall be deemed to be good, valid and sufficient in the circumstances for which, respectively, they are provided. Also note s. 841(3) requiring preprinted portions of forms to be printed in both official languages.

ANNOTATIONS

The information may be laid in the name of the complainant alone: R. v. Ostler, ex p. A.-G. B.C., [1966] 1 C.C.C. 249, 52 W.W.R. 483, sub nom. R. v. Harvey and Schmidt and R. v. Gyles, ex p. Mandelbaum, [1969] 3 C.C.C. 119, 5 C.R.N.S. 307 sub nom. Mandelbaum v. Denstedt (Man. C.A.).

JUSTICE TO HEAR INFORMANT AND WITNESSES / Process compulsory / Procedure when witnesses attend / Summons to be issued except in certain cases / No process in blank / Endorsement of warrant by justice / Promise to appear or recognizance deemed to have been confirmed / Issue of summons or warrant.

507. (1) Subject to subsection 523(1.1), a justice who receives an information, other than an information laid before the justice under section 505, shall, except where an accused has already been arrested with or without a warrant,

- (a) hear and consider, ex parte,
  - (i) the allegations of the informant, and
  - (ii) the evidence of witnesses, where he considers it desirable or necessary to do so; and
- (b) where he considers that a case for so doing is made out, issue, in accordance with this section, either a summons or a warrant for the arrest of the accused to compel the accused to attend before him or some other justice for the same territorial division to answer to a charge of an offence.

(2) No justice shall refuse to issue a summons or warrant by reason only that the alleged offence is one for which a person may be arrested without warrant.

(3) A justice who hears the evidence of a witness pursuant to subsection (1) shall

- (a) take the evidence on oath; and
- (b) cause the evidence to be taken in accordance with section 540 in so far as that section is capable of being applied.

(4) Where a justice considers that a case is made out for compelling an accused to attend before him to answer to a charge of an offence, he shall issue a summons to the accused unless the allegations of the informant or the evidence of any witness or witnesses taken in accordance with subsection (3) discloses reasonable grounds to believe that it is necessary in the public interest to issue a warrant for the arrest of the accused.

(5) A justice shall not sign a summons or warrant in blank.

(6) A justice who issues a warrant under this section or section 508 or 512 may, unless the offence is one mentioned in section 522, authorize the release of the accused pursuant to section 499 by making an endorsement on the warrant in Form 29.

(7) Where, pursuant to subsection (6), a justice authorizes the release of an accused pursuant to section 499, a promise to appear given by the accused or a recognizance entered into by the accused pursuant to that section shall be deemed, for the purposes of subsection 145(5), to have been confirmed by a justice under section 508.

(8) Where, on an appeal from or review of any decision or matter of jurisdiction, a new trial or hearing or a continuance or renewal of a trial or hearing is ordered, a justice may issue either a summons or a warrant for the arrest of the accused in order to compel the accused to attend at the new or continued or renewed trial or hearing. R.S., c. 2 (2nd Supp.), s. 5; 1972, c. 13, s. 35; R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 78; 1994, c. 44, s. 43.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term “justice” is defined in s. 2. With respect to oaths and solemn affirmations see ss. 13 to 15 of the Canada Evidence Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. C-5. The terms “summons” and “warrant” are defined in s. 493. The contents of a summons and the means of service are set out in s. 509. The contents of a warrant are set out in ss. 511 and 513. It is executed in accordance with s. 514. A warrant or summons may be issued, executed, given or entered into on a holiday by virtue of s. 20. Where the information is laid under s. 505 then the process issued by the peace officer or officer in charge is confirmed or cancelled in accordance with s. 508. For discussion of the pre-trial release provisions see the Note on the scheme for pre-trial release under s. 495.

Note s. 31(1) of the Interpretation Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. I-21, which provides that where anything is required or authorized to be done by or before, inter alia, a justice of the peace it shall be done by or before one whose jurisdiction or powers extend to the place where the thing is to be done.

Failure to attend court as required or attend for the purposes of the Identification of Criminals Act is an offence under s. 145. As well a warrant may issue under s. 510 for failure to attend for the purposes of the Identification of Criminals Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. I-1, as required in a summons. A warrant may issue under s. 512 where the accused fails to appear for court as required or where a summons cannot be served because the accused is evading service.

SYNOPSIS

This section provides a procedure that must be followed when a justice receives an information other than one under s. 505.

Subsection (1) states that except where an accused has already been arrested, the justice shall hear and consider, ex parte, the allegations of the informant. Where the justice considers it desirable or necessary, he shall also hear the evidence of witnesses. Where the justice considers that a case for so doing has been established, he shall issue a summons or a warrant for the arrest of the accused. A justice may not refuse to issue a summons or a warrant only for the reason that the offence is one which permits arrest without a warrant.

Subsection (3) requires that any evidence heard pursuant to subsec. (1) must be taken on oath and in accordance with s. 540 to the extent that this is possible.

Subsection (4) provides that the justice may issue a summons to compel the attendance of the accused to answer a charge of an offence if a case for doing so is made out. The justice may issue a warrant for the arrest of the accused if there are reasonable grounds to believe that this is necessary in the public interest. The justice may not sign a warrant or a summons in blank.

Subsection (6) empowers the justice who issues a warrant under this section, s. 508 or 512, where the offence is one described in paras. (a) to (d), to authorize the release of the accused pursuant to s. 499 by endorsing the warrant. Where an accused is released under subsec. (6), the promise to appear or recognizance shall be deemed to have been confirmed under s. 508 for the purposes of s. 145(5).

Subsection (8) states that a justice may issue a summons or a warrant to compel the attendance of the accused where a new trial or hearing is ordered on appeal or review or a continuance of a trial is ordered.

ANNOTATIONS

Minimum requirements of information – Although the information may not comply with the requirements as to sufficiency in s. 581(3) such a defect does not render the information null and void ab initio and incapable of founding jurisdiction to compel the appearance of the accused before the Court to answer the allegation that he committed an indictable offence: Re Bahinipaty and The Queen (1983), 5 C.C.C. (3d) 439, 23 Sask. R. 36 (C.A.).

To be valid, an information cannot be laid against an unknown person but must be sworn against a named person or against a person who can be sufficiently described so as to be identifiable. As a pre-condition to the exercise of the power to hear and consider the evidence of witnesses under this section, the information must comply with ss. 504 and 581 and the name or sufficient description of the accused is an essential part of an information. The justice of the peace has no power to embark on an inquiry on an information which does not conform with the provisions of s. 581 in order to obtain sufficient information to take a proper information: Re Buchbinder and The Queen (1985), 20 C.C.C. (3d) 481, 47 C.R. (3d) 135 (Ont. C.A.).

Duty to hold inquiry [subsec. (1)(a)] – The justice's failure to hold an inquiry as required by this section prior to issuing the summons does not affect the jurisdiction of the provincial court judge: R. v. Pottle (1979), 49 C.C.C. (2d) 113 (Nfld. C.A.); R. v. Bachman, [1979] 6 W.W.R. 468 (B.C.C.A.). It would seem that the law in Ontario is to the contrary: R. v. Gougeon; R. v. Haesler; R. v. Gray (1980), 55 C.C.C. (2d) 218 (Ont. C.A.), leave to appeal to S.C.C. refused 35 N.R. 83n.

Procedure in holding inquiry [subsec. (3)] – The inquiry under this section is to be held in camera and the accused has no right to attend and no right to notice. On the hearing Crown counsel may attend as counsel for the informant: R. v. Whitmore (1987), 41 C.C.C. (3d) 555 (Ont. H.C.J.), affd 51 C.C.C. (3d) 294 (Ont. C.A.), as to propriety of holding an ex parte hearing, and the attendance of Crown counsel.

While the requirement that the hearing be held in camera is an infringement on the guarantee to freedom of expression under s. 2(b) of the Charter, it represents a reasonable limit: Southam Inc. v. Coulter (1990), 60 C.C.C. (3d) 267, 75 O.R. (3d) 1, 40 O.A.C. 341 (C.A.).

A justice of the peace, although appointed by the Attorney General and as court administrator required to maintain a good working relationship with other components of the justice system, had the necessary independence and impartiality to carry out her duties under this section. Of importance in this respect is the oath that she must take to truly and faithfully execute her duties as a justice of the peace: R. v. Isaac (1989), 47 C.C.C. (3d) 353 (B.C.S.C.).

Nature of decision to issue process – In determining whether to issue a summons or a warrant a provincial court judge exercises his discretion and accordingly mandamus cannot lie against him: R. v. Coughlan, ex p. Evans, [1970] 3 C.C.C. 61, 8 C.R.N.S. 201 (Alta. S.C.). In any event the supervisory court may only order the inferior court to hear the matter again: R. v. Jones, ex p. Cohen, [1970] 2 C.C.C. 374 (B.C.S.C.).

A justice has jurisdiction to withdraw and annul his warrant where he issued it under a misconception of the facts: Re Eckersley and The Queen (1972), 7 C.C.C. (2d) 314 (Que.Mun.Ct.).

If the Justice's refusal to issue process was based on extraneous considerations, or if his discretion was not exercised judicially following a proper hearing, mandamus will lie: Re Blythe and The Queen (1973), 13 C.C.C. (2d) 192 (B.C.S.C.); Re Swan and Tavrydas and The Queen, ex p. Syme (1979), 48 C.C.C. (2d) 501 (Ont. H.C.J.).

A Justice acts judicially in determining whether or not he will issue a process requiring attendance in Court. A refusal does not invalidate an information; the informant is entitled to re-apply before the same or another Justice for process to be issued: R. v. Allen (1974), 20 C.C.C. (2d) 447 (Ont.C.A.).

Access to evidence taken on hearing – Although the justice presiding at a preliminary hearing has no power to order production of any statements given before a justice under this section, as a matter of fairness such statements should be made available to the accused notwithstanding the proceedings under this section are conducted ex parte and in camera. If the defence has these statements he may cross-examine the witness on them in the same manner as any other prior statement: Re Cohen and The Queen (1976), 32 C.C.C. (2d) 446, 34 C.R.N.S. 362 sub nom. A.-G. Que. v. Cohen (Que.C.A.). An appeal by the Crown to the S.C.C. was allowed 46 C.C.C. (2d) 473, 13 C.R. (3d) 36, the Court holding that the decision of the justice refusing such cross-examination was not reviewable on certiorari. In the result the Court did not consider the correctness of the justice's ruling.

Right to proceed under this section where s. 501 or 505 not complied with – Where there has been non-compliance with the mandatory provisions of s. 505, it is open to the Crown to proceed by way of an information laid under s. 504 and the justice may issue either a summons or a warrant under this section in order to compel the accused's attendance unless it can be said that the subsequent proceedings constitute an abuse of process: Re Riley and The Queen (1981), 60 C.C.C. (2d) 193 (Ont. C.A.).

Where the provisions of s. 505 have not been complied with, the information having been sworn after the return date in the appearance notice, a warrant or summons may issue under this section: R. v. Gagné (1989), 53 C.C.C. (3d) 89 (Que. C.A.). There is no necessity to cancel the appearance notice and in fact no jurisdiction to do so: Re Tremblay and The Queen (1982), 68 C.C.C. (2d) 273, 28 C.R. (3d) 262 (B.C.C.A.).

A summons may also issue under this section although the appearance notice was invalid for failure to comply with s. 501(4) and the information laid under s. 505 was neither cancelled nor confirmed by the justice: Re Thomson and The Queen (1984), 11 C.C.C. (3d) 435, 51 A.R. 273 (C.A.).

Until such time as the accused comes before a Judge capable of taking his election and plea, the Court has not assumed any jurisdiction in the matter and should any error be made in the method of summoning the accused to Court then it may be corrected by the issuance of a new summons or warrant. It is only when the accused has appeared in Court and made his election or plea that the Court has become seized with jurisdiction which can be lost if nothing is done on a Court date: R. v. Macaskill (1981), 58 C.C.C. (2d) 361, 45 N.S.R. (2d) 181 (S.C. App. Div.). Similarly, Re Kennedy and The Queen (1983), 8 C.C.C. (3d) 322, [1983] 6 W.W.R. 673 (B.C.C.A.).

Other notes – The issuance of a summons by a justice of the peace other than the Justice before whom the complaint was sworn is legal: R. v. Southwick, ex p. Gilbert Steel Ltd., [1968] 1 C.C.C. 356, 2 C.R.N.S. 46 (Ont. C.A.).

JUSTICE TO HEAR INFORMANT AND WITNESSES / Procedure when witnesses attend.

508. (1) A justice who receives an information laid before him under section 505 shall

- (a) hear and consider, ex parte,
  - (i) the allegations of the informant, and
  - (ii) the evidence of witnesses, where he considers it desirable or necessary to do so;
- (b) where he considers that a case for so doing is made out, whether the information relates to the offence alleged in the appearance notice, promise to appear or recognizance or to an included or other offence,
  - (i) confirm the appearance notice, promise to appear or recognizance, as the case may be, and endorse the information accordingly, or
  - (ii) cancel the appearance notice, promise to appear or recognizance, as the case may be, and issue, in accordance with section 507, either a summons or a warrant for the arrest of the accused to compel the accused to attend before him or some other justice for the same territorial division to answer to a charge of an offence and endorse on the summons or warrant that the appearance notice, promise to appear or recognizance, as the case may be, has been cancelled; and

- (c) where he considers that a case is not made out for the purposes of paragraph (b), cancel the appearance notice, promise to appear or recognizance, as the case may be, and cause the accused to be notified forthwith of such cancellation.
- (2) A justice who hears the evidence of a witness pursuant to subsection (1) shall
  - (a) take the evidence on oath; and
  - (b) cause the evidence to be taken in accordance with section 540 in so far as that section is capable of being applied. R.S., c. 2 (2nd Supp.), s. 5; R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 79.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term "justice" is defined in s. 2. With respect to oaths and solemn affirmations see ss. 13 to 15 of the Canada Evidence Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. C-5. The terms "appearance notice", "promise to appear" and "recognizance" are defined in s. 493. The contents of these forms of release are set out in s. 501. Under s. 512 even though the accused has been released on one of these forms of release the justice may issue a summons or warrant. Where the information is laid under s. 504 then the process is issued by the justice in accordance with s. 507. For discussion of the pre-trial release provisions see the Note on the scheme for pre-trial release under s. 495.

Note s. 31(1) of the Interpretation Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. I-21, which provides that where anything is required or authorized to be done by or before, inter alia, a justice of the peace it shall be done by or before one whose jurisdiction or powers extend to the place where the thing is to be done.

Failure to attend court as required or attend for the purposes of the Identification of Criminals Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. I-1, is an offence under s. 145.

SYNOPSIS

This section sets out the procedure that must be followed when a justice receives an information laid before him under s. 505.

Subsection (1) requires a justice in this situation to hear and consider, ex parte, the allegations of the informant and, where it is considered desirable or necessary, the evidence of witnesses. Where a case is made out, the justice shall confirm the appearance notice, the promise to appear or the recognizance and endorse the information accordingly. The justice may also cancel the appearance notice, the promise to appear, or the recognizance and compel the accused, by summons or warrant, to appear in order to answer to a charge of an offence. If the justice considers that a case is not made out for the purposes of para. (b), the justice may cancel the appearance notice, promise to appear or recognizance and order that the accused be notified of this cancellation.

Subsection (2) requires that a justice, who hears the evidence of a witness pursuant to subsec. (1), must take the evidence on oath and, in so far as is possible, in accordance with s. 540.

ANNOTATIONS

Failure to confirm the appearance notice has relevance only to any proceedings taken against the accused should he fail to attend Court as required therein. Such failure does not void the information and once the accused appears there is no necessity that the appearance notice be confirmed: R. v. Wetmore (1976), 32 C.C.C. (2d) 347 (N.S.S.C. App. Div.); Re Maximick and The Queen (1979), 48 C.C.C. (2d) 417, 10 C.R. (3d) 97, [1979] 6 W.W.R. 731 (B.C.C.A.); Re McGinnis and The Queen (1979), 51 C.C.C. (2d) 301, [1980] 2 W.W.R. 89, 19 A.R. 249 (C.A.). Contra: R. v. Harris (1978), 39 C.C.C. (2d) 256 (Ont. Prov. Ct.) and semble, R. v. Gougeon; R. v. Haesler; R. v. Gray (1980), 55 C.C.C. (2d) 218 (Ont. C.A.), at least where timely objection is made.

Prior to confirming the appearance notice, the justice must be satisfied that the notice complies with provisions of the Criminal Code including the requirement that the accused was served with copy of the notice. Where the accused fails to appear as required, a judge may issue a summons or warrant without proof of service of the appearance notice: R. v. DeMelo (1994), 92 C.C.C. (3d) 52, 73 O.A.C. 371 (C.A.).

Where an accused challenges the sufficiency of the ex parte hearing required by subsec. (1), the presumption of regularity applies and the burden is on the accused to show on a balance of probabilities that the requisite hearing had not taken place. For there to be compliance with this subsection, there need not be a “formal” hearing, although it would be preferable for the justice of the peace to ask the informant to briefly divulge the factual basis of the charge: R. v. Morton (1992), 70 C.C.C. (3d) 244, 7 O.R. (3d) 625 (Gen. Div.), affd 83 C.C.C. (3d) 95n (C.A.).

A charge of failing to comply with a requirement that the accused attend for fingerprinting must be dismissed if the promise to appear is only confirmed after the date set out for attendance for fingerprinting: R. v. Tulloch (1987), 40 C.C.C. (3d) 90 (Ont. Prov. Ct.).

SUMMONS / Service on individual / Proof of service / Content of summons / Attendance for purposes of Identification of Criminals Act.

---

509. (1) A summons issued under this Part shall

- (a) be directed to the accused;
- (b) set out briefly the offence in respect of which the accused is charged; and
- (c) require the accused to attend court at a time and place to be stated therein and to attend thereafter as required by the court in order to be dealt with according to law.

(2) A summons shall be served by a peace officer who shall deliver it personally to the person to whom it is directed or, if that person cannot conveniently be found, shall leave it for him at his last or usual place of abode with some inmate thereof who appears to be at least sixteen years of age.

(3) Service of a summons may be proved by the oral evidence, given under oath, of the peace officer who served it or by his affidavit made before a justice or other person authorized to administer oaths or to take affidavits.

(4) There shall be set out in every summons the text of subsection 145(4) and section 510.

(5) A summons may, where the accused is alleged to have committed an indictable offence, require the accused to appear at a time and place stated therein for the purposes of the Identification of Criminals Act, and a person so appearing is deemed, for the purposes only of that Act, to be in lawful custody charged with an indictable offence. R.S., c. 2 (2nd Supp.), s. 5; R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 80.

NOTE: Subsection (5) re-enacted by 1992, c. 47, s. 71 (to come into force by order of the Governor in Council). The unproclaimed text, printed in lightface italics, reads as follows:

(5) A summons may require the accused to appear at a time and place stated in it for the purposes of the Identification of Criminals Act, where the accused is alleged to have committed an indictable offence and, in the case of an offence designated as a contravention under the Contraventions Act, the Attorney General of Canada has not elected under section 50 of that Act that the proceeding be dealt with and disposed of as if it had been commenced by filing a ticket.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term “peace officer” is defined in s. 2. Summons is defined in s. 493 as a summons in Form 6. Section 841 provides that forms varied to suit the case and forms to the like effect shall be deemed to be good, valid and sufficient in the circumstances for which, respectively, they are provided. A summons may be issued or given on a holiday by virtue of s. 20. For protection of person executing process see ss. 25 to 28.

Failure to attend court as required or attend for the purposes of the Identification of Criminals Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. I-1, is an offence under s. 145. As well a warrant may issue under s. 510 for failure to attend for the purposes of the Identification of Criminals Act. A warrant may issue under s. 512 where the accused fails to appear for court as required or where a summons cannot be served because the accused is evading service.

SYNOPSIS

This section deals with the summons.

Subsection (1) requires that a summons issued under Part XVI be directed to the accused, set out the offence with which the accused is charged, and require the accused to attend in court at a time and place to be stated and thereafter as required by the court.

Subsection (2) states that a summons must be served by a peace officer for personal delivery upon the person to whom it is directed. If that person cannot be conveniently found, the peace officer must leave the summons at the person's latest or usual residence with a person who lives in the premises and who appears to be at least 16 years old.

Subsection (3) provides that service of a summons may be proved by oral evidence under oath of the peace officer who served it. It may also be proved by way of affidavit.

Subsection (4) requires that the text of ss. 145(4) and 510 be set out in every summons.

Subsection (5) states that a summons may require the accused to appear at a stated time and place for the purposes of the Identification of Criminals Act, if the offence the accused is alleged to have committed is an indictable one.

ANNOTATIONS

There is no jurisdiction in a Court to proceed ex parte against a defendant served with a summons outside Canada: Re Shulman and The Queen (1975), 23 C.C.C. (2d) 242, 58 D.L.R. (3d) 586 (B.C.C.A.).

A justice has no power to issue a summons to an accused solely for the purpose of the Identification of Criminals Act and not in conjunction with procuring his attendance at Court: Re Michelsen and The Queen (1983), 4 C.C.C. (3d) 371, 33 C.R. (3d) 285 (Man. Q.B.).

Subsec. (5) – The discretionary power to require an accused to attend for fingerprinting does not violate the principles of fundamental justice as guaranteed by s. 7 of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms: R. v. Beare; R. v. Higgins (1988), 45 C.C.C. (3d) 57, 66 C.R. (3d) 97, [1989] 1 W.W.R. 97, [1988] 2 S.C.R. 387 (7:0).

FAILURE TO APPEAR.

510. Where an accused who is required by a summons to appear at a time and place stated therein for the purposes of the Identification of Criminals Act, does not appear at that time and place, a justice may issue a warrant for the arrest of the accused for the offence with which he is charged. R.S., c. 2 (2nd Supp.), s. 5.

NOTE: Section 510 re-enacted by 1992, c. 47, s. 72 (to come into force by order of the Governor in Council). The unproclaimed text, printed in lightface italics, reads as follows:

510. Where an accused who is required by a summons to appear at a time and place stated in it for the purposes of the Identification of Criminals Act does not appear at that time and place and, in the case of an offence designated as a contravention under the Contraventions Act, the Attorney General of Canada has not elected under section 50 of that Act that the proceeding be dealt with and disposed of as if it had been commenced by filing a ticket, a justice may issue a warrant for the arrest of the accused for the offence with which the accused is charged.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term "justice" is defined in s. 2. The terms "summons" and "warrant" are defined in s. 493.

Failure to attend for the purposes of the Identification of Criminals Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. I-1, is an offence under s. 145. A warrant may also issue for failure to attend for the purposes of the Identification of Criminals Act as required in a promise-to-appear appearance notice or recognizance pursuant to s. 502. A warrant may issue under s. 512 where the accused fails to appear for court as required or where a summons cannot be served because the accused is evading service.

SYNOPSIS

This section deals with the failure to apply by an accused, who is required by summons to appear at a stated time and place for the Identification of Criminals Act. If the accused does not appear as required, the justice may issue a warrant for the arrest of the accused for the offence with which he is charged.

CONTENTS OF WARRANT TO ARREST / No return day.

511. (1) A warrant issued under this Part shall

- (a) name or describe the accused;
- (b) set out briefly the offence in respect of which the accused is charged; and
- (c) order that the accused be forthwith arrested and brought before the judge or justice who issued the warrant or before some other judge or justice having jurisdiction in the same territorial division, to be dealt with according to law.

(2) A warrant issued under this Part remains in force until it is executed and need not be made returnable at any particular time. R.S., c. C-34, s. 456; R.S., c. 2 (2nd Supp.), s. 5; R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 81.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term “justice” is defined in s. 2. Section 31(1) of the Interpretation Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. I-21, provides that where anything is required or authorized to be done by or before, inter alia, a justice of the peace it shall be done by or before one whose jurisdiction or powers extend to the place where the thing is to be done. The terms “accused” and “warrant” are defined in s. 493.

Formalities in a warrant are set out in s. 513. Under s. 20 a warrant may be executed on a holiday. A warrant is executed in accordance with ss. 29 and 514, and s. 10 of the Charter. For protection of person executing warrants and other process see ss. 25 to 28.

SYNOPSIS

This section sets out the necessary contents of a warrant to arrest issued under Part XVI.

Subsection (1) states that a warrant issued under Part XVI shall name or describe the accused, set out briefly the charge, and order the immediate arrest of the accused, who must then be brought before a judge or justice having jurisdiction, in order to be dealt with according to law.

Subsection (2) states that a warrant issued under Part XVI remains in force until it is executed. It is not necessary that it be made returnable at any specific time.

ANNOTATIONS

The provincial court is a statutory court and there is no statutory or common law authority in a provincial court to stay execution of out of province warrants. Moreover, the provincial court is not a court of competent jurisdiction within the meaning of s. 24(1) of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms with jurisdiction to stay execution of warrants on the basis of an alleged breach of the accused’s rights under the Charter. While the provincial superior court would be a court of competent jurisdiction within the meaning of s. 24(1) with the power to grant an appropriate remedy, the superior court should ordinarily defer to the trial courts of the province from which the warrant originated: R. v. Phillip (1989), 51 C.C.C. (3d) 488 (B.C.S.C.).

CERTAIN ACTIONS NOT TO PRECLUDE ISSUE OF WARRANT / Warrant in default of appearance.

512. (1) A justice may, where the justice has reasonable and probable grounds to believe that it is necessary in the public interest to issue a summons or a warrant for the arrest of the accused, issue a summons or warrant notwithstanding that

- (a) an appearance notice or promise to appear or a recognizance entered into before an officer in charge has been confirmed or cancelled under subsection 508(1);
- (b) a summons has previously been issued under subsection 507(4); or
- (c) the accused has been released unconditionally or with the intention of compelling his appearance by way of summons.

(2) Where

- (a) service of a summons is proved and the accused fails to attend court in accordance with the summons,
- (b) an appearance notice or promise to appear or a recognizance entered into before an officer in charge has been confirmed under subsection 508(1) and the accused fails to attend court in accordance therewith in order to be dealt with according to law, or
- (c) it appears that a summons cannot be served because the accused is evading service, a justice may issue a warrant for the arrest of the accused. R.S., c. 2 (2nd Supp.), s. 5; R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 82.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term "justice" is defined in s. 2. The terms "accused", "appearance notice", "promise to appear", "summons", "warrant" and "recognizance" are defined in s. 493. As to contents of warrant see ss. 511 and 513. A warrant is executed in accordance with ss. 29 and 514, and s. 10 of the Charter. For protection of person executing warrants and other process see ss. 25 to 28.

SYNOPSIS

This section empowers a justice to issue a warrant in certain specific situations.

Subsection (1) states that a justice may issue a summons or a warrant for the arrest of an accused notwithstanding that an appearance notice, a promise to appear or a recognizance has been confirmed or cancelled under s. 508(1). A summons or warrant may also be issued by a justice under this subsection even if another summons has been issued under s. 507(4) or the accused has been released unconditionally or with the intention of compelling his appearance by way of summons. However, in all of these instances the justice must believe that it is in the public interest to issue the summons or warrant.

Subsection (2) provides that a justice may issue a warrant for the arrest of the accused where service of summons is proved and the accused fails to appear in court. The justice may also issue a warrant when an appearance notice, a promise to appear or a recognizance has been confirmed under s. 508(1) and the accused fails to appear in court, or when a summons cannot be served because the accused appears to be evading service.

ANNOTATIONS

Subsec. (1) – An accused's release from custody because of non-compliance with s. 525 does not preclude a justice from issuing a warrant for his arrest again for the same offence: Ex p. Chung (1975), 26 C.C.C. (2d) 497, [1976] 1 W.W.R. 453 (B.C.C.A.).

This subsection gives a Judge a residual power to issue a warrant where the accused after an initial appearance in Court fails to appear, even if the initial appearance was pursuant to defective process such as a failure to comply with s. 505: R. v. Gougeon; R. v. Haesler; R. v. Gray (1980), 55 C.C.C. (2d) 218 (Ont. C.A.), leave to appeal to S.C.C. refused 35 N.R. 83n. Folld: Re Siller and The Queen (1980), 59 C.C.C. (2d) 169 (B.C.C.A.).

Subsec. (2) – There is no jurisdiction to issue a warrant simply to preserve jurisdiction where the accused is already in custody but has not been brought before the court: Re Inverarity and The Queen (1984), 18 C.C.C. (3d) 74 (Sask. Q.B.). [Note: as to whether jurisdiction would be lost in such circumstances regard must be had to s. 485.]

However, to the contrary is Re Hartmann and The Queen (1986), 30 C.C.C. (3d) 286 (Ont. H.C.J.), where it was held that a warrant could issue under this subsection, and possibly under subsec. (1), to preserve jurisdiction where the accused was not brought to court on a remand date. It is not a condition precedent to the issuance of a warrant under this subsection that its issuance be necessary in the public interest and resort to this subsection does not depend on the fact that the accused did not have a lawful excuse for failing to attend in court.

FORMALITIES OF WARRANT.

513. A warrant in accordance with this Part shall be directed to the peace officers within the territorial jurisdiction of the justice, judge or court by whom or by which it is issued. R.S., c. 2 (2nd Supp.), s. 5.

CROSS-REFERENCES

“Warrant” is defined in s. 493. The contents of the warrant are described in s. 511. Under s. 20 a warrant may be executed on a holiday. A warrant is executed in accordance with ss. 29 and 514, and s. 10 of the Charter. For protection of person executing warrants and other process see ss. 25 to 28.

EXECUTION OF WARRANT / By whom warrant may be executed.

514. (1) A warrant in accordance with this Part may be executed by arresting the accused

- (a) wherever he is found within the territorial jurisdiction of the justice, judge or court by whom or by which the warrant was issued; or
- (b) wherever he is found in Canada, in the case of fresh pursuit.

(2) A warrant in accordance with this Part may be executed by a person who is one of the peace officers to whom it is directed, whether or not the place in which the warrant is to be executed is within the territory for which the person is a peace officer. R.S., c. 2 (2nd Supp.), s. 5.

CROSS-REFERENCES

“Justice” and “peace officer” are defined in s. 2. “Warrant” is defined in s. 493. The contents of the warrant are described in ss. 511 and 513. Under s. 20 a warrant may be executed on a holiday. A warrant is executed in accordance with ss. 29 and 513, and s. 10 of the Charter. For protection of person executing warrants see ss. 25 to 28. Where the warrant cannot be executed in accordance with this section then an application may be made under s. 528 to a justice, in whose jurisdiction the accused is believed to be, who may endorse the warrant authorizing the arrest within his jurisdiction.

SYNOPSIS

This section describes the execution of a warrant issued under Part XVI on the accused.

Subsection (1) states that a warrant may be executed by arresting the accused wherever he is found within the territorial jurisdiction of the issuing court. In the case of fresh pursuit, the warrant may be executed wherever the accused is found in Canada.

Subsection (2) provides that the warrant may be executed by one of the peace officers to whom it is directed, even if the place where the warrant is to be executed is not part of that peace officer’s territory.

Judicial Interim Release

ORDER OF RELEASE / Release on undertaking with conditions, etc. / Power of justice to name sureties in order / Alternative to physical presence / Release on undertaking with conditions, etc. / Conditions authorized / Additional conditions / Idem / Detention in custody / Order of detention / Order of release / Idem / Sufficiency of record / Justification for detention in custody / Detention in custody for offence mentioned in s. 469 / Order re no communication.

515. (1) Subject to this section, where an accused who is charged with an offence other than an offence listed in section 469 is taken before a justice, the justice shall, unless a plea of guilty by the accused is accepted, order, in respect of that offence, that the accused be released on his giving an undertaking without conditions, unless the prosecutor, having been given a reasonable opportunity to do so, shows cause, in respect of that offence, why the detention of the accused in custody is justified or why an order under any other provision of this section should be made and where the justice makes an order under any other provision of this section, the order shall refer only to the particular offence for which the accused was taken before the justice.

(2) Where the justice does not make an order under subsection (1), he shall, unless the prosecutor shows cause why the detention of the accused is justified, order that the accused be released

- (a) on his giving an undertaking with such conditions as the justice directs;
- (b) on his entering into a recognizance before the justice, without sureties, in such amount and with such conditions, if any, as the justice directs but without deposit of money or other valuable security;
- (c) on his entering into a recognizance before the justice with sureties in such amount and with such conditions, if any, as the justice directs but without deposit of money or other valuable security;
- (d) with the consent of the prosecutor, on his entering into a recognizance before the justice, without sureties, in such amount and with such conditions, if any, as the justice directs and on his depositing with the justice such sum of money or other valuable security as the justice directs; or
- (e) if the accused is not ordinarily resident in the province in which the accused is in custody or does not ordinarily reside within two hundred kilometres of the place in which he is in custody, on his entering into a recognizance before the justice with or without sureties in such amount and with such conditions, if any, as the justice directs, and upon his depositing with the justice such sum of money or other valuable security as the justice directs.

(2.1) Where, pursuant to subsection (2) or any other provision of this Act, a justice, judge or court orders that an accused be released on his entering into a recognizance with sureties, the justice, judge or court may, in the order, name particular persons as sureties.

(2.2) Where, by this Act, the appearance of an accused is required for the purposes of judicial interim release, the appearance shall be by actual physical attendance of the accused but the justice may, where the prosecutor and the accused so agree, allow the accused to appear by means of any suitable telecommunication device, including telephone, that is satisfactory to the justice.

(3) The justice shall not make an order under any of paragraphs (2)(b) to (e) unless the prosecution shows cause why an order under the immediately preceding paragraph should not be made.

(4) The justice may direct as conditions under subsection (2) that the accused shall do any one or more of the following things as specified in the order:

- (a) report at times to be stated in the order to a peace officer or other person designated in the order;
- (b) remain within a territorial jurisdiction specified in the order;
- (c) notify the peace officer or other person designated under paragraph (a) of any change in his address or his employment or occupation;
- (d) abstain from communicating with any witness or other person expressly named in the order, or refrain from going to any place expressly named in the order, except in accordance with the conditions specified in the order that the justice considers necessary;
- (e) where the accused is the holder of a passport, deposit his passport as specified in the order; and
- (f) comply with such other reasonable conditions specified in the order as the justice considers desirable.

(4.1) Before making an order under subsection (2), in the case of an accused who is charged with an offence in the commission of which violence against a person was used, threatened or attempted or an offence described in section 264 of this Act, or in subsection 39(1) or (2) or 48(1) or (2) of the Food and Drugs Act or in subsection 4(1) or (2) of the Narcotic Control Act, the justice shall consider whether it is desirable, in the interests of the safety of the accused or of any other person, to include as a condition of the order that the accused be prohibited from possessing any firearm or any ammunition or explosive substance for any period of time specified in the order and that the accused surrender any firearms acquisition certificate that the accused possesses, and where the justice decides that it is not desirable, in the interests of the safety of the accused or of any other person, for the accused to possess any of those things, the justice may add the appropriate condition to the order.

NOTE: Subsection (4.1) replaced 1995, c. 39, s. 153 by subssecs. (4.1) to (4.12) (to come into force by order of the Governor in Council). The text, which is not yet in force and therefor printed in lightface italics, reads as follows:

Condition prohibiting possession of firearms, etc. / Surrender, etc. / Reasons.

(4.1) When making an order under subsection (2), in the case of an accused who is charged with

- (a) an offence in the commission of which violence against a person was used, threatened or attempted,
- (b) an offence under section 264 (criminal harassment),
- (c) an offence relating to the contravention of subsection 39(1) or (2) or 48(1) or (2) of the Food and Drugs Act or subsection 4(1) or (2) or 5(1) of the Narcotic Control Act, or

NOTE: Subsection (4.1)(c) replaced 1995, c. 39, s. 188(b) (to come into force on the later of the day on which ss. 6 and 7 of Bill C-8 (An Act respecting the control of certain drugs . . .) comes into force and the day on which subsec. (4.1)(c) as enacted by 1995, c. 39, s. 153 comes into force). The text, which is not yet in force as of May 15, 1996 and therefor printed in lightface italics, reads as follows:

- (c) an offence relating to the contravention of subsection 6(1) or (2) or 7(1) or (2) of the Controlled Drugs and Substances Act, or
- (d) an offence that involves, or the subject-matter of which is, a firearm, a cross-bow, a prohibited weapon, a restricted weapon, a prohibited device, ammunition, prohibited ammunition or an explosive substance.

the justice shall add to the order a condition prohibiting the accused from possessing any firearm, cross-bow, prohibited weapon, restricted weapon, prohibited device, ammunition, prohibited ammunition or explosive substance, or all such things, until the accused is dealt with according to law unless the justice considers that such a condition is not required in the interests of the safety of the accused or of any other person.

(4.11) Where the justice adds a condition described in subsection (4.1) to an order made under subsection (2), the justice shall specify in the order the manner and method by which

(a) the things referred to in subsection (4.1) that are in the possession of the accused shall be surrendered, disposed of, detained, stored or dealt with; and

(b) the authorizations, licences and registration certificates held by the person shall be surrendered.

(4.12) Where the justice does not add a condition described in subsection (4.1) to an order made under subsection (2), the justice shall include in the record a statement of the reasons for not adding the condition.

NOTE: Subsection (4.1) replaced 1996, Bill C-8, s. 71(1) (to come into force by order of the Governor in Council). The text, which is not yet in force as of May 15, 1996 and also may change before receiving Royal Assent, is therefor printed in lightface italics and reads as follows:

(4.1) Before making an order under subsection (2), in the case of an accused who is charged with an offence in the commission of which violence against a person was used, threatened or attempted or an offence described in section 264 of this Act, or in subsection 5(3) or (4) or 6(3) of the Controlled Drugs and Substances Act, the justice shall consider whether it is desirable, in the interests of the safety of the accused or of any other person, to include as a condition of the order that the accused be prohibited from possessing any firearm or any ammunition or explosive substance for any period of time specified in the order and that the accused surrender any firearms acquisition certificate that the accused possesses, and where the justice decides that it is not desirable, in the interests of the safety of the accused or of any other person, for the accused to possess any of those things, the justice may add the appropriate condition to the order.

(4.2) Before making an order under subsection (2), in the case of an accused who is charged with an offence described in section 264, or an offence in the commission of which violence against a person was used, threatened or attempted, the justice shall consider whether it is desirable, in the interests of the safety of any person, to include as a condition of the order that the accused abstain from communicating with any witness or other person expressly named in the order, or be prohibited from going to any place expressly named in the order.

(5) Where the prosecutor shows cause why the detention of the accused in custody is justified, the justice shall order that the accused be detained in custody until he is dealt with according to law and shall include in the record a statement of his reasons for making the order.

(6) Notwithstanding any provision of this section, where an accused is charged

(a) with an indictable offence, other than an offence listed in section 469, that is alleged to have been committed while he was at large after being released in respect of another indictable offence pursuant to the provisions of this Part or section 679 or 680,

(b) with an indictable offence, other than an offence listed in section 469 and is not ordinarily resident in Canada,

(c) with an offence under any of subsections 145(2) to (5) that is alleged to have been committed while he was at large after being released in respect of another offence pursuant to the provisions of this Part or section 679, 680 or 816, or

(d) with having committed an offence under section 4 or 5 of the Narcotic Control

Act or the offence of conspiring to commit an offence under section 4 or 5 of that Act,

NOTE: Subsection (6)(d) replaced 1996, Bill C-8, s. 71(2) (to come into force by order of the Governor in Council). The text, which is not yet in force as of May 15, 1996 and also may change before receiving Royal Assent, is therefor printed in lightface italics and reads as follows:

(d) with having committed an offence punishable by imprisonment for life under subsection 5(3) or (4) or 6(3) of the Controlled Drugs and Substances Act or the offence of conspiring to commit such an offence.

the justice shall order that the accused be detained in custody until he is dealt with according to law, unless the accused, having been given a reasonable opportunity to do so, shows cause why his detention in custody is not justified, but where the justice orders that the accused be released, he shall include in the record a statement of his reasons for making the order.

(7) Where an accused to whom paragraph 6(a), (c) or (d) applies shows cause why the accused's detention in custody is not justified, the justice shall order that the accused be released on giving an undertaking or entering into a recognizance described in any of paragraphs (2)(a) to (e) with the conditions described in subsections (4) to (4.2) or, where the accused was at large on an undertaking or recognizance with conditions, the additional conditions described in subsections (4) to (4.2), that the justice considers desirable, unless the accused, having been given a reasonable opportunity to do so, shows cause why the conditions or additional conditions should not be imposed.

(8) Where an accused to whom paragraph (6)(b) applies shows cause why the accused's detention in custody is not justified, the justice shall order that the accused be released on giving an undertaking or entering into a recognizance described in any of paragraphs (2)(a) to (e) with the conditions, described in subsections (4) to (4.2), that the justice considers desirable.

(9) For the purposes of subsections (5) and (6), it is sufficient if a record is made of the reasons in accordance with the provisions of Part XVIII relating to the taking of evidence at preliminary inquiries.

(10) For the purposes of this section, the detention of an accused in custody is justified only on either of the following grounds:

- (a) on the primary ground that his detention is necessary to ensure his attendance in court in order to be dealt with according to law; and
- (b) on the secondary ground (the applicability of which shall be determined only in the event that and after it is determined that his detention is not justified on the primary ground referred to in paragraph (a)) that his detention is necessary in the public interest or for the protection or safety of the public, having regard to all the circumstances including any substantial likelihood that the accused will, if he is released from custody, commit a criminal offence or interfere with the administration of justice.

(11) Where an accused who is charged with an offence mentioned in section 469 is taken before a justice, the justice shall order that the accused be detained in custody until he is dealt with according to law and shall issue a warrant in Form 8 for the committal of the accused.

(12) A justice who orders that an accused be detained in custody under this section may include in the order a direction that the accused abstain from communicating with any witness or other person named in the order, except in accordance with such conditions specified in the order as the justice deems necessary. ## CROSS-REFERENCES

The term "justice" is defined in s. 2. The terms "recognizance" and "undertaking" are defined in s. 493. "Sureties" is defined in s. 35 of the Interpretation Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. I-21, as sufficient sureties and when those words are used one person is sufficient therefor, unless otherwise expressly required.

Note on judicial interim release – Where the accused is not released by the arresting officer or the officer in charge (defined in s. 493) then s. 503 requires that he be taken before a justice (defined in s. 2) without unreasonable delay and within 24 hours where a justice is available. Upon being taken before a justice the accused is entitled to a bail hearing under s. 515 unless he is charged with an offence listed in s. 469, such as murder, or he pleads guilty. Following is a brief discussion of the procedure and the relationship between the various provisions as they apply to an accused charged with an offence other than an offence listed in s. 469. For the s. 469 offences see the note under s. 522.

The hearing under s. 515 is variously described in the case law as a judicial interim release hearing or "show cause" hearing because in most cases the onus is on the prosecution to show cause why the accused should not be released on an undertaking (defined in s. 493) without conditions. There are certain exceptions, listed in s. 515(6), where the onus is reversed and it is the accused who must show cause why he should not be detained. In either case cause for detention is set out in s. 515(10). Where the prosecutor shows cause why the accused should not be released on an unconditional undertaking then the onus is on the prosecutor to show why the accused should not be released on a form of release representing the least interference with the accused's liberty, from an undertaking with conditions to a recognizance (defined in s. 493), with or without sureties (defined in s. 35 of the Interpretation Act), and finally a detention order. These forms of release are described in s. 515(2) and the conditions which may be imposed are set out in s. 515(4) and (4.1). In certain cases, described in s. 515(2)(d), and (e), the justice may also make an order requiring a cash deposit with or without sureties. Where the onus is on the prosecutor to show cause s. 515(5) requires the justice to give reasons for making a detention order. Where the onus is on the accused then s. 515(6) requires that the justice give reasons for making a release order. Even where the accused is detained for some other reason, e.g., because he is serving sentence, he is entitled to a hearing under s. 515, however, if the justice makes a release order then by virtue of s. 519 the accused will still remain in custody until he is no longer required to be detained for some other reason.

Sections 516 to 518 set out the procedure to be followed on the bail hearing. Section 516 deals with adjournments. Section 517 provides for a non-publication order. Section 518 sets out the kind of evidence which may be tendered on the hearing. The effect of s. 518 is to give a relatively wide latitude to the justice permitting him to receive and base his decision on evidence "considered credible or trustworthy". Thus the rules of evidence which would apply at a trial would not apply on the bail hearing. One limit on the receipt of evidence is the proviso in s. 518(1)(b), which prohibits questioning of the accused respecting the offence with which he is charged. The scope of this subsection is uncertain, there being some case law noted under s. 518 holding that, while the accused cannot be asked by the justice or the prosecutor about the offence, he is entitled to volunteer his testimony concerning the offence. Where a release order is made then s. 519 sets out the procedure for putting the order into effect and the circumstances in which the accused will be released.

The Code also sets out an elaborate system of review. Under s. 520 the accused may apply to a judge (defined in s. 493) to review a detention order or to review the terms upon which he was released. Section 521 gives a similar right of review to the prosecutor to review any release order made by a justice. It would also seem that orders made under ss. 520 or 521 can in turn be reviewed under those sections. The application is on notice to the prosecutor or accused as the case may be (ss. 520(2) and 521(2)). The procedure on the review hearing resembles the procedure on the original s. 515 hearing, except that the onus is on the applicant to show cause why the original order should be vacated (ss. 520(7) and 521(8)). The presence of the accused would not appear to be mandatory but the judge may make an order requiring the accused's presence which order may be enforced through issuance of a warrant (ss. 520(3), (5) and 521(3), (5)). Ordinarily, the judge will consider the transcript of proceedings sought to be reviewed but has power to consider other additional evidence or exhibits (ss. 520(7) and 521(8)). Adjournment of the proceeding is provided for in ss. 520(4) and 521(4).

Section 523(2) also provides for a more informal review process at various stages of the proceedings by a justice, a preliminary inquiry judge, a judge of the trial court, or the trial judge. Note, however, that the release or detention order can only be vacated under this subsection upon cause being shown and, in some circumstances, the review can only be undertaken where both the accused and the prosecutor consent. Section 524 enacts a procedure for dealing with cases where it is alleged that the accused has violated or is about to violate any form of release either issued by a peace officer or by a justice or has committed an indictable offence while on a form of release. That section gives a power to arrest with (subsec. (1)) or without warrant (subsec. (2)). Upon arrest under this section the accused will be taken before a justice and where it is shown that his arrest was justified (subsec. (8)) then the release order is cancelled and the accused ordered detained unless he can show cause why he should not be detained in custody. If the accused shows cause then s. 524(9) provides for the types of release order which may be made. Any order made under s. 524 may be reviewed under ss. 520 and 521 by the accused or the prosecutor as the case may be. The procedure on the s. 524 hearing is similar to the original show cause hearing (subsec. (12)). Finally, s. 525 sets out a procedure for an automatic review, by a judge, of the detention of any accused who is ordered detained either under s. 515, 521 or 524. The time when the review occurs depends on whether the accused is charged with an indictable offence (90 days) or a summary conviction offence (30 days). The scope of s. 525 remains subject to some uncertainty. In particular it is not clear whether the accused is entitled to a review where he has been ordered released but is unable to comply with the terms of the recognizance and it is unclear whether the section applies where the accused has previously unsuccessfully applied to a judge under s. 520. The procedure under the s. 525 hearing resembles the procedure under s. 515, except that notwithstanding where the onus originally lay the judge must be satisfied that the accused's continued detention is justified within the meaning of s. 515(10) (subsec. (4)). Subsections (5) to (7) describe a procedure for cancelling any release order made under s. 525, a procedure which resembles the s. 524 procedure. Aside from those subsections there would not appear to be any mechanism for reviewing a release order made under s. 525. Subsection (9) also requires the judge in any event to give directions for expediting the trial. A similar discretionary power is given to any justice or judge conducting a hearing under any of the other sections, pursuant to s. 526.

Barring a review under these provisions the effect of s. 523(1) is that the release or detention order remains in effect until verdict. Where the accused is found guilty then the release order remains in effect unless the judge orders that he be taken into custody pending sentence. Section 523(1.1) provides a procedure for the release order in respect of one information to apply to a new information charging the same offence, or an included offence.

Where the accused pleads guilty either prior to the show cause hearing under s. 515 or in the course of the hearing then, pursuant to s. 518(2), the justice may make an order provided for in s. 515 for his release pending sentence.

The procedure for enforcement of a recognizance is set out in Part XXV. That Part sets out the responsibilities of sureties (s. 764); procedure for rendering of accused by his sureties (ss. 766, 767 and 769); substitution of a new surety (s. 767.1), and the new release hearing where the accused is rendered into custody by his sureties (s. 769). That Part also sets out the procedure in case of default by the accused, including endorsing the fact of the default (s. 770); the hearing for estreat of the bail (s. 771); levying execution to enforce a writ of fiery facias where the recognizance is ordered forfeited (ss. 772 and 773).

There are special limitations on the making of interim release and detention orders where the court makes an assessment order under Part XX.1. See in particular ss. 672.16, 672.17 and 672.18.

ANNOTATIONS

Burden of proof – The evidentiary burden upon the Crown at this early stage is upon the minimum standard, the balance of probability: R. v. Julian (1972), 20 C.R.N.S. 227 (N.S.S.C.).

Fixing amount of deposit – It was held in R. v. Garrington (1972), 9 C.C.C. (2d) 472, [1973] 1 O.R. 370 (H.C.J.) that it was wrong to fix the amount of the cash deposit as some portion of the amount still unrecovered (the accused were charged with a robbery of a large amount of money) or to fix the amount so high that it was effectively a detention order.

Fixing amount of surety – Where the amount fixed for sureties is so high that in effect it amounts to a detention order it will be reduced accordingly: R. v. Cichanski (1976), 25 C.C.C. (2d) 84 (Ont. H.C.J.).

Reasonable conditions – To come within the meaning of the term “reasonable conditions”, the particular term must be related to a purpose which would otherwise justify the accused’s detention pending trial: R. v. Keenan (1979), 57 C.C.C. (2d) 267, 12 C.R. (3d) 135 (Que. C.A.).

The justice may validly impose a condition that the accused remain out of a certain part of the city where the term is designed to prevent the commission of further offences while the accused is on judicial interim release: R. v. Bielefeld (1981), 64 C.C.C. (2d) 216 (B.C.S.C.).

Effect of order to stand trial on lesser offence – Where an accused who has been ordered detained on a charge of robbery is committed for trial on the lesser offence of attempted robbery the original order remains in effect: Ex p. Walker (1974), 20 C.C.C. (2d) 539 (Ont. H.C.J.); cf. R. v. Lafontaine (1973), 13 C.C.C. (2d) 316 (Ont. H.C.J.) noted under s. 522.

Requirement of reasons – The requirement of reasons is directory only and the failure to give reasons does not affect the validity of the detention order: R. v. Baker (1973), 13 C.C.C. (2d) 340 (B.C.S.C.).

Reverse onus [subsec. (6)] – Notwithstanding an accused may fall within this subsection the basic philosophy of the interim release provisions is that prior to conviction all those persons who do not constitute a danger to public and who will show up for trial ought not to be detained in custody. Where as a result of this subsection the onus is on the accused the Justice must still consider the two grounds set out in subsec. (10) in determining whether or not to release the accused. The Justice does not have a residual discretion to refuse bail: R. v. Quinn (1977), 34 C.C.C. (2d) 473 (N.S.Co.Ct.); Batson, Webb and Conrad (1977), 21 N.B.R. (2d) 275 (C.A.).

The reverse onus prescribed by subsec. (2)(d) does not violate ss. 7, 9 or 11(e) of the Charter. The onus which subsec. (2)(d) imposes is reasonable in the sense that it requires the accused to provide information which he is most capable of providing. The special rules combat the pre-trial recidivism and absconding problems which are characteristic of systematic drug trafficking which usually occurs in a highly sophisticated and lucrative commercial setting. While the provision also applies to the small or casual drug dealers, they will normally have no difficulty in justifying their release and obtaining bail: R. v. Pearson (1992), 77 C.C.C. (3d) 124, [1992] 3 S.C.R. 665, 17 C.R. (4th) 1.

Similarly, the scope of subsec. (6)(a) is sufficiently narrow to constitute just cause under s. 11(e) and is constitutional: R. v. Morales (1992), 77 C.C.C. (3d) 91, [1992] 3 S.C.R. 711, 17 C.R. (4th) 74.

Grounds for detention [subsec. (10)] – The public safety component or para. (b), namely where there is a substantial likelihood that the accused if released will interfere with the administration of justice or commit further crimes, constitutes just cause for the denial of bail within the meanings of s. 11(e) of the Charter. However, the “public interest” component as a basis for pre-trial detention does violate s. 11(e) because it authorizes detention in terms which are vague and imprecise and thus authorizes a denial of bail without just cause. This component is thus unconstitutional and the words “in the public interest or” should be struck down: R. v. Morales, supra.

Even where there is very strong evidence against the accused this is merely one factor to be taken into account by the judge: R. v. Perron (1989), 51 C.C.C. (3d) 518, 73 C.R. (3d) 174 (Que. C.A.).

The fact that a co-accused has been released is not a relevant consideration where there is no evidence before the court as to the proceedings with respect to that accused. Nor is the likelihood of substantial delay a relevant consideration since the Code provides for review in cases of undue delay: R. v. Lesage (1975), 25 C.C.C. (2d) 173 (Que. Sess. Peace).

REMAND IN CUSTODY.

516. A justice may, before or at any time during the course of any proceedings under section 515, on application by the prosecutor or the accused, adjourn the proceedings and remand the accused to custody in prison by warrant in Form 19, but no adjournment shall be for more than three clear days except with the consent of the accused. R.S., c. 2 (2nd Supp.), s. 5.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term “justice” is defined in s. 2. As to calculation of “clear days” see s. 27(1) of the Interpretation Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. I-21. For an overview of the application of this Part and the procedure respecting release pending trial see Note on judicial interim release under s. 515, or the Note on judicial interim release under s. 522 where the accused is charged with an offence listed in s. 469.

SYNOPSIS

This section authorizes a justice at any time, either before or during a hearing under s. 515, to adjourn proceedings and remand the accused to custody in prison. Such a remand will be made in Form 19 and shall not be for a longer period than three clear days, unless the accused person consents. The remand may be made upon application by either the prosecutor or the accused.

ANNOTATIONS

Failure to comply with this section, i.e., by failing to issue a warrant of committal, though it may render unlawful his detention during the period does not affect the Court’s jurisdiction over the accused or the offence: Re Morrison and The Queen (1975), 29 C.C.C. (2d) 323, [1976] W.W.D. 18 (B.C.S.C.).

The proceedings must be continued within the three clear days. Thus an adjournment on the 22nd day of the month to the 26th day of the month without the accused’s consent does not comply with this section: R. v. Khabra (1978), 39 C.C.C. (2d) 475, 2 C.R. (3d) 187 (B.C.S.C.).

On a court-ordered remand in custody if gaol facilities are available the accused must be held there separate from police investigation holding-cells: R. v. Precourt (1976), 39 C.C.C. (2d) 311, 36 C.R.N.S. 150 (Ont. C.A.).

ORDER DIRECTING MATTERS NOT TO BE PUBLISHED FOR SPECIFIED PERIOD / Failure to comply / Definition of “newspaper”.

517. (1) Where the prosecutor or the accused intends to show cause under section 515, he shall so state to the justice and the justice may, and shall on application by the accused, before or at any time during the course of the proceedings under that section, make an order directing that the evidence taken, the information given or the representations made and the reasons, if any, given or to be given by the justice shall not be published in any newspaper or broadcast before such time as

- (a) if a preliminary inquiry is held, the accused in respect of whom the proceedings are held is discharged; or
- (b) if the accused in respect of whom the proceedings are held is tried or ordered to stand trial, the trial is ended.
- (2) Every one who fails without lawful excuse, the proof of which lies on him, to comply with an order made under subsection (1) is guilty of an offence punishable on summary conviction.
- (3) In this section, "newspaper" has the same meaning as in section 297. R.S., c. 2 (2nd Supp.), s. 5; 1974-75-76, c. 93, s. 48; R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 101(2)(a).

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms "prosecutor" and "justice" are defined in s. 2. For an overview of the application of this Part and the procedure respecting release pending trial see Note on judicial interim release under s. 515, or the Note on judicial interim release under s. 522 where the accused is charged with an offence listed in s. 469.

Trial of the offence under subsec. (2) is conducted by a summary conviction court pursuant to Part XXVII. The punishment is as set out in s. 787 [except note the maximum fine provided for in s. 719 in the case of a corporation] and the limitation period is set out in s. 786(2).

SYNOPSIS

This section authorizes a justice dealing with a hearing under s. 515 to make an order directing that matters not be published for a specified period.

Subsection (1) states that the justice shall, upon application by the accused during proceedings under s. 515, make an order that evidence, information, representations and reasons given, not be published in any newspaper or broadcast. Such an order may be made to last, if a preliminary hearing is held, until such time, if applicable, as the accused is discharged or, if the accused is committed for trial, until the trial ends. The justice may also make such an order on his or her own initiative.

Subsection (2) makes failure to comply with an order under this section a summary conviction offence. The accused must prove that such a failure to comply was with lawful excuse.

ANNOTATIONS

A Judge has no power to prohibit publication of his decision granting or refusing release. He may only prohibit publication of his reasons for the decision: R. v. Forget (1982), 65 C.C.C. (2d) 373, 35 O.R. (2d) 238 (C.A.).

A judge has no power under this section to also order a ban on publication of the identity of the accused or on information which journalists have obtained from the police: Southam Inc. v. Brassard (1987), 38 C.C.C. (3d) 74, 59 C.R. (3d) 161, [1987] R.J.Q. 1841 (Que. S.C.), where however it was pointed out that publication of material which would interfere in some manner with the course of justice would amount to contempt of court.

The temporary ban on publication provided for in this section is not an unconstitutional infringement of freedom of expression as guaranteed by ss. 1 and 2(b) of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms: Re Global Communications Ltd. and A.-G. Can. (1984), 10 C.C.C. (3d) 97, 38 C.R. (3d) 209, 44 O.R. (2d) 609 (C.A.).

INQUIRIES TO BE MADE BY JUSTICE AND EVIDENCE / Release pending sentence.

518. (1) In any proceedings under section 515,

- (a) the justice may, subject to paragraph (b), make such inquiries, on oath or otherwise, of and concerning the accused as he considers desirable;
- (b) the accused shall not be examined by the justice or any other person except counsel for the accused respecting the offence with which the accused is charged, and no inquiry shall be made of the accused respecting that offence by way of cross-examination unless the accused has testified respecting the offence;

- (c) the prosecutor may, in addition to any other relevant evidence, lead evidence
  - (i) to prove that the accused has previously been convicted of a criminal offence,
  - (ii) to prove that the accused has been charged with and is awaiting trial for another criminal offence,
  - (iii) to prove that the accused has previously committed an offence under section 145, or
  - (iv) to show the circumstances of the alleged offence, particularly as they relate to the probability of conviction of the accused;
- (d) the justice may take into consideration any relevant matters agreed on by the prosecutor and the accused or his counsel;
- (d.1) the justice may receive evidence obtained as a result of an interception of a private communication under and within the meaning of Part VI, in writing, orally or in the form of a recording and, for the purposes of this section, subsection 189(5) does not apply to that evidence; and
- (e) the justice may receive and base his decision on evidence considered credible or trustworthy by him in the circumstances of each case.

(2) Where, before or at any time during the course of any proceedings under section 515, the accused pleads guilty and that plea is accepted, the justice may make any order provided for in this Part for the release of the accused until the accused is sentenced. R.S., c. 2 (2nd Supp.), s. 5; 1974-75-76, c. 93, s. 49; R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 84; 1994, c. 44, s. 45.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms “prosecutor” and “justice” are defined in s. 2. For an overview of the application of this Part and the procedure respecting release pending trial see Note on judicial interim release under s. 515, or the Note on judicial interim release under s. 522 where the accused is charged with an offence listed in s. 469.

SYNOPSIS

This section describes the kinds of inquiries that may be made and evidence that may be led in proceedings under s. 515.

While the justice is empowered to make such inquiries as he considers desirable, para. (b) makes it clear that the accused may not be cross-examined respecting the offence with which he has been charged unless the accused has testified in chief respecting the offence. The prosecutor may lead evidence on issues that are enumerated in para. (c) as well as on other relevant matters. The justice may consider any relevant information agreed to by the prosecutor and the accused or counsel for the accused.

Paragraph (d.1) states that the justice may receive evidence obtained as a result of an interception of private communications. Section 189(5), which deals with admission into evidence of intercepted communications, does not apply.

Subsection (2) allows a justice to make any order of release found in Part XVI when the accused pleads guilty and is remanded for sentence.

ANNOTATIONS

Examination of accused [subsec. (1)(b)] – This subsection does not preclude the Crown from tendering evidence as to the accused’s extra-judicial statements and such statements to persons in authority are admissible without a voir dire to determine voluntariness: Bouffard v. The Queen (1979), 16 C.R. (3d) 373 (Que. S.C.).

A statement obtained from the accused during the hearing in violation of this paragraph is not admissible in subsequent Court proceedings against the accused: Re Deom et al. and The Queen (1981), 64 C.C.C. (2d) 222 (B.C.S.C.). This is so even where the violation is initiated by the accused's own counsel in examination of the accused: R. v. Paonessa and Paquette (1982), 66 C.C.C. (2d) 300, 27 C.R. (3d) 179, 36 O.R. (2d) 221 (C.A.), affd on other grounds 3 C.C.C. (3d) 384, 34 C.R. (3d) 96 (S.C.C.) (5:0).

Probability of conviction – See also notes under s. 515.

Meaning of “credible or trustworthy” [subsec. (1)(e)] – Credible and trustworthy evidence includes evidence ordinarily inadmissible at trial as long as the other party has fair opportunity to correct or contradict it: Re Powers and The Queen (1972), 9 C.C.C. (2d) 583, 20 C.R.N.S. 23 (Ont. H.C.J.). Similarly R. v. Woo (1994), 90 C.C.C. (3d) 404 (B.C.S.C.).

While this paragraph entitles the justice to act on hearsay evidence considered trustworthy as well as direct evidence considered credible, it is not authority for Crown counsel simply reading a statement of the circumstances of the offence, a procedure which deprives the accused of his right to cross-examine: R. v. Hajdu (1984), 14 C.C.C. (3d) 563 (Ont. H.C.J.). Similarly, R. v. Woo (1994), 90 C.C.C. (3d) 404 (B.C.S.C.).

However, consider R. v. Dhindsa et al. (1986), 30 C.C.C. (3d) 368 (B.C.S.C.) holding that both Crown and defence counsel may make statements as to the anticipated evidence. Where there is a controversy or contradiction, then affidavits may be tendered and relied upon and if affidavits will not suffice to resolve the conflict, then viva voce evidence could be called and cross-examination take place.

RELEASE OF ACCUSED / Discharge from custody / Warrant for committal.

- 519. (1) Where a justice makes an order under subsection 515(1), (2), (7) or (8),
- (a) if the accused thereupon complies with the order, the justice shall direct that the accused be released
    - (i) forthwith, if the accused is not required to be detained in custody in respect of any other matter, or
    - (ii) as soon thereafter as the accused is no longer required to be detained in custody in respect of any other matter; and
  - (b) if the accused does not thereupon comply with the order, the justice who made the order or another justice having jurisdiction shall issue a warrant for the committal of the accused and may endorse thereon an authorization to the person having the custody of the accused to release the accused when the accused complies with the order
    - (i) forthwith after the compliance, if the accused is not required to be detained in custody in respect of any other matter, or
    - (ii) as soon thereafter as the accused is no longer required to be detained in custody in respect of any other matter and if the justice so endorses the warrant, he shall attach to it a copy of the order.
- (2) Where the accused complies with an order referred to in paragraph (1)(b) and is not required to be detained in custody in respect of any other matter, the justice who made the order or another justice having jurisdiction shall, unless the accused has been or will be released pursuant to an authorization referred to in that paragraph, issue an order for discharge in Form 39.
- (3) Where the justice makes an order under subsection 515(5) or (6) for the detention of the accused, he shall issue a warrant for the committal of the accused. R.S., c. 2 (2nd Supp.), s. 5; 1974-75-76, c. 93, s. 50; R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 85.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term “justice” is defined in s. 2. “Warrant of committal” is defined in s. 493. Section 841 provides that forms varied to suit the case and forms to the like effect shall be deemed to be good, valid and sufficient in the circumstances for which, respectively, they are provided. For an overview of the application of this Part and the procedure respecting release pending trial see Note on judicial interim release under s. 515, or the Note on judicial interim release under s. 522 where the accused is charged with an offence listed in s. 469.

SYNOPSIS

This section deals with the release of the accused after a justice has made an order under s. 515(1), (2), (7) or (8).

Subsection (1) provides that where a justice makes a release order under s. 515, the accused shall be released if he complies with the order. Such release will be immediate if the accused is not required to be held in custody on another matter, or as soon as the accused is not required to be detained on another matter. If the accused does not comply with the order under s. 515, a justice having jurisdiction must issue a warrant for the accused's committal. In such a case, the justice may endorse on the warrant an authorization to release the accused when he complies with the order. The timing of this release will depend on the matters set out in paras. (b)(i) and (ii).

Subsection (2) states that when the accused complies with an order referred to in subsection (1)(b) and is not required to be detained in custody on another matter, the accused may also be released by way of an order for discharge in Form 39.

Subsection (3) states that a justice who has ordered the detention of the accused must issue a warrant of committal.

ANNOTATIONS

A judge has no power to make a "release" order permitting an accused serving a penitentiary sentence to be released on condition that he reside at the penitentiary except where entitled to be absent pursuant to passes granted by the Parole Board: R. v. Arviv (1987), 38 C.C.C. (3d) 283 (Ont. Dist. Ct.).

It is the duty of the justice or judge to determine the sufficiency of a proposed surety not the Crown Attorney: R. v. Dewsbury (1989), 50 C.C.C. (3d) 163, 39 C.R.R. 301 (Ont. H.C.J.).

REVIEW OF ORDER OF JUSTICE / Notice to prosecutor / Accused to be present / Adjournment of proceedings / Failure of accused to attend / Execution / Evidence and powers of judge on review / Limitation of further applications / Application of ss. 517, 518 and 519.

520. (1) Where a justice makes an order under subsection 515(2), (5), (6), (7), (8) or (12) or makes or vacates any order under paragraph 523(2)(b), the accused may, at any time before the trial of the charge, apply to a judge for a review of the order made by the justice.

(2) An application under this section shall not, unless the prosecutor otherwise consents, be heard by a judge unless the accused has given to the prosecutor at least two clear days notice in writing of the application.

(3) If the judge so orders or the prosecutor or the accused or his counsel so requests, the accused shall be present at the hearing of an application under this section and, where the accused is in custody, the judge may order, in writing, the person having the custody of the accused to bring him before the court.

(4) A judge may, before or at any time during the hearing of an application under this section, on application by the prosecutor or the accused, adjourn the proceedings, but if the accused is in custody no adjournment shall be for more than three clear days except with the consent of the accused.

(5) Where an accused, other than an accused who is in custody, has been ordered by a judge to be present at the hearing of an application under this section and does not attend the hearing, the judge may issue a warrant for the arrest of the accused.

(6) A warrant issued under subsection (5) may be executed anywhere in Canada.

(7) On the hearing of an application under this section, the judge may consider

- (a) the transcript, if any, of the proceedings heard by the justice and by any judge who previously reviewed the order made by the justice,
- (b) the exhibits, if any, filed in the proceedings before the justice, and
- (c) such additional evidence or exhibits as may be tendered by the accused or the prosecutor, and shall either

- (d) dismiss the application, or
- (e) if the accused shows cause, allow the application, vacate the order previously made by the justice and make any other order provided for in section 515 that he considers is warranted.

(8) Where an application under this section or section 521 has been heard, a further or other application under this section or section 521 shall not be made with respect to that same accused, except with leave of a judge, prior to the expiration of thirty days from the date of the decision of the judge who heard the previous application.

(9) The provisions of section 517, 518 and 519 apply with such modifications as the circumstances require in respect of an application under this section. R.S., c. 2 (2nd Supp.), s. 5; 1974-75-76, c. 93, s. 51; R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 86; 1994, c. 44, s. 46.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms "prosecutor" and "justice" are defined in s. 2 and "judge" in s. 493. As to calculation of "at least two clear days" see s. 27 of the Interpretation Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. I-21. For an overview of the application of this Part and the procedure respecting release pending trial see Note on judicial interim release under s. 515, or the Note on judicial interim release under s. 522 where the accused is charged with an offence listed in s. 469.

SYNOPSIS

This section sets out the procedure by which an accused may obtain a review of the order made by a justice under s. 515(2), (5), (6), (7), (8) or (12). The decision of a justice to vacate an order under s. 523(2)(b) may also be reviewed by the accused under this section.

Subsection (1) allows the accused to apply to a judge for a review of the order at any time prior to trial.

Unless the prosecutor consents, subsec. (2) requires that a review under this section be heard only if the accused has given to the prosecutor two clear days' notice.

If the prosecutor, the accused or his counsel requests, or the judge so orders, the accused shall be present at the hearing of an application under this section.

Subsection (3) provides that where the accused is in custody, the judge may order in writing the person having custody of the accused to bring him to court.

Subsection (4) authorizes a judge to adjourn the hearing of the application at the request of the prosecutor or the accused. Such application may be brought prior to or during the hearing. If the accused is in custody, no adjournment for more than three clear days will be granted unless the accused consents.

If an accused who is not in custody is ordered by a judge to be present at the hearing and does not attend, the judge is authorized by subsec. (5) to issue an arrest warrant. This warrant may be executed anywhere in Canada.

Subsection (7) lists in paras. (a), (b) and (c) the items that the judge hearing the application may consider. Subsection (7)(d) and (e) empower the judge to either dismiss the application or, if the accused shows cause, allow the application, vacate the earlier order and make any other order under s. 515 that is appropriate.

Subsection (8) makes it clear that the accused may make further applications under this section or s. 521 only after 30 days have expired since the previous application, unless the judge gives leave.

Subsection (9) states that the provisions of ss. 517, 518 and 519 will apply with necessary modifications in an application under this section.

ANNOTATIONS

Jurisdiction – While subsec. (1) only refers to review of an order by a “justice”, the wording of this subsection indicates that the accused may apply for review of an order of a Judge made either under this section or s. 521: R. v. Gouveia (1982), 1 C.C.C. (3d) 143 (Ont. H.C.J.), R. v. Saracino (1989), 47 C.C.C. (3d) 185 (Ont. H.C.J.). Contra: R. v. Lahooti (1978), 38 C.C.C. (2d) 481 (Ont. H.C.J.).

While a Judge of the Manitoba Court of Appeal has jurisdiction to review a refusal to make an order for judicial interim release, in the absence of special circumstances the further application for review should be made to a Judge of the Court of Queen’s Bench: R. v. Petrie, [1985] 2 W.W.R. 128, 30 Man. R. (2d) 145 (C.A. in chambers); R. v. Semenick, [1985] 2 W.W.R. 132, 30 Man. R. (2d) 147 (C.A. in chambers).

Nature of review – “A review” of the Justice’s order gives the Judge the power to substitute his own discretion. The new bail sections should be liberally interpreted in favour of the accused with less emphasis on the nature of the offence: R. v. Thompson (1972), 7 C.C.C. (2d) 70, 18 C.R.N.S. 102 (B.C.S.C.).

The review by the Judge of the Justice’s order is in effect a de novo hearing and is not an appeal based only on the record of proceedings before the Justice: Re Powers and The Queen (1972), 9 C.C.C. (2d) 533, 20 C.R.N.S. 23 (Ont. H.C.J.). Folld R. v. Sexton (1976), 33 C.R.N.S. 307 (Nfld. Dist.Ct.).

In R. v. O’Neill (1973), 11 C.C.C. (2d) 240, 21 C.R.N.S. 107 (N.B.S.C.) the Judge treated the review as an appeal and determined whether or not there was evidence upon which the Justice could have reasonably made his order.

These proceedings are not a hearing de novo but are a form of review to determine whether or not the provincial court judge erred in law or principle in making his order, and accordingly, barring extraordinary circumstances, a transcript of the original hearing is necessary: Hunter v. The Queen (1973), 24 C.R.N.S. 197 (Ont. Co. Ct.).

An application under this section is not strictly an ordinary appeal so that while due consideration must be given to the initial order of the Justice, the Judge is entitled to exercise an independent discretion: R. v. Carrier (1979), 51 C.C.C. (2d) 307, 2 Man. R. (2d) 168 (C.A. in Chambers).

Procedure on review – Upon review the onus is upon the applicant to demonstrate an error in law or principle by the Justice of the Peace who made the order under review: R. v. Horvat (1972), 9 C.C.C. (2d) 1 (B.C.S.C.).

The order of a justice of the peace vacated in para. (e) is not rendered void ab initio so as to negative any charge laid for breaching it, but instead is terminated in favour of the substituted order: R. v. Goldrick (1974), 17 C.C.C. (2d) 74, 25 C.R.N.S. 389 (Ont. H.C.J.).

While the Judge may hear additional evidence, the transcript of the proceedings before the Justice should be filed with the Court, otherwise it would be impossible to determine whether or not the Justice was in error: Hunter v. The Queen (1973), 24 C.R.N.S. 197 (Ont. Co. Ct.).

However, a transcript is not always required, particularly where no viva voce evidence was heard before the Justice, merely counsel’s submissions, and to require the transcript might defeat the intent of this legislation which was to encourage expeditious disposition of bail matters: R. v. Carrier (1979), 51 C.C.C. (2d) 307, 2 Man. R. (2d) 168 (C.A. in Chambers).

It has been held, considering the predecessor to para. (e), that even where the accused demonstrates some error by the justice in the making of the initial detention order or the conduct of the hearing, the judge is not required to vacate the detention order and make a release order unless the accused shows why the detention order was not justified on the primary or secondary ground. On the review the Crown may rely on the evidence at the original hearing and may adduce additional evidence to justify the accused's continued detention: R. v. English (1983), 8 C.C.C. (3d) 487 (Ont. Co. Ct.); R. v. Saswirsky (1984), 17 C.C.C. (3d) 341, 43 C.R. (3d) 276 (Ont. H.C.J.).

521. (1) Where a justice makes an order under subsection 515(1), (2), (7), (8) or (12) or makes or vacates any order under paragraph 523(2)(b), the prosecutor may, at any time before the trial of the charge, apply to a judge for a review of the order made by the justice.

(2) An application under this section shall not be heard by a judge unless the prosecutor has given to the accused at least two clear days notice in writing of the application.

(3) If the judge so orders or the prosecutor or the accused or his counsel so requests, the accused shall be present at the hearing of an application under this section and, where the accused is in custody, the judge may order, in writing, the person having the custody of the accused to bring him before the court.

(4) A judge may, before or at any time during the hearing of an application under this section, on application of the prosecutor or the accused, adjourn the proceedings, but if the accused is in custody no adjournment shall be for more than three clear days except with the consent of the accused.

(5) Where an accused, other than an accused who is in custody, has been ordered by a judge to be present at the hearing of an application under this section and does not attend the hearing, the judge may issue a warrant for the arrest of the accused.

(6) Where, pursuant to paragraph (8)(e), the judge makes an order that the accused be detained in custody until he is dealt with according to law, he shall, if the accused is not in custody, issue a warrant for the committal of the accused.

(7) A warrant issued under subsection (5) or (6) may be executed anywhere in Canada.

(8) On the hearing of an application under this section, the judge may consider

- (a) the transcript, if any, of the proceedings heard by the justice and by any judge who previously reviewed the order made by the justice,
- (b) the exhibits, if any, filed in the proceedings before the justice, and
- (c) such additional evidence or exhibits as may be tendered by the prosecutor or the accused,

and shall either

- (d) dismiss the application, or
- (e) if the prosecutor shows cause, allow the application, vacate the order previously made by the justice and make any other order provided for in section 515 that he considers to be warranted.

(9) Where an application under this section or section 520 has been heard, a further or other application under this section or section 520 shall not be made with respect to the same accused, except with leave of a judge, prior to the expiration of thirty days from the date of the decision of the judge who heard the previous application.

(10) The provisions of sections 517, 518 and 519 apply with such modifications as the circumstances require in respect of an application under this section. R.S., c. 2 (2nd Supp.), s. 5; 1974-75-76, c. 93, s. 52; R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 87; 1994, c. 44, s. 47.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms “prosecutor” and “justice” are defined in s. 2 and “judge” in s. 493. As to calculation of “at least two clear days” see s. 27 of the Interpretation Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. I-21. For an overview of the application of this Part and the procedure respecting release pending trial see Note on judicial interim release under s. 515, or the Note on judicial interim release under s. 522 where the accused is charged with an offence listed in s. 469.

SYNOPSIS

This section is the companion to s. 520. It describes the procedure that the prosecutor must follow to review an order made by a justice under s. 515(1), (2), (7), (8) or (12) or vacated by a justice under s. 523(2)(b).

Subsection (2) requires that the prosecutor give the accused at least two clear days’ notice in writing of the application.

Subsection (3) provides for the presence of the accused if the judge so orders or the prosecutor or the accused so requests. Where the accused is in custody, the judge may order in writing the person having custody of the accused to bring him to court.

Subsection (4) authorizes the judge to adjourn the proceedings at any time prior to or during the hearing upon application by the prosecutor or the accused. If the accused is in custody, no adjournment shall be longer than three days unless the accused consents.

Subsection (5) states that when an accused who is not in custody and who has been ordered by the judge to be present at the hearing of an application under this section, fails to attend, the judge may issue an arrest warrant.

If the judge makes an order under this section that the accused be detained in custody, he must issue a warrant of committal if the accused is not in custody. A warrant issued under this subsection or subsec. (5) may be executed anywhere in Canada.

Subsection (8) sets out items that a judge may consider in a hearing under this section. It also describes the dispositions available to the judge at the conclusion of the hearing.

Subsection (9), like s. 520(8), requires a waiting period of 30 days between applications under this section or s. 520, unless a judge gives leave.

Subsection (10) makes the provision of ss. 517, 518 and 519 applicable to a proceeding under this section with such modifications as circumstances require.

ANNOTATIONS

In the absence of evidence of excess of jurisdiction or error in principle, a Judge on review, even though he would not have come to the same decision as did the Justice, should not alter it unless the prosecutor can show cause by additional evidence or by pointing to a demonstrable error: R. v. La Chapelle and La Chapelle (1974), 19 C.C.C. (2d) 70 (N.S.S.C.).

An application may be made under this section although the order sought to be reviewed is that of a judge under s. 520 rather than an order of a justice. However, except where there has been a substantial change in circumstances, the judge conducting the second review should not interfere with the existing order unless it is established that the judge conducting the first review made an error in principle in application of the relevant provisions which materially affected the outcome of the initial application: R. v. Saracino (1989), 47 C.C.C. (3d) 185 (Ont. H.C.J.).

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term "superior court of criminal jurisdiction" is defined in s. 2. The terms "accused", "recognizance" and "undertaking" are defined in s. 493.

Note on judicial interim release – Where the accused is charged with an offence listed in s. 469 such as murder then he may not be released by a peace officer, officer in charge or justice. Section 503 requires that he be taken before a justice (defined in s. 2) without unreasonable delay and, in any event, within 24 hours, where a justice is available. The justice will then make a detention order (s. 515(11)). The onus is then on the accused to apply for a show cause hearing by making an application under s. 522 to a judge of the superior court of criminal jurisdiction (defined in s. 2). The procedure on the s. 522 hearing is similar to the show cause hearing under s. 515 except that the onus is on the accused in all cases to show why his detention is not justified for the reasons set out in s. 515(10). Where the accused shows cause then the judge may order the accused's release on an undertaking or recognizance on the same terms as may a justice acting under s. 515(2), (4) and (4.1) and thus see the discussion under s. 515.

Sections 517 and 518 set out the procedure to be followed on the bail hearing. Section 517 provides for a non-publication order. Section 518 sets out the kind of evidence which may be tendered on the hearing. The effect of s. 518 is to give a relatively wide latitude to the judge permitting him to receive and base his decision on evidence "considered credible or trustworthy". Thus the rules of evidence which would apply at a trial would not apply on the bail hearing. One limit on the receipt of evidence is the proviso in s. 518(1)(b) which prohibits questioning of the accused respecting the offence with which he is charged. The scope of this subsection is uncertain, there being some case law noted under s. 518 holding that while the accused cannot be asked by the judge or the prosecutor about the offence he is entitled to volunteer his testimony concerning it. The presence of the accused would not appear to be mandatory. Where a release order is made then s. 519 sets out the procedure for putting the order into effect and the circumstances in which the accused will be released.

The system for review of either a release or detention order is more restricted than is the case of an accused charged with a non-s. 469 offence. There is no right to a review. The only formal review mechanism is set out in s. 680 and requires an application to the Chief Justice or acting Chief Justice of the Court of Appeal for directions referring the case to the Court of Appeal (defined in ss. 2 and 673). Where the Chief Justice gives such directions then the Court of Appeal will hear the review application and may confirm the decision, vary the decision or substitute such other decision as, in its opinion, should have been made. Under s. 680(2) with the consent of the parties the review directed by the Chief Justice may be heard by a single judge rather than by three judges of the Court of Appeal.

Section 523(2) also provides for a more informal review process at various stages of the proceedings but only by a judge of the superior court of criminal jurisdiction. Note, however, that the release or detention order can only be vacated under this subsection upon cause being shown and in some circumstances the review can only be undertaken where both the accused and the prosecutor consent. Section 524 enacts a procedure for dealing with cases where it is alleged that the accused has violated or is about to violate the release order or has committed an indictable offence while on a form of release. That section gives a power to arrest with (subsec. (1)) or without warrant (subsec. (2)). Upon arrest under this section the accused will be taken before a justice who is required to remand the accused to appear before a judge of the superior court of criminal jurisdiction. Where it is shown that his arrest was justified (subsec. (4)) then the release order is cancelled by the judge. The accused is then ordered detained unless he can show cause why he should not be detained in custody. If the accused shows cause then s. 524(5) provides for the types of release order which may be made. Any order made under s. 524 may only be reviewed pursuant to s. 680. The procedure on the s. 524 hearing is similar to the original show cause hearing (subsec. (12)). There is some uncertainty as to the scope of s. 524 where the accused is arrested for an indictable offence while on a s. 522 release order. It would seem that the procedure to be followed is that unless the prosecutor elects to proceed under s. 524 the justice will have jurisdiction to proceed with a bail hearing in relation to the new non-s. 469 charge under s. 515. See R. v. Yarema (1989), 52 C.C.C. (3d) 242 (Ont. H.C.J.), noted under s. 524.

The automatic review procedure set out in s. 525 does not apply to an accused charged with a s. 469 offence. Section 526 however provides that the judge conducting a hearing under this Part may give directions for expediting the trial.

Barring a review under ss. 680, 523(2) or 524 then the effect of s. 523(1) is that the release order remains in effect until the trial is completed. Section 523(1.1) provides a procedure for the release order in respect of one information to apply to a new information charging the same offence or an included offence.

Under s. 522(6) where the accused is also charged with an offence not listed in s. 469 the judge to whom an application is made under s. 522 may also make an order for release or detention in respect of this other offence. Invoking subsec. (6) will avoid the necessity of multiple hearings in the case of an accused charged with an offence listed in s. 469 and some other offence.

The procedure for enforcement of a recognizance is set out in Part XXV. That Part sets out the responsibilities of sureties (s. 764); procedure for rendering of the accused by his sureties (ss. 766, 767, 769); substitution of a new surety (s. 767.1), and the new release hearing where the accused is rendered into custody by his sureties (s. 769). That Part also sets out the procedure in case of default by the accused, including endorsing the fact of the default (s. 770); the hearing for estreat of bail (s. 771), and levying execution to enforce a writ of fiery facias where the recognizance is ordered forfeited (ss. 772, 773).

There are special limitations on the making of interim release and detention orders where the court makes an assessment order under Part XX.1. See in particular ss. 672.16, 672.17 and 672.18.

ANNOTATIONS

Prior to the recent amendments to this section there was some uncertainty as to whether a detention or release order made under this section in relation to a murder charge lapsed when the accused was committed for trial on a charge of manslaughter (an offence not specified in s. 469). The following cases hold that in such circumstances there should be a new bail hearing before a justice or provincial court judge: R. v. LaFontaine (1973), 13 C.C.C. (2d) 316, 23 C.R.N.S. 4 (Ont. H.C.J.); R. v. Manuel (1981), 60 C.C.C. (2d) 97, 22 C.R. (3d) 204 (Ont. H.C.J.); R. v. Favel (1985), 19 C.C.C. (3d) 335 (Sask. Q.B.). To the contrary is Re Degerness and The Queen (1980), 57 C.C.C. (2d) 534 (B.C.S.C.).

A detention order made on a charge of first degree murder does not lapse when the accused is committed for trial on a charge of second degree murder and is reviewable only pursuant to s. 680: R. v. Archer (1981), 59 C.C.C. (2d) 384, 21 C.R. 352 (Ont. C.A.).

It was held in relation to the predecessor to this section that the reverse onus in para. (2)(f) in the case of a murder charge does not offend the guarantee to reasonable bail under the Charter of Rights and Freedoms: R. v. Bray (1983), 2 C.C.C. (3d) 325, 32 C.R. (3d) 316, 144 D.L.R. (3d) 305 (Ont. C.A.); R. v. Dubois (No. 2) (1983), 8 C.C.C. (3d) 344 (Que. S.C.). Contra: R. v. Pugsley (1982), 2 C.C.C. (3d) 266, 31 C.R. (3d) 217 (N.S.S.C. App. Div.).

The reverse onus requires the accused to establish that on a balance of probabilities his detention is not justified on either the primary or secondary ground. However, there is no burden on the accused to disprove the offence or his implication in it; the onus is on the Crown to adduce evidence of the accused's implication in the offence: R. v. Bray, supra.

In R. v. Morales (1992), 77 C.C.C. (3d) 91 (S.C.C.) the court held that the "public interest" component of s. 515(10)(b) was too vague and imprecise to withstand constitutional scrutiny and could not be considered just cause to refuse bail. The public safety criteria, that there is a substantial likelihood that the accused will commit an offence or interfere with the administration of justice, are, however, valid. These holdings would also apply to bail applications under this section.

The overwhelming nature of the evidence of guilt and the probability of conviction are merely factors to be considered and are the determining factors in deciding whether the accused should be released pending trial. The accused is entitled to the benefit of the presumption of innocence and the judge should not decide the result of the trial: R. v. Braun (1994), 91 C.C.C. (3d) 237, 33 C.R. (4th) 381, 68 W.A.C. 189 (Sask. C.A.).

Subsection (4) of this section must be read with s. 523(2) which gives a judge of the trial court power to vacate any order previously made upon cause being shown. While resort must be had to the procedure under s. 680 where the allegation is that the original judge made an error, where it is submitted that there has been a change in circumstances the parties should resort to s. 523(2). Where the Crown's consent is required for the review powers to be exercised by a superior court judge, it would be expected that in cases of new circumstances the Crown would not unreasonably withhold its consent: R. v. Patterson (1985), 19 C.C.C. (3d) 149, [1985] 4 W.W.R. 357 (Alta. C.A.).

PERIOD FOR WHICH APPEARANCE NOTICE, ETC., CONTINUES IN FORCE / Where new information charging same offence / Order vacating previous order for release or detention / Provisions applicable to proceedings under subsection (2).

523. (1) Where an accused, in respect of an offence with which he is charged, has not been taken into custody or has been released from custody under or by virtue of any provision of this Part, the appearance notice, promise to appear, summons, undertaking or recognizance issued to, given or entered into by the accused continues in force, subject to its terms, and applies in respect of any new information charging the same offence or an included offence that was received after the appearance notice, promise to appear, summons, undertaking or recognizance was issued, given or entered into,

- (a) where the accused was released from custody pursuant to an order of a judge made under subsection 522(3), until his trial is completed; or
- (b) in any other case,
  - (i) until his trial is completed, and
  - (ii) where the accused is, at his trial, determined to be guilty of the offence, until a sentence within the meaning of section 673 is imposed on the accused unless, at the time the accused is determined to be guilty, the court, judge or justice orders that the accused be taken into custody pending such sentence.

(1.1) Where an accused, in respect of an offence with which he is charged, has not been taken into custody or is being detained or has been released from custody under or by virtue of any provision of this Part and after the order for interim release or detention has been made, or the appearance notice, promise to appear, summons, undertaking or recognizance has been issued, given or entered into, a new information, charging the same offence or an included offence, is received, section 507 or 508, as the case may be, does not apply in respect of the new information and the order for interim release or detention of the accused and the appearance notice, promise to appear, summons, undertaking or recognizance, if any, applies in respect of the new information.

(2) Notwithstanding subsections (1) and (1.1),

- (a) the court, judge or justice before whom an accused is being tried, at any time,
- (b) the justice, on completion of the preliminary inquiry in relation to an offence for which an accused is ordered to stand trial, other than an offence listed in section 469, or
- (c) with the consent of the prosecutor and the accused or, where the accused or the prosecutor applies to vacate an order that would otherwise apply pursuant to subsection (1.1), without such consent, at any time
  - (i) where the accused is charged with an offence other than an offence listed in section 469, the justice by whom an order was made under this Part or any other justice,
  - (ii) where the accused is charged with an offence listed in section 469, a judge of or a judge presiding in a superior court of criminal jurisdiction for the province, or
  - (iii) the court, judge or justice before which or whom an accused is to be tried, may, on cause being shown, vacate any order previously made under this Part for the interim release or detention of the accused and make any other order provided for in this Part for the detention or release of the accused until his trial is completed that the court, judge or justice considers to be warranted.

(3) The provisions of sections 517, 518 and 519 apply, with such modifications as the circumstances require, in respect of any proceedings under subsection (2), except that subsection 518(2) does not apply in respect of an accused who is charged with an offence listed in section 469. R.S., c. 2 (2nd Supp.), s. 5; 1974-75-76, c. 93, s. 54; R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 89.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term “justice” is defined in s. 2 and “accused”, “appearance notice”, “promise to appear”, “undertaking”, “recognizance” and “summons” in s. 493. An order under subsec. (2)(b) is reviewable pursuant to s. 520 or s. 521 by the accused or the prosecutor as the case may be. For an overview of the application of this Part and the procedure respecting release pending trial see Note on judicial interim release under s. 515, or the Note on judicial interim release under s. 522 where the accused is charged with an offence listed in s. 469.

SYNOPSIS

This section describes the periods of time for which various specified forms of release continue to be in force.

Subsection (1) states that an appearance notice, promise to appear, summons, undertaking or recognizance remains in force until the completion of the accused's trial and, unless the judge orders the accused to be detained prior to the imposition of sentence, until the sentencing has been completed. For an accused charged with an offence listed under s. 469, the form of release remains valid until the completion of the trial. Subsection (1.1) provides that when an accused is at liberty on a form of release and a new information charging the same or an included offence is received, the original form of release continues to apply.

Subsection (2) applies notwithstanding subssecs. (1) and (1.1), and authorizes any order previously made under Part XVI to be vacated and replaced with any other order provided for by this Part.

Subsection (3) states that ss. 517, 518 and 519 apply with such modifications as are necessary in respect of any proceedings under subsec. (2).

Section 518(2) does not apply with respect to an accused who is charged with an offence listed in s. 469.

ANNOTATIONS

Subsec. (2) – The mere fact that the accused has been ordered to stand trial is not sufficient cause to warrant the revocation of the accused's release order under para. (a) and the making of a detention order: R. v. Braithwaite (1980), 57 C.C.C. (2d) 351 (N.S.S.C. App. Div.).

The justice may exercise his jurisdiction under para. (b) even where the release order was made by a judge on a review: Re Wedow and The Queen (1981), 62 C.C.C. (2d) 381, 23 C.R. (3d) 187 (Alta. Q.B.).

Where the trial Judge who made the detention order was sitting as a Court of record a writ of habeas corpus is not available to the accused: Ex P. Sternig (1974), 16 C.C.C. (2d) 459, 46 D.L.R. (3d) 317 (Ont. H.C.J.).

ISSUE OF WARRANT FOR ARREST OF ACCUSED / Arrest of accused without warrant / Hearing / Retention of accused / Release of accused / Order not reviewable / Release of accused / Powers of justice after hearing / Release of accused / Reasons / Where justice to order that accused be released / Provisions applicable to proceedings under this section / Certain provisions applicable to order under this section.

524. (1) Where a justice is satisfied that there are reasonable and probable grounds to believe that an accused

(a) has contravened or is about to contravene any summons, appearance notice, promise to appear, undertaking or recognizance that was issued or given to him or entered into by him, or

(b) has committed an indictable offence after any summons, appearance notice, promise to appear, undertaking or recognizance was issued or given to him or entered into by him, he may issue a warrant for the arrest of the accused.

(2) Notwithstanding anything in this Act, a peace officer who believes on reasonable grounds that an accused

- (a) has contravened or is about to contravene any summons, appearance notice, promise to appear, undertaking or recognizance that was issued or given to him or entered into by him, or
- (b) has committed an indictable offence after any summons, appearance notice, promise to appear, undertaking or recognizance was issued or given to him or entered into by him, may arrest the accused without warrant.

(3) Where an accused who has been arrested with a warrant issued under subsection (1), or who has been arrested under subsection (2), is taken before a justice, the justice shall

- (a) where the accused was released from custody pursuant to an order made under subsection 522(3) by a judge of the superior court of criminal jurisdiction of any province, order that the accused be taken before a judge of that court; or
- (b) in any other case, hear the prosecutor and his witnesses, if any, and the accused and his witnesses, if any.

(4) Where an accused described in paragraph (3)(a) is taken before a judge and the judge finds

- (a) that the accused has contravened or had been about to contravene his summons, appearance notice, promise to appear, undertaking or recognizance, or
  - (b) that there are reasonable grounds to believe that the accused has committed an indictable offence after any summons, appearance notice, promise to appear, undertaking or recognizance was issued or given to him or entered into by him,
- he shall cancel the summons, appearance notice, promise to appear, undertaking or recognizance and order that the accused be detained in custody unless the accused, having been given a reasonable opportunity to do so, shows cause why his detention in custody is not justified within the meaning of subsection 515(10).

(5) Where the judge does not order that the accused be detained in custody pursuant to subsection (4), he may order that the accused be released upon his giving an undertaking or entering into a recognizance described in any of paragraphs 515(2) (a) to (e) with such conditions described in subsection 515(4) or, where the accused was at large on an undertaking or a recognizance with conditions, such additional conditions, described in subsection 515(4), as the judge considers desirable.

(6) Any order made under subsection (4) or (5) is not subject to review, except as provided in section 680.

(7) Where the judge does not make a finding under paragraph (4)(a) or (b), he shall order that the accused be released from custody.

(8) Where an accused described in subsection (3), other than an accused to whom paragraph (a) of that subsection applies, is taken before the justice and the justice finds

- (a) that the accused has contravened or had been about to contravene his summons, appearance notice, promise to appear, undertaking or recognizance, or
  - (b) that there are reasonable grounds to believe that the accused has committed an indictable offence after any summons, appearance notice, promise to appear, undertaking or recognizance was issued or given to him or entered into by him,
- he shall cancel the summons, appearance notice, promise to appear, undertaking or recognizance and order that the accused be detained in custody unless the accused, having been given a reasonable opportunity to do so, shows cause why his detention in custody is not justified within the meaning of subsection 515(10).

(9) Where the accused shows cause why his detention in custody is not justified within the meaning of subsection 515(10), the justice shall order that the accused be released upon his giving an undertaking or entering into a recognizance described in any of paragraphs 515(2)(a) to (e) with such conditions, described in subsection 515(4), as the justice considers desirable.

(10) Where the justice makes an order under subsection (9), he shall include in the record a statement of his reasons for making the order, and subsection 515(9) is applicable with such modifications as the circumstances require in respect thereof.

(11) Where the justice does not make a finding under paragraph (8)(a) or (b), he shall order that the accused be released from custody.

(12) The provisions of sections 517, 518 and 519 apply with such modifications as the circumstances require in respect of any proceedings under this section, except that subsection 518(2) does not apply in respect of an accused who is charged with an offence mentioned in section 522.

(13) Section 520 applies in respect of any order made under subsection (8) or (9) as though the order were an order made by a justice under subsection 515(2) or (5), and section 521 applies in respect of any order made under subsection (9) as though the order were an order made by a justice under subsection 515(2). #### CROSS-REFERENCES

The term "justice" is defined in s. 2 and "accused", "appearance notice", "promise to appear", "undertaking", "recognizance" and "summons" in s. 493. Breach of the terms of a release order issued by a peace officer, officer in charge, justice or judge is an offence under s. 145. The procedure for enforcement of a recognizance is set out in Part XXV. That Part sets out the responsibilities of sureties (s. 764); procedure for rendering of the accused by his sureties (ss. 766, 767, 769); substitution of a new surety (s. 767.1); and the new release hearing where the accused is rendered into custody by his sureties (s. 769). That Part also sets out the procedure in case of default by the accused, including endorsing the fact of the default (s. 770); the hearing for estreat of the bail (s. 771); levying execution to enforce a writ of fiat facias where the recognizance is ordered forfeited (ss. 772, 773). For an overview of the application of this Part and the procedure respecting release pending trial see Note on judicial interim release under s. 515, or the Note on judicial interim release under s. 522 where the accused is charged with an offence listed in s. 469.

SYNOPSIS

This section sets out the procedure to be followed when a warrant for the arrest of an accused who is on interim release is sought.

Subsection (1) provides that where a justice is satisfied that there are reasonable grounds to believe that an accused person has contravened or is about to contravene his form of release or has committed an indictable offence after entering into a form of release, that justice may issue a warrant for the arrest of the accused.

Subsection (2) states that when a peace officer has reasonable grounds to believe that the accused has done any of the things listed above, the officer may arrest the accused without a warrant.

Subsection (3) requires the justice before whom an accused, apprehended under subsec. (1) or (2), is brought, to hear the prosecutor, the accused and any witness. If the accused was released in relation to an offence under s. 469, the justice must order that the accused be taken before a judge of the superior court of criminal jurisdiction.

Subsection (4) requires a judge of the superior court of criminal jurisdiction before whom an accused, charged with an offence under s. 469, appears pursuant to subsec. (3), to cancel the accused's form of release if that judge finds that the accused has done any of the things listed in subsec. 4(a) and (b). The judge must order that the accused be detained in custody unless the accused, after being given a reasonable opportunity to do so, shows cause why such detention is not justified.

Subsection (5) allows the judge to release the accused, on conditions, if the judge considers this to be desirable. Any order made under subsec. (4) or (5) above can be reviewed only as provided for in s. 680. If the judge does not find that the accused has done the things described in subsec. (4)(a) and (b), he shall order the release of the accused.

Subsections (8), (9), (10) and (11) provide for a similar scheme to deal with an accused who has been taken into custody after release on charges relating to offences other than those listed in s. 469. In this situation, a justice is empowered to deal with the accused when that person is apprehended.

Subsection (12) provides that ss. 517, 518 and 519 apply, with any necessary modifications, to proceedings under this section except that s. 518(2) does not apply in respect of an accused charged with an offence under s. 469.

Subsection (13) provides that the review procedures described in ss. 520 and 521 apply to a judge under this section.

ANNOTATIONS

Subsec. (1) – A Justice may without the necessity of a specific charge in writing being laid before him issue a warrant for arrest pursuant to this section: Re Fulton and The Queen (1972), 10 C.C.C. (2d) 120, [1973] 2 W.W.R. 174 (Sask. Q.B.).

In acting under this subsection the justice must act judicially. A provincial Court Judge who has himself been witness to the reasonable and probable grounds has no jurisdiction to issue the warrant or conduct the subsequent hearing under subsec. (3). Such a judge does not have the requisite measure of neutrality and detachment: Re Kot and The Queen (1983), 10 C.C.C. (3d) 297 (Ont. H.C.J.). [Note: an appeal to the Ontario Court of Appeal was quashed the issue being moot: 11 C.C.C. (3d) 96n (Ont. C.A.).]

As it is not a term of an appearance notice that the accused keep the peace and be of good behaviour, a justice has no power to issue a warrant under this subsection based merely upon the fact that the accused is charged with subsequently committing a similar offence: Re S and The Queen (1986), 33 C.C.C. (3d) 383 (Sask. Q.B.).

Subsec. (3) – An application under this subsection to cancel the accused's recognizance is properly brought before a justice notwithstanding the release order was made by a Judge on a review under s. 520: Re R. and Kinger (1982), 65 C.C.C. (2d) 483, 28 C.R. (3d) 282 (Alta. C.A.).

Where an accused appears before a justice for alleged misconduct, either under subsec. (1) or (2), as a result of misconduct alleged to have occurred after release by a superior court judge pursuant to s. 522, the justice should first ascertain the basis of the accused's appearance. Where the only reason for the appearance is that the accused has been arrested for alleged misconduct then the justice must order that the accused appear before a superior court judge pursuant to subsec. (3)(a). If, however, in addition, charges have been laid under s. 145 for failing to comply with the release order or for commission of some other criminal offence then the prosecutor should indicate whether or not he proposes to proceed under this section. If the prosecutor elects to proceed under this section then again the justice should order that the accused appear before a superior court judge pursuant to subsec. (3)(a) before dealing with release on the new charges. Where, however, the prosecutor does not so elect then the justice has jurisdiction to deal with release of the accused on the new charges pursuant to s. 515: R. v. Yarema (1989), 52 C.C.C. (3d) 242 (Ont. H.C.J.), affd 64 C.C.C. (3d) 260, 5 C.R. (4th) 125, 3 O.R. (3d) 459 (C.A.).

This section and s. 515 are not mutually exclusive. Thus, even where a hearing has been held before a justice under s. 515 for offences committed while the accused was at large on a release order made by a superior court judge under s. 522, the Crown is not precluded from subsequently applying to the superior court under this section to review the original release order: R. v. Yarema (1991), 64 C.C.C. (3d) 260, 3 O.R. (3d) 459 (C.A.).

Where an accused has not only failed to comply with the conditions of the recognizance but has been charged with new offences then the justice has jurisdiction to hear an application for bail on the new charges as well as to cancel the previous release order: R. v. Gabrielson (1991), 62 C.C.C. (3d) 571 (Ont. Ct. (Gen. Div.)).

Subsec. (8) – It was held in R. v. Lafond (1975), 25 C.C.C. (2d) 568, 32 C.R.N.S. 66 (Que. Sess. Peace) that where an accused who has previously been released is brought before the Justice for a show cause hearing for an offence committed while released then even though the accused does not technically come within subsec. (3) the Justice may exercise the jurisdiction under this subsection and cancel the previous form of release. Such a situation would arise where the accused was arrested under s. 495 and not as the result of a warrant issued under subsec. (1) or as a result of a police officer's belief under subsec. (2).

In determining whether the conditions of release have been violated any issue as to whether the conditions allegedly violated were ambiguous must be determined on the basis of where the original burden lay for interim release. Thus where the offence was one for which the original burden was on the accused to show cause why he should be released, for example, on a charge of conspiracy to traffic in narcotics, then any ambiguity in the terms must be resolved in favour of the Crown: Ex p. Clarke (No. 2) (1978), 42 C.C.C. (2d) 23 (Nfld. S.C.T.D.).

Review of Detention Where Trial Delayed

TIME FOR APPLICATION TO JUDGE / Notice of hearing / Matters to be considered on hearing / Order / Warrant of judge for arrest / Arrest without warrant by peace officer / Hearing and order / Provisions applicable to proceedings / Directions for expediting trial.

525. (1) Where an accused who has been charged with an offence other than an offence listed in section 469 and who is not required to be detained in custody in respect of any other matter is being detained in custody pending his trial for that offence and the trial has not commenced

(a) in the case of an indictable offence, within ninety days from

(i) the day on which the accused was taken before a justice under section 503, or

(ii) where an order that the accused be detained in custody has been made under section 521 or 524, the day on which he was taken into custody under that order, or

(b) in the case of an offence for which the accused is being prosecuted in proceedings by way of summary conviction, within thirty days from

(i) the day on which the accused was taken before a justice under subsection 503(1), or

(ii) where an order that the accused be detained in custody has been made under section 521 or 524, the day on which he was taken into custody under that order, the person having the custody of the accused shall, forthwith on the expiration of those ninety or thirty days, as the case may be, apply to a judge having jurisdiction in the place in which the accused is in custody to fix a date for a hearing to determine whether or not the accused should be released from custody.

(2) On receiving an application under subsection (1), the judge shall

(a) fix a date for the hearing described in subsection (1) to be held in the jurisdiction

(i) where the accused is in custody, or

(ii) where the trial is to take place; and

- (b) direct that notice of the hearing be given to such persons, including the prosecutor and the accused, and in such manner, as the judge may specify.
- (3) On the hearing described in subsection (1), the judge may, in deciding whether or not the accused should be released from custody, take into consideration whether the prosecutor or the accused has been responsible for any unreasonable delay in the trial of the charge.
- (4) If, following the hearing described in subsection (1), the judge is not satisfied that the continued detention of the accused in custody is justified within the meaning of subsection 515(10), the judge shall order that the accused be released from custody pending the trial of the charge on his giving an undertaking or entering into a recognizance described in any of paragraphs 515(2)(a) to (e) with such conditions described in subsection 515(4) as the judge considers desirable.
- (5) Where a judge having jurisdiction in the province where an order under subsection (4) for the release of an accused has been made is satisfied that there are reasonable grounds to believe that the accused
- (a) has contravened or is about to contravene the undertaking or recognizance upon which he has been released, or
  - (b) has, after his release from custody on his undertaking or recognizance, committed an indictable offence,
- he may issue a warrant for the arrest of the accused.
- (6) Notwithstanding anything in this Act, a peace officer who believes on reasonable grounds that an accused who has been released from custody under subsection (4)
- (a) has contravened or is about to contravene the undertaking or recognizance on which he has been released, or
  - (b) has, after his release from custody on his undertaking or recognizance, committed an indictable offence,
- may arrest the accused without warrant and take him or cause him to be taken before a judge having jurisdiction in the province where the order for his release was made.
- (7) A judge before whom an accused is taken pursuant to a warrant issued under subsection (5) or pursuant to subsection (6) may, where the accused shows cause why his detention in custody is not justified within the meaning of subsection 515(10), order that the accused be released on his giving an undertaking or entering into a recognizance described in any of paragraphs 515(2)(a) to (e) with such conditions, described in subsection 515(4), as the judge considers desirable.
- (8) The provisions of sections 517, 518 and 519 apply with such modifications as the circumstances require in respect of any proceedings under this section.
- (9) Where an accused is before a judge under any of the provisions of this section, the judge may give directions for expediting the trial of the accused. R.S., c. C-34, s. 459; R.S., c. 2 (2nd Supp.), s. 5; 1974-75-76, c. 93, s. 56; R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 90; 1994, c. 44, s. 49.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term “justice” is defined in s. 2 and “judge”, “recognizance” and “undertaking” in s. 493. As to calculation of “within” a certain number of days see s. 27(5) of the Interpretation Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. I-21. For an overview of the application of this Part and the procedure respecting release pending trial see Note on judicial interim release under s. 515, or the Note on judicial interim release under s. 522 where the accused is charged with an offence listed in s. 469.

The accused of course has a constitutional right to trial within a reasonable time and thus see notes under s. 11(b) of the Charter.

SYNOPSIS

This section provides for a review of the detention of an accused person when that person's trial has been delayed. This review applies only to persons charged with offences other than those listed in s. 469.

Subsection (1) places an obligation on the person having custody of the accused to apply to the judge having jurisdiction to fix a date for a hearing to determine whether an accused should be released after the applicable time period has expired. The time periods vary according to the type of offence alleged to have been committed and the section under which the accused has been detained.

Subsection (2) requires a judge, upon receipt of the application under subsec. (1), to fix a date for the hearing, and to direct that notice be given to the prosecutor and the accused.

Subsection (3) authorizes the judge to consider whether the prosecutor or the accused has been responsible for any unreasonable delay in the trial of the charge.

Under subsec. (4), the judge must consider, following the hearing, whether the continued detention of the accused is justified on the primary or secondary grounds as outlined in s. 515(10). The judge may decide to release the accused under this section using any of the forms of release described in s. 515(2)(a) to (e) with such conditions described in s. 515(4) as are appropriate.

Subsections (5) and (6) authorize the arrest of an accused person who has been released under subsec. (4) with or without a warrant where there are grounds to believe that he has violated or is about to violate his undertaking or recognizance, or that he has committed an indictable offence subsequent to release.

Subsection (7) states that the onus is on the accused brought before a justice under subsec. (5) or (6) to show cause why detention is not justified. Sections 515(10), (2) and (4) are applicable, depending on the circumstances. Sections 517, 518 and 519 are applicable with such modifications as circumstances require.

Subsection (9) gives the judge dealing with an accused under this section a discretion to give directions for expediting the trial.

ANNOTATIONS

Application of section – This section applies, notwithstanding that the accused has previously applied, unsuccessfully, for review of the detention under s. 520: R. v. Neill (1990), 60 C.C.C. (3d) 261, [1991] 2 W.W.R. 352, 109 A.R. 231 (Alta. C.A.); R. v. Waine (1990), 56 C.C.C. (3d) 61 (Ont. H.C.J.); R. v. Johnson (1980), 57 C.C.C. (2d) 49 (Ont. H.C.J.); R. v. Burton (1993), 84 C.C.C. (3d) 311, 25 C.R. (4th) 167, 47 W.A.C. 233 (B.C.C.A.); Re Dass and The Queen (1978), 39 C.C.C. (2d) 365, [1978] 2 W.W.R. 274 (Man. C.A.).

This section only applies where the accused is held on a detention order and not where he is being held by virtue of s. 519, i.e., bail has been set but the accused is unable to meet the conditions for release: Ex p. Srebot (1975), 28 C.C.C. (2d) 160 (B.C.C.A.).

An accused in custody on a detention order and a warrant under s. 524 is entitled to a review under this section: Re Ferreira and The Queen (1981), 58 C.C.C. (2d) 147, [1981] 3 W.W.R. 737 (B.C.C.A.).

Procedure – An application brought on a week later and then set for hearing is reasonable compliance with this section: R. v. Kozak and Lewis (1975), 32 C.R.N.S. 245, [1976] 1 W.W.R. 356 (B.C.S.C.).

Jurisdiction over the offence is not affected by the fact that due to inadvertence nothing was done on the date to which a review under this section was adjourned: Re Gagliardi and The Queen (1981), 60 C.C.C. (2d) 267 (B.C.C.A.), leave to appeal to S.C.C. refused C.C.C. loc. cit., 38 N.R. 356n.

Effect of failure to comply with section – It was held by the court in Ex. p. Cordes (1976), 31 C.C.C. (2d) 279 (Alta. S.C. App. Div.) that failure to comply with this section does not ipso facto vacate the previous detention order and render the accused's detention illegal entitling him to release on habeas corpus. On a habeas corpus application brought because of unreasonable delay the Judge would have regard to the same considerations set out in this section. Where the section has not been complied with the appropriate remedy is mandamus to require compliance therewith.

To a similar effect is R. v. Pomfret (1990), 53 C.C.C. (3d) 56 (Man. C.A.), where the court also held that the failure to hold the review as required by this section did not, in the circumstances, result in arbitrary detention in violation of s. 9 of the Charter. The lapse of time was not of such an extent that the court could infer deliberateness or design on the part of the gaoler. Finally, refusing to release the accused on his application for habeas corpus did not violate s. 10(c) of the Charter. The habeas corpus application brought to the court's attention that the accused was entitled to a review under this section and resulted in him receiving that to which he was entitled under the law, namely a bail review hearing.

The accused's detention does not become unlawful merely upon the expiration of the 90 days. The custodian is under a statutory obligation to seek the hearing required under this section as soon as practicable after the expiration of the 90 day period. Where an application for a hearing has been made by the custodian, the appropriate disposition of a claim to release on habeas corpus is to refer that claim to the judge conducting the hearing under this section. Where no application has been made, habeas corpus may lie to determine whether the lapse of time has tainted the legality of the detention. Alternatively, an accused may apply by way of mandamus to compel the director to comply: Vukelich v. Vancouver Pre-Trial Centre, Director (1993), 87 C.C.C. (3d) 32, 27 C.R. (4th) 15, 64 W.A.C. 38 (B.C.C.A.).

DIRECTIONS FOR EXPEDITING PROCEEDINGS.

526. Subject to subsection 525(9), a court, judge or justice before which or whom an accused appears pursuant to this Part may give directions for expediting any proceedings in respect of the accused. R.S., c. 2 (2nd Supp.), s. 5; R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 91.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term "justice" is defined in s. 2 and "accused" and "judge" in s. 493. The accused of course has a constitutional right to trial within a reasonable time and thus see notes under s. 11(b) of the Charter. For an overview of the application of this Part and the procedure respecting release pending trial see Note on judicial interim release under s. 515, or the Note on judicial interim release under s. 522 where the accused is charged with an offence listed in s. 469.

SYNOPSIS

This section authorizes a court, judge, or justice dealing with an accused under Part XVI of the Code to give directions for expediting any proceedings relating to the accused.

Procedure to Procure Attendance of a Prisoner

PROCURING ATTENDANCE / Provincial court judge's order / Conveyance of prisoner / Detention of prisoner required as witness / Detention in other cases / Application of sections respecting sentence / Transfer of prisoner / Conveyance of prisoner / Return.

527. (1) A judge of a superior court of criminal jurisdiction may order in writing that a person who is confined in a prison be brought before the court, judge, justice or provincial court judge before who the prisoner is required to attend, from day to day as may be necessary, if

- (a) the applicant for the order sets out the facts of the case in an affidavit and produces the warrant, if any; and
  - (b) the judge is satisfied that the ends of justice require that an order be made.
- (2) A provincial court judge has the same powers for the purposes of subsection (1) as a judge has under that subsection where the person whose attendance is required is confined in a prison within the province in which the provincial court judge has jurisdiction.
- (3) An order that is made under subsection (1) or (2) shall be addressed to the person who has custody of the prisoner, and on receipt thereof that person shall
- (a) deliver the prisoner to any person who is named in the order to receive him; or
  - (b) bring the prisoner before the court, judge, justice or provincial court judge, as the case may be, on payment of his reasonable charges in respect thereof.
- (4) Where a prisoner is required as a witness, the judge or provincial court judge shall direct, in the order, the manner in which the prisoner shall be kept in custody and returned to the prison from which he is brought.
- (5) Where the appearance of a prisoner is required for the purposes of paragraph (1)(a) or (b), the judge or provincial court judge shall give appropriate directions in the order with respect to the manner in which the prisoner is
- (a) to be kept in custody, if he is ordered to stand trial; or
  - (b) to be returned, if he is discharged on a preliminary inquiry or if he is acquitted of the charge against him.
- (6) Sections 717 and 731 apply where a prisoner to whom this section applies is convicted and sentenced to imprisonment by the court, judge, justice or provincial court judge.

NOTE: Subsection (6) amended 1995, c. 22, s. 10 (to come into force by order of the Governor in Council) by replacing the reference to ss. 717 and 731 with ss. 718.3 and 743.1.

- (7) On application by the prosecutor, a judge of a superior court of criminal jurisdiction may, if the prisoner consents in writing, order the transfer of a prisoner to the custody of a peace officer named in the order for a period specified in the order where the judge is satisfied that the transfer is required for the purpose of assisting a peace officer acting in the execution of his duties.
- (8) An order under subsection (7) shall be addressed to the person who has custody of the prisoner and on receipt thereof that person shall deliver the prisoner to the peace officer who is named in the order to receive him.
- (9) When the purposes of any order made under this section have been carried out, the prisoner shall be returned to the place where he was confined at the time the order was made. R.S., c. C-34, s. 460; R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), ss. 92, 101(2)(b); 1994, c. 44, s. 50.

SYNOPSIS

This section sets out the procedure to procure the attendance of a prisoner at his preliminary hearing, the trial of his charge, or to give evidence in criminal proceedings.

Subsection (1) states that when a prisoner's attendance is required, an application must be made to a judge of a superior court of criminal jurisdiction. The applicant must set out the facts of the case in an affidavit and produce any warrant to the judge. The judge may, if satisfied that the ends of justice require it, make a written order to bring the prisoner before the court.

Subsection (2) provides that a Provincial Court judge has the same powers as the judges described in subsec. (1) except that the provincial court judge may only order the appearance of a prisoner being held in that province.

Subsection (3) describes the requirements of an order made under subsecs. (1) and (2).

Subsection (4) states that the judge or provincial court judge must direct the manner in which a prisoner, required to testify as a witness, shall be kept in custody and returned to prison.

Subsection (5) sets out the kinds of directions a judge or provincial court judge must include in an order compelling the attendance of a prisoner at his preliminary hearing or trial.

Subsection (7) authorizes a superior court judge to order the transfer of a prisoner to a named peace officer for a specified period where such a transfer would assist the peace officer in the execution of his duties. The prisoner must consent in writing to this procedure. An order under subsec. (7) must be addressed to the person having custody of the prisoner and, upon receipt, that person must deliver the prisoner to the named peace officer.

Subsection (9) requires that the prisoner be returned to the place of confinement when the purposes of any order made under this section have been accomplished.

ANNOTATIONS

A witness brought to court pursuant to an order under this section may be compelled to testify notwithstanding he has not been served with a subpoena and there is no warrant issued under s. 698 outstanding: R. v. Ayres (1984), 15 C.C.C. (3d) 208, 42 C.R. (3d) 33 (Ont. C.A.).

The judge in making an order under this section in relation to an accused who is detained in another district has power under subsec. (5) to order that the accused be brought to the local gaol several days prior to the actual trial date to afford him a reasonable opportunity to properly prepare his defence: Auclair v. Dube J.S.P. and R. (1984), 39 C.R. (3d) 398 (Que. S.C.).

Although this section provides a convenient procedure for securing the attendance at court of persons confined in custody on other matters, it was open to a justice of the peace to resort to the provisions of s. 512 and issue a bench warrant for the arrest of an accused where the accused, detained on another matter, was not brought to court to set a date for his trial: Re Hartmann and The Queen (1986), 30 C.C.C. (3d) 286 (Ont. H.C.J.).

Endorsement of Warrant

ENDORISING WARRANT / Copy of affidavit or warrant / Effect of endorsement.

528. (1) Where a warrant for the arrest or committal of an accused, in any form set out in Part XXVIII in relation thereto, cannot be executed in accordance with section 514 or 703, a justice within whose jurisdiction the accused is or is believed to be shall, on application and proof on oath or by affidavit of the signature of the justice who issued the warrant, authorize the arrest of the accused within his jurisdiction by making an endorsement, which may be in Form 28, on the warrant.

(1.1) A copy of an affidavit or warrant submitted by a means of telecommunication that produces a writing has the same probative force as the original for the purposes of subsection (1).

(2) An endorsement that is made upon a warrant pursuant to subsection (1) is sufficient authority to the peace officers to whom it was originally directed, and to all peace officers within the territorial jurisdiction of the justice by whom it is endorsed, to execute the warrant and to take the accused before the justice who issued the warrant or before any other justice for the same territorial division. R.S., c. C-34, s. 461; 1974-75-76, c. 93, s. 57; R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 93; 1994, c. 44, s. 51.

CROSS-REFERENCES

"Justice" and "peace officer" are defined in s. 2. "Warrant" is defined in s. 493. Under s. 20, a warrant may be executed on a holiday. A warrant is executed in accordance with this section and s. 29 and s. 10 of the Charter. For protection of persons executing warrants see ss. 25 to 28.

SYNOPSIS

This section empowers a justice to authorize the arrest of an accused person who is believed to be in that justice's jurisdiction, when a warrant for arrest or committal cannot be executed in accordance with ss. 514 or 703. The justice being asked to authorize the arrest of the accused will endorse the warrant only upon proof on oath or by affidavit of the signature of the justice who issued the warrant. Under subsec. (1.1), a faxed copy has the same probative value as the original.

Subsection (2) states that an endorsement on the warrant pursuant to subsec. (1) is sufficient authority to the peace officers to whom it was originally directed, along with all peace officers within the territorial jurisdiction of the endorsing justice, to execute the warrant.

529. [Repealed (with heading). 1994, c. 44, s. 52.]

Part XVII / LANGUAGE OF ACCUSED

LANGUAGE OF ACCUSED / Idem / Accused to be advised of right / Remand / Variation of order.

530. (1) On application by an accused whose language is one of the official languages of Canada, made not later than

- (a) the time of the appearance of the accused at which his trial date is set, if
  - (i) he is accused of an offence mentioned in section 553 or punishable on summary conviction, or
  - (ii) the accused is to be tried on an indictment preferred under section 577,
- (b) the time of his election, if the accused elects under section 536 to be tried by a provincial court judge, or
- (c) the time when the accused is ordered to stand trial, if the accused
  - (i) is charged with an offence listed in section 469,
  - (ii) has elected to be tried by a court composed of a judge or a judge and jury, or
  - (iii) is deemed to have elected to be tried by a court composed of a judge and jury, a justice of the peace or provincial court judge shall grant an order directing that the accused be tried before a justice of the peace, provincial court judge, judge or judge and jury, as the case may be, who speak the official language of Canada that is the language of the accused or, if the circumstances warrant, who speak both official languages of Canada.

Editor's Note: By virtue of R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 209(4), paras. (a) to (c) repealed and substituted by R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 94, came into force in New Brunswick, Manitoba, Ontario, the Yukon Territory and the Northwest Territories on June 20, 1985; proclaimed in force with respect to summary conviction in Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island and Saskatchewan and with respect to indictable offences in Saskatchewan, on September 1, 1987. These paragraphs are in force in all other provinices in respect of summary conviction offences or indictable offences effective January 1, 1990.

(2) On application by an accused whose language is not one of the official languages of Canada, made not later than whichever of the times referred to in paragraphs (1)(a) to (c) is applicable, a justice of the peace or provincial court judge may grant an order directing that the accused be tried before a justice of the peace, provincial court judge, judge or judge and jury, as the case may be, who speak the official language of Canada in which the accused, in the opinion of the justice or provincial court judge, can best give testimony or, if the circumstances warrant, who speak both official languages of Canada.

(3) The justice of the peace or provincial court judge before whom an accused first appears shall, if the accused is not represented by counsel, advise the accused of his right to apply for an order under subsection (1) or (2) and of the time before which such an application must be made.

(4) Where an accused fails to apply for an order under subsection (1) or (2) and the justice of the peace, provincial court judge or judge before whom the accused is to be tried, in this Part referred to as “the court”, is satisfied that it is in the best interests of justice that the accused be tried before a justice of the peace, provincial court judge, judge or judge and jury who speak the official language of Canada that is the language of the accused or, if the language of the accused is not one of the official languages of Canada, the official language of Canada in which the accused, in the opinion of the court, can best give testimony, the court may, if it does not speak that language, by order remand the accused to be tried by a justice of the peace, provincial court judge, judge or judge and jury, as the case may be, who speak that language or, if the circumstances warrant, who speak both official languages of Canada.

(5) An order under this section that an accused be tried before a justice of the peace, provincial court judge, judge or judge and jury who speak the official language of Canada that is the language of the accused or the official language of Canada in which the accused can best give testimony may, if the circumstances warrant, be varied by the court to require that the accused be tried before a justice of the peace, provincial court judge, judge or judge and jury who speak both official languages of Canada. 1977-78, c. 36, s. 1; R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 94.

Editor's Note: This section proclaimed in force in New Brunswick, Yukon Territory and Northwest Territories, May 1, 1979; in Ontario, December 31, 1979; in Manitoba, July 1, 1982; in force in all other provinces in respect of summary conviction offences or indictable offences effective January 1, 1990. See also note following subsec. (1).

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms “justice” and “provincial court judge” are defined in s. 2.

The procedure respecting conduct of the proceedings is set out in s. 530.1. Change of venue where necessary to facilitate the trial where an order is made under this section is provided for in s. 531. This Part does not derogate from other rights which may be afforded by provincial legislation, by virtue of s. 532. Provision for making regulations to carry out the provisions of this Part is provided for in s. 533.

Also see s. 841(3) which requires that any preprinted portions of a form set out in Part XXVIII shall be printed in both official languages.

SYNOPSIS

This section sets out the procedure whereby an accused can elect to be tried before a court (including a jury) which speaks one or both official languages.

Subsection (1), which deals with an accused whose mother tongue is either French or English, provides that the application in this regard shall be made not later than the time a trial date is fixed where: (a) the offence is indictable, but within the absolute jurisdiction of a provincial court judge; (b) the offence is a summary conviction matter; (c) proceedings are commenced by way of a "direct" indictment (s. 577), or (d) the accused "elects" to be tried before a provincial court judge. In cases where there is a preliminary inquiry, the application need not be made until the accused has been ordered to stand trial.

Under subsec. (2) a similar application can be made by an accused whose mother tongue is not one of the two official languages but who is able to testify in one, or both, of them.

In the case of an unrepresented accused, subsec. (3) imposes upon the justice of the peace or provincial court judge before whom the accused first appears an obligation to advise the accused of his or her rights in this regard.

Even if no application is made by the accused under this provision, subsec. (4) empowers the trial court to make the necessary order if it is satisfied that to do so would be in the best interests of the administration of justice. If the justice of the peace or judge who makes the order does not speak the necessary language(s), he can remand the accused to appear before someone who does.

Subsection (5) permits that any order made under this provision for a trial in only one official language can, if circumstances warrant, be varied to encompass both languages.

ANNOTATIONS

Constitutional considerations – In the companion cases of A.-G. Man. v. Forest (1979), 49 C.C.C. (2d) 353, [1979] 2 S.C.R. 1032 (7:0) and A.-G. Que. v. Blaikie et al; A.-G. Que. v. Laurier et al. (1979), 49 C.C.C. (2d) 359, [1979] 2 S.C.R. 1016 (7:0) provincial legislation in Manitoba and Quebec respectively making English in the former and French in the latter the official language of, inter alia, the Courts was held ultra vires as being in conflict with the Manitoba Act, 1870 (Can.), c. 3, as confirmed by the British North America Act, 1871, in the case of Manitoba and in conflict with s. 133 of the British North America Act, 1867, in the case of Quebec. In both those provinces use of either official language in the Courts is an entrenched right.

Circumstances where order to be made – An order was made for trial by a bilingual jury where it was desirable that the two accused be jointly tried although one had requested a French-speaking jury and the other had made no such request and his counsel only spoke English: R. v. Lapointe and Sicotte (1981), 64 C.C.C. (2d) 562 (Ont. Gen. Sess. of Peace). Similarly: R. v. Garcia (1990), 58 C.C.C. (3d) 43 (Que. S.C.).

Duty to advise unrepresented accused [subsec. (3)] – The provisions of this subsection are mandatory and require the Justice or Judge to bring home to the accused his rights either personally in the language of the accused, or through an interpreter or use of some written form. This function may not be delegated to duty counsel: R. v. Lapierre (1980), 54 C.C.C. (2d) 408 (Ont. Dist. Ct.).

Procedure on trial – The accused having requested a trial of a drinking and driving offence to be in the French language, the trial judge did not err in refusing to admit into evidence a breathalyzer certification which was only in the English language. The Crown had made no attempt at trial to have the certificate translated: R. v. Boudreau (1990), 59 C.C.C. (3d) 436, 25 M.V.R. (2d) 103, 107 N.B.R. (2d) 298 (N.B.C.A.).

While there may be circumstances in which a court before trial would order translation of a document to enable the accused to make full answer and defence and to have a fair trial, the mere fact that the accused has chosen to have his trial in the French language pursuant to s. 530 does not thereby entitle him to have disclosure from the Crown and police provided to him in the French language: R. v. Rodrigue (1994), 91 C.C.C. (3d) 455 (Y.T.S.C.), affd 95 C.C.C. (3d) 129, 87 W.A.C. 275, 26 C.R.R. (2d) 175, leave to appeal to S.C.C. refused 99 C.C.C. (3d) vi.

WHERE ORDER GRANTED UNDER SECTION 530.

530.1 Where an order is granted under section 530 directing that an accused be tried before a justice of the peace, provincial court judge, judge or judge and jury who speak the official language that is the language of the accused or in which the accused can best give testimony,

- (a) the accused and his counsel have the right to use either official language for all purposes during the preliminary inquiry and trial of the accused;
- (b) the accused and his counsel may use either official language in written pleadings or other documents used in any proceedings relating to the preliminary inquiry or trial of the accused;
- (c) any witness may give evidence in either official language during the preliminary inquiry or trial;
- (d) the accused has a right to have a justice presiding over the preliminary inquiry who speaks the official language that is the language of the accused;
- (e) except where the prosecutor is a private prosecutor, the accused has a right to have a prosecutor who speaks the official language that is the language of the accused;
- (f) the court shall make interpreters available to assist the accused, his counsel or any witness during the preliminary inquiry or trial;
- (g) the record of proceedings during the preliminary inquiry or trial shall include
  - (i) a transcript of everything that was said during those proceedings in the official language in which it was said,
  - (ii) a transcript of any interpretation into the other official language of what was said, and
  - (iii) any documentary evidence that was tendered during those proceedings in the official language in which it was tendered; and
- (h) any trial judgment, including any reasons given therefor, issued in writing in either official language, shall be made available by the court in the official language that is the language of the accused. R.S.C. 1985, c. 31 (4th Supp.), s. 94.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms “justice” and “provincial court judge” are defined in s. 2.

Change of venue, where necessary to facilitate the trial where an order is made under s. 530, is provided for in s. 531. This Part does not derogate from other rights which may be afforded by provincial legislation, by virtue of s. 532. Provision for making regulations to carry out the provisions of this Part is provided for in s. 533.

Also see s. 841(3) which requires that any preprinted portions of a form set out in Part XXVIII shall be printed in both official languages.

SYNOPSIS

This section deals with the effect of an order made under s. 530. Where there is such an order, this section provides that: (a) the accused, defence counsel and witnesses have the right to use either official language during the preliminary inquiry or trial; (b) the accused and defence counsel may use pleadings and documents in either official language during such proceedings; (c) the accused has the right to have a justice presiding over the preliminary inquiry who speaks the official language of the accused; (d) except in the case of private prosecutions, the accused has the right to a prosecutor who speaks the official language of the accused; (e) interpreters shall be made available as required to the accused, defence counsel and witnesses during the preliminary inquiry or trial (this is also required by s. 14 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms); (f) the record of the proceedings will be in the official language which was spoken, and will contain any interpretation which was given in the other official language. Documents will be in the official language in which they were tendered, and (g) any written reasons will be made available in the official language of the accused.

ANNOTATIONS

To the extent that para. (e) purports to deny or infringe the right of a public prosecutor in Quebec to use English or French, it is inconsistent with s. 133 of the Constitution Act, 1867 and therefore the paragraph is inoperative in Quebec: R. v. Cross (1991), 76 C.C.C. (3d) 445, [1991] R.J.Q. (S.C.).

CHANGE OF VENUE.

531. Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act but subject to any regulations made pursuant to section 533, the court shall order that the trial of an accused be held in a territorial division in the same province other than that in which the offence would otherwise be tried if an order has been made that the accused be tried before a justice of the peace, provincial court judge, judge or judge and jury who speak the official language of Canada that is the language of the accused or the official language of Canada in which the accused can best give testimony or both official languages of Canada and such order cannot be conveniently complied with in the territorial division in which the offence would otherwise be tried. 1977-78, c. 36, s. 1.

Editor's Note: This section proclaimed in force in New Brunswick, Yukon Territory and Northwest Territories, May 1, 1979; in Ontario, December 31, 1979; in Manitoba, July 1, 1982; in force in all other provinces in respect of summary conviction offences or indictable offences effective January 1, 1990.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms "justice", "provincial court judge" and "territorial division" are defined in s. 2. Procedure for an order for a trial in the official language of the accused is in s. 530. The procedure respecting conduct of the proceedings is set out in s. 530.1. This Part does not derogate from other rights which may be afforded by provincial legislation, by virtue of s. 532. Provision for making regulations to carry out the provisions of this Part is provided for in s. 533.

Also see s. 841(3) which requires that any preprinted portions of a form set out in Part XXVIII shall be printed in both official languages.

Provision for change of venue in other circumstances is provided for in ss. 599 and 600.

SYNOPSIS

This section provides that, subject to any regulations made pursuant to s. 533, the court must make an order changing the venue of the trial of an accused to another location within the province where: (a) an order regarding which official language the trial is to be conducted in has been made under s. 530, and (b) that order cannot be conveniently complied with in the territorial division in which the offence would otherwise be tried.

It is expected that such orders will be made only in jury trials. In all other situations court officials will be able to arrange for a justice of the peace or judge fluent in the required language(s) to travel to the area where proceedings would normally be held.

SAVING.

532. Nothing in this Part or the Official Languages Act derogates from or otherwise adversely affects any right afforded by a law of a province in force on the coming into force of this Part in that province or thereafter coming into force relating to the language of proceedings or testimony in criminal matters that is not inconsistent with this Part or that Act. 1977-78, c. 36, s. 1.

ANNOTATIONS

As a result of pre-Confederation legislation still in force in Alberta an accused and his counsel have the right to use the French language for all purposes during his preliminary hearing and trial but the presiding judge or the jury need not be able to comprehend the French language without an interpreter: Re Paquette and The Queen (No. 1) (1987), 38 C.C.C. (3d) 333, [1988] 1 W.W.R. 97, 55 Alta. L.R. (2d) 1 (C.A.). The same pre-Confederation legislation was also considered in Saskatchewan in R. v. Mercure (1988), 39 C.C.C. (3d) 385, [1988] 1 S.C.R. 234, [1988] 2 W.W.R. 577 (6:2) in relation, however, to a trial of a provincial offence. It was there held that while the defendant was entitled to use French and to have his plea entered in French the defendant did not have the right to insist on a trial before a judge who understood that language without an interpreter.

COMING INTO FORCE / Consultation / Where no agreement reached.

534. (1) Sections 530 and 531 to 533 shall come into force in any of the Provinces of Quebec, Nova Scotia, British Columbia, Prince Edward Island, Saskatchewan, Alberta and Newfoundland, in respect of

- (a) offences punishable on summary conviction, or
- (b) indictable offences

on a day fixed by a proclamation declaring those sections to be in force in that Province with respect to those offences.

(2) Section 530.1 shall come into force in a province

- (a) in respect of offences punishable on summary conviction,
  - (i) on the day the Official Languages Act is assented to, in the case of a province in which sections 530 and 531 to 533 and paragraph 638(1)(f) are in force on that day in respect of offences punishable on summary conviction, or
  - (ii) on the day on which those sections and that paragraph come into force in respect of offences punishable on summary conviction, in the case of a province in which they are not in force in respect of offences punishable on summary conviction on the day this Act is assented to; and
- (b) in respect of indictable offences,
  - (i) on the day the Official Languages Act is assented to, in the case of a province in which those sections and that paragraph are in force in respect of indictable offences on that day, or

Part XVIII / PROCEDURE ON PRELIMINARY INQUIRYJurisdictionINQUIRY BY JUSTICE.

535. Where an accused who is charged with an indictable offence is before a justice, the justice shall, in accordance with this Part, inquire into that charge and any other indictable offence, in respect of the same transaction, founded on the facts that are disclosed by the evidence taken in accordance with this Part. R.S., c. C-34, s. 463; R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 96.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term “justice” is defined in s. 2. As a matter of practice preliminary inquiries are usually conducted by provincial court judges. For further discussion re procedure on preliminary inquiries see Note on procedure at preliminary inquiry under s. 537.

SYNOPSIS

This provision confers general jurisdiction on a “justice” to deal with accused persons, in accordance with Part XVIII, who are charged with indictable offences.

Section 2 defines “justice” as including justices of the peace and provincial court judges. Local practice will determine which functions are carried out by a justice and which by a judge. For the most part, it is the provincial court judge who will deal with matters of bail and election, and preside over preliminary inquiries.

ANNOTATIONS

In Re Mairs et al. (1961), 130 C.C.C.361, 35 C.R. 265 (B.C.S.C.) it was held, following R. v. Hughes (1879), 4 Q.B.D.614, and R. v. Shaw (1865), 10 Cox.C.C.66, that process is not necessary to the jurisdiction of the justices to hear and adjudicate and that when a person is before justices who have jurisdiction to try the case they need not inquire how he came there but may try it.

If the justice is of the opinion that the charge does not reveal an offence known to law and is an absolute nullity, the accused is not “charged with an indictable offence” and the justice may discharge him without taking evidence: R. v. Bolduc (1980), 60 C.C.C. (2d) 357, 20 C.R. (3d) 372 (Que. C.A.), affd 68 C.C.C. (2d) 413, 28 C.R. (3d) 193n, 137 D.L.R. (3d) 674, [1982] 1 S.C.R. 573 (7:0).

Aside from determining whether the charge in the information is valid on its face, the justice presiding at a preliminary inquiry has no jurisdiction to inquire into the validity of the allegation contained in the information itself, by embarking on an inquiry as to whether or not the informant had reasonable grounds for swearing the information: Re Hislop and The Queen (1983), 7 C.C.C. (3d) 240, 36 C.R. (3d) 29 (Ont. C.A.), leave to appeal to S.C.C. refused November 7, 1983.

REMAND BY JUSTICE TO PROVINCIAL COURT JUDGE IN CERTAIN CASES /

Election before justice in certain cases / Procedure where accused elects trial by provincial court judge / Procedure where accused elects trial by judge alone or by judge and jury or deemed election / Jurisdiction.

536. (1) Where an accused is before a justice other than a provincial court judge charged with an offence over which a provincial court judge has absolute jurisdiction under section 553, the justice shall remand the accused to appear before a provincial court judge having jurisdiction in the territorial division in which the offence is alleged to have been committed.

(2) Where an accused is before a justice charged with an offence, other than an offence listed in section 469, and the offence is not one over which a provincial court judge has absolute jurisdiction under section 553, the justice shall, after the information has been read to the accused, put the accused to his election in the following words:

You have the option to elect to be tried by a provincial court judge without a jury and without having had a preliminary inquiry; or you may elect to have a preliminary inquiry and to be tried by a judge without a jury; or you may elect to have a preliminary inquiry and to be tried by a court composed of a judge and jury. If you do not elect now, you shall be deemed to have elected to have a preliminary inquiry and to be tried by a court composed of a judge and jury. How do you elect to be tried?

(3) Where an accused elects to be tried by a provincial court judge, the justice shall endorse on the information a record of the election and shall

- (a) where the justice is not a provincial court judge, remand the accused to appear and plead to the charge before a provincial court judge having jurisdiction in the territorial division in which the offence is alleged to have been committed; or
- (b) where the justice is a provincial court judge, call on the accused to plead to the charge and if the accused does not plead guilty, proceed with the trial or fix a time for the trial.

(4) Where an accused elects to have a preliminary inquiry and to be tried by a judge without a jury or by a court composed of a judge and jury or does not elect when put to his election, the justice shall hold a preliminary inquiry into the charge and if the accused is ordered to stand trial, the justice shall endorse on the information and, where the accused is in custody, on the warrant of committal, a statement showing the nature of the election of the accused or that the accused did not elect, as the case may be.

(5) Where a justice before whom a preliminary inquiry is being or is to be held has not commenced to take evidence, any justice having jurisdiction in the province where the offence with which the accused is charged is alleged to have been committed has jurisdiction for the purposes of subsection (4). R.S., c. C-34, s. 464; R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 96.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms "justice", "provincial court judge" and "territorial division" are defined in s. 2. Territorial jurisdiction is generally dealt with in Part XIV. The pleas which the accused may enter are set out in ss. 606 to 613. Validity of an information is dealt with in ss. 580 to 601. The jurisdiction of the provincial court judge to try the accused is set out in Part XIX. Where the accused refuses to elect under this section then by virtue of s. 565(1)(c) he is deemed to have elected trial by judge and jury. He may however re-elect in accordance with s. 561. Where accused who are jointly charged fail to elect the same mode of trial then, pursuant to s. 567, the justice may decline to record the elections and the accused are deemed to have elected trial by judge and jury under s. 565(1)(b). For further discussion re procedure on preliminary inquiries see Note on procedure at preliminary inquiry under s. 537.

Note on mode of trial – The scheme of the Criminal Code is to classify offences as pure indictable [e.g., robbery, s. 344], purely summary [e.g., soliciting, s. 213] or hybrid, i.e., the prosecution may elect whether to proceed by way of summary conviction or by indictment [e.g., assault, s. 266]. The effect of s. 468 is that the superior court of criminal jurisdiction may try any purely indictable offence or any hybrid offence where the prosecution elects to proceed by way of indictment. Other courts of criminal jurisdiction (defined in s. 2) may, however, try indictable offences except those offences listed in s. 469 [e.g., murder, s. 235]. The offences listed in s. 469 may only be tried by the superior court of criminal jurisdiction with a jury subject to a re-election in conformity with s. 473. Indictable offences not listed in s. 469 fall into two categories. For the majority of the indictable offences not listed in s. 469 the accused may elect his mode of trial as set out in s. 536(2) and within limits may change his election [see, e.g., s. 561]. While the Attorney General is given a narrow discretion to override this election and require a jury trial under s. 568 in the circumstances defined therein and in addition a provincial court judge has a discretion to override or not record an accused's election for trial by provincial court judge and hold a preliminary inquiry [see for example ss. 555 and 567] the thrust of the provisions is to give the accused the right to determine the manner of trial. [In those provinces which still maintain two levels of courts in addition to the provincial court, it is in the discretion of the Crown whether to place the indictment in the superior court or the other court, however described, e.g., county court, where the accused elects trial other than by provincial court judge.] The other group of offences are those offences listed in s. 553 [e.g., keeping common bawdy house, s. 210(1)] which fall within the absolute jurisdiction of a provincial court judge, meaning that the accused does not have a normal election as to the mode of trial under s. 536(2). Nevertheless, the other courts with jurisdiction to try indictable offences have jurisdiction to try the offences listed in s. 553 if the provincial court judge elects not to try the offence and requires that the case proceed by way of preliminary inquiry pursuant to s. 555(1), or in the course of the trial it is disclosed that in fact the offence is not one over which the provincial court judge has absolute jurisdiction, in which case the accused must then be put to his election under s. 536(2) [for example a charge of theft of goods of a value not exceeding $1,000 where the evidence discloses that the value of the goods exceeds $1,000].

For all summary conviction offences meaning purely summary conviction or hybrid offences where the prosecution elects to proceed by way of summary conviction only the summary conviction court (defined in s. 785) may try the accused. The procedure for trial of summary conviction offences generally resembles trial of an indictable offence by a provincial court judge but that procedure including special rights of appeal is set out in Part XXVII.

SYNOPSIS

This section sets out the general procedures to be followed in the provincial court in dealing with an accused charged with an indictable offence.

If the accused appears before a justice of the peace and the offence is one within the absolute jurisdiction of a provincial court judge, the justice must, under subsec. (1), remand the accused to appear before a judge in the territorial division in which the offence is alleged to have occurred.

Subsection (2) sets out the language to be used where the offence is one for which the accused has an “election” as to the mode of trial (i.e., provincial court judge, judge alone or judge and jury). This will occur where the offence is not one within the absolute jurisdiction of a provincial court judge (s. 533), or is one which must proceed before a superior court (s. 469).

Under subsec. (3), where the election for trial in provincial court is made before a justice, the accused will be remanded to appear before a judge for the taking of a plea and the fixing of a date for hearing. Of course, if the accused is already before a judge, he or she can deal with these matters. There is no requirement that the “election” be put at the accused’s first appearance before a justice or judge. Often this will be deferred until the accused has had sufficient time to retain and be advised by counsel.

Where the election is for trial before other than a provincial court judge, a preliminary inquiry will be held. This will also occur if the accused, for whatever reason, refuses to elect (subsec. (4)). A record of the election, or refusal, will be made.

If no evidence has yet been called, subsec. (5) permits the hearing to be conducted by a justice or judge other than the one before whom the accused elected. (Also see s. 547.1 – justice unable to continue.)

ANNOTATIONS

Form of election – The form of election should be put to the accused substantially in the form in which it is set out in this subsection and in fact courts should follow the precise language of the subsection. In particular, merely asking the accused: “How do you elect to be tried?” is not sufficient to give the Court jurisdiction to hold a preliminary hearing where counsel replies that he elects to be tried by “Judge alone”: R. v. Leske, [1969] 1 C.C.C. 347, 2 C.R.N.S. (Alta. S.C. App.Div.).

Election by accused – In R. v. Karpuk (1962), 133 C.C.C. 108, 37 C.R. 326 (Ont. C.A.), a conviction was quashed when it appeared that the reply of the accused, when asked to elect, left no doubt that he was considering trial forthwith as against trial at a later date, rather than the alternative modes of trial open to him.

It was held in R. v. Bobyk, [1963] 2 C.C.C. 91, 39 C.R. 27 (Alta. S.C. App. Div.), that the consent by which the accused foregoes the privilege of trial by jury must be given in a manner that makes it clear beyond doubt that he has consented to forego that right. The consent cannot be inferred from the conduct of the accused nor given otherwise than by an express consent given openly in court.

Despite the fact that the election does not appear in the transcript the endorsement on the information as to the accused's election constitutes sufficient proof of the compliance with this section in the absence of evidence to the contrary: R. v. Squires (1977), 35 C.C.C. (2d) 325, 11 Nfld. & P.E.I.R. 457 (Nfld. C.A.).

Delay in putting to election – In Doyle v. The Queen (1976), 29 C.C.C. (2d) 177, 35 C.R.N.S.1 (9:0) (S.C.C.) it was held that what would have amounted to a delay of almost eight months before the accused was put to his election involved a loss of jurisdiction over the accused. Ritchie J., referring to [now] s. 536 stated as follows:

In my view, the whole structure of the procedural provisions of the Code which deal with the treatment of persons immediately after they have been arrested is designed to provide a speedy disposition of their cases. As I have said, the arresting officer is required to bring such a person before a Magistrate within 24 hours, and the duties with which a Magistrate is thereafter seized are all phrased in mandatory language so that I am unable to agree with the view expressed in the Newfoundland Court of Appeal which culminates in the present case in authorization of a delay of eight months between the arrest and the opportunity to elect for trial. In my view, the failure of both Magistrates to put the accused to his election as required by the Code was a clear error which of itself involved the loss of jurisdiction over the accused.

In R. v. Locke (1976), 31 C.C.C. (2d) 441, 12 Nfld. & P.E.I.R. 286 (Nfld.Prov.Ct.) it was held, considering Doyle v. The Queen, supra, that the election should be put to the accused as soon as he is prepared to make his election and in any event within a reasonably short time. However, this subsection does not require that the accused be put to his election immediately after the information is read to him on his first appearance in Court and before he has had an opportunity to consult counsel.

In Re Aiello and The Queen (1977), 33 C.C.C. (2d) 280 (Ont.H.C.J.) it was held that under s. 537(1)(a) the Magistrate has power to adjourn the inquiry for any sufficient reason which would include an adjournment to enable the accused to retain counsel so that an intelligent election under this subsection can be made. Further, even if the failure to put the accused to his election resulted in a loss of jurisdiction it was only loss of jurisdiction over the person which would be regained when the accused appeared in Court again on the charge.

The mere failure to put the accused to his election at the first or any particular subsequent appearance will not result in loss of jurisdiction but the refusal to put the accused to his election when he so requests will result in a loss of jurisdiction over the accused: Re Chaisson and The Queen (1984), 15 C.C.C. (3d) 50 (Ont. H.C.J.).

In Re Regina and Geszthelyi (1977), 33 C.C.C. (2d) 543, 38 C.R.N.S. 15 sub nom. Geszthelyi v. The Queen (B.C.C.A.) this section was interpreted as merely prescribing the order which is to be followed in the proceedings but does not fix the time for making the election. Thus jurisdiction was not lost where the accused was not put to his election on his first appearance. Further, the power of adjournment under s. 537(1)(a) exists throughout the proceedings and is not dependent on the accused having been given his election at the outset.

Failure to endorse election [subsec. (4)] – It was held in relation to the predecessor to this subsection that failure to endorse the nature of the election was fatal to the conviction: R. v. MacDonald (1974), 18 C.C.C. (2d) 136, 8 N.S.R. (2d) 589 (S.C.App.Div.); but the Justice need not set out the entire subsec. (2). This subsection is sufficiently complied with if a memorandum as to how the accused elected is endorsed on the information: R. v. Squires (1977), 35 C.C.C. (2d) 325, 11 Nfld. & P.E.I.R. 457 (Nfld.C.A.). And in R. v. Sagutch (1991), 63 C.C.C. (3d) 569 (B.C.C.A.) it was held that, while the failure of the judge to endorse the election was a jurisdictional error, the accused's appeal from the dismissal of an application to quash the order to stand trial could be dismissed pursuant to s. 686(1)(b)(iv).

Powers of Justice

POWERS OF JUSTICE.

537. (1) A justice acting under this Part may

- (a) adjourn an inquiry from time to time and change the place of hearing, where it appears to be desirable to do so by reason of the absence of a witness, the inability of a witness who is ill to attend at the place where the justice usually sits or for any other sufficient reason;
- (b) remand the accused to custody for the purposes of the Identification of Criminals Act;
- (b) [Repealed (old provision). 1991, c. 43, s. 9.]
- (c) except where the accused is authorized pursuant to Part XVI to be at large, remand the accused to custody in a prison by warrant in Form 19;
- (d) resume an inquiry before the expiration of a period for which it has been adjourned with the consent of the prosecutor and the accused or his counsel;
- (e) order in writing, in Form 30, that the accused be brought before him, or any other justice for the same territorial division, at any time before the expiration of the time for which the accused has been remanded;
- (f) grant or refuse permission to the prosecutor or his counsel to address him in support of the charge, by way of opening or summing up or by way of reply on any evidence that is given on behalf of the accused;
- (g) receive evidence on the part of the prosecutor or the accused, as the case may be, after hearing any evidence that has been given on behalf of either of them;
- (h) order that no person other than the prosecutor, the accused and their counsel shall have access to or remain in the room in which the inquiry is held, where it appears to him that the ends of justice will be best served by so doing;
- (i) regulate the course of the inquiry in any way that appears to him to be desirable and that is not inconsistent with this Act; and
- (j) where the prosecutor and the accused so agree, permit the accused to appear by counsel or by closed-circuit television or any other means that allow the court and the accused to engage in simultaneous visual and oral communication, for any part of the inquiry other than a part in which the evidence of a witness is taken. ### CROSS-REFERENCES

The term “justice” is defined in s. 2. As a matter or practice preliminary inquiries are usually conducted by provincial court judges.

Note on procedure at preliminary inquiry – This section, in general, sets out the powers of the justice or provincial court judge presiding at a preliminary inquiry and, in particular, deals with adjournment of the inquiry and orders directing that the accused attend for observation or be remanded for observation. Where an issue of fitness to stand trial arises at the preliminary inquiry then the procedure to be followed is set out in ss. 672.11 to 672.2 and 672.22 to 672.33. Section 523(2) gives the justice a power to vary a release or detention order for non-s. 469 offences where cause is shown where the Crown and defence consent to the justice exercising that jurisdiction [not necessarily consenting that the order should be made]. In addition at the completion of the preliminary inquiry the justice without consent of the parties but upon cause being shown may vary the release or detention order in relation to a non-s. 469 offence.

The procedure for conducting the preliminary inquiry is set out in this Part and may briefly be described as follows. While the accused is arraigned on the charge he is not called upon to plead.

Section 539 permits an application to be made to prohibit publication of the proceedings until the accused is discharged, or if ordered to stand trial, until the trial is ended. The order is mandatory when applied for by the accused at the opening of the inquiry. The order is discretionary when applied for by the prosecutor. Where the accused is not represented by counsel the justice is to inform the accused of his right to apply for the order under s. 539. It is a summary conviction offence (s. 539(3)) to violate the order. It is not unusual, in addition, to apply for an order excluding witnesses until they have testified. While not specifically provided for in this Part it would seem that s. 537(1)(h) or (i) is wide enough to permit the making of such an order. In a proper case the judge can hold the inquiry in camera pursuant to s. 537(1)(h). The taking of evidence commences with the calling of evidence by the prosecutor which is taken under oath [or affirmation] in accordance with s. 540 and the provisions of ss. 14 to 16 of the Canada Evidence Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. C-5. While s. 540 provides for the evidence to be taken in the form of a deposition this provision is virtually never resorted to now and evidence is usually taken verbatim by a court reporter or through the use of sound-recording equipment as contemplated by s. 540(1)(b)(ii) and (5). The record is then in the form of a transcript. Section 715 provides for the admission of evidence taken at the preliminary inquiry where the witness is unavailable for the reasons set out therein at the trial. Section 715.1 provides for admission of a video tape at the preliminary inquiry, made within a reasonable time after the alleged offence in the case of an accused charged with certain sexual offences, where the complainant is under 18 years of age. As to other provisions which govern admission of evidence in sexual offence cases see the notes under the particular section with which the accused is charged or the cross-references under s. 150.1. Sections 709 to 714 provide a means for obtaining the evidence of a witness through appointment of a commissioner to take the evidence. Provisions for securing the presence of witnesses through subpoena and material witness warrant are set out in Part XXII. Procedure for procuring the attendance of a witness who is in custody or the attendance of the accused himself where he is in custody is set out in s. 527. Where a witness refuses to be sworn or to answer questions or to produce documents requested the justice may adjourn the inquiry and remand the witness to custody for successive periods each not exceeding eight days, pursuant to s. 545. Where the accused absconds in the course of the preliminary inquiry the justice may continue the preliminary inquiry in his absence under s. 544. Pursuant to s. 549 the preliminary inquiry may be waived at any stage where the accused and the Crown consent to an order to stand trial. This may be done at any stage of the proceedings and even before any evidence has been taken.

The accused has the right to cross-examine any prosecution witnesses by virtue of s. 540(1)(a). Section 542 makes it clear that the prosecution may introduce a confession by an accused. However, the common law voluntariness rule applies at the preliminary inquiry as at trial. It is a summary conviction offence to publish a report concerning a confession or admission by the accused unless the accused was discharged or the trial has been completed (s. 542(2)). After the prosecution has called its evidence s. 541 provides that the accused is to be addressed in the terms set out in s. 541(1) and anything he says is taken down pursuant to s. 541(2) and is admissible in evidence in accordance with s. 657, subject to possible application of s. 13 of the Charter. Having been addressed the accused is then entitled to call witnesses pursuant to s. 541(3) and their evidence is taken in the same manner as the prosecution evidence (s. 541(4)). At the conclusion of all the evidence the accused and probably the prosecutor are entitled to make submissions as to whether or not the accused should be ordered to stand trial pursuant to s. 548. Section 548 gives the justice the power to order that the accused stand trial for the offence charged or any other indictable offence (including a hybrid offence) in respect of the same transaction. Following an order to stand trial an indictment will be presented in accordance with s. 574, except that if the accused was discharged, or no preliminary inquiry was held, then the provisions of s. 577 must be complied with.

Certain other miscellaneous provisions govern the conduct of the inquiry. Section 538 incorporates s. 556 respecting appearance of a corporate accused. Section 543 provides for the transfer of the proceedings to another jurisdiction where it appears that the offence was committed outside the limits of the jurisdiction in which the accused has been charged. Section 546 provides that certain irregularities, defects or variances do not affect the validity of the preliminary inquiry or subsequent proceedings. Section 547 provides for adjournment where the accused has been misled by the irregularity, defect or variance. Section 547.1 provides for the continuation of the preliminary inquiry before another justice where the initial justice is unable to continue. Section 550 is a little-used provision permitting the justice to require a material witness to enter into a recognizance and for committal of the witness if he fails to comply with the recognizance. Section 551 provides for the transmission of the record to the trial court. After the order to stand trial s. 603 gives the accused the right to inspect the record and to receive copies upon payment of a fee. It is customary in any event to order a copy of the preliminary inquiry. The evidence taken on the preliminary inquiry constitutes a prior statement reduced to writing for the purposes of ss. 9 and 10 of the Canada Evidence Act.

ANNOTATIONS

Jurisdiction generally to control process – It was held in Doyle v. The Queen (1976), 29 C.C.C. (2d) 177, [1977] 1 S.C.R. 597, 68 D.L.R. (3d) 270, 35 C.R.N.S. 1 (9:0), that the power and jurisdiction of a magistrate [now provincial court judge] acting under the Code are circumscribed by the provisions contained therein and must be found to have been confirmed thereby either expressly or by necessary implication. The Court disapproved of the opinion expressed in R. v. Keating (1973), 11 C.C.C. (2d) 133, 21 C.R.N.S. 217 (Ont. C.A.) that the Court has an inherent jurisdiction to control its own process. Rather, “the careful and detailed procedural directions mentioned in the Code are of necessity exhaustive . . . the power of a magistrate or justice acting under the Criminal Code [are] entirely statutory”.

The power given the judge under this section includes the power to order that counsel be disqualified from continuing to act where necessary to prevent the lawyer from placing himself in a conflict of interest: Re Regina and Robillard (1986), 28 C.C.C. (3d) 22 (Ont. C.A.).

Right to adjourn – Until the Crown elects otherwise a Crown option offence is deemed to be indictable and the Court has power to adjourn the proceedings under this subsection: R. v. Gougeon; R. v. Haesler; R. v. Gray (1980), 55 C.C.C. (2d) 218 (Ont. C.A.), leave to appeal to S.C.C. refused 35 N.R. 83n.

Right to make submissions [subsec. (1)(f)] – The Justice has no discretion to refuse counsel for the accused the right to make submissions and such a refusal is a denial of natural justice which will lead to the committal for trial being quashed: R. v. Taillefer et al. (1978), 42 C.C.C. (2d) 282, 3 C.R. (3d) 357 (Ont. C.A.).

Evidence and Crown right to call witnesses [As to defence evidence, see s. 541] – The Crown has a discretion to present only that evidence which makes out a prima facie case: Caccamo v. The Queen (1975), 29 C.R.N.S. 78 (7:2) (S.C.C.).

The Crown has a discretion to call whatever witnesses it requires and the presiding justice has no power to direct the Crown to call certain witnesses: Re R. and Brass (1981), 64 C.C.C. (2d) 206 (Sask. Q.B.).

Conversely, the judge has no power to prevent the prosecution from calling certain witnesses although he is satisfied there is sufficient evidence to order that the accused stand trial: Re R. and Schreder (1987), 36 C.C.C. (3d) 216, 59 C.R. (3d) 183, [1987] N.W.T.R. 240 (S.C.).

The Crown has the right during a preliminary inquiry to withdraw the charge against one accused and call him as a witness against the other accused: R. v. Dick, [1969] 1 C.C.C. 147, 4 C.R.N.S. 102 sub nom. Re Dick (Ont. H.C.J.).

Exclusion of public [subsec. (1)(h)] – If possible a hearing should be conducted by the Judge on the question as to whether he should exercise his discretion and limit the public's access to his Court, but in any event the record should contain both his order and his reasons therefor: Re Armstrong and State Of Wisconsin (1972), 7 C.C.C. (2d) 331, [1972] 3 O.R. 229 (Ont. H.C.J.).

The justice has no power to limit the exclusion order to certain members of the public such as foreign journalists who have indicated they intend to publish details of the evidence despite a publication ban under s. 539. Thus, it may be that to secure a fair trial for the accused all members of the public must be excluded: R. v. Sayegh (No. 1) (1982), 66 C.C.C. (2d) 430 (Ont. Prov. Ct.) and R. v. Sayegh (No. 2) (1982), 66 C.C.C. (2d) 432 (Ont. Prov. Ct.).

The mere possibility that spectators might talk to prospective witnesses is not a ground to order exclusion of the public. Further, while the judge is, in some circumstances, entitled to make the order excluding the public on the basis of submissions of counsel, where those submissions, to the effect that certain spectators might intimidate witnesses, are challenged and it is clear that counsel did not purport to speak from personal knowledge nor to convey instructions that he had received on the matter, then the submissions are nothing but speculation and not a basis for an order of exclusion: Re Vaudrin and The Queen (1982), 2 C.C.C. (3d) 214, 32 C.R. (3d) 162 (B.C.S.C.).

Exclusion of witnesses – Upon counsel's request an order for exclusion of witnesses must be made unless grounds are shown why the justice should not make the order: Re Learn and The Queen (1981), 63 C.C.C. (2d) 191 (Ont. H.C.J.).

Further, there is virtually no case where credibility is in issue and witnesses will be testifying as to fact and the application is unopposed, that the justice would be justified in refusing to make the requested order: Re Collette and The Queen; Re Richard and The Queen (1983), 6 C.C.C. (3d) 300 (Ont. H.C.J.), affd 7 C.C.C. (3d) 574n (C.A.), leave to appeal to S.C.C. refused February 7, 1984.

The power to make an exclusion order does not include the power to order that there be no communication between counsel and the witnesses: Re O'Callaghan and The Queen (1982), 65 C.C.C. (2d) 459, 25 C.R. (3d) 68 (Ont. H.C.J.).

Absence of accused – The provisions of the Criminal Code contemplate the presence of the accused throughout his preliminary inquiry and the accused is not entitled to unilaterally waive a procedural requirement which is enacted both for his benefit and for the benefit of the Crown: Re McLachlan and The Queen (1986), 24 C.C.C. (3d) 255 (Ont. C.A.).

In an identification case, the judge has a discretion to permit the accused to sit in the body of the court. However, refusal to exercise the discretion is not a jurisdictional matter and is therefore not reviewable by the superior court: Re Vaudrin and The Queen (1982), 2 C.C.C. (3d) 214 (B.C.S.C.).

Also now see s. 537(1)(f).

Full answer and defence – The accused is entitled to make full answer and defence at his preliminary inquiry: R. v. Pearson (1957), 117 C.C.C. 249, 25 C.R. 342 (Alta. S.C. App. Div.).

The accused was deprived of his right to full answer and defence when he attended for his preliminary inquiry and found that the Crown had substituted numerous charges within the exclusive jurisdiction of a provincial court judge who refused to allow him an adjournment: Re Regina v. Carter (1972), 7 C.C.C. (2d) 49, [1972] 3 O.R. 50 (H.C.J.).

Application of Charter – A provincial court judge presiding at a preliminary inquiry is not a court of competent jurisdiction under s. 24 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms and therefore has no power to order a stay of proceedings by reason of unreasonable delay under s. 11(b) of the Charter: Mills v. The Queen (1986) 26 C.C.C. (3d) 481, 52 C.R. (3d) 1, [1986] 1 S.C.R. 863 (4:3).

Nor does a judge presiding at a preliminary inquiry have jurisdiction to determine the constitutionality of an evidentiary provision of the Criminal Code under s. 52 of the Constitutional Act, 1982: R. v. Seaboyer (1991), 66 C.C.C. (3d) 321, 83 D.L.R. (4th) 193, 4 O.R. (3d) 383 (S.C.C.) (7:2).

Notwithstanding the preference for alleged violations of s. 11(b) of the Charter being heard by the trial court, in a proper case, the superior court should grant an order staying proceedings by reason of violation of s. 11(b) of the Charter due to unreasonable delay in commencing the preliminary inquiry. Where the application is brought to the superior court in advance of the preliminary inquiry, that court may properly consider the entire period of time up to the date set for the hearing where the date for the preliminary inquiry was fixed and could not, at the behest of the accused, be moved up: R. v. Smith (1989), 52 C.C.C. (3d) 97, [1989] 2 S.C.R. 1120, 73 C.R. (3d) 1 (9:0).

(a) may, if application therefor is made by the prosecutor, and

(b) shall, if application therefor is made by any of the accused, make an order directing that the evidence taken at the inquiry shall not be published in any newspaper or broadcast before such time as, in respect of each of the accused,

(c) he is discharged; or

(d) if he is ordered to stand trial, the trial is ended.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The trial of the offence under s. 539(3) is conducted by a summary conviction court in accordance with Part XXVII. For a discussion of the procedure on preliminary inquiries and cross-references, see Note on procedure at preliminary inquiry under s. 537.

SYNOPSIS

This section authorizes the justice conducting the preliminary inquiry to make an order, prior to the commencing of the taking of evidence, banning the publication or broadcast of the evidence called at the inquiry until such time as the accused is either discharged (subsec. (1)(c)) or, where there is an order to stand trial, until the trial has ended (subsec. (1)(d)). Its purpose is to protect the accused's right to a fair trial. Such an order is mandatory if sought by the accused (subsec. (1)(b)), discretionary if sought by the Crown (subsec. (1)(a)).

If the accused is not represented by counsel at the preliminary inquiry, the justice holding the inquiry must inform the accused of his right to make application under subsec. (1) prior to the commencement of the taking of evidence.

It is a summary conviction offence to breach an order made under subsec. (1) (subsec. (3)).

ANNOTATIONS

Subsec. (1) – This subsection, which is directed at ensuring a fair trial for the accused as guaranteed by s. 11 (d) of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, does not constitute an unconstitutional infringement on the guarantee to freedom of the press as guaranteed by s. 2 (b) of the Charter: R. v. Banville (1983), 3 C.C.C. (3d) 312, 34 C.R. (3d) 20 (N.B.Q.B.).

Where the application for a ban on publication is made only during the course of the preliminary inquiry the justice has a discretion whether or not to make the order and he is also entitled to lift the ban in proper circumstances: R. v. Harrison (1984), 14 C.C.C. (3d) 549 (Que. Ct. Sess.).

Subsec. (3) – A reporter for a United States newspaper who submitted a story containing a report of evidence at a preliminary inquiry notwithstanding an order under subsec. (1) could be tried in Canadian Courts for the offence under this subsection where the United States newspaper was circulated in Canada: R. v. Banville (1983), 3 C.C.C. (3d) 312, 34 C.R. (3d) 20 (N.B.Q.B.).

TAKING EVIDENCE / Reading and signing depositions / Authentication by justice / Stenographer to be sworn / Authentication of transcript / Transcription of record taken by sound recording apparatus.

540. (1) Where an accused is before a justice holding a preliminary inquiry, the justice shall

- (a) take the evidence under oath, in the presence of the accused, of the witnesses called on the part of the prosecution and allow the accused or his counsel to cross-examine them; and
- (b) cause a record of the evidence of each witness to be taken
  - (i) in legible writing in the form of a deposition, in Form 31, or by a stenographer appointed by him or pursuant to law, or
  - (ii) in a province where a sound recording apparatus is authorized by or under provincial legislation for use in civil cases, by the type of apparatus so authorized and in accordance with the requirements of the provincial legislation.

(2) Where a deposition is taken down in writing, the justice shall, in the presence of the accused, before asking the accused if he wishes to call witnesses,

- (a) cause the deposition to be read to the witness;
- (b) cause the deposition to be signed by the witness; and
- (c) sign the deposition himself.

(3) Where depositions are taken down in writing, the justice may sign

- (a) at the end of each deposition; or
- (b) at the end of several or of all the depositions in a manner that will indicate that his signature is intended to authenticate each deposition.

(4) Where a stenographer appointed to take down the evidence is not a duly sworn court stenographer, he shall make oath that he will truly and faithfully report the evidence.

(5) Where the evidence is taken down by a stenographer appointed by the justice or pursuant to law, it need not be read to or signed by the witnesses, but shall be transcribed by the stenographer and the transcript shall be accompanied by

- (a) an affidavit of the stenographer that it is a true report of the evidence; or
- (b) a certificate that it is a true report of the evidence if the stenographer is a duly sworn court stenographer.

(6) Where, in accordance with this Act, a record is taken in any proceedings under this Act by a sound recording apparatus, the record so taken shall be dealt with and transcribed and the transcription certified and used in accordance with the provincial legislation with such modifications as the circumstances require mentioned in subsection (1). R.S., c. C-34, s. 468; R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 98.

CROSS-REFERENCES

For a discussion of the procedure on preliminary inquiries and cross-references, see Note on procedure at preliminary inquiry under s. 537. As to taking evidence of children and persons whose competency is objected, see s. 16 of the Canada Evidence Act.

SYNOPSIS

This section requires that a permanent record be made of the evidence called at a preliminary inquiry. This is usually done by either a court stenographer or through the use of sound recording equipment approved under provincial legislation. In either case a transcript of the evidence will be produced.

Subsection (1)(a) provides that the accused has a right to cross-examine any witness called by the Crown.

Although written depositions are provided for, such are rarely used.

For the most part the normal rules of evidence apply. One major exception is s. 24(2) of the Charter. As the Supreme Court of Canada has held that a justice or judge presiding at a preliminary inquiry is not “a court of competent jurisdiction” for the purpose of granting Charter remedies, there is no power to exclude evidence obtained in a manner which breached one of its provisions (e.g., s. 8 – unreasonable search or seizure).

ANNOTATIONS

Recalling of witnesses – A justice may allow a witness to be recalled to correct any wrong evidence that he has given: R. v. Jones, ex p. Ponak et al. [1970] 1 C.C.C. 250, 7 D.L.R. (3d) 381 (B.C.C.A.).

Right to cross-examine – The arbitrary fixing of a time limitation on cross-examination of a witness constituted a refusal to exercise jurisdiction and was cured by a mandamus order to allow counsel to continue: Re Regina and Roulette (1972), 7 C.C.C. (2d) 244, [1972] 4 W.W.R. 508 (Man. Q.B.).

The right of cross-examination contemplated by this subsection is that of full, detailed and careful cross-examination based on a known examination-in-chief; and thus where counsel for accused was delayed in attending the preliminary hearing because of attendance in another Court, so that he was not present for the examination-in-chief of the principal Crown witness, the committal for trial was quashed: Re Durette and The Queen (1979), 47 C.C.C. (2d) 170 (Ont. H.C.J.).

Although the accused has counsel he may personally exercise the right to cross-examine all or some of the witnesses. The justice does not have a discretion to decide who will cross-examine: Re Zaor and The Queen (1984), 12 C.C.C. (3d) 265 (Que. C.A.).

Review of evidentiary rulings – Mandamus with certiorari in aid will not lie to supervise a justice's conduct of a preliminary inquiry as where review is sought of a justice's refusal to allow certain cross-examination: Re Depagie and The Queen (1976), 32 C.C.C. (2d) 89, [1976] 6 W.W.R. 1 (Alta. S.C. App. Div.) (2:1).

The decision of the justice concerning the admissibility of evidence even if erroneous, does not affect jurisdiction and is therefore not reviewable on certiorari: A.-G. Que. v. Cohen (1979), 46 C.C.C. (2d) 473, [1979] 2 S.C.R. 305, 13 C.R. (3d) 36 (7:0).

The decision of a justice refusing to order production of a police witness' notebook to defence counsel is not reviewable on certiorari. The refusal does not amount to a denial of natural justice or of the right to cross-examine: Re Martin, Simard and Desjardins and The Queen; Re Nichols and The Queen (1977), 41 C.C.C. (2d) 308, 87 D.L.R. (3d) 634 (Ont. C.A.).

Admissibility of statement of facts or evidence from another proceeding – A statement of facts agreed to by defence counsel and Crown counsel may be admitted without calling viva voce evidence and constitutes evidence upon which the Justice may base his decision as to committal: Re Ulrich and The Queen (1977), 38 C.C.C. (2d) 1, [1978] 1 W.W.R. 422 (Alta. S.C.T.D.).

The accused may waive strict compliance with the requirement that evidence be adduced through witnesses who have been sworn or affirmed and heard at the trial before the trier of fact, but this requires that the consent to the procedure of both the accused and the Crown be conveyed to the Court and that for example, the evidence taken on a previous proceeding enter the record during the trial: Matheson v. The Queen (1981), 59 C.C.C. (2d) 289, 22 C.R. (3d) 289 (S.C.C.) (7:0).

Interpreter – An interpreter is like an expert witness and should be sworn prior to interpreting for a witness testifying in a foreign language. The accused may, however, waive compliance with this requirement and in certain circumstances counsel's acquiescence can constitute a waiver: Re Hiltz and The Queen (1984), 14 C.C.C. (3d) 187 (Ont. H.C.J.).

Power to order production [Also see notes under s. 603] – A preliminary inquiry is not a trial, so s.10(1) of the Canada Evidence Act is not applicable and the presiding judge does not have the power to order production for the defence of a Crown witness' previous written statement: Patterson v. The Queen (1970), 2 C.C.C. (2d) 227, 10 C.R.N.S.55 (S.C.C.) (5:2).

While the preliminary inquiry protects the accused from a needless and improper exposure to a public trial it is also a forum where the accused is afforded an opportunity to discover and to appreciate the case to be made against him at trial: Re Skogman and The Queen (1984), 13 C.C.C. (3d) 161, 41 C.R. (3d) 1, [1984] 2 S.C.R. 93 (4:3).

A provincial court judge presiding at a preliminary hearing has power to order a police officer to produce notes from which he refreshed his memory prior to testifying which were relevant to the evidence given by the officer and to the issues in the case: Re Regina v. Monfils and four others (1971), 4 C.C.C. (2d) 163, [1972] 1 O.R. 11 (C.A.).

A judge presiding at a preliminary inquiry is competent to make all evidentiary rulings, including rulings on claims of privilege. It may, however, be necessary to follow certain procedural steps to bring the relevant evidence before the court, as where the records sought by the accused are kept in accordance with provincial legislation: R. v. R. (L.) (1995), 100 C.C.C. (3d) 329, 39 C.R. (4th) 390, 127 D.L.R. (4th) 170 (Ont. C.A.).

Requirement that record of evidence be taken – The provisions for the examination of witnesses and the taking of evidence are mandatory and non-compliance therewith is fatal to a conviction: R. v. Lacasse (1972), 8 C.C.C. (2d) 270, [1972] 5 W.W.R.198 (B.C.C.A.).

Similarly, where the recording device used at the accused's preliminary hearing failed and no transcript was available, the mandatory provisions of this subsection have not been complied with and the committal for trial must be quashed: Re Boylan and The Queen (1979), 46 C.C.C. (2d) 415, 8 C.R. (3d) 36, [1979] 3 W.W.R. 435 (Sask. C.A.). Contra: Re Rupert and Frith and The Queen (1978), 43 C.C.C. (2d) 34, 3 C.R. (3d) 351 (Ont. H.C.J.), affd without written reasons, January 23, 1979 (Ont. C.A.), where it was held the provisions are directory only and loss of the recording before a transcript could be made was not grounds for quashing the committal for trial.

Malfunctioning of the sound recording equipment at the preliminary inquiry is not necessarily fatal to the validity of the order to stand trial and where that portion of the evidence which has been transcribed supports the order there has not been a failure to comply with the provisions of this subsection: Re Rayer and Labarre and The Queen (1981), 61 C.C.C. (2d) 331 (B.C.S.C.).

Provisions of this type are directory and the judge's failure to abide by them will not result in his loss of jurisdiction. Where, however, his notes under Form 31 fail to establish whether the witnesses had sworn to or affirmed their evidence a new trial was ordered: R. v. Czyszczon, [1963] 3 C.C.C. 106, 41 C.R. 17 (Alta.S.C.App.Div.).

Application of Charter – A provincial court judge presiding at a preliminary inquiry is not a court of competent jurisdiction under s. 24 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms and therefore has no power to grant a remedy under that section, including exclusion of evidence, for violation of a Charter right: Mills v. The Queen (1986), 26 C.C.C. (3d) 481, 52 C.R. (3d) 1, [1986] 1 S.C.R. 863 (4:3).

The accused has the right to cross-examine a police officer as to the basis for obtaining a search warrant to establish a foundation for submissions at trial relevant to his rights under ss. 8 and 24(2) of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms: R. v. Cover (1988), 44 C.C.C. (3d) 34 (Ont. H.C.J.).

An accused is entitled to cross-examine Crown witnesses at a preliminary inquiry relating to Charter defences which are not of concern to the judge conducting the inquiry. However, the refusal of the provincial court judge to allow certain questions relating to a Charter issue will not amount to jurisdictional error so as to require that the order to stand trial be quashed: R. v. George (1991), 69 C.C.C. (3d) 148, 5 O.R. (3d) 144 (C.A.).

HEARING OF WITNESSES / Contents of address to accused / Statement of accused / Witnesses for accused / Depositions of such witnesses.

541. (1) When the evidence of the witnesses called on the part of the prosecution has been taken down and, where required by this Part, has been read, the justice shall, subject to this section, hear the witnesses called by the accused.

(2) Before hearing any witness called by an accused who is not represented by counsel, the justice shall address the accused as follows or to the like effect:

“Do you wish to say anything in answer to these charges or to any other charges which might have arisen from the evidence led by the prosecution? You are not obliged to say anything, but whatever you do say may be given in evidence against you at your trial. You should not make any confession or admission of guilt because of any promise or threat made to you but if you do make any statement it may be given in evidence against you at your trial in spite of the promise or threat.”

(3) Where the accused who is not represented by counsel says anything in answer to the address made by the justice pursuant to subsection (2), the answer shall be taken down in writing and shall be signed by the justice and kept with the evidence of the witnesses and dealt with in accordance with this Part.

(4) Where an accused is not represented by counsel, the justice shall ask the accused if he or she wishes to call any witnesses after subsections (2) and (3) have been complied with.

(5) The justice shall hear each witness called by the accused who testifies to any matter relevant to the inquiry, and for the purposes of this subsection, section 540 applies with such modifications as the circumstances require. R.S., c. C-34, s. 469; R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 99; 1994, c. 44, s. 54.

CROSS-REFERENCES

For a discussion of the procedure on preliminary inquiries and cross-references, see Note on procedure at preliminary inquiry under s. 537.

SYNOPSIS

This section sets out the procedure to be followed after the Crown has closed its case at a preliminary inquiry.

Subsection (1) contains the "address" to be read by the justice to an unrepresented accused. It essentially advises the accused that he is not obliged to answer to the charge but that anything that the accused does say may be given in evidence at any subsequent trial. It is rare that an accused will make a statement or give evidence at this stage of a matter.

The accused has the right to call witnesses and an unrepresented accused must be advised of this right.

ANNOTATIONS

Giving of warning – After the Crown has closed its case and the accused has been given the warning under this subsection, semble, the Crown may not then be permitted to reopen its case to call additional evidence: Re Ulrich and The Queen (1977), 38 C.C.C. (2d) 1, [1978] 1 W.W.R. 442 (Alta.S.C.T.D.).

The accused may move for discharge after the Crown's case on the ground that the evidence is insufficient either before or after the warning is given under this subsection but before he elects whether or not to call evidence: R. v. Hardy; R. v. Johnston (1979), 50 C.C.C. (2d) 34 (Que. Ct. Sess.).

However, in A.-G. Que. v. Beauchemin J.S.P. et al. (1980), 30 C.R. (3d) 51 (Que. S.C.), Hugessen, A.C.J.S.C. expressed the view that it would have been better for the Judge to comply with the provisions of this section and give the accused the warning prior to ruling on a motion for dismissal.

This section requires that the judge inform the accused in general terms that he is liable to be ordered to stand trial for additional offences in respect of the same transaction. Thus, the fact that the judge provides the accused with more specific information, by indicating the charges which he feels may arise from the Crown's case, is not improper where there is nothing to indicate that the judge had predetermined the issue before hearing defence evidence and submissions: R. v. Melaragni (1990), 73 C.C.C. (3d) 356 (Ont. H.C.J.).

However, where all the counts are contained in one information, it is not necessary to address the accused separately with respect to each count: Re Eusler and Budovitch and The Queen (1978), 43 C.C.C. (2d) 501, 23 N.B.R. (2d) 643 (N.B.S.C. App. Div.).

Right of accused to call witnesses – Despite the fact that the Crown need only present sufficient evidence to make out a prima facie case to obtain an order that the accused stand trial, this subsection is mandatory and the justice does not have a discretion to order that the accused stand trial without giving the accused an opportunity to call witnesses notwithstanding at the time of the Crown's case the justice is satisfied there is sufficient evidence to order that the accused stand trial: Re Ward and The Queen (1976), 31 C.C.C. (2d) 446, 35 C.R.N.S. 117 (Ont.H.C.J.), affd 31 C.C.C. (2d) 446n (C.A.).

This section does not require the presiding judge to grant an adjournment in all cases in order to obtain the attendance of a material witness. Ordinarily, where an application is made for an adjournment to call a witness, it must be shown that the applicant has been guilty of no neglect in procuring the attendance of the witness and that there is a reasonable expectation that the witness' attendance can be procured for the future time to which it is sought to put off the case: R. v. McKenzie (1989), 51 C.C.C. (3d) 285 (B.C.S.C.).

CONFESSION OR ADMISSION OF ACCUSED / Restriction of publication of reports of preliminary inquiry / Definition of “newspaper”.

542. (1) Nothing in this Act prevents a prosecutor giving in evidence at a preliminary inquiry any admission, confession or statement made at any time by the accused that by law is admissible against him.

(2) Every one who publishes in any newspaper, or broadcasts, a report that any admission or confession was tendered in evidence at a preliminary inquiry or a report of the nature of such admission or confession so tendered in evidence unless

- (a) the accused has been discharged, or
- (b) if the accused has been ordered to stand trial, the trial has ended, is guilty of an offence punishable on summary conviction.

(3) In this section “newspaper” has the same meaning as in section 297. R.S., c. C-34, s. 470; R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 101(2)(c).

CROSS-REFERENCES

The trial of the offence under s. 542(2) is conducted by a summary conviction court in accordance with Part XXVII. For a discussion of the procedure on preliminary inquiries and cross-references, see Note on procedure at preliminary inquiry under s. 537.

SYNOPSIS

This section codifies the Crown’s right to introduce into evidence a statement made by the accused. The normal rules of admissibility apply and, therefore, the “voluntariness” of the statement must be proven beyond a reasonable doubt.

Subsection (2) makes it an offence, punishable on summary conviction, to publish any confession tendered in evidence until the accused has been discharged or the trial has ended. (Also see s. 539.)

ANNOTATIONS

Burden of proof of voluntariness – An accused’s statement may only be admitted on the same basis as it would before a trial Judge who must be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt as to its voluntary nature: R. v. Pickett (1975), 28 C.C.C. (2d) 297, 31 C.R.N.S. 239 (Ont. C.A.).

On this latter point it should be noted that in R. v. Leboeuf (1979), 57 C.C.C. (2d) 257 (Que. C.A.) the Court adopted a standard requiring proof that was “sufficiently strong and conclusive” to satisfy the trial Judge as to the voluntariness of the statement, rather than proof beyond a reasonable doubt.

Waiver of *voir dire – An accused or his counsel may waive the necessity of a voir dire to determine the voluntariness of a confession: R. v. Park (1981), 59 C.C.C. (2d) 385, 21 C.R. (3d) 182, [1981] 2 S.C.R. 64 (9:0).

Right to inquire into circumstances of taking statement – Although the Crown has a discretion not to introduce a statement made by the accused to the police, counsel for the accused is entitled to fully cross-examine the officers as to the circumstances surrounding the taking of the statement: R. v. Williams, ex p. Barnett (1970), 2 C.C.C. (2d) 298, [1971] 1 O.R. 703 (H.C.J.). Also see R. v. Poirier, Prov. J. (1988), 68 C.R. (3d) 67, [1989] R.L. 6 (Que. C.A.).

Remand Where Offence Committed in Another Jurisdiction

ORDER THAT ACCUSED APPEAR OR BE TAKEN BEFORE JUSTICE WHERE OFFENCE COMMITTED / Transmission of transcript and documents and effect of order or warrant.

543. (1) Where an accused is charged with an offence alleged to have been committed out of the limits of the jurisdiction in which he has been charged, the justice before whom he appears or is brought may, at any stage of the inquiry after hearing both parties,

(a) order the accused to appear, or

(b) if the accused is in custody, issue a warrant in Form 15 to convey the accused before a justice having jurisdiction in the place where the offence is alleged to have been committed, who shall continue and complete the inquiry.

(2) Where a justice makes an order or issues a warrant pursuant to subsection (1), he shall cause the transcript of any evidence given before him in the inquiry and all documents that were then before him and that are relevant to the inquiry to be transmitted to a justice having jurisdiction in the place where the offence is alleged to have been committed and

(a) any evidence the transcript of which is so transmitted shall be deemed to have been taken by the justice to whom it is transmitted; and

(b) any appearance notice, promise to appear, undertaking or recognizance issued to or given or entered into by the accused under Part XVI shall be deemed to have been issued, given or entered into in the jurisdiction where the offence is alleged to have been committed and to require the accused to appear before the justice to whom the transcript and documents are transmitted at the time provided in the order made in respect of the accused under paragraph (1)(a). R.S., c. C-34, s. 471; R.S., c. 2 (2nd Supp.), s. 7.

CROSS-REFERENCES

As to territorial jurisdiction generally see ss. 470, 476 to 481. For a discussion of the procedure on preliminary inquiries and cross-references, see Note on procedure at preliminary inquiry under s. 537.

SYNOPSIS

An accused charged in one jurisdiction may be arrested in another and brought before a justice sitting in the latter location. In these circumstances, the court can deal with bail (under Part XVI) and order that the accused appear, or be conveyed in custody, before a justice in the jurisdiction where the matter arose. Provision is also made in subsec. (2) for the transferability of transcript evidence and obligations relating to such matters as undertakings.

ANNOTATIONS

Even if an information was defective in that it failed to indicate where the offence occurred, the refusal of the provincial court judge to quash or order particulars would not be reviewable by way of certiorari unless the evidence adduced revealed that the alleged offence took place outside the court's jurisdiction. In that event, certiorari would lie if the judge persisted in continuing to exercise a jurisdiction he did not have: R. v. Webster (1993), 78 C.C.C. (3d) 302, [1993] 1 S.C.R. 3, 17 C.R. (4th) 393 (7:0).

Absconding Accused

ACCUSED ABSCONDING DURING INQUIRY / Adverse inference / Accused not entitled to re-opening / Counsel for accused may continue to act / Accused calling witnesses.

544. (1) Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act, where an accused, whether or not he is charged jointly with another, absconds during the course of a preliminary inquiry into an offence with which he is charged,

- (a) he shall be deemed to have waived his right to be present at the inquiry, and
- (b) the justice

- (i) may continue the inquiry and, when all the evidence has been taken, shall dispose of the inquiry in accordance with section 548, or

- (ii) if a warrant is issued for the arrest of the accused, may adjourn the inquiry to await his appearance, but where the inquiry is adjourned pursuant to subparagraph (b)(ii), the justice may continue it at any time pursuant to subparagraph (b)(i) if he is satisfied that it would no longer be in the interests of justice to await the appearance of the accused.

(2) Where the justice continues a preliminary inquiry pursuant to subsection (1), he may draw an inference adverse to the accused from the fact that he has absconded.

(3) Where an accused reappears at a preliminary inquiry that is continuing pursuant to subsection (1), he is not entitled to have any part of the proceedings that was conducted in his absence re-opened unless the justice is satisfied that because of exceptional circumstances it is in the interests of justice to re-open the inquiry.

(4) Where the accused has absconded during the course of a preliminary inquiry and the justice continues the inquiry, counsel for the accused is not thereby deprived of any authority he may have to continue to act for the accused in the proceedings.

(5) Where, at the conclusion of the evidence on the part of the prosecution at a preliminary inquiry that has been continued pursuant to subsection (1), the accused is absent but counsel for the accused is present, he or she shall be given an opportunity to call witnesses on behalf of the accused and subsection 541(5) applies with such modifications as the circumstances require. 1974-75-76, c. 93, s. 59; 1994, c. 44, s. 55.

CROSS-REFERENCES

A similar provision where the accused absconds during trial is found in s. 475. In addition an accused who fails to appear for his jury trial may forfeit the right to trial by jury by virtue of s. 598. For a discussion of the procedure on preliminary inquiries and cross-references, see Note on procedure at preliminary inquiry under s. 537.

SYNOPSIS

This section deals with the situation where an accused, having “elected” for trial in a higher court, fails to appear at the preliminary inquiry. If the justice is satisfied that the accused has absconded, he can either continue the hearing (subsec. (1)(b)(i)) or issue a warrant and adjourn the proceedings (subsec. (1)(b)(ii)). If the latter course is followed the proceedings can be resumed if the court is of the opinion that it is no longer in the interests of justice to await the accused’s appearance. The adjournment need only be for a few minutes.

Subsection (2) permits the court to draw an adverse inference from the fact that the accused has absconded (e.g., consciousness of guilt).

Counsel for the accused may continue to act and retains the right to call witnesses on the accused’s behalf (subsecs. (4), (5)).

An accused who reappears does not have the right to have reopened that portion of the proceedings conducted in his or her absence (subsec. (3)). The proceedings will only be reopened where the justice finds that there are exceptional circumstances and that it is in the interests of justice to do so. (Also see s. 475 – absconding at trial.)

ANNOTATIONS

An accused may be found to have absconded “during the course of a preliminary inquiry” where having elected trial by judge and jury he fails to appear on the return date of an adjournment: Re Plummer and The Queen (1983), 5 C.C.C. (3d) 17, [1983] 4 W.W.R. 351 (B.C.C.A.).

Procedure Where Witness Refuses to Testify

WITNESS REFUSING TO BE EXAMINED / Further commitment / Saving.

545. (1) Where a person, being present at a preliminary inquiry and being required by the justice to give evidence,

- (a) refuses to be sworn,
- (b) having been sworn, refuses to answer the questions that are put to him,
- (c) fails to produce any writings that he is required to produce, or
- (d) refuses to sign his deposition, without offering a reasonable excuse for his failure or refusal, the justice may adjourn the inquiry and may, by warrant in Form 20, commit the person to prison for a period not exceeding eight clear days or for the period during which the inquiry is adjourned, whichever is the lesser period.

(2) Where a person to whom subsection (1) applies is brought before the justice upon the resumption of the adjourned inquiry and again refuses to do what is required of him, the justice may again adjourn the inquiry for a period not exceeding eight clear days and commit him to prison for the period of adjournment or any part thereof, and may adjourn the inquiry and commit the person to prison from time to time until the person consents to do what is required of him.

(3) Nothing in this section shall be deemed to prevent the justice from sending the case for trial on any other sufficient evidence taken by him. R.S., c. C-34, s. 472.

CROSS-REFERENCES

For a discussion of the procedure on preliminary inquiries and cross-references, see Note on procedure at preliminary inquiry under s. 537.

SYNOPSIS

This section sets out the powers of a justice or judge in dealing with a witness who, without a reasonable excuse, refuses to be sworn, answer questions or otherwise properly participate in a preliminary inquiry. The ability to punish for contempt of court is not available.

Where this situation arises, the court may adjourn the inquiry and commit the witness to prison for no longer than eight clear days (subsec. (1)). If, upon the resumption of the hearing, the witness persists in this course of conduct, he can be recommitted for a further eight days. In theory, this process can be repeated until such time as the witness agrees to co-operate (subsec. (2)).

ANNOTATIONS

This section limits the power of the Justice, who may not resort to contempt of Court proceedings for refusal to testify: R. v. Bublely (1976), 32 C.C.C. (2d) 79, [1976] 6 W.W.R. 179 (Alta. S.C. App. Div.).

Similarly, a superior Court has no jurisdiction to punish for contempt a witness who refuses to testify at a preliminary hearing: R. v. Marsden (1977), 37 C.C.C. (2d) 107, 40 C.R.N.S. 11 sub nom. Re Kenney, R. v. Marsden (Que.Sup.Ct.).

Nor may the witness be proceeded against by way of indictment for contempt of Court: R. v. McKenzie (1978), 41 C.C.C. (2d) 394, [1978] 4 W.W.R. 582 (Alta. S.C. App. Div.).

However, it would seem that at least where the witness was not committed to prison under this section, a charge of attempting to obstruct justice would lie under s. 139(2) for the witness' refusal to testify: Re Lacroix and The Queen (1987), 34 C.C.C. (3d) 94, 59 C.R. (3d) 92, [1987] 1 S.C.R. 244 (5:0), rev'd 15 C.C.C. (3d) 265, 41 C.R. (3d) 163 (Que. C.A.); R. v. Mercer (1988), 43 C.C.C. (3d) 347, 65 C.R. (3d) 275, 89 A.R. 24 (C.A.).

The words "reasonable excuse" grant a discretion to the justice to refuse to send a person to jail even if the person in law is required to answer the question: Re Abko Medical Laboratories Ltd. et al. and The Queen (1977), 35 C.C.C. (2d) 65, 77 D.L.R. (3d) 295 (Ont.H.C.J.). In this case the witness, a member of the Legislature, had been called as a defence witness but refused to answer questions as to how he received certain information. It was held that the justice had the authority to consider whether the witness had a reasonable excuse, by virtue of his position, to refuse to answer the question. [Note: in a subsequent reference to the Ontario Court of Appeal Reference Re Legislative Privilege (1978), 39 C.C.C. (2d) 226, 18 O.R. (2d) 529 it was held that a member of the Legislature has no privilege to refuse to disclose the sources of his information assuming the information to be relevant and admissible evidence.]

Remedial Provisions

IRREGULARITY OR VARIANCE NOT TO AFFECT VALIDITY.

546. The validity of any proceeding at or subsequent to a preliminary inquiry is not affected by

- (a) any irregularity or defect in the substance or form of the summons or warrant;
- (b) any variance between the charge set out in the summons or warrant and the charge set out in the information; or
- (c) any variance between the charge set out in the summons, warrant or information and the evidence adduced by the prosecution at the inquiry. R.S., c. C-34, s. 473.

CROSS-REFERENCES

As to provisions governing the sufficiency of informations and powers of amendment see ss. 581 to 601. For a discussion of the procedure on preliminary inquiries and cross-references, see Note on procedure at preliminary inquiry under s. 537.

SYNOPSIS

This section provides that irregularities or defects in the process by which the accused is brought before the court (i.e., the summons or warrant) shall not affect the validity of any proceedings.

ADJOURNMENT IF ACCUSED MISLED.

547. Where it appears to the justice that the accused has been deceived or misled by any irregularity, defect or variance mentioned in section 546, he may adjourn the inquiry and may remand the accused or grant him interim release in accordance with Part XVI. R.S., c. C-34, s. 474; 1974-75-76, c. 93, s. 59.1.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The general adjournment and remand power is found in s. 537. For a discussion of the procedure on preliminary inquiries and cross-references, see Note on procedure at preliminary inquiry under s. 537.

---

INABILITY OF JUSTICE TO CONTINUE.

547.1 Where a justice acting under this Part has commenced to take evidence and dies or is unable to continue for any reason, another justice may

- (a) continue taking the evidence at the point at which the interruption in the taking of the evidence occurred, where the evidence was recorded pursuant to section 540 and is available; or
- (b) commence taking the evidence as if no evidence had been taken, where no evidence was recorded pursuant to section 540 or where the evidence is not available. R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 100.

CROSS-REFERENCES

A similar provision, where the trial judge is unable to continue, is found in s. 669.2. For a discussion of the procedure on preliminary inquiries and cross-references, see Note on procedure at preliminary inquiry under s. 537.

SYNOPSIS

Where the justice presiding at a preliminary inquiry dies or is unable to continue, another justice may continue with the hearing. If a record of the evidence previously called is available that evidence need not be recalled. However, if no record is available, the inquiry shall start again as if no evidence had yet been heard.

Adjudication and Recognizances

---

ORDER TO STAND TRIAL OR DISCHARGE / Endorsing charge / Where accused ordered to stand trial / Defect not to affect validity.

548. (1) When all the evidence has been taken by the justice, he shall

- (a) if in his opinion there is sufficient evidence to put the accused on trial for the offence charged or any other indictable offence in respect of the same transaction, order the accused to stand trial; or
- (b) discharge the accused, if in his opinion on the whole of the evidence no sufficient case is made out to put the accused on trial for the offence charged or any other indictable offence in respect of the same transaction.

(2) Where the justice orders the accused to stand trial for an indictable offence, other than or in addition to the one with which the accused was charged, the justice shall endorse on the information the charges on which he orders the accused to stand trial.

(2.1) A justice who orders that an accused is to stand trial has the power to fix the date for the trial or the date on which the accused must appear in the trial court to have that date fixed.

(3) The validity of an order to stand trial is not affected by any defect apparent on the face of the information in respect of which the preliminary inquiry is held or in respect of any charge on which the accused is ordered to stand trial unless, in the opinion of the court before which an objection to the information or charge is taken, the accused has been misled or prejudiced in his defence by reason of that defect. R.S., c. C-34, s. 475; R.S., c. 2 (2nd Supp.), s. 8; R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 101(1); 1994, c. 44, s. 56.

CROSS-REFERENCES

Procedure for waiver of the preliminary inquiry is set out in s. 549. After the accused has been ordered to stand trial the justice may vary the release or detention order where cause is shown provided the accused is not ordered to stand trial for a s. 469 offence such as murder. For a discussion of the procedure on preliminary inquiries and cross-references, see Note on procedure at preliminary inquiry under s. 537.

SYNOPSIS

Subsection (1) sets out the test to be applied at a preliminary inquiry. The standard which the Crown must meet to obtain a committal (i.e., “sufficient evidence”) is the same as that which applies when a “no evidence” motion is made at trial. In other words, there must be evidence before the court upon which a reasonable jury properly instructed could convict. If the evidence is insufficient, the accused will be discharged.

Where the information contains a number of counts, the test is applied separately to each charge.

In addition to the charge(s) in the information, the court can consider whether there is evidence of the commission of other indictable offences “in respect of the same transaction”. If there is, the accused can be ordered to stand trial on these matters (subsecs. (1)(a), and (2)).

The justice may also set the date for trial in the trial court.

Once there has been an order to stand trial, any defects apparent on the face of the information will not affect subsequent proceedings unless the accused can show that he or she has been misled or prejudiced in some way (subsec. (3)).

ANNOTATIONS

Test for order to stand trial – In The United States of America v. Sheppard (1976), 30 C.C.C. (2d) 424, 34 C.R.N.S. 207 (S.C.C.), the judgment of the majority (5:4) was given by Ritchie, J. (Martland, Judson, Pigeon and de Grandpré, JJ. concurring), who wrote:

I agree that the duty imposed upon a “justice” under s. 475(1) [now s. 548(1)] is the same as that which governs a trial judge sitting with a jury in deciding whether the evidence is “sufficient” to justify him in withdrawing the case from the jury and this is to be determined according to whether or not there is any evidence upon which a reasonable jury properly instructed could return a verdict of guilty. The “justice”, in accordance with this principle, is, in my opinion, required to commit an accused person for trial in any case in which there is admissible evidence which could, if it were believed, result in a conviction.

The rule in Hodge’s Case does not apply to determining the sufficiency of evidence under this section. The justice is not entitled to determine whether the circumstantial evidence is consistent with guilt and inconsistent with any other rational conclusion: Re Herman and The Queen (1984), 11 C.C.C. (3d) 102, 38 C.R. (3d) 284 (Sask. C.A.); Re Garton and Whelan (1984), 14 C.C.C. (3d) 449, 47 O.R. (2d) 672 (H.C.J.).

Order to stand trial on other indictable offences – An accused may be ordered to stand trial on a lesser and included offence over which a Provincial Court Judge has absolute jurisdiction: Ex p. Walker (1974), 20 C.C.C. (2d) 539 (Ont. H.C.J.).

The test for whether the justice may order the accused to stand trial for other offences “in respect of the same transaction” is whether the other offences form part of the series of connected acts extending over a period of time which, the Crown alleges, prove the commission of the offence charged in the information. The other offence will of necessity be closely interwoven with or related to the offence charged in the information: R. v.

Goldstein (1988), 42 C.C.C. (3d) 548, 64 C.R. (3d) 360, 32 C.R.R. 320 (Ont. C.A.); R. v. Stewart (1988), 44 C.C.C. (3d) 109 (Ont. C.A.).

Merely because the additional offence relates to a different victim, it does not mean that it cannot be in respect of the same transaction where it was a component part or constituent element of the transaction relating to the offence charged in the information: R. v. Brown (1990), 54 C.C.C. (3d) 561 (Ont. H.C.J.).

The power to order that the accused stand trial for other offences may be exercised even where the accused consents to an order that he stand trial without the taking of further evidence pursuant to s. 549: R. v. Cancor Software Corp. (1990), 58 C.C.C. (3d) 53, 79 C.R. (3d) 22, 90 D.T.C. 6457 (Ont. C.A.).

The power to order the accused to stand trial for other indictable offences in respect of the same transaction does not infringe the guarantee in s. 11(a) of the Charter: R. v. Cancor Software Corp., supra.

Review by superior court – In Re Martin, Simard and Desjardins and The Queen; Re Nichols and The Queen (1977), 41 C.C.C. (2d) 308, 87 D.L.R. (3d) 634 (Ont. C.A.) the Court held that the scope of review on certiorari of the justice's decision to commit the accused for trial was limited to grounds of excess or want of jurisdiction. The justice acts within his jurisdiction in ordering that the accused stand trial unless he does so "without any evidence at all, in the sense of an entire absence of proper material as a basis for the formation of a judicial opinion that the evidence was sufficient to put the accused on trial". It is not for the superior Court to repeat the process followed by the committing magistrate in the fashion required by this section. The accused in Re Martin, Simard and Desjardins and The Queen appealed to the Supreme Court of Canada, 41 C.C.C. (2d) 342, 87 D.L.R. (3d) 704, [1978] 2 S.C.R. 511 where it was argued that a companion application for habeas corpus with certiorari in aid brought under the pre-Confederation Habeas Corpus Act (which is still in force in Ontario) was wrongly dismissed and the review of the sufficiency of evidence under that statute is wider than under certiorari alone. The Court held that the pre-Confederation statute could not enlarge the Court's authority to review the determination of the justice and the review on sufficiency must be a review "to determine whether the committal was made arbitrarily or, at the most, whether there was some evidence upon which an opinion could be formed that an accused should go to trial.

Where the record of the preliminary inquiry does not include evidence relating to each essential element of the charge then an order to stand trial may be brought forward by way of certiorari to a superior court and can be quashed: Re Skogman and The Queen (1984), 13 C.C.C. (3d) 161, 41 C.R. (3d) 1, [1984] 2 S.C.R. 93 (4:3).

An order discharging the accused may also be quashed on certiorari when there has been jurisdictional error as where the judge does not merely apply the wrong test for sufficiency of evidence but arrogates to himself the decision on the issue reserved to the trial court by purporting to dismiss the charge after applying the reasonable doubt standard: Dubois v. The Queen (1986), 25 C.C.C. (3d) 221, 51 C.R. (3d) 193, [1986] 1 S.C.R. 366.

However, an error by the judge as to the elements of the offence is one made within the scope of his jurisdiction, and certiorari does not lie to quash the discharge: R. v. Tremblay (1988), 47 C.C.C. (3d) 88, [1988] 2 S.C.R. 254, 67 C.R. (3d) 207 (4:0).

Double jeopardy – The defence of res judicata and the special pleas of autrefois are not available at the preliminary hearing stage: Schmidt v. The Queen (1984), 10 C.C.C. (3d) 564, 44 O.R. (2d) 777 (C.A.), affd on other grounds 33 C.C.C. (3d) 193, 58 C.R. (3d) 1, [1987] 1 S.C.R. 500.

ORDER TO STAND TRIAL AT ANY STAGE OF INQUIRY WITH CONSENT / Procedure.

549. (1) Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act, the justice may, at any stage of a preliminary inquiry, with the consent of the accused and the prosecutor, order the accused to stand trial in the court having criminal jurisdiction, without taking or recording any evidence or further evidence.

(2) Where an accused is ordered to stand trial under subsection (1), the justice shall endorse on the information a statement of the consent of the accused and the prosecutor, and the accused shall thereafter be dealt with in all respects as if ordered to stand trial under section 548. R.S., c. C-34, s. 476; R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 101(3).

CROSS-REFERENCES

For a discussion of the procedure on preliminary inquiries and cross-references, see Note on procedure at preliminary inquiry under s. 537.

SYNOPSIS

With the prosecutor's concurrence, the accused, at any stage of a preliminary inquiry, can consent to being ordered to stand trial.

ANNOTATIONS

An undertaking by Crown counsel to disclose witnesses and evidence in advance of trial in return for defence counsel waiving the preliminary inquiry could not reasonably be interpreted to include evidence of which Crown counsel was not then aware and which he might be required not to disclose in the interests of the administration of justice. However, in this case, when the evidence was disclosed in the course of the trial and the accused were surprised by it, the trial judge adjourned the case to permit the accused to consider their position and their conduct of the defence and offered to recall any witnesses for further cross-examination. In the result, the accused were not prejudiced by the late disclosure: R. v. Mitchell (1989), 70 C.R. (3d) 71, 33 O.A.C. 360 (C.A.).

RECOGNIZANCE OF WITNESS / Form / Sureties or deposit for appearance of witness / Witness refusing to be bound / Discharge.

550. (1) Where an accused is ordered to stand trial, the justice who held the preliminary inquiry may require any witness whose evidence is, in his opinion, material to enter into a recognizance to give evidence at the trial of the accused and to comply with such reasonable conditions prescribed in the recognizance as the justice considers desirable for securing the attendance of the witness to give evidence at the trial of the accused.

(2) A recognizance entered into pursuant to this section may be in Form 32, and may be set out at the end of a deposition or be separate therefrom.

(3) A justice may, for any reason satisfactory to him, require any witness entering into a recognizance pursuant to this section

(a) to produce one or more sureties in such amount as he may direct; or

(b) to deposit with him a sum of money sufficient in his opinion to ensure that the witness will appear and give evidence.

(4) Where a witness does not comply with subsection (1) or (3) when required to do so by a justice, he may be committed by the justice, by warrant in Form 24, to a prison in the territorial division where the trial is to be held, there to be kept until he does what is required of him or until the trial is concluded.

(5) Where a witness has been committed to prison pursuant to subsection (4), the court before which the witness appears or a justice having jurisdiction in the territorial division where the prison is situated may, by order in Form 39, discharge the witness from custody when the trial is concluded. R.S., c. C-34, s. 477; 1974-75-76, c. 39, s. 60; R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 101(3).

CROSS-REFERENCES

Procedure for enforcement of recognizances is set out in Part XXV. For a discussion of the procedure on preliminary inquiries and cross-references, see Note on procedure at preliminary inquiry under s. 537.

SYNOPSIS

This section deals with what may otherwise be referred to as “material” witnesses. If, following committal, the justice considers it necessary, he can order that a witness enter into a recognizance, with or without sureties, conditions or deposit, for the purpose of securing that person’s attendance at the trial. A witness who fails to comply with such an order may be incarcerated.

Transmission of RecordTRANSMITTING RECORD.

551. Where a justice orders an accused to stand trial, he shall forthwith send to the clerk or other proper officer of the court by which the accused is to be tried, the information, the evidence, the exhibits, the statement if any of the accused taken down in writing under section 541, any promise to appear, undertaking or recognizance given or entered into in accordance with Part XVI, or any evidence taken before a coroner, that is in the possession of the justice. R.S., c. C-34, s. 478; R.S., c. 2 (2nd Supp.), s. 9; R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 102.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The accused has the right to inspect the record which is transmitted to the trial court under this section, by virtue of s. 603. For a discussion of the procedure on preliminary inquiries and cross-references, see Note on procedure at preliminary inquiry under s. 537.

SYNOPSIS

Following the order to stand trial, the complete file is transferred from the Provincial Court to the court before which the trial is to be held. The obligation of the accused to appear is also transferred.

Part XIX / INDICTABLE OFFENCES – TRIAL WITHOUT JURYInterpretationDEFINITIONS / “Judge”.

552. In this Part,

“judge” means,

- (a) in the Province of Ontario, a judge of the superior court of criminal jurisdiction of the Province,
- (b) in the Province of Quebec, a judge of the Court of Quebec,
- (c) in the Province of Nova Scotia, a judge of the superior court of criminal jurisdiction of the Province,
- (d) in the Province of New Brunswick, a judge of the Court of Queen’s Bench,
- (e) in the Province of British Columbia, the Chief Justice or a puisne judge of the Supreme Court,
- (f) in the Provinces of Prince Edward Island and Newfoundland, a judge of the Supreme Court,

- (g) in the Province of Manitoba, the Chief Justice or a puisne judge of the Court of Queen's Bench,
- (h) in the Provinces of Saskatchewan and Alberta, a judge of the superior court of criminal jurisdiction of the province, and
- (i) in the Yukon Territory and the Northwest Territories, a judge of the Supreme Court. R.S., c. C-34, s. 482; 1972, c. 13, s. 39, c. 17, s. 2; 1974-75-76, c. 48, s. 25, c. 93, s. 61; 1978-79, c. 11, s. 10; R.S.C. 1985, c. 11 (1st Supp.), s. 2, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 103(1); c. 27 (2nd Supp.), s. 10; c. 40 (4th Supp.), s. 2; 1990, c. 16, s. 6; 1990, c. 17, s. 13; 1992, c. 51, s. 38.

NOTE: Definition "judge" amended 1993, c. 28, s. 78 (to come into force April 1, 1999) by re-enacting para. (i). The text of para. (i), which is not yet in force and therefore printed in lightface italics, reads as follows:

- (i) in the Yukon Territory, the Northwest Territories and Nunavut, a judge of the Supreme Court.

"magistrate". [Repealed. R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 103(2).]

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term "superior court of criminal jurisdiction" is defined in s. 2. In addition to the definitions in this section, see s. 2 and notes to that section.

Jurisdiction of Provincial Court Judges

Absolute Jurisdiction

ABSOLUTE JURISDICTION.

553. The jurisdiction of a provincial court judge to try an accused is absolute and does not depend on the consent of the accused where the accused is charged in an information

- (a) with
  - (i) theft, other than theft of cattle,
  - (ii) obtaining money or property by false pretences,
  - (iii) unlawfully having in his possession any property or thing or any proceeds of any property or thing knowing that all or a part of the property or thing or of the proceeds was obtained by or derived directly or indirectly from the commission in Canada of an offence punishable by indictment or an act or omission anywhere that, if it had occurred in Canada, would have constituted an offence punishable by indictment,
  - (iv) having, by deceit, falsehood or other fraudulent means, defrauded the public or any person, whether ascertained or not, of any property, money or valuable security, or
  - (v) mischief under subsection 430(4), where the subject-matter of the offence is not a testamentary instrument and the alleged value of the subject-matter of the offence does not exceed five thousand dollars;
- (b) with counselling or with a conspiracy or attempt to commit or with being an accessory after the fact to the commission of
  - (i) any offence referred to in paragraph (a) in respect of the subject-matter and value thereof referred to in that paragraph, or
  - (ii) any offence referred to in paragraph (c); or
- (c) with an offence under
  - (i) section 201 (keeping gaming or betting house),

- (ii) section 202 (betting, pool-selling, book-making, etc.),
- (iii) section 203 (placing bets),
- (iv) section 206 (lotteries and games of chance),
- (v) section 209 (cheating at play),
- (vi) section 210 (keeping common bawdy-house),
- (vii) subsection 259(4) (driving while disqualified), or
- (viii) section 393 (fraud in relation to fares). R.S., c. C-34, s. 483; 1972, c. 13, s. 40; 1974-75-76, c. 93, s. 62; R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 104; 1992, c. 1, s. 58; 1994, c. 44, s. 57.

NOTE: Section 553(c) amended 1995, c. 22, s. 2 (to come into force by order of the Governor in Council) by striking out the word “or” at the end of subpara. (vii), by adding the word “or” at the end of subpara. (viii) and by adding new subpara. (ix). The text of subpara. (ix), which is not yet in force and therefor printed in lightface italics, reads as follows:

(ix) subsection 733.1(1) (failure to comply with probation order).

NOTE: Paragraph (c) amended 1996, Bill C-8, s. 72 (to come into force by order of the Governor in Council, but not in force as of May 15, 1996) by striking out the word “or” at the end of subpara. (vii) and by adding new subparas. (ix) and (x). The text of those new subparas., which is not yet in force and also may change before receiving Royal Assent, is therefore printed in lightface italics and reads as follows:

(ix) paragraph 4(4)(a) of the Controlled Drugs and Substances Act, or (x) subsection 5(4) of the Controlled Drugs and Substances Act.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms “provincial court judge” and “testamentary instrument” are defined in s. 2. Note that s. 3 provides that the descriptions in parenthesis after the section number are inserted for convenience of reference only and are not part of the provision.

Note on mode of trial – The scheme of the Criminal Code is to classify offences as pure indictable [e.g., robbery, s. 344], purely summary [e.g., soliciting, s. 213] or hybrid, i.e., the prosecution may elect whether to proceed by way of summary conviction or by indictment [e.g., assault, s. 266]. The effect of s. 468 is that the superior court of criminal jurisdiction may try any purely indictable offence or any hybrid offence where the prosecution elects to proceed by way of indictment. Other courts of criminal jurisdiction (defined in s. 2) may, however, try indictable offences except those offences listed in s. 469 [e.g., murder, s. 235]. The offences listed in s. 469 may only be tried by the superior court of criminal jurisdiction with a jury subject to a re-election in conformity with s. 473.

Indictable offences not listed in s. 469 fall into two categories. For the majority of the indictable offences not listed in s. 469 the accused may elect the mode of trial as set out in s. 536(2) and within limits may change an election [see, e.g., s. 561]. While the Attorney General is given a narrow discretion to override this election and require a jury trial under s. 568 in the circumstances defined therein and in addition a provincial court judge has a discretion to override or not record an accused's election for trial by provincial court judge and hold a preliminary inquiry [see for example ss. 555 and 567] the thrust of the provisions is to give the accused the right to determine the manner of trial. [In those provinces which still maintain two levels of courts in addition to the provincial court it is in the discretion of the Crown whether to place the indictment in the superior court or the other court, however described, e.g., county court, where the accused elects trial other than by provincial court judge.] Where the accused elects trial by provincial court judge then jurisdiction is given to such judge to try the case by virtue of s. 554. The trial takes place on the basis of the information. Where the case is tried in a court other than the provincial court then the trial is conducted on the basis of an indictment preferred in accordance with ss. 574 and 577, usually following an order to stand trial. For notes on conduct of the preliminary inquiry see s. 537.

The other group of indictable offences are those offences listed in s. 553 [e.g., keeping common bawdy house, s. 210(1)] which fall within the absolute jurisdiction of a provincial court judge, meaning that the accused does not have a normal election as to the mode of trial under s. 536(2).

Nevertheless, the other courts with jurisdiction to try indictable offences have jurisdiction to try the offences listed in s. 553, if the provincial court judge elects not to try the offence and requires that the case proceed by way of preliminary inquiry pursuant to s. 555(1): see R. v. Scherbank, [1967] 2 C.C.C. 279, 50 C.R. 170 (Ont. C.A.); R. v. Coupland (1978), 45 C.C.C. (2d) 437 (Alta. C.A.). In that case the accused is deemed to have elected trial by judge and jury by virtue of s. 565(1)(a). If in the course of the trial before the provincial court judge pursuant to s. 553 it is disclosed that in fact the offence is not one over which the provincial court judge has absolute jurisdiction, then the accused must then be put to his election under s. 536(2) [for example a charge of theft of goods of a value not exceeding $5,000 where the evidence discloses that the value of the goods exceeds $5,000]. If he fails to elect then he is deemed to have elected trial by judge and jury under s. 565(1)(c). The accused may re-elect in accordance with s. 561.

For all summary conviction offences meaning purely summary conviction or hybrid offences where the prosecution elects to proceed by way of summary conviction only the summary conviction court (defined in s. 785) may try the accused. The procedure for trial of summary conviction offences generally resembles trial of an indictable offence by a provincial court judge but that procedure including special rights of appeal is set out in Part XXVII.

ANNOTATIONS

Para. (a) – In order to vest absolute jurisdiction in the provincial court judge the information must contain the statement that the alleged value of the property in question is less than the prescribed limit: R. v. Miller And Newman (1973), 14 C.C.C. (2d) 370, 24 C.R.N.S. 109 (Ont. C.A.).

Provincial Court Judge's Jurisdiction with Consent

TRIAL BY PROVINCIAL COURT JUDGE WITH CONSENT.

554. (1) Where an accused is charged in an information with an indictable offence other than an offence that is mentioned in section 469, and the offence is not one over which a provincial court judge has absolute jurisdiction under section 553, a provincial court judge may try the accused if the accused elects to be tried by a provincial court judge. R.S., c. C-34, s. 484.

(2)-(4) [Repealed. R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 105.]

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term “provincial court judge” is defined in s. 2. For procedure respecting election for mode of trial, including trial by provincial court judge, see Note on mode of trial under s. 553.

SYNOPSIS

This section is a companion provision to s. 536. An accused charged with an indictable offence that is not one which is to be tried before a superior court of criminal jurisdiction (see s. 469) or before a provincial court judge (see s. 553) may “elect” to be tried in provincial court. Where this occurs there will not be a preliminary inquiry.

ANNOTATIONS

Jurisdiction – Notwithstanding the accused elects trial by provincial court judge he is tried under the provisions of this Part and not the summary conviction provisions of Part XXVII: Edmunds v. The Queen (1981), 58 C.C.C. (2d) 485, 21 C.R. (3d) 168, [1981] 1 S.C.R. 233 (4:1).

A provincial court judge before whom an accused elects to be tried and pleads not guilty is not seised of exclusive jurisdiction and accordingly the accused may later be tried by another judge: R. v. Wiseberg (1973), 15 C.C.C. (2d) 26 (Ont. C.A.); R. v. Gillis, [1967] 1 C.C.C. 266, 57 W.W.R. 296 (Sask. C.A.).

Arraignment – Even though the accused was not deceived or misled by the substantial differences between the information and the charge upon which he was arraigned, his conviction must be set aside: R. v. Arnott and St. James, [1970] 5 C.C.C. 190, 11 C.R.N.S. 233 (Ont. C.A.).

Joint trial of summary and indictable offences – A provincial court judge may jointly try summary and indictable offences even where they are contained on separate informations, provided that the accused has not elected trial by a higher court in respect of the indictable offence. In the event of any conflict as to the applicable procedure, indictable offence procedures would apply. Where, following the trial, both charges have gone for appeal, the summary conviction appeal court should await the decision of the court of appeal in the indictable proceeding: R. v. Clunas (1992), 70 C.C.C. (3d) 115, 11 C.R. (4th) 238, [1992] 1 S.C.R. 595 (5:0).

Failure of Crown to elect on hybrid offence – Where the accused is charged with a Crown option offence and the Crown fails to elect the mode of procedure the Crown is deemed to proceed on a summary conviction basis if the case proceeds in a summary conviction Court: R. v. Robert (1973), 13 C.C.C. (2d) 43 (Ont. C.A.).

On arraignment for a Crown-election offence the prosecution failed to elect and then the Magistrate [now Provincial Court Judge] failed to put the accused to his complete election with the result that although the accused had indicated that he wished to be tried by the Magistrate, that Judge did not obtain jurisdiction under this Part of the Code and accordingly the Magistrate is deemed to have been sitting as a summary conviction Court. Accordingly, no appeal from conviction lay to the Court of Appeal: R. v. Hawryluk (1975), 29 C.C.C. (2d) 41, 12 N.B.R. (2d) 334 (N.B.S.C.App.Div.) (2:1). Limerick, J.A., dissenting held that where the Crown fails to elect the Magistrate has the option of determining the mode of trial and in this case by commencing to give the accused his election under subsec. (2) the Magistrate indicated he was treating the offence as indictable. The failure to give the complete election resulted in a lack of jurisdiction to try the case and the conviction should be quashed.

PROVINCIAL COURT JUDGE MAY DECIDE TO HOLD PRELIMINARY INQUIRY /
Where subject-matter is a testamentary instrument or exceeds $1,000 in value /
Continuing proceedings.

555. (1) Where in any proceedings under this Part an accused is before a provincial court judge and it appears to the provincial court judge that for any reason the charge should be prosecuted by indictment, he may, at any time before the accused has entered upon his defence, decide not to adjudicate and shall thereupon inform the accused of his decision and continue the proceedings as a preliminary inquiry.

(2) Where an accused is before a provincial court judge charged with an offence mentioned in paragraph 553(a) or subparagraph 553(b)(i), and, at any time before the provincial court judge makes an adjudication, the evidence establishes that the subject-matter of the offence is a testamentary instrument or that its value exceeds five thousand dollars, the provincial court judge shall put the accused to his or her election in accordance with subsection 536(2).

(3) Where an accused is put to his election pursuant to subsection (2), the following provisions apply, namely,

- (a) if the accused elects to be tried by a judge without a jury or a court composed of a judge and jury or does not elect when put to his election, the provincial court judge shall continue the proceedings as a preliminary inquiry under Part XVIII and, if he orders the accused to stand trial, the provincial court judge shall comply with subsection 536(4); and
- (b) if the accused elects to be tried by a provincial court judge, the provincial court judge shall endorse on the information a record of the election and continue with the trial. R.S., c. C-34, s. 485; 1972, c. 13, s. 41; R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 106; 1994, c. 44, s. 58.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term “provincial court judge” is defined in s. 2. Where the judge continues the case as a preliminary inquiry under subsec. (1) then the accused is deemed to have elected trial by judge and jury pursuant to s. 565(1)(a), but may re-elect by complying with s. 561. Where the accused refuses to elect under subsec. (1) then again he is deemed to have elected trial by judge and jury pursuant to s. 565(1)(c), but may re-elect by complying with s. 561. Where accused are jointly charged and do not all elect the same mode of trial then the judge may refuse to record the election pursuant to s. 567 and by virtue of s. 565(1)(b) they are all deemed to have elected trial by judge and jury pursuant to s. 565(1)(c), but may re-elect by complying with s. 561. For procedure respecting election for mode of trial, including trial by provincial court judge, see Note on mode of trial under s. 553. For procedure respecting conduct of preliminary inquiry, see the note following s. 537.

SYNOPSIS

This section deals with situations where a trial in the provincial court may be transformed into a preliminary inquiry, even when the accused has elected to be tried in that forum or, by virtue of s. 553, the offence is within the absolute jurisdiction of the provincial court judge.

Where, before the accused has been called upon to enter a defence, a provincial court judge presiding at the trial of an indictable offence under Part XIX is of the opinion that the matter should be tried in a higher court, he can convert the proceedings into a preliminary inquiry. Should this occur, the accused will be deemed to have elected to be tried by a judge sitting with a jury (see s. 565(1)(a)).

Where the trial is in relation to an offence within the absolute jurisdiction of the provincial court, on the basis that the subject-matter of the charge does not exceed $5,000 (see s. 553), and before the conclusion of the proceedings the evidence establishes a greater value, the accused will be asked to elect the mode of trial (see s. 536(2)). Depending on the election, the matter will continue as either a trial or become a preliminary inquiry. If the accused refuses to elect, the proceedings will convert to an inquiry.

ANNOTATIONS

Subsec. (1) – Completion of an unsuccessful motion for dismissal at the conclusion of the Crown’s case is a proceeding before the accused has entered upon his defence and at that point the Court may continue the proceedings as a preliminary inquiry: Re R. v. Nadeau (1971), 3 C.C.C. (2d) 276, 3 N.B.R. (2d) 591 sub nom. Re Nadeau (N.B.S.C.App.Div.).

This subsection only applies to indictable proceedings under Part XIX and therefore could have no application to a trial commenced as a summary conviction trial under Part XXVII. Thus, a judge having commenced a trial under Part XXVII for assault, the Crown having elected to proceed by way of summary conviction, could not invoke this subsection and continue the proceedings as a preliminary inquiry: R. v. Turton (1988), 44 C.C.C. (3d) 49, 89 A.R. 78 (C.A.).

While the language of this section is very broad, unless there is a judicial reason for overruling the accused’s election to be tried by a provincial court judge then the accused should be entitled to proceed in that way: R. v. Babcock (1989), 68 C.R. (3d) 285, 31 O.A.C. 354, 38 C.R.R. 178 (C.A.).

CORPORATION / Non-appearance / Corporation not electing.

556. (1) An accused corporation shall appear by counsel or agent.

(2) Where an accused corporation does not appear pursuant to a summons and service of the summons on the corporation is proved, the provincial court judge

- (a) may, if the charge is one over which he has absolute jurisdiction, proceed with the trial of the charge in the absence of the accused corporation; and
- (b) shall, if the charge is not one over which he has absolute jurisdiction, hold a preliminary inquiry in accordance with Part XVIII in the absence of the accused corporation.

(3) Where an accused corporation appears but does not elect when put to an election under subsection 536(2), the provincial court judge shall hold a preliminary inquiry in accordance with Part XVIII. R.S., c. C-34, s. 486; R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 107.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term "provincial court judge" is defined in s. 2. Service on a corporation is effected pursuant to s. 703.2.

SYNOPSIS

An accused corporation charged with an offence must appear either by counsel or agent (usually an officer of the company). Where an accused corporation does not appear pursuant to a summons, and service of the summons is proved, a provincial court judge may proceed to trial in the absence of the accused if the charge is within his absolute discretion (subsec. (2)(a)). Where the charge is not one over which the provincial court judge has absolute jurisdiction, he shall conduct a preliminary inquiry in the accused corporation's absence.

Where the corporation appears but refuses to enter an election under s. 536(2), there must be a preliminary inquiry (subsec. (3)).

ANNOTATIONS

An amalgamated company is responsible for the criminal acts of its amalgamating companies: R. v. Black & Decker Manufacturing Co. Ltd. (1974), 15 C.C.C. (2d) 193, 43 D.L.R. (3d) 393 (S.C.C.) (9:0).

---

TAKING EVIDENCE.

557. Where an accused is tried by a provincial court judge in accordance with this Part, the evidence of witnesses for the prosecutor and the accused shall be taken in accordance with the provisions of Part XVIII relating to preliminary inquiries. R.S., c. C-34, s. 487.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term "provincial court judge" is defined in s. 2. The principle provision respecting taking of evidence in Part XVIII is s. 540.

SYNOPSIS

At a provincial court trial the evidence shall be taken down in the same manner as prescribed in relation to preliminary inquiries by Part XVIII.

TRIAL BY JUDGE WITHOUT A JURY.

558. Where an accused who is charged with an indictable offence, other than an offence listed in section 469, elects under section 536 or re-elects under section 561 to be tried by a judge without a jury, the accused shall, subject to this Part, be tried by a judge without a jury. R.S., c. C-34, s. 488; R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 108.

CROSS-REFERENCES

By virtue of s. 566 the trial before a judge without a jury, other than before a provincial court judge, shall be on an indictment preferred in accordance with ss. 574 and 577. An accused may re-elect his mode of trial by complying with s. 561. Where accused are jointly charged but have not re-elected the same mode of trial then the judge may decline to record the re-election pursuant to s. 567 and they are deemed to have elected trial by judge and jury, by virtue of s. 565(1)(b). For procedure respecting election for mode of trial generally, see Note on mode of trial under s. 553. For procedure respecting conduct of preliminary inquiry, see the note following s. 537. For cross-references respecting trial by judge alone, see s. 559.

SYNOPSIS

This section provides the statutory authority for trial by judge alone as permitted by this Part in accordance with the procedure in this Part.

COURT OF RECORD / Custody of records.

559. (1) A judge who holds a trial under this Part shall, for all purposes thereof and proceedings connected therewith or relating thereto, be a court of record.

(2) The record of a trial that a judge holds under this Part shall be kept in the court over which the judge presides. R.S., c. C-34, s. 489.

CROSS-REFERENCES

For notes on power of a court of record to find a person in contempt of court, see notes following ss. 9 and 10. Where the judge has not commenced to hear evidence then any judge having jurisdiction to try the accused has jurisdiction for purpose of the hearing and adjudication by virtue of s. 669.1. Where the trial judge is unable to continue, see s. 669.2. Where the accused absconds during his trial, the trial may be continued in his absence under s. 475. The procedure respecting conduct of trial is generally found in Part XX, made applicable to trials under this Part by s. 572. Appeals in indictable proceedings are governed by Part XXI. Sentence is imposed in accordance with Part XXIII, except in the case of dangerous-offender proceedings, in which case, see Part XXIV.

SYNOPSIS

Judges who conduct trials under this Part are courts of record, and the records of such trials are to be kept in the court of the judge who conducts the trial.

ANNOTATIONS

A provincial court judge acting under this Part has the power in appropriate circumstances to impose a ban on publication of the proceedings before him where publication could impair the actual or apparent fairness of the trials of co-accused thereafter taking place: Re Church of Scientology of Toronto et al. and The Queen (No. 6) (1986), 27 C.C.C. (3d) 193 (Ont. H.C.J.).

Election

DUTY OF JUDGE / Notice by sheriff, when given / Duty of sheriff when date set for trial / Duty of accused when not in custody.

560. (1) Where an accused elects, under section 536 to be tried by a judge without a jury, a judge having jurisdiction shall,

- (a) on receiving a written notice from the sheriff or other person having custody of the accused stating that the accused is in custody and setting out the nature of the charge against him, or
  - (b) on being notified by the clerk of the court that the accused is not in custody and of the nature of the charge against him,
- fix a time and place for the trial of the accused.
- (2) The sheriff or other person having custody of the accused shall give the notice mentioned in paragraph (1)(a) within twenty-four hours after the accused is ordered to stand trial, if the accused is in custody pursuant to that order or if, at the time of the order, he is in custody for any other reason.
- (3) Where, pursuant to subsection (1), a time and place is fixed for the trial of an accused who is in custody, the accused
- (a) shall be notified forthwith by the sheriff or other person having custody of the accused of the time and place so fixed, and
  - (b) shall be produced at the time and place so fixed.
- (4) Where an accused is not in custody, the duty of ascertaining from the clerk of the court the time and place fixed for the trial, pursuant to subsection (1), is on the accused, and he shall attend for his trial at the time and place so fixed. R.S., c. C-34, s. 490; R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), ss. 101(3), 109(1).
- (5) [Repealed. R.S.C. 1985, c.27 (1st Supp.), s. 109(2).]

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term "clerk of the court" is defined in s. 2. For notes respecting trial by judge alone see cross-references under s. 559. Power to issue a bench warrant where the accused fails to attend for trial is found in s. 597. The attendance of an accused who is in custody may be procured by compliance with s. 527. Where the accused absconds during his trial the trial may be continued in his absence under s. 475.

SYNOPSIS

This section deals with the fixing of trial dates where the accused has been committed following a preliminary inquiry and has elected to be tried by a judge sitting without a jury. Local practices will govern how arrangements are made to set the matter down, having regard to the court's rota and the availability of counsel and the witnesses. The person having custody of an incarcerated accused is required to initiate the setting of a trial date within 24 hours of the accused being ordered to stand trial.

Where the accused is in custody, he will have to be brought to court for trial (subsec. (3)). An accused who is not in custody is responsible for ascertaining the date which has been set and for appearing at the required time and place (subsec. (4)).

RIGHT TO RE-ELECT / Idem / Notice / Idem / Notice and transmitting record / Time and place for re-election / Proceedings on re-election.

---

561. (1) An accused who elects or is deemed to have elected a mode of trial other than trial by a provincial court judge may re-elect
- (a) at any time before or after the completion of the preliminary inquiry, with the written consent of the prosecutor, to be tried by a provincial court judge;
  - (b) at any time before the completion of the preliminary inquiry or before the fifteenth day following the completion of the preliminary inquiry, as of right, another mode of trial other than trial by a provincial court judge; and
  - (c) on or after the fifteenth day following the completion of the preliminary inquiry, any mode of trial with the written consent of the prosecutor.
- (2) An accused who elects to be tried by a provincial court judge may, not later than fourteen days before the day first appointed for the trial, re-elect as of right another mode of trial, and may do so thereafter with the written consent of the prosecutor.

(3) Where an accused wishes to re-elect under subsection (1) before the completion of the preliminary inquiry, the accused shall give notice in writing that he wishes to re-elect, together with the written consent of the prosecutor, where such consent is required, to the justice presiding at the preliminary inquiry who shall on receipt of the notice,

(a) in the case of a re-election under paragraph (1)(b), put the accused to his re-election in the manner set out in subsection (7); or

(b) where the accused wishes to re-elect under paragraph (1)(a) and the justice is not a provincial court judge, notify a provincial court judge or clerk of the court of the accused's intention to re-elect and send to the provincial court judge or clerk the information and any promise to appear, undertaking or recognizance given or entered into in accordance with Part XVI, or any evidence taken before a coroner, that is in the possession of the justice.

(4) Where an accused wishes to re-elect under subsection (2), the accused shall give notice in writing that he wishes to re-elect together with the written consent of the prosecutor, where such consent is required, to the provincial court judge before whom the accused appeared and pleaded or to a clerk of the court.

(5) Where an accused wishes to re-elect under subsection (1) after the completion of the preliminary inquiry, the accused shall give notice in writing that he wishes to re-elect, together with the written consent of the prosecutor, where that consent is required, to a judge or clerk of the court of his original election who shall, on receipt of the notice, notify the judge or provincial court judge or clerk of the court by which the accused wishes to be tried of the accused's intention to re-elect and send to that judge or provincial court judge or clerk the information, the evidence, the exhibits and the statement, if any, of the accused taken down in writing under section 541 and any promise to appear, undertaking or recognizance given or entered into in accordance with Part XVI, or any evidence taken before a coroner, that is in the possession of the first-mentioned judge or clerk.

(6) Where a provincial court judge or judge or clerk of the court is notified under paragraph (3)(b) or subsection (4) or (5) that the accused wishes to re-elect, the provincial court judge or judge shall forthwith appoint a time and place for the accused to re-elect and shall cause notice thereof to be given to the accused and the prosecutor.

(7) The accused shall attend or, if he is in custody, shall be produced at the time and place appointed under subsection (6) and shall, after

(a) the charge on which he has been ordered to stand trial or the indictment, where an indictment has been preferred pursuant to section 556, 574 or 577 or is filed with the court before which the indictment is to be preferred pursuant to section 577, or

(b) in the case of a re-election under subsection (1) before the completion of the preliminary inquiry or under subsection (2), the information has been read to the accused, be put to his re-election in the following words or in words to the like effect:

You have given notice of your wish to re-elect the mode of your trial. You now have the option to do so. How do you wish to re-elect? R.S., c. C-34, s. 491; R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 110.

CROSS-REFERENCES

Where the accused re-elects under s. 561(1) for trial by provincial court judge or judge alone then s. 562(1) sets out the procedure to be followed. Where the accused re-elects under s. 561(1)(b) or (2) then the justice proceeds with the preliminary inquiry under s. 562(2). Where the accused re-elects trial by provincial court judge then, pursuant to s. 563, the trial takes place on the information and the re-election is to be endorsed on the information. Section 565 sets out the circumstances when the accused is deemed to have elected judge and jury. Note s. 567 giving the judge or justice power not to record the re-election where jointly charged accused do not all re-elect the same mode of trial. Under s. 568, the Attorney General may override an election or re-election and require a jury trial except where the offence is punishable by five years or less. For offences listed in s. 469, the right of re-election is limited according to s. 473. An accused, against whom a direct indictment has been preferred under s. 577, may re-elect only with the consent of the prosecutor under s. 565(2).

SYNOPSIS

This section sets out the procedure to be followed when an accused wishes to change his or her election (or deemed election) as to the mode of trial.

Where the accused has chosen to be tried other than before a provincial court judge, the consent of the Crown is required to re-elect for trial in the provincial court (subsec. (1)(a)).

Where the accused wishes to change from judge alone to judge and jury, or vice versa, he has a "right" to do so for up to two weeks following the completion of the preliminary inquiry (subsec. (1)(b)). Afterwards the written consent of the prosecutor is required (subsec. (1)(c)).

Where the election is for trial before a provincial court judge, the accused can exercise a "right" of re-election up to two weeks before the first trial date that has been fixed. Thereafter, the written consent of the prosecutor is needed (subsec. (2)).

Written notice of a desire to re-elect must be given to the court and the prosecutor in accordance with subssecs. (3), (4) and (5). The procedure to be followed by the court is set out in subssecs. (6) and (7). In cases where the matter is before the provincial court (i.e., because the accused has elected trial in that forum or where a preliminary inquiry has not yet been completed) the re-election shall take place before a provincial court judge.

Where there has been a committal for trial and the accused wishes to re-elect "down", the procedure will take place in the provincial court. A change from judge alone to judge and jury, or vice versa, will occur before a judge of the trial court.

Where the Crown has proceeded by way of "direct" indictment, s. 565(2) applies.

ANNOTATIONS

It was held in relation to the predecessor to this section that the accused, personally or through his counsel, may waive the procedural requirements which were enacted for his benefit. However, the Judge has a paramount right to require compliance. The validity of any waiver depends upon it being clear and unequivocal that the person is waiving the procedural safeguard and is doing so with full knowledge of the right which the procedure was enacted to protect and of the effect the waiver will have on those rights: Korponey v. A.-G. Can. (1982), 65 C.C.C. (2d) 65, 26 C.R. (3d) 343, 132 D.L.R. (3d) 354, [1982] 1 S.C.R. 41 (9:0).

The requirement of Crown consent to re-election in the course of preliminary inquiry does not offend ss. 7 and 15 of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms: Re Koleff and The Queen (1987), 33 C.C.C. (3d) 460, 46 Man. R. (2d) 190 (Q.B.).

To avoid a violation of s. 11(f) of the Charter, this section must be interpreted so as to give the accused the right to re-elect trial by judge and jury within 15 days of learning of a substantial change in the Crown's case, even though this is beyond 15 days following the completion of the preliminary inquiry: R. v. Ruston (1991), 63 C.C.C. (3d) 419 (Man. C.A.).

Absent conduct on the part of the Crown amounting to an abuse of process, the court has no power to override the Crown's decision refusing to consent to a re-election for trial by judge alone: R. v. E. (L.) (1994), 94 C.C.C. (3d) 228, 75 O.A.C. 244 (C.A.).

It will only be in unusual circumstances that the discretionary power, given to the Crown under this section, to refuse to consent to a re-election after expiration of the 15-day period from the date of the order to stand trial, will be subject to judicial review. The accused, it would seem, must establish improper motives or some other factor amounting to an abuse of process. The mere fact that the Crown perceived a tactical advantage from a trial by judge alone is not an improper motive or an abuse of process: R. v. Mohammed (1990), 60 C.C.C. (3d) 296 (Man. Q.B.).

Where an indictment has been preferred under s. 574(1)(b) containing additional counts founded on the evidence at the preliminary inquiry, the accused, if he wishes to re-elect his mode of trial, must re-elect in respect of the entire indictment. He does not have the right to "elect" his mode of trial in relation to the additional counts: R. v. Puric (1990), 54 C.C.C. (3d) 373 (Sask. Q.B.).

PROCEEDINGS FOLLOWING RE-ELECTION / Idem.

562. (1) Where the accused re-elects under paragraph 561(1)(a) before the completion of the preliminary inquiry or under subsection 561(1) after the completion of the preliminary inquiry, the provincial court judge or judge, as the case may be, shall proceed with the trial or appoint a time and place for the trial.

(2) Where the accused re-elects under paragraph 561(1)(b) before the completion of the preliminary inquiry or under subsection 561(2), the justice shall proceed with the preliminary inquiry. R.S., c. C-34, s. 492; R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 110.

CROSS-REFERENCES

Where the accused re-elects trial by provincial court judge, see s. 563. For circumstances where the accused may not re-elect, see s. 561, cross-reference.

SYNOPSIS

This section provides that after re-election by the accused under s. 561(1) or (2), the trial or preliminary inquiry, as the case may be, shall proceed. In the case of a trial, the judge or provincial court judge may also set a time and place for trial.

---

PROCEEDINGS ON RE-ELECTION TO BE TRIED BY PROVINCIAL COURT JUDGE WITHOUT JURY.

563. Where an accused re-elects under section 561 to be tried by a provincial court judge,

- (a) the accused shall be tried on the information that was before the justice at the preliminary inquiry, subject to any amendments thereto that may be allowed by the provincial court judge by whom the accused is tried; and
- (b) the provincial court judge before whom the re-election is made shall endorse on the information a record of the re-election. R.S., c. C-34, s. 493; R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 110.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms "justice" and "provincial court judge" are defined in s. 2. The term "judge" is defined in s. 552. For circumstances where the accused may not re-elect, see s. 561.

SYNOPSIS

This section sets the procedure where an accused re-elects under s. 561 to be tried before a provincial court judge. Its principal effect is to confirm that the trial takes place on the original information that was before the justice conducting the preliminary inquiry. The fact of the re-election is enclosed in the information.

ANNOTATIONS

Where the accused re-elects trial by provincial court judge and intends to have the evidence taken on the preliminary inquiry apply at the trial, both he and the Crown must consent to such procedure and their consent must be conveyed to the court and then the evidence must in some way, be it by the filing of transcripts or by some reference to the previous judicial proceedings, enter the record during the trial: Matheson v. The Queen (1981), 59 C.C.C. (2d) 289, 22 C.R. (3d) 289, [1981] 6 W.W.R. 277 (S.C.C.) (7:0).

564. [Repealed. R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 110.]

ELECTION DEEMED TO HAVE BEEN MADE / Where direct indictment preferred / Notice of re-election / Application.

565. (1) Where an accused is ordered to stand trial for an offence that, under this Part, may be tried by a judge without a jury, the accused shall, for the purposes of the provisions of this Part relating to election and re-election, be deemed to have elected to be tried by a court composed of a judge and jury if

- (a) the accused was ordered to stand trial by a provincial court judge who, pursuant to subsection 555(1), continued the proceedings before him as a preliminary inquiry;
- (b) the justice, provincial court judge or judge, as the case may be, declined pursuant to section 567 to record the election or re-election of the accused; or
- (c) the accused does not elect when put to an election under section 536.

(2) Where an accused is to be tried after an indictment has been preferred against the accused pursuant to a consent or order given under section 577, the accused shall, for the purposes of the provisions of this Part relating to election and re-election, be deemed to have elected to be tried by a court composed of a judge and jury and may, with the written consent of the prosecutor, re-elect to be tried by a judge without a jury.

(3) Where an accused wishes to re-elect under subsection (2), the accused shall give notice in writing that he wishes to re-elect, together with the written consent of the prosecutor, to a judge or clerk of the court where the indictment has been filed or preferred who shall, on receipt of the notice, notify a judge having jurisdiction or clerk of the court by which the accused wishes to be tried of the accused's intention to re-elect and send to that judge or clerk the indictment and any promise to appear, undertaking or recognizance given or entered into in accordance with Part XVI, any summons or warrant issued under section 578, or any evidence taken before a coroner, that is in the possession of the first-mentioned judge or clerk.

(4) Subsections 561(6) and (7) apply to a re-election made under subsection (3). R.S., c. C-34, s. 495; R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 111.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms "justice", "clerk of the court" and "provincial court judge" are defined in s. 2. The term "judge" is defined in s. 552.

SYNOPSIS

Subsection (1) sets out the circumstances where an accused will be "deemed" to have elected trial by judge and jury. This will be the case where: (a) a provincial court judge acting under s. 555(1) has converted a trial into a preliminary inquiry (subsec. (1)(a)); (b) the accused's election has not been recorded as provided for in s. 567 (subsec. (1)(b)), and (c) the accused has stood mute and refused to enter an election (subsec. (1)(c)).

Where the Crown has proceeded by way of "direct" indictment (see s. 577), the trial will be before a jury unless the accused, with the consent of the Crown, re-elects to be tried by a judge alone (subsec. (2)).

Written notice is required; the procedure to be followed is set out in subsecs. (3) and (4).

INDICTMENT / Preferring indictment / What counts may be included and who may prefer indictment.

566. (1) The trial of an accused for an indictable offence, other than a trial before a provincial court judge, shall be on an indictment in writing setting forth the offence with which he is charged.

(2) Where an accused elects under section 536 or re-elects under section 561 to be tried by a judge without a jury, an indictment in Form 4 may be preferred.

(3) Section 574 and subsection 576(1) apply, with such modifications as the circumstances require, and section 577 does not apply, to the preferring of an indictment pursuant to subsection (2). R.S., c. C-34, s. 496; R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 111.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term “provincial court judge” is defined in s. 2. The term “judge” is defined in s. 552. As to trial before a provincial court judge, see s. 563.

SYNOPSIS

This section provides that trial by judge alone shall be on an indictment in writing, other than in a trial before a provincial court judge (in which case, the trial is on an information) (subsec. (1)). The procedure to prefer indictments in jury trials is adopted for the purposes of this Part (see ss. 574 and 576), but not the provision for direct indictment under s. 577 (subsecs. (2) and (3)).

General

MODE OF TRIAL WHERE TWO OR MORE ACCUSED.

567. Notwithstanding any other provision of this Part, where two or more persons are charged with the same offence, unless all of them elect or re-elect or are deemed to have elected, as the case may be, the same mode of trial, the justice, provincial court judge or judge

- (a) may decline to record any election, re-election or deemed election for trial by a provincial court judge or a judge without a jury; and
  - (b) if he declines to do so, shall hold a preliminary inquiry unless a preliminary inquiry has been held prior to the election, re-election or deemed election.
- R.S., c. C-34, s. 497; R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 111.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms “justice” and “provincial court judge” are defined in s. 2. The term “judge” is defined in s. 552. Where the justice or judge declines to record the election or re-election then the accused is deemed to have elected trial by judge and jury pursuant to s. 565(1)(b). As to right to re-elect, see s. 561.

SYNOPSIS

This section gives a provincial court judge jurisdiction to decline to record an election for other than trial by jury where there is more than one accused and all do not elect the same mode of trial. Where this occurs, the election will be deemed to be for a judge sitting with a jury (see s. 565(1)(b)), and the hearing shall continue as a preliminary inquiry. This provision is designed to enable the court to avoid jointly charged accused obtaining severance by selecting different methods of trial.

ANNOTATIONS

It was held in relation to the predecessor to this section that even where there is no objection to the procedure by the accused a provincial court judge has no power to simultaneously conduct the trial of one accused who has elected trial by provincial court judge, and the preliminary hearing of another who has elected trial by judge: Re Regina and Niedzwieki and Tribe (1980), 57 C.C.C. (2d) 184, [1981] 3 W.W.R. 151 (B.C.S.C.).

ATTORNEY GENERAL MAY REQUIRE TRIAL BY JURY.

568. The Attorney General may, notwithstanding that an accused elects under section 536 or re-elects under section 561 to be tried by a judge or provincial court judge, as the case may be, require the accused to be tried by a court composed of a judge and jury, unless the alleged offence is one that is punishable with imprisonment for five years or less, and where the Attorney General so requires, a judge or provincial court judge has no jurisdiction to try the accused under this Part and a preliminary inquiry shall be held before a justice unless a preliminary inquiry has been held prior to the requirement by the Attorney General that the accused be tried by a court composed of a judge and jury. R.S., c. C-34, s. 498; R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 111.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms "Attorney General", "justice" and "provincial court judge" are defined in s. 2. The term "judge" is defined in s. 552.

SYNOPSIS

Unless the offence is punishable with imprisonment for five years or less, the Attorney General has the right to require that an accused be tried by a jury. Once this provision has been invoked, the accused cannot select another mode of trial.

An example of a situation where this provision might be used is where jointly charged accused select different methods of trial, a provincial court judge having chosen not to exercise the power in s. 567 to decline to record the non-jury elections. In these circumstances, the Attorney General may act so that all are tried before the same court. Of course, this in no way precludes the trial court from ordering severance if such is determined appropriate (see s. 591(3)(b)).

ANNOTATIONS

This section is not limited to a superior court of criminal jurisdiction: Re Essiambre et al. (1974), 17 C.C.C. (2d) 44 (B.C.S.C.).

The Attorney-General may exercise his jurisdiction under this section notwithstanding the accused has previously re-elected trial by Judge alone with the consent of counsel for the Attorney-General: R. v. Pontbriand (1978), 39 C.C.C. (2d) 145, 82 D.L.R. (3d) 389, 1 C.R. (3d) 97 (Que. S.C.).

Where the Attorney-General has exercised his power under this section, then the accused has no right to re-elect trial by judge alone, even with the consent of Crown counsel: R. v. Thompson (1987), 40 C.C.C. (3d) 365 (N.S.C.A.).

The exercise of his power under this section by the Attorney-General is not subject to review by the Courts: Re M. and The Queen (1982), 1 C.C.C. (3d) 465, 143 D.L.R. (3d) 487 (Ont. H.C.J.).

This section does not infringe the rights to fundamental justice and equality guaranteed by ss. 7 and 15 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms: Re Haneson and The Queen (1987), 31 C.C.C. (3d) 560, 27 C.R.R. 278 (Ont. H.C.J.).

RECORD OF CONVICTION OR ORDER / Acquittal and record of acquittal / Transmission of record / Proof of conviction, order or acquittal / Warrant of committal / Admissibility of certified copy.

570. (1) Where an accused who is tried under this Part is determined by a judge or provincial court judge to be guilty of an offence on acceptance of a plea of guilty or on a finding of guilt, the judge or provincial court judge, as the case may be, shall endorse the information accordingly and shall sentence the accused or otherwise deal with the accused in the manner authorized by law and, on request by the accused, the prosecutor, a peace officer or any other person, shall cause a conviction in Form 35 and a certified copy of it, or an order in Form 36 and a certified copy of it, to be drawn up and shall deliver the certified copy to the person making the request.

(2) Where an accused who is tried under this Part is found not guilty of an offence with which he is charged, the judge or provincial court judge, as the case may be, shall immediately acquit the accused in respect of that offence and shall cause an order in Form 37 to be drawn up, and on request shall make out and deliver to the accused a certified copy of the order.

(3) Where an accused elects to be tried by a provincial court judge under this Part, the provincial court judge shall transmit the written charge, the memorandum of adjudication and the conviction, if any, into such custody as the Attorney General may direct.

(4) A copy of a conviction in Form 35 or of an order in Form 36 or 37, certified by the judge or by the clerk or other proper officer of the court, or by the provincial court judge, as the case may be, or proved to be a true copy, is, on proof of the identity of the person to whom the conviction or order relates, sufficient evidence in any legal proceedings to prove the conviction of that person or the making of the order against him or his acquittal, as the case may be, for the offence mentioned in the copy of the conviction or order.

(5) Where an accused other than a corporation is convicted, the judge or provincial court judge, as the case may be, shall issue or cause to be issued a warrant of committal in Form 21, and section 528 applies in respect of a warrant of committal issued under this subsection.

(6) Where a warrant of committal is issued by a clerk of a court, a copy of the warrant of committal, certified by the clerk, is admissible in evidence in any proceeding. R.S., c. C-34, s. 500; R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 112; 1994, c. 44, s. 59.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms “justice”, “clerk of the court” and “provincial court judge” are defined in s. 2. The term “judge” is defined in s. 552. Procedure with respect to pleas is set out in ss. 606 to 613. Previous convictions may be proved in accordance with ss. 665 to 667. Also see s. 12 of the Canada Evidence Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. C-5. An accused found guilty is entitled to speak to sentence, s. 668.

SYNOPSIS

This section sets out the forms to be used for the recording of convictions, acquittals, warrants and orders under this Part. A certified or proved copy of such forms is proof of the result referred to therein.

ANNOTATIONS

Where there were two informations each charging a separate fraud offence it was wrong for the convicting Court to impose one joint sentence for both offences and embody it on one conviction certificate: R. v. Pretty (1971), 5 C.C.C. (2d) 332, 2 N.&P.E.I. R.10 (P.E.I.S.C.).

A minute of conviction, setting out all the essential ingredients of a warrant of committal, is a document satisfactory to authorize an accused's confinement for sentence: Ex P. Leclerc (1973), 21 C.C.C. (2d) 16 (Que. C.A.).

The ministerial act of signing a warrant of committal may be committed by a rubber stamp facsimile: R. v. Bellefontaine (1975), 27 C.C.C. (2d) 200, 37 C.R.N.S. 100 (N.S.Co.Ct.).

A driving prohibition order made in summary conviction proceedings is not admissible pursuant to subsec. (4): R. v. Tatomir (1989), 51 C.C.C. (3d) 321, [1990] 1 W.W.R. 470, 99 A.R. 188 (C.A.).

Until the trial judge has endorsed the indictment he retains jurisdiction to correct an error made in pronouncing sentence and to ensure that the judgment of the court as recorded accurately reflects the court's intentions: R. v. Maider (1991), 64 C.C.C. (3d) 62 (B.C.C.A.).

ADJOURNMENT.

571. A judge or provincial court judge acting under this Part may from time to time adjourn a trial until it is finally terminated. R.S., c. C-34, s. 501.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term "provincial court judge" is defined in s. 2. The term "judge" is defined in s. 552. As to curative provisions respecting adjournments, see ss. 485 and 485.1. For procedure respecting continuation of trial before any evidence has been taken, see s. 669.1 and where the trial judge is unable to continue, see s. 669.2.

ANNOTATIONS

In R. v. Heminger and Hornigold, [1969] 3 C.C.C. 201 (Man. C.A.), it was decided that for an offence mentioned in s. 553 the more than eight-clear-days adjournment consent rule in s. 537(1)(a) did not apply to pre-trial proceedings to a Part XIX trial.

Where a Judge was unable to attend Court it was held that the Court clerk acting under a Judge's instruction could adjourn the case: Re Pattyson and The Queen (1974), 19 C.C.C. (2d) 537, [1975] 1 W.W.R.91 (Sask.Q.B.).

In R. v. Pickett (1971), 5 C.C.C. (2d) 371 (Ont. C.A.) a conviction was quashed where the accused was refused an adjournment although his counsel was unavoidably engaged in another Court. The trial had proceeded with the accused being represented by an inexperienced solicitor who had virtually no knowledge of the facts of the case and had been sent by counsel to request the adjournment. The trial proceeding in this manner lacked the appearance of justice. [Also see notes re "Right to counsel" under s. 650, infra.]

APPLICATION OF PARTS XVI, XVIII, XX and XXIII.

572. The provisions of Part XVI, the provisions of Part XVIII relating to transmission of the record by a provincial court judge where he holds a preliminary inquiry, and the provisions of Parts XX and XXIII, in so far as they are not inconsistent with this Part, apply, with such modifications as the circumstances require, to proceedings under this Part. R.S., c. C-34, s. 502; R.S., c. 2 (2nd Supp.), s. 10.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term “provincial court judge” is defined in s. 2.

SYNOPSIS

This section provides that Part XVI (compelling appearance of accused), Part XX (jury trials) and Part XXIII (punishment) apply to this Part, mutatis mutandis. The provisions of Part XVIII relating to transmission of the record by a provincial court judge after a preliminary inquiry also apply.

ANNOTATIONS

By virtue of this section a provincial court judge has power to take a view as provided in s. 652: R. v. Prentice, [1965] 4 C.C.C. 118, 47 C.R. 231 (B.C.C.A.).

Part XX / PROCEDURE IN JURY TRIALS AND GENERAL PROVISIONS

Preferring Indictment

PROSECUTOR MAY PREFER INDICTMENT / Consent to inclusion of other charges / Private prosecutor requires consent.

574. (1) Subject to subsection (3) and section 577, the prosecutor may prefer an indictment against any person who has been ordered to stand trial in respect of

- (a) any charge on which that person was ordered to stand trial, or
- (b) any charge founded on the facts disclosed by the evidence taken on the preliminary inquiry, in addition to or in substitution for any charge on which that person was ordered to stand trial, whether or not the charges were included in one information.

(2) An indictment preferred under subsection (1) may, if the accused consents, include any charge that is not referred to in paragraph (1)(a) or (b), and the offence charged may be dealt with, tried and determined and punished in all respects as if it were an offence in respect of which the accused had been ordered to stand trial, but if the offence was committed wholly in a province other than that in which the accused is before the court, subsection 478(3) applies.

(3) In any prosecution conducted by a prosecutor other than the Attorney General and in which the Attorney General does not intervene, an indictment shall not be preferred under subsection (1) before any court without the written order of a judge of that court. R.S., c. C-34, s. 504; R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 113.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms “prosecutor”, “Attorney General” and “indictment” are defined in s. 2. Where no preliminary inquiry has been held or the accused has been discharged following a preliminary inquiry, see s. 577. The formal requirements of an indictment are set forth in ss. 581 to 593. The Attorney General may direct a stay of an indictment pursuant to s. 579. Pursuant to s. 580, an indictment is sufficient if it is on paper and in Form 4. An indictment preferred under this part is required whenever the accused is to be tried in a court other than the provincial court, whether by a judge alone or a judge with a jury. Section 597 provides that where an indictment has been preferred against the person who is at large and the person does not appear or remain in attendance for his trial the court may issue a warrant for his arrest.

SYNOPSIS

This section deals with the drafting and preferring of indictments.

Where, following a preliminary inquiry, there has been an order to stand trial, the prosecutor may include in the indictment not only the charge(s) on which the accused has been ordered to stand trial (subsec. (1)(a)) but also any other charge(s) disclosed by the evidence taken at the inquiry (subsec. (1)(b)).

By reason of subsec. (2), the accused can consent to adding to the indictment charges other than those referred to in subsec. (1). The only limitation is that the offences must have been committed within the province in which the indictment is being preferred, otherwise the transfer provisions of the Code must be used (see s. 478(3)). An accused may wish to use this provision as a means of bringing a number of charges before one judge for disposition by way of a guilty plea.

Subsection (3) precludes an indictment being preferred in a "private prosecution" without the approval of a judge of the court in which the trial will occur.

ANNOTATIONS

Editor's Note: Some of the decisions noted below although decided under the predecessor legislation were felt to be relevant to these provisions.

It is after the presentment of the indictment that the indictment becomes the foundation of any further proceedings and the accused is precluded from attacking the regularity of the order to stand trial by way of certiorari. However, such an indictment is not preferred or presented until it is lodged with the trial court at the opening of the accused's trial with a court ready to proceed with the trial: R. v. Chabot (1980), 55 C.C.C. (2d) 385, 18 C.R. (3d) 258 (S.C.C.) (7:0).

The agent of the Attorney-General who signed the indictment is not also required to conduct the trial: R. v. Alward (1976), 32 C.C.C. (2d) 416, 73 D.L.R. (3d) 290 (N.B.S.C. App. Div.).

The accused's election and any subsequent re-election apply to offences added to the indictment pursuant to subsec. (1)(b): R. v. Garcia (1990), 75 C.R. (3d) 250 (B.C.C.A.).

The prosecutor has no power under this section to prefer an indictment including a charge which was before the judge presiding at the preliminary inquiry but upon which the judge did not order the accused to stand trial. When the judge presiding at the preliminary hearing has heard all of the evidence, the judge's refusal to order the accused to stand trial for an offence charged in an information amounts to a judicial determination that that charge is not founded on the facts disclosed by the evidence for the purpose of this section. In order to proceed with the original charge, a new charge would have to be laid either by a new information or by a preferred indictment under s. 577. However, since s. 577 does not apply to trials by judge alone under Part XIX, to prefer an indictment under that section, the Attorney General would also have to make a direction under s. 568: R. v. Tapaquon, [1993] 4 S.C.R. 535, 87 C.C.C. (3d) 1, 26 C.R. (4th) 193.

The refusal of the judge presiding at the preliminary inquiry to order the accused to stand trial on another offence, disclosed by the evidence pursuant to s. 548, does not mean that the accused was discharged on that other offence within the meaning of s. 577(b) and, therefore, an indictment may be preferred under this section including the charges upon which the accused was ordered to stand trial and other offences disclosed by the evidence, and s. 577 need not be complied with: R. v. Hyde (1990), 55 C.C.C. (3d) 251 (Man. C.A.).

The error in the labelling of the offence with which the accused was charged as sexual assault [an offence which did not exist at the time of the offence] rather than indecent assault was voidable and thus, when the error was detected, it was open to the Crown to prefer a new indictment, without the consent of the Attorney General [as required by s. 577], based on the evidence adduced at the preliminary inquiry the validity of which was never directly challenged by the accused: R. v. Barbeau (1992), 75 C.C.C. (3d) 129, 49 Q.A.C. 220, 140 N.R. 211 (S.C.C.).

---

INDICTMENT / Criminal information and bill of indictment / Coroner's inquisition.

576. (1) Except as provided in this Act, no indictment shall be preferred.

(2) No criminal information shall be laid or granted and no bill of indictment shall be preferred before a grand jury.

(3) No person shall be tried on a coroner's inquisition. R.S., c. C-34, s. 506; R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 114.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term "indictment" is defined in s. 2. An indictment is preferred pursuant to ss. 574 and 577. Pursuant to s. 529, where a person is alleged, by a verdict on a coroner's inquest, to have committed murder or manslaughter but he has not been charged with the offence, the coroner shall direct, by warrant, that the person be taken into custody and taken before a justice or direct that the person enter into a recognizance to appear before a justice.

SYNOPSIS

This section, in effect, abolishes certain archaic, mostly common law, modes of proceeding and confirms that an accused may only be tried upon indictment as provided for in the Criminal Code.

ANNOTATIONS

In R. v. Hemlock Park Co-Operative Farm Ltd. (1972), 6 C.C.C. (2d) 189, 24 D.L.R. (3d) 688 (S.C.C.), it was held (5:0) that a criminal information referred to the historic laying of a charge by the Attorney-General or some other authorized person directly before a Superior Court of Criminal Jurisdiction instead of being preferred to a Grand Jury or presented by a Grand Jury.

---

DIRECT INDICTMENTS.

577. In any prosecution,

(a) where a preliminary inquiry has not been held, an indictment shall not be preferred, or

(b) where a preliminary inquiry has been held and the accused has been discharged, an indictment shall not be preferred or a new information shall not be laid before any court without,

(c) where the prosecution is conducted by the Attorney General or the Attorney General intervenes in the prosecution, the personal consent in writing of the Attorney General or Deputy Attorney General, or

(d) where the prosecution is conducted by a prosecutor other than the Attorney General and the Attorney General does not intervene in the prosecution, the written order of a judge of that court. R.S., c. C-34, s. 507; 1974-75-76, c. 93, s. 63; 1984, c. 40, s. 20(2); R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 115.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The preliminary inquiry is held pursuant to Part XVIII. In particular, s. 548 sets out the test for determining whether or not the accused should be ordered to stand trial or discharged. This section is complementary to s. 574 which represents the ordinary procedure for preferring an indictment, i.e., where the accused has been ordered to stand trial. The term "indictment" is defined in s. 2. The term "Attorney General" is also defined in s. 2 but as this section indicates, the full definition of that term is not applicable since the "personal consent" of the Attorney General or the Deputy Attorney General is required. Where an indictment has been preferred pursuant to s. 577, the court, by virtue of s. 578, may issue a summons addressed to or warrant for the arrest of the accused to compel his attendance to answer the charge in the indictment. While, by virtue of s. 566(3), a direct indictment may not be preferred under s. 577 for trial by judge alone, the accused may, pursuant to s. 565(2), re-elect trial by judge alone with the written consent of the prosecutor. Absent the re-election, the accused will be tried by judge and jury. The Attorney General may direct a stay of proceedings pursuant to s. 579.

SYNOPSIS

Where either no preliminary inquiry has been held or one has been conducted and the accused discharged, the Crown can only prefer an indictment with the written consent of the Attorney General or the Deputy Attorney General. Such consent is also required to proceed on a new information.

In "private prosecutions" the written consent of a judge is required in these circumstances.

ANNOTATIONS

Editor's Note: Some of the decisions noted below although decided under the predecessor legislation were felt to be relevant to these provisions.

Formalities of preferring indictment – Where the Attorney-General consents to the preferring of the indictment it is sufficient that the Attorney-General has personally signed the indictment and he is not required to be present in court when the indictment is actually preferred: R. v. Philbin and Henderson (1977), 37 C.C.C. (2d) 528, [1978] 1 W.W.R. 122 (Alta. S.C. App. Div.); R. v. Dwyer and Lauzon (1978), 42 C.C.C. (2d) 83 (Ont. C.A.), rev'd on other grounds 47 C.C.C. (2d) 1, [1980] 1 S.C.R. 481, 10 C.R. (3d) 20; Re Balderstone and The Queen (1982), 2 C.C.C. (3d) 37, 143 D.L.R. (3d) 671, [1983] 1 W.W.R. 72 (Man. Q.B.), aff'd 8 C.C.C. (3d) 532, 4 D.L.R. (4th) 162, [1983] 6 W.W.R. 438 (C.A.).

An indictment signed by the then Attorney-General some months before the trial at which time the indictment is preferred is valid notwithstanding that by the time of trial a new Attorney-General has been appointed: R. v. Rooke (1988), 40 C.C.C. (3d) 484 (B.C.C.A.).

Where a preliminary hearing has been commenced but not completed a preliminary hearing "has not been held" within the meaning of this section and a consent is necessary to prefer an indictment: Re Stewart et al. and The Queen (No. 2) (1975), 35 C.C.C. (2d) 281 (Ont. C.A.).

The refusal of the judge presiding at the preliminary inquiry to order the accused to stand trial on another offence, disclosed by the evidence pursuant to s. 548, does not mean that the accused was discharged on that other offence and, therefore, an indictment may be preferred under s. 574 including the charges upon which the accused was ordered to stand trial and other offences disclosed by the evidence. This section need not be complied with: R. v. Hyde (1990), 55 C.C.C. (3d) 251 (Man. C.A.).

Where the accused has been discharged on the full offence but ordered to stand trial on an included offence, in order to prefer an indictment for the full offence, the provisions of this section must be complied with. The prosecutor cannot simply rely upon the provisions of s. 574(1)(b): R. v. Tapaquon, [1993] 4 S.C.R. 535, 87 C.C.C. (3d) 1, 26 C.R. (4th) 193.

The quashing of an indictment for failure to comply with the provisions of s. 581(3) does not result in the accused being "discharged" so as to require the consent of the Attorney General to the preferring of a subsequent indictment. The term "discharged" in para. (b) refers to an order made at the conclusion of the preliminary inquiry where the justice finds that there is insufficient evidence to order the accused to stand trial. Preferring of a subsequent indictment to cure the supposed defect does not amount to an abuse of process: R. v. D. (A.) (1990), 60 C.C.C. (3d) 407, 75 O.R. (2d) 762 (Ont. C.A.).

Where the accused was ordered to stand trial for the offence charged of sexual assault, an offence which, however, did not exist at the time alleged, it was open to the Crown to prefer an indictment charging indecent assault without the consent of the Attorney General, this latter offence having been disclosed by the evidence at the preliminary inquiry within the meaning of s. 574: R. v. B. (A.) (1991), 64 C.C.C. (3d) 104 (Que. C.A.).

Right to hearing before Attorney General – In exercising his power under this subsection the Attorney General is not required to afford the accused a hearing even where the Attorney General proposes to prefer the indictment part way through the accused's preliminary hearing: Re Saikaly and The Queen (1979), 48 C.C.C. (2d) 192 (Ont. C.A.).

Review of Attorney General's consent generally – The courts have no jurisdiction to review a decision of the Attorney-General under this subsection to prefer an indictment despite the discharge of the accused at his preliminary inquiry: Re Balderstone et al. and The Queen (1983), 8 C.C.C. (3d) 532, [1983] 6 W.W.R. 438 (Man. C.A.), leave to appeal to S.C.C. refused C.C.C. loc. cit.; R. v. Moore et al. (1986), 26 C.C.C. (3d) 474, 50 C.R. (3d) 243 (Man. C.A.) or where no preliminary inquiry has been held: R. v. Stolar (1983), 4 C.C.C. (3d) 333, 32 C.R. (3d) 342 (Man. C.A.), leave to appeal to S.C.C. refused 21 Man. R. (2d) 240n, 50 N.R. 396n.

A superior court judge had no power to compel potential Crown witnesses to attend to be questioned by defence counsel because the Attorney General had preferred a direct indictment: R. v. Sterling (1993), 84 C.C.C. (3d) 65, [1993] 8 W.W.R. 623, 17 C.R.R. (2d) 122 (Sask. C.A.).

Constitutional considerations – This section does not infringe ss. 7, 9 and 15 of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. However, the exercise of the power by the Attorney-General to override a discharge and prefer a direct indictment could be reviewed by a court of competent jurisdiction if in the particular case it resulted in a denial or infringement of a constitutionally protected right: R. v. Ertel (1987), 35 C.C.C. (3d) 398, 58 C.R. (3d) 252 (Ont. C.A.), leave to appeal to S.C.C. refused 36 C.C.C. (3d) vi. Also see: Re Patrick and A.-G. Can. (1986), 28 C.C.C. (3d) 417 (B.C.S.C.) [note: an appeal to the B.C.C.A. was quashed, 35 C.C.C. (3d) 551, 56 C.R. (3d) 378, and leave to appeal to S.C.C. was refused, 80 N.R. 160]; R. v. Andrew, [1986] 6 W.W.R. 323 (B.C.S.C.).

The statutory right to a preliminary hearing is not a constitutional right and therefore where the accused has been given complete disclosure of the Crown's case, the preferring of a direct indictment where a preliminary inquiry has not been held, does not constitute a violation of the right to fundamental justice in s. 7 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms: Re Regina and Arviv (1985), 19 C.C.C. (3d) 395, 45 C.R. (3d) 354 (Ont. C.A.), leave to appeal to S.C.C. refused C.C.C. loc. cit.; R. v. Sterling (1993), 84 C.C.C. (3d) 65 (Sask. C.A.).

Order of judge where private complaint [para. (d)] – In two cases, Re Johnson and Inglis et al. (1980), 52 C.C.C. (2d) 385, 17 C.R. (3d) 250 (Ont. H.C.J.) and Re Garton and Whelan (1984), 14 C.C.C. (2d) 449, 47 O.R. (2d) 672 (H.C.J.), decided prior to the amendment to this section, Evans C.J.H.C. considered the role of a judge in consenting to private prosecution where no preliminary inquiry had been held or the accused had been discharged. In the Johnson case it was held that a distinction must be drawn between cases where a preliminary hearing has and has not been held. In either case, however, in deciding whether to exercise his discretion the judge must consider the nature of the offence, whether it is of a "public" nature such as murder, or of a "private" nature such as criminal libel, and he should also consider the position of the Crown in the matter. Where a preliminary hearing has been held, the judge's consent should be granted only where it is necessary to prevent a miscarriage of justice. Thus, consent will not automatically be granted simply because a prima facie case was made out at the preliminary hearing. Where no preliminary hearing has been held a much stricter test is appropriate, consent being granted only where some urgency or other strongly persuasive reasons exist so as to require depriving the person of a preliminary hearing to which he would otherwise be entitled under the law. In Garton, it was held that the judge should not give his consent merely because of an error of law made by the judge presiding at the preliminary inquiry. Rather, the court will only give its consent where it is necessary to prevent a miscarriage of justice. In making that determination a relevant consideration is the fact that the Attorney-General's Department has on two occasions reviewed the sufficiency of the evidence. It is open to the court in its discretion to hear new evidence on an application pursuant to s. 577.

SUMMONS OR WARRANT / Part XVI to apply.

578. (1) Where notice of the recommencement of proceedings has been given pursuant to subsection 579(2) or an indictment has been filed with the court before which the proceedings are to commence or recommence, the court, if it considers it necessary, may issue

(a) a summons addressed to, or

(b) a warrant for the arrest of, the accused or defendant, as the case may be, to compel him to attend before the court to answer the charge described in the indictment.

(2) The provisions of Part XVI apply with such modifications as the circumstances require where a summons or warrant is issued under subsection (1). 1974-75-76, c. 93, s. 64; R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 116.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term "indictment" is defined in s. 2. The terms "summons" and "warrant" are defined for the purposes of Part XVI in s. 493.

The ordinary power to issue a bench warrant is found in s. 597 where the accused does not appear or remain in attendance for his trial.

SYNOPSIS

This section provides for compelling the appearance of the accused where the Attorney General has recommenced proceedings following a stay of proceedings (see s. 579(2)), or the matter is being dealt with by way of "direct" indictment (see s. 577). The normal rules governing the issuance of process and judicial interim release apply.

ANNOTATIONS

The judge need not hear evidence before issuing a warrant under this section: R. v. Denbigh (1988), 45 C.C.C. (3d) 86 (B.C.S.C.).

ATTORNEY GENERAL MAY DIRECT STAY / Recommencement of proceedings.

579. (1) The Attorney General or counsel instructed by him for that purpose may, at any time after any proceedings in relation to an accused or a defendant are commenced and before judgment, direct the clerk or other proper officer of the court to make an entry on the record that the proceedings are stayed by his direction, and such entry shall be made forthwith thereafter, whereupon the proceedings shall be stayed accordingly and any recognizance relating to the proceedings is vacated.

(2) Proceedings stayed in accordance with subsection (1) may be recommenced, without laying a new information or preferring a new indictment, as the case may be, by the Attorney General or counsel instructed by him for that purpose giving notice of the recommencement to the clerk of the court in which the stay of the proceedings was entered, but where no such notice is given within one year after the entry of the stay of proceedings, or before the expiration of the time within which the proceedings could have been commenced, whichever is the earlier, the proceedings shall be deemed never to have been commenced. R.S., c. C-34, s. 508; 1972, c. 13, s. 43; R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 117.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms “Attorney General”, “indictment” and “clerk of the court” are defined in s. 2. The procedure for enforcement of recognizance is in Part XXV.

SYNOPSIS

This section governs the Attorney General’s ability to stay and recommence proceedings.

The Attorney General or his counsel has the right to direct a stay after proceedings have been commenced (i.e., after an information has been laid or an indictment has been filed) and before a verdict has been rendered.

In the case of an indictable offence the proceedings can be recommenced within one year of the stay. For summary conviction matters the Crown must act before the expiration of the limitation period. Where notice of recommencement is given within these time limits the proceedings will be continued on the original indictment or information.

After the one-year period has elapsed the Crown, if it wishes to proceed on an indictable matter, will have to start afresh.

ANNOTATIONS

Procedure in directing stay – In Re Dowson and The Queen (1983), 7 C.C.C. (3d) 527, 35 C.R. (3d) 289, [1983] 2 S.C.R. 144 (7:0), it was held in relation to the predecessor to this section that an information charging an indictable offence could not be stayed until the justice had determined whether or not to issue process pursuant to s. 518. However, in reaching this conclusion the court appeared to accept that this created an anomaly in that under former s. 732.1 summary conviction proceedings could be stayed as soon as the information was laid. With the amendment to this section and the repeal of s. 732.1, this section now covers both summary and indictable proceedings and in terms similar to former s. 732.1. Accordingly, it would appear that all charges can be stayed as soon as the information is laid.

This view was confirmed in R. v. Pardo (1990), 62 C.C.C. (3d) 371 (Que. C.A.), where it was held that the Attorney General may direct a stay of proceedings prior to the decision of the justice whether or not to issue process.

An agent of the Attorney-General may exercise his power under this section under his general authority as such an agent and does not require specific instructions from the Attorney General: R. v. McKay (1979), 9 C.R. (3d) 378, [1979] 4 W.W.R. 90 (Sask. C.A.).

Effect of entering of stay – Subsequent to proceedings being stayed a new information in identical terms may be laid and proceeded upon: R. v. Judge of the Provincial Court, Ex p. McLeod, [1970] 5 C.C.C. 128, 74 W.W.R. 319 sub nom. R. v. McLeod (B.C.S.C.).

By virtue of this section, the pre-existing right of the Crown to withdraw charges with leave of the Court after the proceedings have been commenced and a plea taken has been abolished by Parliament and this section governs the procedure and the effect of the discontinuance. A stay, however, does not prevent a new information from being laid, and the Crown still has the right to withdraw charges prior to a plea being taken: R. v. Grocutt (1977), 35 C.C.C. (2d) 76, [1977] 2 W.W.R. 698 (Alta. S.C.T.D.).

The vacating of the recognizance upon entering of a stay of proceedings does not render the recognizance void ab initio and if prior to the stay being entered the accused failed to comply with its terms a court has jurisdiction under s. 770 to endorse such default: Purves v. Canada (Attorney-General) (1990), 54 C.C.C. (3d) 355 (B.C.C.A.).

Right of Attorney General to intervene – Once the Attorney-General intervenes in a prosecution, then he assumes control of the prosecution and has the right to stay those proceedings despite the wishes of the informant. At least in the absence of flagrant impropriety on the part of the Crown officers, such action does not constitute a violation of the informant's rights under s. 7 of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms: Re Hamilton and The Queen (1986), 30 C.C.C. (3d) 65 (B.C.S.C.). Similarly: R. v. Osiovy (1989), 50 C.C.C. (3d) 189, 77 Sask. R. 1 (C.A.).

Except perhaps where there is a flagrant impropriety on the part of the Attorney-General, the courts may not review the exercise of discretion under this section: Campbell v. A.-G. Ont. (1987), 31 C.C.C. (3d) 289, 38 D.L.R. (4th) 64, 58 O.R. (2d) 209 (H.C.J.), affd 35 C.C.C. (3d) 480, 42 D.L.R. (4th) 383, 60 O.R. (2d) 617 (C.A.), leave to appeal to S.C.C. refused 43 D.L.R. (4th) vii. Similarly: Re A.-G. Que. and Chartrand (1987), 40 C.C.C. (3d) 270, 59 C.R. (3d) 388 (Que. C.A.), where it was held that while by reason of enactment of the Charter the exercise of the discretion under this section is subject to review, the private complainant's rights under s. 15 of the Charter were not infringed because a stay of proceedings was entered to bar prosecution of abortion charges.

The fact that the Attorney-General has broad powers of intervention, including the right to stay proceedings initiated by a private informant, does not violate the equality rights under s. 15 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms: Re Baker and The Queen (1986), 26 C.C.C. (3d) 123, 21 C.R.R. 365 (B.C.S.C.).

Section 7 of the Charter does not give a private prosecutor the right to continue a criminal prosecution in the face of an intervention by the Attorney General: Kostuch (Informant) v. Alberta (Attorney General) (1995), 101 C.C.C. (3d) 321, 43 C.R. (4th) 81, [1996] 1 W.W.R. 292 (Alta. C.A.).

Withdrawal of charge – It was held in R. v. Osborne (1975), 25 C.C.C. (2d) 405, 33 C.R.N.S. 211 (N.B.S.C. App. Div.), that the trial Judge should not have refused the Crown's request prior to plea to withdraw one charge so as to lay a more serious charge. This ... refusal ... [constituted a] usurpation by the Court of the administrative function of the Crown prosecutor and the Attorney-General to determine who and for what offence any person should be prosecuted. Case law clearly indicates that the Courts should distinguish between private prosecutions and those carried on by the Crown. They show that the Courts should not interfere with the administration of justice by making the matter of withdrawal a means of controlling the Crown's discretion to prosecute and thereby bring the executive and judicial branches of government into conflict. They point out and emphasize that the business of withdrawals is strictly that of the Attorney-General or his agents before the Court. They equate the right of withdrawal to the right to grant a stay of proceedings. The Crown prosecutor is in a better position than the Judge to know how serious any particular case is. Further, the prosecutor is the representative of The Queen and it is inconceivable that the Court should refuse the right of Her Majesty to withdraw an information or stay a prosecution.

Prior to the preferring of an indictment or the entering of a plea and the tendering of evidence an information may be withdrawn by the Crown without the leave of the Court. Where the Crown has tendered evidence after taking of a plea then the trial Judge is seized with jurisdiction and the information cannot be withdrawn without his consent. Accordingly, where, prior to plea, the Crown states that an information is withdrawn the Court has no jurisdiction to proceed with trial or preliminary hearing: Re Blasko and The Queen (1975), 29 C.C.C. (2d) 321, 33 C.R.N.S. 227 (Ont. H.C.J.).

The Crown may withdraw an information on which an election of summary conviction has been made, file a new information and proceed by way of indictment, despite a plea of not guilty having been entered. The exercise of prosecutorial discretion does not offend the principles of fundamental justice unless there is bad faith or some improper motive or arbitrary purpose: R. v. McArthur (1995), 102 C.C.C. (3d) 84 (Sask. C.A.).

Once evidence has been heard on a preliminary hearing the prosecutor has the right to "withdraw the charges" in the sense that he does not wish to prosecute the proceedings any further but this decision does not eliminate the proceedings and the Court should continue the preliminary hearing until completion, either by discharge or committal of the accused, or until the prosecutor directs a stay under this section. Further, where the prosecutor is counsel for the Attorney-General his verbal assurance that he has the necessary instructions from the Attorney-General to direct a stay be entered is all that is required: R. v. Mastroianni et al. (1976), 36 C.C.C. (2d) 97 (Ont. Prov. Ct.).

Abuse of process / Jurisdiction generally – Courts have a residual discretion to remedy an abuse of process only in the “clearest of cases” which requires proof of conduct which shocks the conscience of the community and is so detrimental to the proper administration of justice that it warrants judicial intervention. There must be “overwhelming” evidence that the proceedings are unfair to the point that they are contrary to the interest of justice. Courts must be careful not to attempt to second-guess the Attorney General and to intervene only where there is “conspicuous evidence of improper motives or of bad faith or of an act so wrong that it violates the conscience of the community, such that it would genuinely be unfair and indecent to proceed”: R. v. Power, [1994] 1 S.C.R. 601, 89 C.C.C. (3d) 1, 29 C.R. (4th) 1. Also see the earlier cases of: R. v. Jewitt, [1985] 2 S.C.R. 128, 21 C.C.C. (3d) 7, 47 C.R. (3d) 193 and R. v. Keyowski, [1988] 1 S.C.R. 657, 40 C.C.C. (3d) 481, 62 C.R. (3d) 349.

Crown counsel acted properly and in good faith in staying proceedings when the trial judge ordered that the identity of a confidential informer be disclosed. In the circumstances, the Crown was not required to not offer evidence and then proceed through an appeal against acquittal to challenge the correctness of the ruling. Subsequent to the stay of proceedings, the Crown acted at the first reasonable opportunity to recommence the proceedings. There was no abuse of process in the circumstances: R. v. Scott (1990), 61 C.C.C. (3d) 300, 116 N.R. 361, 2 C.R. (4th) 153 (S.C.C.).

Grounds for judicial stay of proceedings – In Re Orysiuk and The Queen (1977), 37 C.C.C. (2d) 445, 1 C.R. (3d) 111 (5:0) (Alta. S.C. App. Div.), the Court was unanimous in holding that the laying of criminal charges following a public inquiry into the same matter as were the subject of the charges did not give rise to grounds for staying the proceedings.

In R. v. Crneck, Bradley and Shelley (1980), 55 C.C.C. (2d) 1, 17 C.R. (3d) 171 (Ont. H.C.J.), Krever J. held that a superior Court had power to stay proceedings as an abuse of process but only in the most exceptional circumstances as where to permit the Crown to renege on its agreement to extend immunity to an accused in return for her co-operation in the prosecution of another person would undermine the administration of justice and bring the entire system of justice into disrepute. As well the accused would be prejudiced in her defence and this too was grounds for staying the proceedings.

Abuse of process is not limited to cases where there is evidence of prosecutorial misconduct and may be invoked where the affront to fair play and decency is disproportionate to the societal interest in the effective prosecution of criminal cases: R. v. Conway (1989), 49 C.C.C. (3d) 289, [1989] 1 S.C.R. 1659, 70 C.R. (3d) 209.

One ground for staying proceedings as an abuse of process is where the criminal proceedings have been instituted to collect a debt or realize on some civil claim. However, this must amount to more than merely evidence that the victim asked the accused for repayment and agreed on cross-examination that had he had been repaid he would not have contacted the police: Re R. and Laird (1983), 4 C.C.C. (3d) 92, 146 D.L.R. (3d) 755 (Ont. H.C.J.).

A charge of theft was stayed as an abuse of process where the evidence showed that the “victim” had threatened to go to the authorities if the accused did not repay the allegedly stolen money. In fact, the accused did default and the police were contacted: R. v. Janvier, [1985] 5 W.W.R. 59 (Sask. Q.B.).

In R. v. B (1986), 29 C.C.C. (3d) 365, 53 C.R. (3d) 216 (Ont. C.A.), the court reviewed the circumstances in which the act of the prosecution in splitting the case by laying a second charge, resting upon some of the same facts as underlay a charge of which the accused had been acquitted, amounted to an abuse of process. Abuse of process has been found where the second trial is such that it will, in effect, force the accused to answer for the same delinquency twice; where the second trial is such that it will, in effect, relitigate matters that have already been decided on the merits, raising the spectre of inconsistent verdicts; or where the second trial is brought because of malice or spite so as to harass the accused and not for any proper purpose.

INTERVENTION BY ATTORNEY GENERAL OF CANADA / Section 579 to apply.

579.1. (1) The Attorney General of Canada or counsel instructed by him or her for that purpose may intervene in proceedings in the following circumstances:

- (a) the proceedings are in respect of a contravention of, a conspiracy or attempt to contravene or counselling the contravention of an Act of Parliament or a regulation made under that Act, other than this Act or a regulation made under this Act;
- (b) the proceedings have not been instituted by an Attorney General;
- (c) judgment has not been rendered; and
- (d) the Attorney General of the province in which the proceedings are taken has not intervened.

(2) Section 579 applies, with such modifications as the circumstances require, to proceedings in which the Attorney General of Canada intervenes pursuant to this section. 1994, c. 44, s. 60.

---

SYNOPSIS

This section allows the Attorney General of Canada to intervene in proceedings for an offence other than an offence under this Act, even though the proceedings were not commenced at the instance of the Government of Canada within the meaning of "Attorney General" in s. 2, except where, inter alia, the proceedings were instituted by a provincial Attorney General or the provincial Attorney General intervened. Having intervened, the federal Attorney General may then stay the proceedings under s. 579.

---

FORM OF INDICTMENT.

580. An indictment is sufficient if it is on paper and is in Form 4. R.S., c. C-34, s. 509; R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 117.

---

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term "indictment" is defined in s. 2. Section 841(3) provides that any pre-printed portions of the form shall be printed in both official languages. The other formal requirements for an indictment are set out in ss. 581 to 593 and the power to amend an indictment is in s. 601.

---

General Provisions as to Counts

---

SUBSTANCE OF OFFENCE / Form of statement / Details of circumstances / Indictment for treason / Reference to section / General provisions not restricted.

581. (1) Each count in an indictment shall in general apply to a single transaction and shall contain in substance a statement that the accused or defendant committed an offence therein specified.

(2) The statement referred to in subsection (1) may be

- (a) in popular language without technical averments or allegations of matters that are not essential to be proved;
- (b) in the words of the enactment that describes the offence or declares the matters charged to be an indictable offence; or
- (c) in words that are sufficient to give to the accused notice of the offence with which he is charged.

(3) A count shall contain sufficient detail of the circumstances of the alleged offence to give to the accused reasonable information with respect to the act or omission to be proved against him and to identify the transaction referred to, but otherwise the absence or insufficiency of details does not vitiate the count.

(4) Where an accused is charged with an offence under section 47 or sections 49 to 53, every overt act that is to be relied upon shall be stated in the indictment.

(5) A count may refer to any section, subsection, paragraph or subparagraph of the enactment that creates the offence charged, and for the purpose of determining whether a count is sufficient, consideration shall be given to any such reference.

(6) Nothing in this Part relating to matters that do not render a count insufficient shall be deemed to restrict or limit the application of this section. R.S., c. C-34, s. 510; R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 118.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms “indictment” and “count” are defined in s. 2. The other formal requirements with respect to sufficiency of counts in an information or indictment are found in ss. 582 to 586. Under s. 587, particulars may be ordered. Joinder and severance are dealt with in ss. 589 to 591. Under s. 592, an accessory after the fact may be indicted whether or not the principal has been indicted or convicted. Section 593 provides that any number of persons may be charged in the same indictment with the offences under s. 354 or s. 356(1)(b). Provision for amending a defective indictment is found in s. 601. The accused is entitled to inspect without charge the indictment pursuant to s. 603. Special provision for delivery of documents including a copy of the indictment in cases of treason is found in s. 604. Pursuant to s. 580, an indictment is sufficient if it is on paper and is in Form 4. Pursuant to s. 841(3), any pre-printed parts of a form are to be in both official languages.

SYNOPSIS

This section sets out the rules which govern the drafting of charges. The purpose of these provisions is to ensure that an accused is reasonably informed of the offence alleged and is thus able to properly defend the matter.

Subsection (1), in general, restricts a count to a “single transaction”. This, however, is not synonymous with a single incident or occurrence. A “transaction” may be made up of a series of events or involve a number of victims.

Subsection (3) permits several methods of stating the offence: (a) popular language; (b) the words of the enactment that describe the offence or declares the matters charged to be an offence, and (c) words sufficient to give the accused notice of the offence. Most charges are drafted using the language of the offence-creating provision.

To be valid, a charge must contain sufficient detail to enable the accused to identify the transaction in issue (subsec. (3)). This requires that the count raise the matter from the general to the particular and specify “time, place and subject-matter”.

Where the offence charged is high treason (s. 47), alarming Her Majesty (s. 49), assisting alien enemy (s. 50), intimidating Parliament (s. 51), sabotage (s. 52) or mutiny (s. 53), all of the overt acts relied upon by the Crown must be set out (subsec. (4)).

It is permissible (and certainly advisable) to refer in the body of a charge to the section number of the offence-creating provision (subsec. (5)).

While subsequent provisions, such as s. 583, provide that omissions of certain details do not render the information or indictment insufficient, those provisions, by virtue of subsec. (6), do not limit the application of the mandatory minimum conditions for validity and sufficiency set out in this section.

ANNOTATIONS

Review of judge’s decision re validity – Where an information falls within a trial Court’s jurisdiction the Judge has exclusive jurisdiction to determine its validity and his decision upholding it is not subject to either a motion to quash or extraordinary remedy proceedings but only to an appeal against his disposition of the case: R. v. Jarman (1972), 10 C.C.C. (2d) 426 (Ont. C.A.); Re Poulriot and The Queen (1978), 41 C.C.C. (2d) 93 (Que. C.A.).

Single transaction rule [subsec. (1)] – In R. v. Zamal et al., [1964] 1 C.C.C. 12, 42 C.R. 378, [1964] 1 O.R. 224 (C.A.) where five accused were charged jointly with rape and the evidence was that each had successively raped the complainant, although there were separate offences, they were all one transaction and the indictment was not therefore void for duplicity or uncertainty.

An indictment which charged that the accused, over a two and a half year period at specified premises, committed sexual assault by touching the very young victim in specified areas of her body did not offend the single transaction rule set out in subsec. (1): R. v. German (1989), 51 C.C.C. (3d) 175, 77 Sask. R. 310 (C.A.).

An agreement to commit a number of different indictable offences is only one conspiracy transaction: R. v. Addison, ex p. Mooney, [1970] 1 C.C.C. 127, [1969] 2 O.R. 674 (C.A.).

Where it is alleged that the accused over several months attempted to procure a number of different women to have illicit sexual intercourse, more than one transaction is involved, and each woman should be the subject of a separate count: R. v. Deutsch (1983), 5 C.C.C. (3d) 41 (Ont. C.A.) affd on other grounds 27 C.C.C. (3d) 385, 52 C.R. (3d) 305, [1986] 2 S.C.R. 2.

In determining the validity of a charge a single transaction may include a general scheme of operation constituting one continuing offence: R. v. Kisinger and Voszler (1972), 6 C.C.C. (2d) 212, 18 C.R.N.S. 120 (Alta. C.A.).

Although no objection was made at trial it is permissible to object on appeal that an indictment violated subsec. (1). Where a fraudulent scheme includes different representations made to separate complainants a count alleging fraud cannot be said to apply in general to a single transaction: R. v. Rafael (1972), 7 C.C.C. (2d) 325, [1972] 3 O.R. 238 (C.A.).

A triple, instant death situation may result in a single count indictment, even though three separate counts are quite permissible: R. v. Porter (1976), 33 C.C.C. (2d) 215 (Ont. C.A.).

Duplicity rule [common law] – In R. v. Cotroni; Papalia v. The Queen (1979), 45 C.C.C. (2d) 1, 93 D.L.R. (3d) 161, 7 C.R. (3d) 185 (S.C.C.) (7:0) while the Court unanimously dismissed a Crown appeal against C's acquittal and P's appeal against his conviction on a charge of conspiracy the Court divided on whether where the evidence reveals two separate conspiracies this renders the indictment duplicitous. Dickson, J. (Spence, Beetz and Pratte, JJ., concurring), was of the view that where the count charges one conspiracy but the evidence at trial proves more than one conspiracy this did not render the charge duplicitous and the only issue is which conspiracy was envisaged by the indictment. Pigeon, J. (Ritchie, J., concurring), was of the view that as the indictment covered two separate conspiracies to which P was a party it was duplicitous. However, by virtue of s. 590 (1)(b) this did not render the indictment void and "transaction" in s. 581(1) is not to be equated with "offence". As no prejudice was occasioned to P his appeal was dismissed. Martland, J., agreed with Dickson and Pigeon, JJ. that P's appeal should be dismissed.

An indictment alleging a course of conduct commencing with an initial theft by taking of a cheque and then theft by conversion and theft by failing to account for the cheque and its proceeds does not violate the duplicity rule nor the single transaction rule: R. v. Fischer (1987), 31 C.C.C. (3d) 303, 53 Sask. R. 263 (C.A.).

An indictment of three separate conspiracy counts of importing, trafficking and exporting narcotics in effect sets out three different objects of a single subject-matter and accordingly while the accused should be found guilty on no more than one count the indictment is valid: R. v. Bloomfield, Cormier and Ettinger (1973), 10 C.C.C.(2d) 398, 21 C.R.N.S.97 (N.B.C.A.).

Sufficiency of notice of offence charged [subsecs. (1), (2)] – Where the fraud indictment charged payments of about four hundred dollars received through false medical treatment claims rendered over a specific six-month period and the trial Judge found that the Crown had failed to prove its general theory of a continued course of conduct constituting a fraudulent scheme of operation, it was still open to him, as he did, to find the accused guilty of the count where he was satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that fraud had been committed by the accused in connection with nine of the seventy medical treatment claims adduced in evidence by the Crown: R. v. Barnes (1975), 26 C.C.C. (2d) 112, 2 C.R. (3d) 310, 63 D.L.R. (3d) 452 (N.S.S.C. App. Div.).

A theft by a person required to account, charged against a taxi-driver who withheld fares from the vehicle's owner, which read "... unlawfully did commit theft of the approximate sum of sixteen dollars and fifty cents the property of Dominic Louis Christian ..." was valid as declaring the matter to be an indictable offence in the words of the general theft section: R. v. McKenzie (1971), 4 C.C.C. (2d) 296, 16 C.R.N.S.374 (S.C.C.).

A defective information is not a nullity if it gives fair notice of the offence to the accused. Only if a charge is so badly drawn up as to fail even to give the accused notice of the charge will it fail the minimum test required by para. (c). Otherwise, the charge is capable of amendment under s. 601 and should not be quashed: R. v. Moore (1988), 41 C.C.C. (3d) 289, 65 C.R. (3d) 1, [1988] 5 W.W.R. 1, [1988] 1 S.C.R. 1097 (4:3).

Sufficiency of identification of offence [subsec. (3)] – An information that not only charges an offence, but does so in the exact wording of the section, is valid, despite its lack of particularity: R. v. Rowley (1972), 7 C.C.C. (2d) 230 (2:1) (Ont.C.A.).

It was held in R. v. Cochrane (1976), 33 C.C.C. (2d) 549, [1978] 2 W.W.R. 384 (B.C.C.A.) that there is a distinction between an imperfectly stated averment and the total omission of an essential allegation. An averment imperfectly stated cannot be raised after verdict if that verdict could not have been found without proof of that averment stated as it ought to have been. A further appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada was allowed, 38 C.C.C. (2d) 175n, [1978] 2 W.W.R. 384 (9:0) on other grounds without consideration of this particular issue.

In R. v. Wis Developments Corp. Ltd. et al. (1984), 12 C.C.C. (3d) 129, 40 C.R. (3d) 97, [1984] 1 S.C.R. 485 (4:0) the court appeared to affirm the continuing vitality of its prior decision in Brodie et al. v. The King (1936), 65 C.C.C. 289, [1936] S.C.R. 188, where the predecessor to this section was described as requiring that the indictment identify with reasonable precision the act charged in order that the accused know the particular offence alleged against him and prepare his defence accordingly; that it is not sufficient to charge an offence in the abstract, rather, concrete facts of a nature to identify the particular act which is charged and to give the accused notice of it are necessary ingredients of the indictment; that the indictment must specify time, place and matter, and describe the offence in such a way "as to lift it from the general to the particular". It would seem that the absence of sufficient details so as to comply with this section will vitiate the count. However, the further holding in Wis Developments that the information cannot be cured by amendment or the delivery of particulars where objection is taken prior to plea, must be read in light of the fact that this was a summary conviction matter and decided under the former ss. 729(2) and 732 which contained only limited powers of amendment prior to plea. With the repeal of those sections, and ss. 587 and 601 applying in both indictable and summary conviction matters, it may well be that in a proper case an indictment which fails to comply with this section can be cured by amendment or delivery of particulars.

While the circumstances in which acts of care or control of a motor vehicle may be found will vary widely, it cannot be said that the allegation of the care or control offence under s. 253 could relate to a multitude of activities so as to require that the information contain greater detail than allegations that "on or about" a particular date and "at or near" a named district, the accused had "care or control" of a motor vehicle while his ability to drive a motor vehicle was impaired by alcohol or a drug: R. v. Fox (1986), 24 C.C.C. (3d) 366, 50 C.R. (3d) 370 (B.C.C.A.).

The offences of keeping a common betting house and keeping a common gaming house contrary to s. 201 can embrace a number of separate and distinct activities in view of the definition of those houses in s. 197 and so a count simply charging that the accused did unlawfully keep a common betting house or common gaming house at a specific address does not comply with this subsection: Re R. and Wilson (1986), 26 C.C.C. (3d) 8 (Man. Q.B.); R. v. Bingo Enterprises Ltd. et al. (1984), 15 C.C.C. (3d) 261, 41 C.R. (3d) 291, [1984] 6 W.W.R. 445, 29 Man. R. (2d) 78 (C.A.).

Charging the offence in the words of the statute will be insufficient if the offence as so described is capable of covering a multitude of diverse and unrelated acts. However the offence of keeping a common bawdy house is not of that kind: R. v. Milberg (1987), 35 C.C.C. (3d) 45 (Ont. C.A.), leave to appeal to S.C.C. refused June 23, 1987; not following R. v. Bingo Enterprises Ltd., supra. Similarly: R. v. Billon-Rey (1990), 57 C.C.C. (3d) 223 (Que. C.A.).

Sufficiency of identification of transaction [subsec. (3)] – A count charging merely conspiracy to commit fraud which did not identify the transaction complained of was quashed in Shumiatcher v. A.-G. For Saskatchewan (1962), 133 C.C.C.69, 38 C.R.411 (Sask. C.A.). The new information, which contained details of the various overt acts in connection with the conspiracy was unsuccessfully attacked as being void for multiplicity: Re Shumiatcher and A.-G. For Saskatchewan, [1963] 2 C.C.C.319, 40 C.R.199 (Sask. C.A.).

A count of break and enter and to commit theft therein was upheld on the basis that while a simple charge of theft alone would require reference to the property which was the subject of the offence, the allegation of theft here is lifted from the general to the particular by its association with the particular break and entry in this compounded offence: R. v. Wixalbrown and Schmidt, [1964] 1 C.C.C.29, 41 C.R.113 (3:2) (B.C.C.A.).

The test as to whether there has been compliance with the requirements of subsection (3) is whether the information contains sufficient detail to give to the accused reasonable information with respect to the charge and to identify the transaction referred to therein. The kind of information that would be necessary to satisfy this test will vary depending on the nature of the offence charged. Thus, the necessity for an information to specify the time and place of the offence does not require that an information charging offences contrary to s. 253 specify the exact time in terms of hour and minute or the exact location of the offence: R. v. Ryan; R. v. Charbonneau (1985), 23 C.C.C. (3d) 1 (Ont. C.A.), leave to appeal to S.C.C. refused with respect to Ryan February 24, 1986; R. v. Fox (1986), 24 C.C.C. (3d) 366, 50 C.R. (3d) 370 (B.C.C.A.), leave to appeal to S.C.C. refused May 22, 1986.

The information in the possession of the accused, other than through the language of the indictment, such as material contained in the Crown brief to which the accused had been given access, is relevant in considering the sufficiency of the indictment: Re Regina and R.I.C. (1986), 32 C.C.C. (3d) 399 (Ont. C.A.).

An information charging an accused with sexual assault of a young child was sufficient, although the period of time specified extended for many months. These are the kinds of cases in which, because of the age of the alleged victim, full particularity with respect to, for example, dates, is likely impossible and to require it would make prevention of a serious social problem exceedingly difficult: Re Regina and R.I.C., supra; R. v. German, supra. In both these cases, it should be noted that the court appeared to take into account the sufficiency of the disclosure made by the prosecution.

If an information states the time of the offence (even a lengthy period), the place, the victim and the offence (in the language of the enactment) then, except where there is a possibility of prejudice to accused, it will not be quashed prior to plea: R. v. MacLean (1988), 45 C.C.C. (3d) 185, 68 C.R. (3d) 114, 31 B.C.L.R. (2d) 137 (B.C.C.A.).

As to time of offence, see notes under s. 601.

Reference to section number [subsec. (5)] – The omission of certain words from an indictment will not be fatal if it still has set forth the offence requirements, particularly where it is expressed to be contrary to the relevant specific subsection of the Code: R. v. Lessard (1970), 6 C.C.C. (2d) 239, [1972] 2 O.R.329 (C.A.).

Where the information fully and adequately sets out an offence, an erroneous section reference, which even if correct is mere surplusage, will not affect its validity: R. v. Sourwine (1970), 10 C.R.N.S.380, 72 W.W.R.761 (Alta. D.C.).

Specific reference to the offence section will cure the omission of the words “without reasonable excuse” in an information charging a refusal to provide a breath sample as the section reference complies with the rule of reasonably informing the defendant of the transaction alleged against him: R. v. Cote (1977), 33 C.C.C. (2d) 353, 73 D.L.R. (3d) 752 (S.C.C.) (6:2).

Subsec. (6) – Parliament enacted this subsection to ensure that neither subsec. (2)(b) nor s. 590(1)(a) or (b) could be invoked to answer a valid complaint of multiplicity: R. v. Toth (1959), 123 C.C.C.292, 29 C.R.371 (Ont.C.A.).

See also cases noted under s. 789.

HIGH TREASON AND FIRST DEGREE MURDER.

582. No person shall be convicted for the offence of high treason or first degree murder unless in the indictment charging the offence he is specifically charged with that offence. R.S., c. C-34, s. 511; 1973-74, c. 38, s. 4; 1974-75-76, c. 105, s. 6.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term “indictment” is defined in s. 2. High treason is defined in s. 46 and first degree murder is defined in s. 231. Both of these offences are within the exclusive jurisdiction of the superior court of criminal jurisdiction (defined in s. 2) by virtue of ss. 468 and 469 and an accused charged with these offences may only be released by a judge of the superior court of criminal jurisdiction by virtue of s. 522. Section 604 makes special provision for delivery of documents including a copy of the indictment in cases of treason. For other cross-references respecting these offences, see the notes under sections creating the offences. Note in particular, however, s. 589 providing that no count that charges an offence other than murder shall be joined in an indictment to a count that charges murder.

SYNOPSIS

This section requires that an indictment specifically charge first degree murder or high treason if an accused is to be convicted of these offences. Thus, an indictment, charging the accused with “murder”, would be deemed to be second degree murder.

CERTAIN OMISSIONS NOT GROUNDS FOR OBJECTION.

583. No count in an indictment is insufficient by reason of the absence of details where, in the opinion of the court, the count otherwise fulfils the requirements of section 581 and, without restricting the generality of the foregoing, no count in an indictment is insufficient by reason only that

- (a) it does not name the person injured or intended or attempted to be injured;
- (b) it does not name the person who owns or has a special property or interest in property mentioned in the count;
- (c) it charges an intent to defraud without naming or describing the person whom it was intended to defraud;
- (d) it does not set out any writing that is the subject of the charge;

- (e) it does not set out the words used where words that are alleged to have been used are the subject of the charge;
- (f) it does not specify the means by which the alleged offence was committed;
- (g) it does not name or describe with precision any person, place or thing; or
- (h) it does not, where the consent of a person, official or authority is required before proceedings may be instituted for an offence, state that the consent has been obtained. R.S., c. C-34, s. 512.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms "count" and "indictment" are defined in s. 2. Other provisions respecting sufficiency of indictment are found in ss. 581, 582 and 584 to 586. Section 587 provides for the ordering of particulars. Section 588 makes provision with respect to ownership of property and s. 601 permits amendment of a defective indictment. Note s. 581(6) which provides that nothing in this part relating to matters that do not render a count insufficient shall be deemed to restrict or limit the application of the requirements in s. 581.

SYNOPSIS

This section provides that a charge which otherwise complies with the minimum requirements of s. 581 is not insufficient by reason only of the fact that it does not: (a) name the person injured or intended or attempted to be injured; (b) name the owner of an interest in property; (c) name the victim of a fraud; (d) set out the writing which is the subject of the charge; (e) set out the words which are the subject of the charge; (f) specify the means by which an offence was committed; (h) fully name or describe any person, place or thing, or (h) state that, where required, a consent to the prosecution has been obtained.

ANNOTATIONS

Victim of offence generally [paras. (a), (b), (g)] – An information not naming a person or persons affected by a criminal act is not per se insufficient: R. v. Kozodoy (1957), 117 C.C.C.315, 23 C.R.124 (Ont. C.A.), but once the victim is named the name is a material part of the charge and must be proved: R. v. Austin (1955), 113 C.C.C. 95, 22 C.R.269 (Ont. C.A.).

In R. v. Vogelle and Reid, [1970] 3 C.C.C.171, 9 C.R.N.S.101 (Man. C.A.), the Court agreed that if the owner's name is unknown the Crown could charge ownership to person or persons unknown, but divided on the method of proving the theft of the goods.

In Little and Wolski v. The Queen (1974), 19 C.C.C. (2d) 385, 52 D.L.R. (3d) 1, [1976] 1 S.C.R. 20 (5:0) an appeal from conviction for theft was dismissed where although the owner of the goods allegedly stolen was named in the indictment as "Westwood Jewelers Limited" the only evidence was that the goods were stolen from "Westwood Jewelers" which was owned and managed by one of the witnesses. The Court divided on the effect of this apparent failure to prove ownership in the entity named in the indictment. de Grandpré, J., for the majority held that ... if the owner of the object allegedly stolen is mentioned in the indictment and if his ownership is not proven and there are no circumstances to indicate to the accused the true nature of the charge, an acquittal should be entered. However, when, as in the present case there cannot be any possibility for the accused to fail to identify the transaction about which they are charged, there is no reason to discharge the accused for the sole reason that the owner mentioned in the indictment has not been mentioned in the evidence.

Dickson, J., for himself and Beetz, J., while agreeing that the conviction was proper held that except in exceptional circumstances as where the theft can be inferred from the suspicious circumstances of the accused's possession, an allegation of ownership is not mere surplusage. However, the identity of the owner is sufficiently established, in instances in which the owner is named in the indictment, when:

- ... (i) the evidence adduced by the Crown reasonably identifies the owner with the person named in the indictment as owner, and (ii) it is clear that failure to prove the identity of the owner with greater precision has not misled or prejudiced the accused in preparation or presentation of his defence.

In this case, both (i) and (ii) were met and therefore the conviction was proper.

Person defrauded [para. (c)] – While the identification of a victim in a charge of fraud is surplusage, the rule that particulars which are surplusage need not be proved is subject to the proviso that the accused not be prejudiced in his defence: Vezina v. The Queen; Cote v. The Queen (1986), 23 C.C.C. (3d) 481 (S.C.C.) (7:0).

Means of commission of offence [para. (f)] – On a charge of committing an act of gross indecency under former s. 157 the failure to specify the detail of what act was alleged to constitute the act of gross indecency was nothing more than a failure to specify the means by which the offence is alleged to have been committed and by virtue of this paragraph the charge is not rendered insufficient: R. v. Dugdale and Leulier (1979), 47 C.C.C. (2d) 555, 7 C.R. (3d) 216, [1979] 3 W.W.R. 462 (B.C.C.A.) approving the “modern approach” to the question of sufficiency of indictments in R. v. Borek, [1979] 1 W.W.R. 709 (B.C.C.A.) that “now technical omissions that have no real substance should not be considered as cause for rejection of the charges asserted”.

Place of offence [para. (g)] – The place of the offence must be both alleged and proven: Budovitch v. The Queen (1969), 8 C.R.N.S.280 (N.B.S.C., App. Div.).

Consent to prosecution [para. (h)] – The consent must be exact and refer to one specific matter: Re R. v. Whyte Avenue Hotel Co. Ltd.; Re R. v. Wakalich (1962), 39 C.R.40, 40 W.W.R.193 (Alta. S.C.).

In exercising his power to consent, the Attorney General is under no duty that can be enforced by the courts to act fairly and is not required to afford the accused a hearing before deciding whether or not to consent to the prosecution: Re Warren and The Queen (1981), 61 C.C.C. (2d) 65, 22 C.R. (3d) 58 (Ont. H.C.J.).

The consent may be endorsed on the face of the information and, if done in that manner, need not recite particulars of the charge: Re R. and Willard (1984), 15 C.C.C. (3d) 350 (Ont. H.C.J.).

An objection to the validity of the form of consent, in this case consent required by s. 477(2), cannot be raised for the first time near the conclusion of the trial just prior to the charge to the jury: R. v. Sunila (1987), 35 C.C.C. (3d) 289, 78 N.S.R. (2d) 24 (S.C. App. Div.).

Special Provisions Respecting Counts

SUFFICIENCY OF COUNT CHARGING LIBEL / Specifying sense / Proof.

584. (1) No count for publishing a blasphemous, seditious or defamatory libel, or for selling or exhibiting an obscene book, pamphlet, newspaper or other written matter, is insufficient by reason only that it does not set out the words that are alleged to be libellous or the writing that is alleged to be obscene.

(2) A count for publishing a libel may charge that the published matter was written in a sense that by innuendo made the publication thereof criminal, and may specify that sense without any introduction assertion to show how the matter was written in that sense.

(3) It is sufficient, on the trial of a count for publishing a libel, to prove that the matter published was libellous, with or without innuendo. R.S., c. C-34, s. 513.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term “count” is defined in s. 2. Section 587 provides for the ordering of particulars. Note

s. 581(6) which provides that nothing in this part relating to matters that do not render a count insufficient shall be deemed to restrict or limit the application of that section which sets out the minimum requirements for sufficiency. Provision for amending an indictment is made in s. 601.

SYNOPSIS

This section provides that a count for publishing or selling a libel or an obscenity does not need to contain the specific words complained of (subsec. (1)). A count for publishing a libel can claim libel by innuendo without giving the mechanism of the innuendo (subsec. (2)). Proof that published material was libellous is sufficient in a trial for publishing libel (subsec. (3)).

ANNOTATIONS

Even though the count does not set out the specific words it will be sufficient, particularly if it is clear that the accused knew what the count referred to: Pratte v. Maher And The Queen, [1965] 1 C.C.C.77, 43 C.R.214 (Que.C.A.).

SUFFICIENCY OF COUNT CHARGING PERJURY, ETC.

585. No count that charges

(a) perjury,
(b) the making of a false oath or a false statement,
(c) fabricating evidence, or
(d) procuring the commission of an offence mentioned in paragraph (a), (b) or (c), is insufficient by reason only that it does not state the nature of the authority of the tribunal before which the oath or statement was taken or made, or the subject of the inquiry, or the words used or the evidence fabricated, or that it does not expressly negative the truth of the words used. R.S., c. C-34, s. 514.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term "count" is defined in s. 2. Section 587 makes provision for the ordering of particulars, inter alia, in para. (a) of what is relied on in support of a charge of perjury, the making of a false oath or of a false statement, fabricating evidence or counselling the commission of any of those offences. Section 587(1)(e) provides that particulars may be ordered further describing any "writing or words" that are the subject of the charge. Note section 581(6) which provides that nothing in this part relating to matters that do not render a count insufficient shall limit or restrict the application of s. 581 which sets out the minimum sufficiency requirements. A defective indictment may be amended pursuant to s. 601.

SYNOPSIS

This section states that a count for perjury or related offences need not contain: (a) the nature of the authority of the tribunal; (b) the subject of the inquiry; (c) the words or evidence at issue; or (d) an express negation of the truth of such words.

SUFFICIENCY OF COUNT RELATING TO FRAUD.

586. No count that alleges false pretences, fraud or an attempt or conspiracy by fraudulent means is insufficient by reason only that it does not set out in detail the nature of the false pretence, fraud or fraudulent means. R.S., c. C-34, s. 515.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term "count" is defined in s. 2. Section 587 provides for the ordering of particulars and, in particular, s. 587(1)(b) provides for the ordering of particulars of any false pretence or fraud that is alleged and para. (c) provides for provision of particulars of any alleged attempt or conspiracy by fraudulent means. Section 581(6) provides that nothing in this part relating to matters that do not render a count insufficient shall be deemed to restrict or limit the application of s. 581 which sets out the minimum sufficiency requirements for a count in an indictment.

Particulars

WHAT MAY BE ORDERED / Regard to evidence / Particular.

587. (1) A court may, where it is satisfied that it is necessary for a fair trial, order the prosecutor to furnish particulars and, without restricting the generality of the foregoing, may order the prosecutor to furnish particulars

- (a) of what is relied upon in support of a charge of perjury, the making of a false oath or of a false statement, fabricating evidence or counselling the commission of any of those offences;
- (b) of any false pretence or fraud that is alleged;
- (c) of any alleged attempt or conspiracy by fraudulent means;
- (d) setting out the passages in a book, pamphlet, newspaper or other printing or writing that are relied on in support of a charge of selling or exhibiting an obscene book, pamphlet, newspaper, printing or writing;
- (e) further describing any writing or words that are the subject of a charge;
- (f) further describing the means by which an offence is alleged to have been committed; or
- (g) further describing a person, place or thing referred to in an indictment.

(2) For the purpose of determining whether or not a particular is required, the court may give consideration to any evidence that has been taken.

(3) Where a particular is delivered pursuant to this section,

- (a) a copy shall be given without charge to the accused or his counsel;
- (b) the particular shall be entered in the record; and
- (c) the trial shall proceed in all respects as if the indictment had been amended to confirm with the particular. R.S., c. C-34, s. 516; R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 7(2)(c).

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms “count” and “indictment” are defined in s. 2. Section 581 defines the minimum requirements for sufficiency of a count in an indictment. Section 601 provides for amending an indictment or count therein or a particular that is furnished under this section. Any objection to the sufficiency of an indictment is to be taken pursuant to a motion to quash prior to plea by virtue of s. 601(1). Other provisions respecting sufficiency of indictment are found in ss. 582 to 586.

SYNOPSIS

This section gives the trial court the authority to order the Crown to furnish “particulars” where it is satisfied that the same are necessary for an accused to receive a fair trial. Particulars, once provided, are treated as part of the indictment (subsec. (2)). They further define the charge by providing more detailed information with respect to what is alleged.

Although not restricted to these matters, particulars may be ordered in regard to: (a) what is alleged in support of a charge of perjury, the making of a false oath, the fabrication of evidence or counselling the commission of an offence; (b) any false pretence or fraud; (c) an attempt or conspiracy by fraudulent means; (d) the passage relied upon in a charge relating to selling or exhibiting an obscene publication; (e) the description of the writing or words relied on in a charge; (f) further describing the means by which an offence was committed, and (g) further describing any person, place or thing referred to in the charge.

In considering whether to order particulars, the court will have regard to any evidence which has been taken (at either the preliminary inquiry or trial).

ANNOTATIONS

When particulars ordered – Particulars are not required to be furnished by the Crown until the time for the entry of a plea by the accused and accordingly will not be ordered on a preliminary inquiry: R. v. Chew, [1968] 2 C.C.C. 127, [1968] 1 O.R. 97 (C.A.).

Any Judge of the Court in which an indictment has been filed, not necessarily the trial Judge, has jurisdiction to order particulars: R. v. Pope et al. (1978), 45 C.C.C. (2d) 348 (B.C. Co. Ct.); Re Cole and The Queen (1980), 70 C.C.C. (2d) 460 (Ont. H.C.J.).

Purpose of particulars – Particulars are to give the accused exact and reasonable information to enable him to establish fully his defence and to facilitate the administration of justice by defining the issues to assist the trial Judge in rulings on admissibility of evidence: R. v. Canadian General Electric Co. Ltd. et al. (No. 1) (1974), 17 C.C.C. (2d) 433, 16 C.P.R. (2d) 175 (Ont. H.C.J.).

Effect of Crown's opening address – The purpose of Crown counsel's opening address to the jury is to assist the jury in following the evidence by informing them of the theory of the Crown and what the various witnesses may say, to inform defence counsel as to the evidence which he may not know is going to be adduced, and to alert the trial Judge of possible legal questions, but it does not constitute particulars of the indictment: R. v. Bengert et al. (No. 5) (1980), 53 C.C.C. (2d) 481, 15 C.R. (3d) 114 (B.C.C.A.), leave to appeal to S.C.C. refused C.C.C. loc. cit., 34 N.R. 350n sub nom. R. v. Robertson et al.

Failure to prove charge as particularized – In Vezina v. The Queen; Cote v. The Queen (1986), 23 C.C.C. (3d) 481, 25 D.L.R. (4th) 82, [1986] 1 S.C.R. 2 (7:0), the court adopted the following description of the so-called "surplusage rule": "If the particular, whether as originally drafted or as subsequently supplied, is not essential to constitute the offence, it will be treated as surplusage, i.e., a non-necessary which need not be proved." However, that rule is subject to the proviso that the accused not be prejudiced in his defence.

It is a fundamental principle of criminal law that the offence, as particularized in the indictment, must be proved. Thus, although the gravamen of the offence of conspiracy to import narcotics is the agreement to import narcotics rather than a particular narcotic, where the Crown has chosen to particularize the narcotic, in this case heroin, then it was required to prove that offence and not some other conspiracy. To allow the Crown to prove some other offence characterized by different particulars would be to undermine the purpose of providing particulars: that purpose is to permit the accused to be reasonably informed of the transaction alleged against him, thus giving him the possibility of a full defence and a fair trial. In this case, it was not appropriate to amend the indictment on appeal to remove reference to the term "heroin". No such amendment was sought at trial and the trial had proceeded originally on the basis that the Crown must prove a conspiracy relating to heroin and on this basis one of the accused took the stand and testified that he was only involved in a conspiracy relating to cocaine. It would be unfair and prejudicial to the accused after that course of events to permit an amendment fundamentally and retroactively changing the nature of what the Crown must prove: R. v. Saunders (1990), 56 C.C.C. (3d) 220, [1990] 1 S.C.R. 1020, 77 C.R. (3d) 397, 108 N.R. 234.

Where the "particulars" were really no more than information as to the major overt acts relied upon by the Crown to prove the accused's participation in the conspiracy, then their effect is not to amend the indictment so as to charge more than one conspiracy: R. v. May (1984), 13 C.C.C. (3d) 257 (Ont. C.A.), leave to appeal to S.C.C. refused December 20, 1984.

Disclosure of things such as witness statements and photographs does not constitute particulars as contemplated by this section: R. v. Morin (1985), 23 C.C.C. (3d) 550 (Ont. H.C.J.).

Ownership of Property

OWNERSHIP.

588. The real and personal property of which a person has, by law, the management, control or custody shall, for the purposes of an indictment or proceeding against any other person for an offence committed on or in respect of the property, be deemed to be the property of the person who has the management, control or custody of it. R.S., c. C-34, s. 517.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms “property”, “person” and “indictment” are defined in s. 2. The minimum requirements respecting sufficiency of an indictment are set out in s. 581. Section 587 provides for the ordering of particulars. Section 601 sets out the procedure for objecting to the sufficiency of an indictment and for amendment of an indictment. Section 583(b) provides that an indictment which otherwise fulfills the sufficiency requirements of s. 581 is not insufficient by reason only that it does not name the person who owns or has the special property or interest in property mentioned in the count.

SYNOPSIS

A person having the management, control or custody of property is deemed to own that property for the purposes of an indictment or proceeding against another person for an offence committed on or in respect of the property.

ANNOTATIONS

The phrase “by law” in this section limits its application to situations where a person is entrusted with property by statute or common law and accordingly this section cannot be invoked to remedy the failure of the Crown to prove the actual ownership alleged in a theft information: R. v. Scott, [1970] 3 C.C.C.109, 6 C.R.N.S.17 (Alta. S.C., App. Div.).

However, an employee of a store could be found to be the custodian of the goods in the store and thus properly named in an indictment for robbery as the person with property in the stolen goods: R. v. Wright (1990), 60 C.C.C. (3d) 321, 110 A.R. 28 (C.A.).

If the imprecision of the count is only that it names as the owner of the property its bailee then as he has a special property interest the count will stand: R. v. Allen and Gray (1972), 7 C.C.C. (2d) 506, 19 C.R.N.S. 239 (Alta.S.C.App.Div.).

Joinder or Severance of Counts

---

COUNT FOR MURDER.

589. No count that charges an indictable offence other than murder shall be joined in an indictment to a count that charges murder unless

- (a) the count that charges the offence other than murder arises out of the same transaction as a count that charges murder; or
- (b) the accused signifies consent to the joinder of the counts. R.S., c. C-34, s. 518; 1991, c. 4, s. 2.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms “count” and “indictment” are defined in s. 2. This section limits the general right of the prosecution to join any number of offences subject to power of the court to sever charges as provided in s. 591. Note s. 582 which provides that no person shall be convicted of the offence of first degree murder unless in the indictment charging the offence he specifically is charged with that offence. The offence of murder is defined in ss. 229 to 231.

SYNOPSIS

This section provides that no count charging murder shall be joined with any count other than another murder count, unless the other offences arise out of the same transaction or the accused consents.

ANNOTATIONS

The phrase "arises out of the same transaction" is not to be given the somewhat restrictive interpretation that a similar phrase "in respect of the same transaction" in s. 548 (1) has been given. Thus, the accused was properly jointly indicted with his co-accused who was charged with murder, where the offences arose out of the identical set of circumstances and were closely related in both time and space, although there was no allegation that either accused was a party to the other's offences: R. v. Melaragni (1991), 72 C.C.C. (3d) 339, (Ont. Ct. (Gen. Div.)).

OFFENCES MAY BE CHARGED IN THE ALTERNATIVE / Application to amend or divide counts / Order.

590. (1) A count is not objectionable by reason only that

- (a) it charges in the alternative several different matters, acts or omissions that are stated in the alternative in an enactment that describes as an indictable offence the matters, acts or omissions charged in the count; or
- (b) it is double or multifarious.

(2) An accused may at any stage of his trial apply to the court to amend or to divide a count that

- (a) charges in the alternative different matters, acts or omissions that are stated in the alternative in the enactment that describes the offence or declares that the matters, acts or omissions charged are an indictable offence, or
- (b) is double or multifarious, on the ground that, as framed, it embarrasses him in his defence.

(3) The court may, where it is satisfied that the ends of justice require it, order that a count be amended or divided into two or more counts, and thereupon a formal commencement may be inserted before each of the counts into which it is divided. R.S., c. C-34, s. 519.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term "count" is defined in s. 2. Minimum requirements respecting sufficiency of a count on an information are set out in s. 581. Note in particular s. 581(1) which requires that an indictment shall in general apply to a single transaction. The general power to sever counts in an indictment is found in s. 591. Procedure for objecting to the sufficiency of an indictment and for amendment of an indictment is found in s. 601.

SYNOPSIS

Subsection (1) provides that a count is not objectionable because it: (a) charges in the alternative several different acts or omissions where the same are referred to in the offence-creating provision as the various ways in which the offence may be committed, or (b) encompasses two or more separate occurrences of the offence.

However, in such circumstances an accused, to be better able to defend the matter, can apply to the trial judge for an order either amending the count or dividing it into separate counts with respect to each occurrence (subsecs. (2), (3)). The trial judge is to grant such an order where the ends of justice require it.

ANNOTATIONS

Subsec. (3) – Once the accused, who was charged in a single count of theft, testified that there were two groups of transactions with a different defence for the two sets it would be preferable to divide the count: Lilly v. The Queen (1983), 5 C.C.C. (3d) 1, 34 C.R. (3d) 297, [1983] 1 S.C.R. 794 (7:0).

Only the trial judge has jurisdiction to divide or sever counts. However, the application may be brought prior to trial, once a trial judge has been assigned: R. v. Litchfield, [1993] 4 S.C.R. 333, 86 C.C.C. (3d) 97, 25 C.R. (4th) 137.

---

JOINDER OF COUNTS / Each count separate / Severance of accused and counts / Order for severance / Subsequent procedure / Idem.

---

591. (1) Subject to section 589, any number of counts for any number of offences may be joined in the same indictment, but the counts shall be distinguished in the manner shown in Form 4.

(2) Where there is more than one count in an indictment, each count may be treated as a separate indictment.

(3) The court may, where it is satisfied that the interests of justice so require, order
(a) that the accused or defendant be tried separately on one or more of the counts; and
(b) where there is more than one accused or defendant, that one or more of them be tried separately on one or more of the counts.

(4) An order under subsection (3) may be made before or during the trial but, if the order is made during the trial, the jury shall be discharged from giving a verdict on the counts

(a) on which the trial does not proceed; or (b) in respect of the accused or defendant who has been granted as separate trial.

(5) The counts in respect of which a jury is discharged pursuant to paragraph (4)(a) may subsequently be proceeded on in all respects as if they were contained in a separate indictment.

(6) Where an order is made in respect of an accused or defendant under paragraph (3)(b), the accused or defendant may be tried separately on the counts in relation to which the order was made as if they were contained in a separate indictment. R.S., c. C-34, s. 520; R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 119.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms “count” and “indictment” are defined in s. 2. Provision for dividing a count which is double or multifarious is found in s. 590. Notwithstanding this section, no count that charges an offence other than murder shall be joined in an indictment to a count that charges murder by virtue of s. 589. Section 574(1) provides that counts originally charged in separate informations may be joined in the same indictment. Under s. 593, any number of persons may be charged in the same indictment with an offence under s. 354 or s. 356(1)(b) notwithstanding that the property was held in possession at different times or the person by whom the property was obtained is not indicted with them or is not in custody or amenable to justice.

SYNOPSIS

This section deals with indictments in respect of more than one count or accused and the powers of a court to order separate trials.

Other than an indictment alleging murder (see s. 589), any number of counts for any number of offences may be included in an indictment (subsec. (1)). The court can, if the interests of justice require, order that certain counts and/or accused be tried separately (i.e., severance) (subsec. (3)).

Severance can be ordered either before or during a trial. Where the order is made during the course of a jury trial, no verdict will be returned with respect to the severed counts and/or accused which may be proceeded with at a later time as if on a separate indictment (subsecs. (4), (5) and (6)).

ANNOTATIONS

Jurisdiction – Only the trial judge has jurisdiction to divide or sever counts. However, the application for severance may be brought prior to trial, once a trial judge has been assigned: R. v. Litchfield, [1993] 4 S.C.R. 333, 86 C.C.C. (3d) 97, 25 C.R. (4th) 137.

Review of discretion – The trial Judge's discretion as to whether or not there will be a joint trial of the accused will not be interfered with unless it is shown that he acted unjusticially or that his ruling resulted in an injustice. Furthermore a multiplicity of counts, some of which did not involve the two accused, is not per se a ground for separate trials: R. v. Kestenberg and McPherson (1959), 126 C.C.C. 387, 32 C.R. 1 (Ont. C.A.).

In R. v. Henshaw, [1968] 3 C.C.C. 350, 63 W.W.R. 652 (B.C.C.A.), the majority (2:1) held that a trial Judge's discretion to refuse to sever counts should not be interfered with except in cases of manifest prejudice and injustice. Furthermore, a directed verdict on one count by the trial Judge after the address and before his charge was, on the particular facts, approved. Robertson, J.A., dissented, being of the view that the failure to render the directed verdict at the conclusion of the Crown's case seriously prejudiced the conduct of the accused's defence.

Generally – Where the essence of the charge is common enterprise all accused should be jointly tried except for anyone who would be prejudiced in his defence or denied the opportunity of a fair trial. The mere allegation that one accused may give evidence for another is not per se sufficient to disturb the trial Judge's discretionary refusal for severance: R. v. Quiring And Kuipers (1974), 19 C.C.C. (2d) 337, 27 C.R.N.S. 367 (Sask. C.A.).

Considering the interests of justice as well as the interests of the accused, and provided that there was no improper prejudice to the accused, where there was a common intention to commit a crime a joint trial with all of its characteristics was the proper course: R. v. Miller and Cockriell (1975), 24 C.C.C. (2d) 401 at p. 422, 33 C.R.N.S. 129 at p. 146 (5:0) (B.C.C.A.).

In R. v. McCaw (1971), 5 C.C.C. (2d) 416, [1972] 1 O.R. 742 (C.A.), it was held that where the appellant was the only one of three accused who raised a defence of alibi he should not have been tried jointly with the others nor should he have been represented by the same counsel.

Antagonistic defences – Where each co-accused has made a statement blaming the other for the murder, the fact that their defences are apparently antagonistic is not an overriding factor for granting separate trials, which will not be done in this particular case: R. v. Lane and Ross, [1970] 1 C.C.C. 196, 6 C.R.N.S. 273 (Ont. H.C.J.).

To call co-accused as defence witness – Prima facie, accused who are jointly indicted should be jointly tried if it is alleged that they acted in concert, an appeal Court will only interfere with the trial Judge's decision refusing severance when such refusal has resulted in a miscarriage of justice: R. v. Agawa and Mallett (1975), 28 C.C.C. (2d) 379, 31 C.R.N.S. 293 (Ont. C.A.). In this case severance was refused although one accused had given a statement, which the Crown was not tendering, exculpating the other. It was held that severance was properly refused although in the result this accused was not a compellable witness for the other, especially since the accused who had given the statement indicated he would deny its truth if it were brought out.

In the subsequent case of R. v. Torbiak and Gillis (1978), 40 C.C.C. (2d) 193 (Ont. C.A.) the test for severance in this type of situation was stated to be whether the evidence of the co-accused sought to be elicited on behalf of another is such that, when considered in the light of the other evidence, it might reasonably affect the verdict of the jury by creating a reasonable doubt as to the guilt of the latter. If so, then if a joint trial would preclude him from having the benefit of that evidence a separate trial may be required. In and of itself it is no ground for refusal of severance that the evidence is merely corroborative of other evidence.

Thus, in R. v. Bradley et al. (1980), 57 C.C.C. (2d) 542 (Que. S.C.), one accused whom several of his co-accused wish to call to testify was severed from the trial when it became apparent that the former did not intend to testify and it could not be said that his evidence was so totally incredible that no reasonable jury could have a reasonable doubt as to the guilt of one or more of his co-accused based on his testimony.

In the absence of decisive evidence to the contrary the court must assume that counsel is acting in good faith in seeking severance in order to call a co-accused, who he asserts has evidence which would support the defence. Severance will be necessary where required for the accused to fully defend himself, as where the evidence of the co-accused is likely to raise a reasonable doubt: R. v. Boulet (1987), 40 C.C.C. (3d) 38 (Que. C.A.).

Where inadmissible evidence would be adduced – However, where the evidence is substantially stronger against one of two co-conspirators the better course is to direct separate trials, particularly where the Crown intends to tender in evidence a damaging statement made by one accused under circumstances which make it inadmissible against the other: Guimond v. The Queen (1979), 44 C.C.C. (2d) 481, 8 C.R. (3d) 185, 26 N.R. 91 (S.C.C.).

Even where each accused gives a statement incriminating the others where the evidence suggests a joint venture, the accused are properly tried together: R. v. Puffer, McFall and Kizyma (1976), 31 C.C.C. (2d) 81, [1976] 6 W.W.R. 239 (Man. C.A.); affd as to McFall, 48 C.C.C. (2d) 225, 100 D.L.R. (3d) 403 (S.C.C.) (6:3).

To call evidence prejudicial to co-accused – The trial judge erred in refusing an application for severance by one accused where in the result that accused was not able to make full answer and defence by reason of rulings designed to protect the co-accused. Thus the accused had been prevented from cross-examining his co-accused on prior, possibly involuntary, statements and from leading evidence of the co-accused's disposition for violence: R. v. Kendall and McKay (1987), 35 C.C.C. (3d) 105, 57 C.R. (3d) 249 (Ont. C.A.).

Where the effect of the joint trial of the accused was to prevent one accused from being able to cross-examine a co-accused on testimony that she gave in a prior proceeding [by reason of s. 13 of the Charter] thus resulting in real prejudice to the accused, then the trial judge should have granted an application for severance: R. v. Zurlo (1990), 57 C.C.C. (3d) 407, 78 C.R. (3d) 167 (Que. C.A.).

Grounds for severance of counts – Although it has been frowned upon, the Crown may join with a count of the commission of a substantive offence a count of conspiracy to commit it: R. v. Kelly, [1967] 1 C.C.C. 215, 49 C.R. 216 (B.C.C.A.).

In R. v. Jefferson and Five Others (1971), 6 C.C.C. (2d) 33, [1972] 2 O.R. 38 (H.C.J.) severance of counts was granted where the indictment charged six accused with 15 counts and the trial Judge was of the opinion that the jury would have great difficulty segregating the evidence legally admissible against each accused on each count. It was also held that while the Crown has a right to join counts charging conspiracy and the substantive offence which was allegedly the object of the conspiracy in the same indictment, it is generally undesirable to do so and in the absence of unusual circumstances the trial Judge should exercise his discretion to order severance of the counts.

On an application by an accused for severance of counts the onus is on the accused to show on the balance of probabilities that the ends of justice require severance. Even when a joint trial will be very long a Judge may properly dismiss the application although the facts fall short of demonstrating that a joint trial is required as a matter of absolute necessity: R. v. McNamara et al. (No. 1) (1981), 56 C.C.C. (2d) 193 (Ont. C.A.), at pp. 264-6.

In his appeal from conviction for two charges of attempted murder which were tried together, the accused argued that the counts should have been severed by the trial Judge. The Court held that as the evidence on each count was admissible as similar fact evidence on the other, the counts were properly tried together: R. v. Simpson (1977), 35 C.C.C. (2d) 337, 77 D.L.R. (3d) 507 (Ont. C.A.).

Joint trial of separate informations – A court has jurisdiction to jointly try separate informations. Where joinder of offences or of accused is being considered, then the court should seek the consent of the accused and the prosecution. If consent is withheld, then the reasons should be explored. Whether the accused consents or not, joinder should only occur when, in the opinion of the court, it is in the interests of justice and the offences or accused could initially have been jointly charged. Where the accused wishes to testify in respect to only one of the informations, then consent to a joint trial would be withheld and the judge should not order a joint trial. The procedure to be followed should, to the extent possible, follow the procedure for a trial of an information containing multiple accused or charges. Where the separate informations involve two accused, the Crown may not compel one accused to testify against the other: R. v. Clunas (1992), 70 C.C.C. (3d) 115, 11 C.R. (4th) 238, [1992] 1 S.C.R. 595 (5:0).

Joint trial of summary and indictable offences – A provincial court judge may jointly try summary and indictable offences even where they are contained on separate informations, provided that the accused has not elected trial by a higher court in respect of the indictable offence. In the event of any conflict as to the applicable procedure, indictable offence procedures would apply. Where, following the trial, both charges have gone for appeal, the summary conviction appeal court should await the decision of the court of appeal in the indictable proceeding: R. v. Clunas, supra.

Other notes – An accused has an absolute right to cross-examine a co-accused who testifies at their joint trial, whether the latter's evidence is favourable or unfavourable to him: R. v. McLaughlin (1974), 15 C.C.C. (2d) 563 (Ont. C.A.).

An information may include an offence upon which the Crown intends to proceed summarily and an offence under provincial legislation where the applicable provincial legislation does not prohibit such a procedure: R. v. Massick (1985), 21 C.C.C. (3d) 128, 47 C.R. (3d) 148, 35 M.V.R. 234 (B.C.C.A.).

ACCESSORIES AFTER THE FACT.

592. Any one who is charged with being an accessory after the fact to any offence may be indicted, whether or not the principal or any other party to the offence has been indicted or convicted or is or is not amenable to justice. R.S., c. C-34, s. 521.

CROSS-REFERENCES

Accessory after the fact is defined in s. 23. Section 23.1 provides that s. 23 applies in respect of an accused notwithstanding the fact that the person whom the accused received, comforted or assisted could not be convicted of the offence. A party to the offence is defined by ss. 21 and 22. Section 463 sets out the punishment for persons convicted of being an accessory after the fact except for certain offences such as an accessory after the fact to murder (see s. 240).

ANNOTATIONS

On the trial of an accessory after the fact to manslaughter, evidence by the principal that he pleaded guilty to manslaughter and was sentenced to nine years' imprisonment is admissible against the accessory to prove the principal crime. An accessory after the fact may not be tried or tender a valid plea of guilty until the principal is convicted, so that if the latter is acquitted the accessory must of necessity be discharged. Conversely, any evidence admissible against the principal is admissible against an accessory after the fact to prove the principal's crime: R. v. Vinette (1974), 19 C.C.C. (2d) 1, [1975] 2 S.C.R. 222.

Evidence of the commission of an offence by the principal must be given before the accessory after the fact may be convicted: R. ex rel. Power v. Hawkes (1959), 125 C.C.C. 120, 43 M.P.R. 107 (N.B.Q.B.).

TRIAL OF PERSONS JOINTLY FOR HAVING IN POSSESSION / Conviction of one or more.

593. (1) Any number of persons may be charged in the same indictment with an offence under section 354 or paragraph 356(1)(b), notwithstanding that

(a) the property was had in possession at different times; or

(b) the person by whom the property was obtained

(i) is not indicted with them, or

(ii) is not in custody or is not amenable to justice.

(2) Where, pursuant to subsection (1), two or more persons are charged in the same indictment with an offence referred to in that subsection, any one or more of those persons who separately committed the offence in respect of the property or any part of it may be convicted. R.S., c. C-34, s. 522.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term "indictment" is defined in s. 2. The minimum requirements respecting sufficiency of an indictment are set out in s. 581. Provision respecting charging of ownership of property is found in s. 588. Section 591 gives the court power to sever counts and accused in an indictment. The term "property" is defined in s. 2. Possession is defined in s. 4(3).

SYNOPSIS

Subsection (1) provides that all persons alleged to have been in possession of property obtained by crime may be jointly charged even though: (a) they may have had possession at different times, or (b) the person who illegally obtained the property in the first instance is not charged or within the court's jurisdiction.

One or more of several jointly charged accused may be convicted, notwithstanding they are proven to have separately committed the offence (subsec. (2)).

Proceedings when Person Indicted is at Large

BENCH WARRANT / Execution / Interim release.

597. (1) Where an indictment has been preferred against a person who is at large, and that person does not appear or remain in attendance for his trial, the court before which the accused should have appeared or remained in attendance may issue a warrant in Form 7 for his arrest.

(2) A warrant issued under subsection (1) may be executed anywhere in Canada.

(3) Where an accused is arrested under a warrant issued under subsection (1), a judge of the court that issued the warrant may order that the accused be released on his giving an undertaking that he will do any one or more of the following things as specified in the order, namely,

(a) report at times to be stated in the order to a peace officer or other person designated in the order;

(b) remain within a territorial jurisdiction specified in the order;

- (c) notify the peace officer or other person designated under paragraph (a) of any change in his address or his employment or occupation;
- (d) abstain from communicating with any witness or other person expressly named in the order except in accordance with such conditions specified in the order as the judge deems necessary;
- (e) where the accused is the holder of a passport, deposit his passport as specified in the order; and
- (f) comply with such other reasonable conditions specified in the order as the judge considers desirable. R.S., c. C-34, s. 526; R.S. c. 2 (2nd Supp.), s. 11; 1974-75-76, c. 93, s. 64.1; R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 121.

CROSS-REFERENCES

Section 841(3) provides that any preprinted portions of a form are to be printed in both official languages. Failure to appear for trial is an offence under s. 145. Under s. 598, a person to whom s. 597(1) applies may lose his right to trial by jury. Section 475 provides that the trial may continue where the accused absconds in the course of the trial.

SYNOPSIS

The court may issue a warrant, executable throughout Canada, for the apprehension of an accused who is at large (i.e., not in custody) but who does not appear for trial or remain in attendance at the trial on an indictment (subsecs. (1) and (2)).

An accused, arrested on such a warrant, shall be brought before a judge of the court which issued it for a bail hearing. The judge may either order that the accused remain in custody or be released on an undertaking, with or without conditions.

ELECTION DEEMED TO BE WAIVED / Idem.

598. (1) Notwithstanding anything in this Act, where a person to whom subsection 597(1) applies has elected or is deemed to have elected to be tried by a court composed of a judge and jury and, at the time he failed to appear or to remain in attendance for his trial, he had not re-elected to be tried by a court composed of a judge without a jury or provincial court judge without a jury, he shall not be tried by a court composed of a judge and jury unless

- (a) he establishes to the satisfaction of a judge of the court in which he is indicted that there was a legitimate excuse for his failure to appear or remain in attendance for his trial; or
- (b) the Attorney General requires pursuant to section 568 that the accused be tried by a court composed of a judge and jury.

(2) An accused who, pursuant to subsection (1), may not be tried by a court composed of a judge and jury is deemed to have elected under section 536 to be tried by a judge of the court in which he is indicted without a jury and section 561 does not apply in respect of the accused. 1974-75-76, c. 93, s. 65; R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 122.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term "Attorney General" is defined in s. 2. Section 475 provides that a trial may continue where the accused has absconded in the course of the trial and the accused is deemed to have waived his right to be present at the trial. Failure to appear or remain in attendance at trial is an offence under s. 145.

SYNOPSIS

This section sets out the rules which apply to an accused who does not appear for, or remain in attendance at, a jury trial.

In such circumstances, the right to a jury will have been lost, unless the accused can satisfy a judge of the trial court that he or she had a “legitimate excuse” for not appearing (subsec. (1)(a)). The Attorney General, however, can still require a jury, pursuant to s. 568 (subsec. (1)(b)).

An accused who has forfeited the right to a jury is deemed to have elected to be tried by a judge alone and has no right to “re-elect” (subsec. (2)).

ANNOTATIONS

Although this section infringes the right to a jury trial as guaranteed by s. 11(f) of the Charter, it constitutes a reasonable limit on that right within the meaning of s. 1 of the Charter and, accordingly, is valid legislation: R. v. Lee (1989), 52 C.C.C. (3d) 289, 73 C.R. (3d) 257, 41 B.C.L.R. (2d) 273 (S.C.C.) (5:2).

This section is mandatory and operates as an exception to the provisions of Part XIX and therefore an accused indicted in Quebec Superior Court who has failed to appear without legitimate excuse must be tried by a Judge of that Court without a jury notwithstanding that in Quebec a Judge of the Superior Court is not included in the definition of “Judge” for the purposes of Part XIX: Re Voisard and The Queen (1978), 43 C.C.C. (2d) 570, 2 C.R. (3d) 24 (Que. C.A.).

An honest mistake as to the date when the trial was to commence is a legitimate excuse within the meaning of this section, even if the accused did not exercise due diligence. Nothing less than an intentional avoidance of appearing at trial for the purpose of impeding or frustrating the trial or with the intention of avoiding its consequences, or failure to appear because of a mistake resulting from wilful blindness, should deprive an accused of his right to a jury trial: R. v. Harris (1991), 66 C.C.C. (3d) 536 (Ont. C.A.).

Change of Venue

REASONS FOR CHANGE OF VENUE / Reasons to be stated / Conditions as to expense / Transmission of record / Idem.

599. (1) A court before which an accused is or may be indicted, at any term or sittings thereof, or a judge who may hold or sit in that court, may at any time before or after an indictment is found, upon the application of the prosecutor or the accused, order the trial to be held in a territorial division in the same province other than that in which the offence would otherwise be tried if

(a) it appears expedient to the ends of justice, or

(b) a competent authority has directed that a jury is not to be summoned at the time appointed in a territorial division where the trial would otherwise by law be held.

(2) [Repealed. R.S.C. 1985, c. 1 (4th Supp.), s. 16.]

(3) The court or judge may, in an order made upon an application by the prosecutor under subsection (1), prescribe conditions that he thinks proper with respect to the payment of additional expenses caused to the accused as a result of the change of venue.

(4) Where an order is made under subsection (1), the officer who has custody of the indictment, if any, and the writings and exhibits relating to the prosecution, shall transmit them forthwith to the clerk of the court before which the trial is ordered to be held, and all proceedings in the case shall be held or, if previously commenced, shall be continued in that court.

(5) Where the writings and exhibits referred to in subsection (4) have not been returned to the court in which the trial was to be held at the time an order is made to change the place of trial, the person who obtains the order shall serve a true copy thereof on the person in whose custody they are and that person shall thereupon transmit them to the clerk of the court before which the trial is to be held. R.S., c. C-34, s. 527; 1974-75-76, c. 93, s. 66; R.S.C. 1985, c. 1 (4th Supp.), s. 16.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms "indictment", "prosecutor" and "territorial division" are defined in s. 2. Territorial jurisdiction is generally dealt with in ss. 470 and 476 to 481. Also note s. 7 which gives courts territorial jurisdiction in certain circumstances as where offence is committed on aircraft or outside Canada. Where an order is made changing the venue of trial then s. 600 provides for the removal, disposal and reception of an accused pursuant to such order for change of venue. Section 531 provides for change of venue where necessary for the purpose of a trial in the official language of the accused.

SYNOPSIS

Subsection (1) provides that an application to change the venue of a trial may be made at any time, by either the prosecutor or the accused, to a judge of the court before which the trial is to take place. Where the judge is satisfied that: (a) the ends of justice so require; or (b) that a jury panel will not be available, he or she can order that the matter be transferred to another territorial division within the same province.

Where the order is made upon the application of the prosecution, the court may require the prosecutor to pay any additional expenses incurred by the accused (subsec. (3)).

The record will be transmitted to the court where the trial is to be held (subsecs. (4) and (5)).

ANNOTATIONS

Jurisdiction – The superior Court of one province has no power to change the venue of an offence, committed entirely in that province, to another province: R. v. Threinen (1976), 30 C.C.C. (2d) 42, [1976] W.W.D. 83 (Sask. Q.B.).

Procedure – An accused has no right to bring successive applications before different Judges for a change of venue unless new grounds have arisen since the previous application. On any subsequent application the Judge hears the matter de novo: R. v. Hutchison (1975), 26 C.C.C. (2d) 423, 11 N.B.R. (2d) 327 (S.C. App. Div.), affd 30 C.C.C. (2d) 97, [1977] 2 S.C.R. 717 sub nom. Ambrose v. The Queen; Hutchison v. The Queen.

Where the prejudice which caused a change of venue to be ordered has been eradicated, a return to the original venue should be ordered as prima facie the accused should be tried in the jurisdiction where the offence was alleged to have been committed: R. v. Kellar (1973), 24 C.R.N.S.71 (Ont. Co.Ct.).

Principles – The test is whether it has been made to appear that there is a fair and reasonable probability of partiality or prejudice against the accused: R. v. Beaudry, [1966] 3 C.C.C.51 (B.C.S.C.).

The test to be applied on an application for a change of venue is whether it is necessary in order to ensure that the accused has a fair trial with an impartial jury. A fair trial can be conducted only in a reasonably serene environment. The test enunciated in R. v. Beaudry, supra, requiring the accused to establish that a jury would not render a true verdict free of bias or partiality, is too narrow: R. v. Charest (1990), 57 C.C.C. (3d) 312, 76 C.R. (3d) 63, 28 Q.A.C. 258 (C.A.).

For a change of venue the accused must present evidence that a fair and impartial trial cannot be held. Where the only prejudice likely to exist arises out of the very nature of the offence the application will be refused: R. v. Turvey (1970), 1 C.C.C. (2d) 90, 12 C.R.N.S.329 (N.S.S.C.).

Where the Chambers Judge declined to take the responsibility for what he believed would be serious consequences if he refused the application, where six months previously prejudicial newspaper articles which included references to the accused's lengthy criminal record had been published, an order for change of venue was made: R. v. Kully (1973), 15 C.C.C. (2d) 488, 2 O.R. (2d) 463 (H.C.J.).

It was held in R. v. Alward (1976), 32 C.C.C. (2d) 416, 73 D.L.R. (3d) 290 (N.B.S.C. App. Div.), that a change of venue on a murder case was properly refused despite the considerable publicity which surrounded the crime. It was held that only where there is strong evidence of general prejudicial attitude in the community as a whole should the order be made.

The fundamental consideration in determining an application to grant a change of venue is whether it is necessary to ensure that the accused has a fair trial with an impartial jury. Where most of the pretrial publicity was over a year prior to the trial and the accused was given an unrestricted right to challenge potential jurors for cause, it could not be said that the trial judge improperly exercised his discretion against a change of venue: R. v. Collins (1989), 48 C.C.C. (3d) 343 (Ont. C.A.).

In R. v. Lafferty (1977), 35 C.C.C. (2d) 183 (N.W.T.S.C.) a change of venue on application by the Crown was granted where all the potential jurors in the area either knew the accused or the victim and evidence was tendered that there was a reasonable probability of prejudice and that most members of a jury would be reluctant to return a verdict for fear of retaliation. It was held that in administering justice the Court should not sanction a course of action which will cause or aggravate divisiveness or hostility in a small settlement.

ORDER IS AUTHORITY TO REMOVE PRISONER.

600. An order that is made under section 599 is sufficient warrant, justification and authority to all sheriffs, keepers of prisons and peace officers for the removal, disposal and reception of an accused in accordance with the terms of the order, and the sheriff may appoint and authorize any peace officer to convey the accused to a prison in the territorial division in which the trial is ordered to be held. R.S., c. C-34, s. 528.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms "prison", "peace officer" and "territorial division" are defined in s. 2. The order for a change of venue is made pursuant to s. 599.

Amendment

AMENDING DEFECTIVE INDICTMENT OR COUNT / Amendment where variance / Amending indictment / Matters to be considered by the court / Variance not material / Adjournment if accused prejudiced / Question of law / Endorsing indictment / Mistakes not material / Limitation / Definition of "court" / Application.

601. (1) An objection to an indictment or to a count in an indictment for a defect apparent on the face thereof shall be taken by motion to quash the indictment or count before the accused has pleaded, and thereafter only by leave of the court before which the proceedings take place, and the court before which an objection is taken under this section may, if it considers it necessary, order the indictment or count to be amended to cure the defect.

(2) Subject to this section, a court may, on the trial of an indictment, amend the indictment or a count therein or a particular that is furnished under section 587, to make the indictment, count or particular conform to the evidence, where there is a variance between the evidence and

- (a) a count in the indictment as preferred; or
- (b) a count in the indictment

- (i) as amended, or
  - (ii) as it would have been if it had been amended in conformity with any particular that has been furnished pursuant to section 587.
- (3) Subject to this section, a court shall, at any stage of the proceedings, amend the indictment or a count therein as may be necessary where it appears
- (a) that the indictment has been preferred under a particular Act of Parliament instead of another Act of Parliament;
  - (b) that the indictment or a count thereof
    - (i) fails to state or states defectively anything that is requisite to constitute the offence,
    - (ii) does not negative an exception that should be negated,
    - (iii) is in any way defective in substance, and the matters to be alleged in the proposed amendment are disclosed by the evidence taken on the preliminary inquiry or on the trial; or
  - (c) that the indictment or a count thereof is in any way defective in form.
- (4) The court shall, in considering whether or not an amendment should be made to the indictment or a count thereof under subsection (3), consider
- (a) the matters disclosed by the evidence taken on the preliminary inquiry;
  - (b) the evidence taken on the trial, if any;
  - (c) the circumstances of the case;
  - (d) whether the accused has been misled or prejudiced in his defence by a variance, error or omission mentioned in subsection (2) or (3); and
  - (e) whether, having regard to the merits of the case, the proposed amendment can be made without injustice being done.
- (4.1) A variance between the indictment or a count therein and the evidence taken is not material with respect to
- (a) the time when the offence is alleged to have been committed, if it is proved that the indictment was preferred within the prescribed period of limitation, if any; or
  - (b) the place where the subject-matter of the proceedings is alleged to have arisen, if it is proved that it arose within the territorial jurisdiction of the court.
- (5) Where, in the opinion of the court, the accused has been misled or prejudiced in his defence by a variance, error or omission in an indictment or a count therein, the court may, if it is of the opinion that the misleading or prejudice may be removed by an adjournment, adjourn the proceedings to a specified day or sittings of the court and may make such an order with respect to the payment of costs resulting from the necessity for amendment as it considers desirable.
- (6) The question whether an order to amend an indictment or a count thereof should be granted or refused is a question of law.
- (7) An order to amend an indictment or a count therein shall be endorsed on the indictment as part of the record and the proceedings shall continue as if the indictment or count had been originally preferred as amended.
- (8) A mistake in the heading of an indictment shall be corrected as soon as it is discovered but, whether corrected or not, is not material.
- (9) The authority of a court to amend indictments does not authorize the court to add to the overt acts stated in an indictment for high treason or treason or for an offence against any provision in sections 49, 50, 51 and 53.
- (10) In this section, "court" means a court, judge, justice or provincial court judge acting in summary conviction proceedings or in proceedings on indictment.

(11) This section applies to all proceedings, including preliminary inquiries, with such modifications as the circumstances require. R.S., c. C-34, s. 529; 1974-75-76, c. 105, s. 29; R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 123.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms “count”, “indictment”, “justice” and “provincial court judge” are defined in s. 2. Section 581 sets out the minimum sufficiency requirements with respect to a count in an indictment or information. Other provisions respecting sufficiency of counts in an indictment are found in ss. 582 to 586. Provision for ordering particulars is made in s. 587 and any such particular may be amended pursuant to this section. Provision for amending a count which is double or multifarious is found in s. 590. Section 591 permits a judge to sever jointly charged accused and to order severance of counts. Under s. 683(1)(g), an appellate court may amend an indictment.

SYNOPSIS

This section governs applications to quash or amend an indictment.

Where a defect is apparent on the face of an indictment, subsec. (1) directs that a motion to quash shall be made prior to plea. Thereafter, leave of the court is required.

Where evidence has been called, the court can amend the indictment, or any particular, to conform with the evidence (subsec. (2)).

At any stage of the proceedings, the court can amend a charge which, although otherwise properly drawn, refers to the wrong statute (subsec. (3)(a)) or is in any way defective in form (subsec. (3)(c)).

In cases where the need for the proposed amendment has been disclosed by the evidence called at either the preliminary inquiry or the trial, the indictment may be amended where it: (a) fails to state or defectively states an essential averment (subsec. (3)(b)(i)); (b) fails to negative an exception (subsec. (3)(b)(ii)); (c) is in any way defective in substance (subsec. (3)(b)(iii)).

Subsection (4) directs the trial judge to consider the following in deciding whether an amendment ought to be made: (a) the evidence from the preliminary inquiry; (b) any evidence adduced at trial; (c) the circumstances of the case; (d) whether the accused has been misled or prejudiced by the defect in the charge; and (e) whether the amendment would cause an injustice.

The reference in the opening words of subsec. (4) to “subsection (3)” appears to have been inserted in the R.S.C. 1985 revision and would seem to be an error. The predecessor to this provision contained no such reference and limitation of the application of this subsection to subsec. (3) is inconsistent with subsec. (4)(d).

By reason of subsec. (4.1), a variation between the evidence and the time of the offence is not material if the indictment was preferred within the limitation period. Similarly, a variation between the evidence and the location of the offence is not material if the matter arose within the territorial jurisdiction of the court.

The court may, pursuant to subsec. (5), adjourn the trial (and order costs if appropriate) where necessary, to remove any prejudice caused by an error in the wording of the charge.

A decision with respect to amending an indictment is a question of law (subsec. (6)). This is important for the purposes of appeals.

This section does not authorize amendments with respect to the overt acts which must be set out in treason charges or in charges of alarming Her Majesty (s. 49), assisting an alien or omitting to prevent treason (s. 50), intimidating Parliament (s. 51), sabotage (s. 52) or mutiny (s. 53).

The powers of amendment set out in this section also apply to summary conviction proceedings (subsec. (10)) and to preliminary inquiries (subsec. (11)).

ANNOTATIONS

Amendment on court’s own motion – It was held in R. v. Powell, [1965] 4 C.C.C. 349

(B.C.C.A.), that a trial judge may ex mero motu, upon a motion for dismissal at the conclusion of the Crown's case, amend the information to conform with the evidence.

Procedure – In R. v. Bouchard, [1970] 5 C.C.C. 95, 2 N.B.R. (2d) 138 (N.B.S.C. App.Div.), it was held that an objection to a defect apparent on the face of the indictment cannot be entertained initially upon appeal unless the accused has been misled or prejudiced by that defect.

Where the accused refuses to plead and stands mute, then, although a plea of not guilty is entered, the accused has never actually pleaded and therefore does not require leave to raise an objection to the indictment in the course of the trial: Re R. and Wilson (1986), 26 C.C.C. (3d) 8 (Man. Q.B.).

An information charging a summary conviction offence may be amended by the trial judge and resworn to properly state the grounds for belief by the informant, i.e., reasonable grounds rather than personal knowledge, notwithstanding the six-month limitation period has expired by that time: R. v. Canadian Industries Ltd. (1982), 69 C.C.C. (2d) 533, 41 N.B.R. (2d) 631 (C.A.).

An accused may move at his preliminary inquiry to quash an information for failure to comply with s. 581(3): Re Dallas and Cassidy and The Queen (1986), 25 C.C.C. (3d) 287 (Ont. C.A.).

An application to quash an information on the basis that it fails to comply with s. 581(3) may be brought prior to the accused's election as to mode of trial: Re Volpi and Lanzino and The Queen (1987), 34 C.C.C. (3d) 1 (Ont. C.A.); R. v. Itt Industries of Canada (1987), 39 C.C.C. (3d) 268, 18 B.C.L.R. (2d) 98 (B.C.C.A.).

Where an information falls within a trial Court's jurisdiction the Judge has exclusive jurisdiction to determine its validity and his decision upholding it is not subject to either a motion to quash or extraordinary remedy proceedings but only to an appeal against his disposition of the case: R. v. Jarman (1972), 10 C.C.C. (2d) 426 (Ont. C.A.).

An information not being an absolute nullity, in deciding whether or not to quash it, the provincial court judge presiding at the accused's preliminary inquiry was acting within his jurisdiction and certiorari was not available to review that decision. However, there may be very rare and highly exceptional circumstances where certiorari was available, as where the judge refused to quash an information which was an absolute nullity in that it failed even to give the accused notice of the charge. The existence of some charge of an offence known to the law, albeit very imperfectly described, is the basis of the judge's jurisdiction: R. v. Webster (1993), 78 C.C.C. (3d) 302, [1993] 1 S.C.R. 3, 17 C.R. (4th) 393 (7:0).

Nature of amendments which may be made – On the second trial (this time for wounding), following an acquittal of attempted murder, the trial Judge refused the special plea of autrefois acquit. In affirming this decision it was held in R. v. Rinnie, [1970] 3 C.C.C. 218, 9 C.R.N.S. 81 (Alta. C.A.), that an included offence, which can only be found by definition of the crime, or by statutory prescription, or by the inclusion of apt words of description cognate to the offence, may be pleaded to by this special plea where there has been an acquittal of the principal offence. Furthermore, as the Crown is not to be permitted to amend a count at trial to include a lesser and included offence, because such amendment is not envisaged by this section, the accused cannot argue that a proper amendment might have been made at the former trial to entitle him subsequently to plea autrefois acquit.

Circumstances where amendment should be made generally – An amendment during a trial which fundamentally changes the Crown's case is an injustice to the accused: R. v. Charlton and Ostere (1976), 30 C.C.C. (2d) 372 (B.C.C.A.).

An information which is duplicitous or multifarious is not null or void but merely contains a defect apparent on its face within this section, and may be amended: R. v. Sauli Ste. Marie (City) (1976), 30 C.C.C. (2d) 257, 70 D.L.R. (3d) 430 (Ont. C.A.), affd on other grounds, 40 C.C.C. (2d) 353, 85 D.L.R. (3d) 161, [1978] 2 S.C.R. 1299 (9:0).

Amendment to conform with evidence [subsec. (2)] – A trial continues until the charge is disposed of so that until that point a Judge may amend the charge to conform with the evidence: R. v. Clark (1974), 19 C.C.C. (2d) 445, [1974] 6 W.W.R. 114 (Alta. C.A.).

It would seem that the test to be applied as to whether the indictment is to be amended to conform to the evidence is whether or not the amendment can be made without causing irreparable prejudice to the accused: R. v. Morozuk (1986), 24 C.C.C. (3d) 257, 50 C.R. (3d) 179, [1986] 1 S.C.R. 31 (7:0); R. v. Campbell And Kotler (1986), 29 C.C.C. (3d) 97, [1986] 2 S.C.R. 376, 32 D.L.R. (4th) 363 (S.C.C.).

Amendments to cure defects in form and substance [subsec. (3)] – An amendment clarifying a count by including particulars was not one of substance, but in any event subsec. (3) gave the trial Judge an unqualified right to amend: R. v. Denis, [1970] 1 C.C.C. 86, [1969] 2 O.R. 205 (Ont. C.A.).

It would seem that the test to be applied as to whether the indictment is to be amended rather than quashed is a test of irreparable prejudice. Absent absolute nullity, if the defect to be cured by the amendment has misled or prejudiced the accused then the judge must determine whether the misleading or prejudice can be removed by an adjournment. If it can, then the judge must make the amendment and adjourn and thereafter proceed. Only if the amendment cannot be made without injustice being done, is it open to the judge to quash the charge: R. v. Moore (1988), 41 C.C.C. (3d) 289, 65 C.R. (3d) 1, [1988] 5 W.W.R. 1, [1988] 1 S.C.R. 1097 (4:3).

An information which lacks an essential averment is not thereby rendered a nullity, but rather may be amended: R. v. Stewart (1979), 7 C.R. (3d) 165, [1979] 3 W.W.R. 177 (B.C.C.A.) (5:0).

Factors to be considered under [subsec. (4)] – These requirements are mandatory and the failure of the trial Judge to observe them vitiates an amendment made to the charge by him: R. v. Geary (1960), 126 C.C.C. 325, 33 C.R. 103 (Alta. S.C.App. Div.).

The effect of this subsection is not that a preliminary inquiry must have been held before an amendment can be made. If the preliminary inquiry has been waived by the accused the result is that there is nothing for the trial Judge to consider under para. (a) in following the directions under the subsection: R. v. Smith (1961), 131 C.C.C. 14, 35 C.R. 323 (Ont. C.A.), revd on other grounds, 131 C.C.C. 403, 36 C.R. 384 (S.C.C.).

Time and place of offence [subsec. (4.1)] – While time must be specified in an information in order to provide an accused with reasonable information about the charges brought against him and to ensure the possibility of a full defence and a fair trial, exact time need not be specified. The individual circumstances of the particular case may, however, be such that greater precision as to time is required, as where there is a lack of other factual information available with which to identify the transaction. If the time specified in the information is inconsistent with the evidence, there is conflicting evidence as to the time of the offence or the date cannot be established with precision, the information need not be quashed and conviction may result, provided that time is not an essential element of the offence or crucial to the defence: R. v. B. (G.) (1990), 56 C.C.C. (3d) 161, [1990] 2 S.C.R. 30, 77 C.R. (3d) 327 (5:0).

While a variance between the date of the offence as set out in the indictment and as shown in the evidence is not material, it was held to constitute misdirection to instruct the jury to disregard any variance. While the dates on the indictment alleging sexual assault may have had several sources, the jury was entitled to assume that the adult complainant must have been consulted before the charges were laid. The direction to the jury may have led the jury to disregard evidence which was material in assessing the credibility of the complainant: R. v. C. (M.H.) (1991), 63 C.C.C. (3d) 385 (S.C.C.) (5:0).

In R. v. P. (M.B.), [1994] 1 S.C.R. 555, 89 C.C.C. (3d) 289, 29 C.R. (4th) 209 it was held that, particularly with respect to sexual offences against young children, absolute precision with respect to the timing of the alleged offence will often be unrealistic and unnecessary. The fact that an accused may have an alibi for part of the period described in the indictment does not necessarily or automatically freeze the dates specified in that indictment. The alibi evidence must respond to the case as presented by the Crown. However, at the time the Crown closed its case there was no occasion for an amendment to the indictment, the testimony of the complainant and her mother as to the date of the offence corresponding to the dates set out in the indictment. The Crown should not have been allowed to reopen its case after the accused had declared his intention to call evidence of an alibi in order to justify the subsequent amendment to the indictment. The fundamental principle in determining whether the Crown should be permitted to reopen its case is whether the accused will suffer prejudice in his defence. Whether or not the Crown should be permitted to reopen its case will depend on the stage at which the application is made and the nature of the evidence to be called. Before the Crown has closed its case, the trial judge has considerable latitude to permit the Crown to recall a witness to correct earlier testimony. Any prejudice to the accused can generally be cured by an adjournment, cross-examination of the recalled witness and other crown witnesses and a review by the trial judge of the record in order to determine whether certain portions should be struck. Once the Crown actually closes its case, the trial judge's discretion will narrow with reopening being permitted to correct some oversight or inadvertent omission by the Crown in the presentation of its case, provided that justice requires it and there will be no prejudice to the defence. Where the Crown has closed its case and as, in this case, the defence has started to answer the case against him, the trial judge's discretion is very restricted and it will only be in the narrowest of circumstances that the Crown will be permitted to reopen its case.

Review of decision of trial judge [subsec. (6)] – Failure to make an amendment to the information which had merely misdescribed the allegedly stolen property, which amendment would not have prejudiced the accused, is an error of law which the Crown may appeal to the Court of Appeal: R. v. Cousineau (1982), 1 C.C.C. (3d) 293 (Ont. C.A.).

While the decision to refuse an amendment is a question of law and reviewable by the Court of Appeal, the decision of the trial judge, when based on a finding of irreparable prejudice should not be interfered with lightly and the trial judge's privileged position as regards the effect on the fairness of a trial should be borne in mind: R. v. Vezina; R. v. Cote (1986), 23 C.C.C. (3d) 481 (S.C.C.) (7:0).

Inspection and Copies of Documents

---

RIGHT OF ACCUSED.

603. An accused is entitled, after he has been ordered to stand trial or at his trial,

- (a) to inspect without charge the indictment, his own statement, the evidence and the exhibits, if any; and
- (b) to receive, on payment of a reasonable fee determined in accordance with a tariff of fees fixed or approved by the Attorney General of the province, a copy
  - (i) of the evidence,
  - (ii) of his own statement, if any, and
  - (iii) of the indictment;

but the trial shall not be postponed to enable the accused to secure copies unless the court is satisfied that the failure of the accused to secure them before the trial is not attributable to lack of diligence on the part of the accused. R.S., c. C-34, s. 531; 1974-75-76, c. 93, s. 67; R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 101(2)(d).

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms “indictment” and “Attorney General” are defined in s. 2. Following the order to stand trial, s. 551 provides that the record is to be transmitted to the trial court.

SYNOPSIS

This section sets out the material which an accused is entitled to examine, or obtain copies of. Accused persons may inspect the indictment, their own statements and any evidence or exhibits tendered at the preliminary inquiry.

Upon payment of a prescribed fee, the accused can obtain copies of the evidence, his or her own statements and the indictment. A trial should not be adjourned until the accused receives copies, if the failure to obtain copies is due to lack of diligence on the part of the accused.

ANNOTATIONS

Disclosure generally – At least in the case of indictable offences, the Crown is required to produce to the defence all relevant information whether or not the Crown intends to introduce it into evidence and whether it is inculpatory or exculpatory. The Crown does have a discretion to withhold information and as to the timing of the disclosure where necessary to protect the identity of an informer or a continuing investigation. A discretion must also be exercised with respect to the relevance of information. The exercise of this discretion is reviewable by the trial judge who will be guided by the general principle that information ought not to be withheld if there is a reasonable possibility that the withholding of information will impair the right of the accused to make full answer and defence, unless the non-disclosure is justified by the law of privilege. Even then, the trial judge might conclude that the recognition of an existing privilege does not constitute a reasonable limit on the constitutional right to make full answer and defence and thus require disclosure in spite of the law of privilege. Initial disclosure should occur before the accused is called upon to elect the mode of trial or to plead. The obligation to disclose will be triggered by a request by or on behalf of the accused. In the case of an unrepresented accused, the trial judge should not take a plea unless satisfied that the accused has been informed of his right to disclosure: R. v. Stinchcombe, [1991] 3 S.C.R. 326, 68 C.C.C. (3d) 1, 9 C.R. (4th) 277 (7:0).

Production of witness’ statement – Subject to the discretion discussed above under the heading “Disclosure generally”, the Crown must disclose any statements in its possession of witnesses the Crown proposes to call and all statements obtained from persons who have provided relevant information to the authorities notwithstanding that they are not proposed as Crown witnesses. Where statements are not in existence, other information such as notes should be produced, and, if there are no notes, then in addition to the name, address and occupation of the witness, all information in the possession of the prosecution relating to any relevant evidence that the person could give should be disclosed: R. v. Stinchcombe, supra.

Production of accused’s statement – The phrase “his own statement” in para. (a) includes the accused’s statement to the police and not merely the statement given pursuant to s. 541 at the preliminary hearing. Further, even apart from this section, the trial judge has a discretion which, absent some cogent reason, he should exercise to order the Crown to produce the accused’s statement for the defence even if the Crown has no intention of introducing the statement as part of its case: R. v. Savion and Mizrahi (1980), 52 C.C.C. (2d) 276, 13 C.R. (3d) 259 (Ont. C.A.). Folld: R. v. Gonneville (1982), 69 C.C.C. (2d) 269 (Que. S.C.). Contra: R. v. Lantos, supra.

For other notes on disclosure, see notes following s. 650.

DELIVERY OF DOCUMENTS IN CASE OF TREASON, ETC. / Details / Witnesses to delivery / Exception.

604. (1) An accused who is indicted for high treason or treason or for being an accessory after the fact to high treason or treason is entitled to receive, after the indictment has been found and at least ten days before his arraignment,

(a) a copy of the indictment,

(b) a list of the witnesses to be produced on the trial to prove the indictment, and

(c) a copy of the panel of jurors who are to try him, returned by the sheriff.

(2) The list of the witnesses and the copy of the panel of the jurors referred to in subsection (1) shall mention the names, occupations and places of abode of the witnesses and jurors respectively.

(3) The writings referred to in subsection (1) shall be given to the accused at the same time and in the presence of at least two witnesses.

(4) This section does not apply to the offence of high treason by killing Her Majesty, to the offence of high treason where the overt act alleged is an attempt to injure the person of Her Majesty in any manner or to the offence of being an accessory after the fact in such case of high treason. R.S., c. C-34, s. 532; 1974-75-76, c. 105, s. 29.

CROSS-REFERENCES

Other special provisions respecting the trial and charging of the offences of treason and high treason may be found in the cross-references following ss. 46 and 47. Note, however, in particular, s. 601(9) which limits the power of a court to amend an indictment charging the offence of high treason or treason.

SYNOPSIS

This section specifies that an accused charged with certain treason-related offences is entitled to receive before trial, in the presence of two witnesses, a copy of the indictment, a list of the Crown's witnesses and a list of the members of the jury panel. The lists are to include names, addresses and occupations.

RELEASE OF EXHIBITS FOR TESTING / Disobeying orders.

605. (1) A judge of a superior court of criminal jurisdiction or a court of criminal jurisdiction may, on summary application on behalf of the accused or the prosecutor, after three days notice to the accused or prosecutor, as the case may be, order the release of any exhibit for the purpose of a scientific or other test or examination, subject to such terms as appear to be necessary or desirable to ensure the safeguarding of the exhibit and its preservation for use at the trial.

(2) Every one who fails to comply with the terms of an order made under subsection (1) is guilty of contempt of court and may be dealt with summarily by the judge or provincial court judge who made the order or before whom the trial of the accused takes place. R.S., c. C-34, s. 533.

CROSS-REFERENCES

In addition to the power in this section, note s. 258(4) which provides for a court order releasing samples of blood taken from the accused pursuant to ss. 254 and 256. Under s. 603, an accused is entitled to inspect exhibits which have been transmitted to the trial court pursuant to s. 551. The rights of appeal in cases of contempt of court are set out in s. 10.

SYNOPSIS

This section authorizes a trial judge to release an item which has been marked as an exhibit for scientific testing or other examination. Either the Crown or the accused can apply, upon giving three days notice to the other party. A court making such an order can impose terms to safeguard the item and to ensure its preservation for use at trial.

Failure to comply with the order is punishable as a contempt of court.

ANNOTATIONS

This section would permit the release for testing of a tape recording which was ordered produced by the trial Judge although not made an exhibit: R. v. Savion and Mizrahi (1980), 52 C.C.C. (2d) 276, 13 C.R. (3d) 259 (Ont. C.A.).

On the trial of a narcotics offence the fact that the entire amount of the alleged narcotic was used up in scientific analysis so that the accused was rendered unable to exercise his right to apply under this section does not deprive the accused of his right to make full answer and defence: R. v. O'Quinn (1976), 36 C.C.C. (2d) 364, [1976] W.W.D. 130 (B.C.C.A.); Canada (Attorney General) v. Ross (1971), 15 C.R.N.S. 71 (Que. C.A.).

An accused charged with a narcotics offence may apply under this section for an order releasing the narcotics for the purpose of scientific testing. But an order should be granted only where the intended analysis can be characterized as quantitatively and qualitatively different from the one initially carried out by the Government analyst: R. v. Bryers and Mueller (1975), 28 C.C.C. (2d) 466 (Ont. Co.Ct.).

This section will permit release of narcotics for scientific testing which have been made exhibits, even to persons not otherwise authorized by the Narcotic Control Act or Regulations to possess narcotics: R. v. Vales (1979), 46 C.C.C. (2d) 269 (Ont. H.C.J.).

Where there is an "air of reality" to the production and examination sought and if the production and examination sought have any meaningful capacity to advance any available defence then the order should be made: R. v. Rhab (1985), 21 C.C.C. (3d) 97 (Ont. H.C.J.).

A justice presiding at a preliminary inquiry has no power to order the release of exhibits for scientific testing under this section: R. v. Walsh (1981), 59 C.C.C. (2d) 554 (Ont. Ct. (Prov. Div.)). Contra: R. v. McGee (1973), 15 Crim. L.Q. 468 (B.C. Prov. Ct.).

For notes on the power of the court to control release of exhibits following the trial see notes under s. 683, Powers of court of appeal generally [subsec. (3)].

Pleas

PLEAS PERMITTED / Refusal to plead / Allowing time / Included or other offence.

606. (1) An accused who is called on to plead may plead guilty or not guilty, or the special pleas authorized by this Part and no others.

(2) Where an accused refuses to plead or does not answer directly, the court shall order the clerk of the court to enter a plea of not guilty.

(3) An accused is not entitled as of right to have his trial postponed but the court may, if it considers that the accused should be allowed further time to plead, move to quash, or prepare for his defence or for any other reason, adjourn the trial to a later time in the session or sittings of the court, or to the next of any subsequent session or sittings of the court, on such terms as the court considers proper.

(4) Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act, where an accused or defendant pleads not guilty of the offence charged but guilty of any other offence arising out of the same transaction, whether or not it is an included offence, the court may, with the consent of the prosecutor, accept that plea of guilty and, if such plea is accepted, the court shall find the accused or defendant not guilty of the offence charged and find him guilty of the offence in respect of which the plea of guilty was accepted and enter those findings in the record of the court. R.S., c. C-34, s. 534; 1974-75-76, c. 105, s. 7; R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 125.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The rules respecting included offences are set out in ss. 660 to 662. The special pleas are provided for in ss. 607 to 610. The special plea of justification in cases of libel is set out in ss. 611 and 612. Any ground of defence for which a special plea is not provided for in this part may be relied upon under the plea of not guilty pursuant to s. 613. Thus, for example, the defence of insanity as defined in s. 16 is tried pursuant to a plea of not guilty entered pursuant to s. 606(1).

SYNOPSIS

The only pleas recognized by Canadian law are guilty, not guilty and the "special pleas" referred to in s. 607, viz., autrefois acquit, autrefois convict, and pardon (subsec. (1)).

A plea of not guilty will be entered if the accused refuses to plead to a charge (subsec. (2)).

The judge can adjourn a trial if he or she feels it is appropriate to allow the accused more time to consider what plea to enter or for any other reason related to the preparation and conduct of the defence (subsec. (3)).

With the consent of the Crown, the court may accept a plea of guilty to another offence arising out of the same transaction, whether or not it is an included offence. In such a case the accused will be found not guilty of the offence charged, but guilty of the offence in respect of which the plea was accepted (subsec. (4)).

ANNOTATIONS

Guilty plea / Procedure – In Adgey v. The Queen (1973), 13 C.C.C. (2d) 177, 23 C.R.N.S. 298 (S.C.C.) (3:2) the majority held that a trial Judge has a discretion with respect to accepting a plea of guilty, first, when the charge is read and a plea of guilty is entered and, second, following the hearing of evidence if the Judge chooses to hear evidence. The trial Judge is not bound as a matter of law in all cases to conduct an inquiry after a guilty plea has been entered. If he chooses to hear evidence it may indicate the accused never intended to admit to an essential fact of the offence charged or may have misapprehended the effect of the plea or may never have intended to plead guilty at all. In such cases the Judge may, in his discretion, permit the accused to withdraw the plea or direct the entry of a plea of not guilty. The discretion of the trial Judge if exercised judicially will not be lightly interfered with. The Court's right to permit withdrawal of a guilty plea is not limited to matters arising from "admitted facts" but can be based upon any statements made in the course of the inquiry following a guilty plea.

A plea of guilty may be entered by counsel on behalf of the accused in the presence of the accused: R. v. Sommerfeldt (1984), 14 C.C.C. (3d) 445 (B.C.C.A.).

In Brosseau v. The Queen, [1969] 3 C.C.C. 129, 5 C.R.N.S. 331 (S.C.C.), it was held (4:1) that, where an accused who is represented by counsel pleads guilty, the trial judge is not bound as a matter of law to ascertain whether the accused fully appreciates the nature of the charge and the effect of his plea.

Qualified or conditional plea – When a qualified or conditional plea is given the Court should not accept it as a plea of guilty unless the Court is satisfied, after due inquiry, that the qualification or condition does not derogate from the accused's intention to enter an unequivocal plea of guilty: R. v. McNabb (1971), 4 C.C.C. (2d) 316 (Sask. C.A.). In this case on appeal the accused was permitted to withdraw his guilty plea when at trial he pleaded "guilty with an explanation" and the trial Judge did not make the inquiry which would justify his acceptance of the plea.

A plea of guilty must be an admission by the accused of all the legal ingredients necessary to constitute the crime charged thus dispensing with the necessity of proof of those ingredients. The accused may not enter a conditional plea of guilty, for example, in a homicide case, conditional on the Crown establishing the cause of death: R. v. Lucas (1983), 9 C.C.C. (3d) 71 (Ont. C.A.), leave to appeal to S.C.C. refused C.C.C. loc. cit.

Grounds for withdrawing plea – On appeal the accused was permitted to withdraw his guilty plea and a new trial was ordered where a statement by the trial Judge may have been construed by the accused as meaning he was liable as a party to the offence though he was only present. Further, on the facts as disclosed by the Crown there was no evidence that would make the accused a party to the offence and the trial Judge having heard the facts was under a duty to stop the proceedings and permit a change of plea: R. v. Voorwinde (1975), 29 C.C.C. (2d) 413 (B.C.C.A.).

In R. v. Hansen (1977), 37 C.C.C. (2d) 371 (Man. C.A.) (3:2) the accused on appeal was permitted to withdraw his plea of guilty to second degree murder and a new trial was ordered where evidence adduced on the appeal showed that the accused was in a disturbed state of mind at the time and was under the false impression that if he did not plead guilty the Crown would proceed on a charge of first degree murder.

A plea of guilty must always be a free and voluntary act by the accused himself, untainted by any threats or promises to induce the accused to admit that he committed the offence when he does not wish or intend to do so. While counsel has a duty to advise and this advice may sometimes have to be firmly given, counsel has no right to pressure the accused into pleading guilty: R. v. Lamoureux (1984), 13 C.C.C. (3d) 101, 40 C.R. (3d) 369 (Que. C.A.).

The accused was allowed to withdraw his guilty plea on appeal where it was shown that he pleaded guilty to avoid spending a week in jail awaiting trial after he was remanded in custody after failing to appear for the original trial date: R. v. Cesari (1986), 50 C.R. (3d) 93 (Que. C.A.).

It is not a ground for allowing an accused on appeal to withdraw his guilty plea that the sentence imposed by the trial judge was substantially greater than the submission by Crown and defence counsel, there being no evidence that the accused did not understand the charges nor any evidence that the plea was equivocal: R. v. Rubenstein (1987), 41 C.C.C. (3d) 91 (Ont. C.A.).

It was not a valid ground for withdrawal of a guilty plea that, subsequent to the plea, the co-accused was acquitted at a trial where the facts adduced at the plea indicated that the appellant was convicted as a principal. The acquittal of the co-accused determined nothing in respect of the appellant's conviction: R. v. Hick (1991), 67 C.C.C. (3d) 573, [1991] 3 S.C.R. 383, 7 C.R. (4th) 297.

Appeal from refusal to traverse trial – There is no right of appeal from a refusal to traverse a trial: R. v. Lahosky (1972), 7 C.C.C. (2d) 407 (Man.C.A.).

Plea of guilty to included or other offence [subsec. (4)] – Where an accused pleads guilty to a lesser count the Court may proceed with the trial of the more serious count, and if he is acquitted on that count, can sentence him on the plea of guilty: R. v. St. Jean (1970), 15 C.R.N.S. 194 (Que.C.A.). Contra: R. v. Pentiluk and MacDonald (1974), 21 C.C.C. (2d) 87, 28 C.R.N.S. 324 (Ont.C.A.) where it was held that once the guilty plea to the included offence is not accepted the only plea that is deemed to have been made is that of not guilty of the primary offence.

During a joint trial for murder the trial Judge may accept a plea of guilty to manslaughter from one or more of the accused, directing a verdict in respect of those accused at that stage and then continuing with the trial of the other accused: R. v. MacGregor (1981), 64 C.C.C. (2d) 353 (Ont. C.A.), leave to appeal to S.C.C. refused March 4, 1982.

An accused may plead guilty to and be convicted of second degree murder on an indictment for first degree murder without intervention of a jury: Bennett v. The Queen (1982), 70 C.C.C. (2d) 575, 142 D.L.R. (3d) 575, [1982] 2 S.C.R. 582 (7:0), and without re-electing trial by judge alone pursuant to s. 473: R. v. Luis (1989), 50 C.C.C. (3d) 398 (Ont. H.C.J.).

The proper practice, after an accused has been given in charge to the jury and wishes to plead guilty with prosecutorial consent pursuant to subsec. (4), is for the trial judge, in the absence of the jury, to consider the appropriateness of the plea and rule whether it is acceptable. If the plea is acceptable, then the jury may be discharged and the "court" now consisting of the judge alone may record the verdict of not guilty to the offence charged and guilty to the lesser offence admitted: R. v. Rowbotham, [1994] 2 S.C.R. 463, 90 C.C.C. (3d) 449, 30 C.R. (4th) 141.

It was not an abuse of process for the Crown to attach as a condition to its agreement to a plea of guilty by the accused to the included offence of manslaughter that the accused agree to a joint submission as to sentence. This subsection recognizes the Crown's discretion to refuse a plea of guilty to an offence other than the offence charged, and the exercise of this discretion will amount to an abuse of process only in exceptional cases: R. v. Conway (1989), 49 C.C.C. (3d) 289, [1989] 1 S.C.R. 1659, 70 C.R. (3d) 209.

Section 10(b) of the Charter mandates that the Crown or police, when offering a plea bargain to a detainee, tender that offer either to counsel or to the detainee while in the presence of counsel, unless the detainee has expressly waived the right to counsel: R. v. Burlingham, [1995] 2 S.C.R. 206, 97 C.C.C. (3d) 385, 38 C.R. (4th) 265.

The trial judge should, in most cases, give substantial weight to the decision of the prosecutor to accept a plea to the lesser offence, but the judge has a discretion to refuse to accept the guilty plea as where the facts relied upon support the full offence. This is not to say that the judge would be wrong in accepting a plea to the lesser offence although the facts supported the full offence where a case is made out that the result reflects a reasonable exercise of prosecutorial discretion having regard to the public interest in the effective administration of justice: R. v. Naraindeen (1990), 80 C.R. (3d) 66, 75 O.R. (2d) 120, 40 O.A.C. 291 (C.A.).

607. (1) An accused may plead the special pleas of

- (a) autrefois acquit,
- (b) autrefois convict, and
- (c) pardon.

(2) An accused who is charged with defamatory libel may plead in accordance with sections 611 and 612.

(3) The pleas of autrefois acquit, autrefois convict and pardon shall be disposed of by the judge without a jury before the accused is called on to plead further.

(4) When the pleas referred to in subsection (3) are disposed of against the accused, he may plead guilty or not guilty.

(5) Where an accused pleads autrefois acquit or autrefois convict, it is sufficient if he

- (a) states that he has been lawfully acquitted, convicted or discharged under subsection 736(1), as the case may be, of the offence charged in the count to which the plea relates; and
- (b) indicates the time and place of the acquittal, conviction or discharge under subsection 736(1).

NOTE: Subsection (5) amended 1995, c. 22, s. 10 (to come into force by order of the Governor in Council) by replacing the references to s. 736(1) with s. 730(1).

(6) A person who is alleged to have committed an act or omission outside Canada that is an offence in Canada by virtue of any of subsections 7(2) to (3.4) or subsection 7(3.7) or (3.71), and in respect of which that person has been tried and convicted outside Canada, may not plead autrefois convict with respect to a count that charges that offence if

- (a) at the trial outside Canada the person was not present and was not represented by counsel acting under the person's instructions, and
- (b) the person was not punished in accordance with the sentence imposed on conviction in respect of the act or omission, notwithstanding that the person is deemed by virtue of subsection 7(6) to have been tried and convicted in Canada in respect of the act or omission. R.S., c. C-34, s. 535; 1974-75-76, c. 105, s. 8; R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 126, c. 30 (3rd Supp.), s. 2.

Sections 608 to 610 assist in determining when the plea of autrefois is made out. Also see ss. 660 to 662 which define circumstances in which an offence is included in another. For notes respecting the “defence” of res judicata and issue estoppel see notes under s. 613. For abuse of process, see notes under s. 579. ## SYNOPSIS

This section sets out the “special pleas” which are recognized in Canadian law, viz., autrefois acquit, autrefois convict and pardon (subsec. (1)). Justification may be pleaded to a charge of defamatory libel (subsec. (2)).

The trial judge will decide whether such a plea should be accepted. If it is not, the accused will be called upon to plead guilty or not guilty (subsecs. (3) and (4)).

In pleading autrefois, an accused must state whether the earlier disposition was an acquittal, conviction or discharge and, further, where and when it occurred (subsec. (5)).

With respect to offences committed on an aircraft, an accused cannot plead autrefois convict with respect to an act or omission outside of Canada if: (a) the earlier trial was outside of Canada and the accused was not present and was not represented by counsel; and (b) the accused did not actually serve the sentence which was imposed (subsec. (6)).

ANNOTATIONS

[For notes on res judicata and issue estoppel, see s. 613.]

Availability where earlier charge withdrawn or quashed – In R. v. Karpinski (1957), 117 C.C.C. 241, [1957] S.C.R. 343, 25 C.R. 365 (4:1) the accused was charged with a Crown option offence. The information had been laid over six months after the offence allegedly occurred, however the Crown elected to proceed summarily. When the accused pleaded not guilty and raised the defence that the prosecution was statute barred the Magistrate permitted the Crown to withdraw the charge. In subsequent proceedings on an identical information upon which the Crown proceeded by way of indictment the special plea of autrefois acquit was refused. Kerwin, C.J.C., and Taschereau, J., held that the Crown had the right to change its election and to withdraw the information and the fact of the withdrawal did not amount to an acquittal when there was no adjudication by the Magistrate. Fauteux, and Abbott, JJ., held that as the information showed on its face that there could be no trial by way of summary conviction the judge had no jurisdiction either to take an election or receive a plea and both were void. Therefore the issue of autrefois acquit never arose. Cartwright, J., dissenting, held that s. 786 constituted a defence and that the withdrawal was equivalent to a dismissal which gave rise to a successful plea of autrefois acquit.

It was held, applying R. v. Karpinski, supra, that the plea of autrefois acquit was not available where the information upon which the Crown elected to proceed by way of summary conviction was quashed prior to plea for being laid outside the six-month limitation period. Further, the relaying of the charge and the Crown electing to proceed by indictment did not, in the circumstances, constitute an abuse of process: R. v. Belair (1988), 41 C.C.C. (3d) 329, 64 C.R. (3d) 179 (Ont. C.A.).

It was held in Petersen v. The Queen (1982), 69 C.C.C. (2d) 385, 30 C.R. (3d) 165, [1982] 2 S.C.R. 493 (7:0) that the summary conviction Court was free of jurisdictional error where the Judge dismissed the charge, after the accused had entered a plea, apparently because it was not shown that several previous adjournments which exceeded eight days had been with the accused’s consent as required by s. 803. In deciding he lacked jurisdiction to continue the trial the Judge simply made an error in law but as long as that disposition stood it was a bar to subsequent proceedings on any new information even where the Crown proceeds by way of indictment on the relaid charge. The plea of autrefois acquit must be given effect on the trial of this new charge.

The erroneous decision of a trial judge, following the accused's plea of not guilty, quashing charges which, though defective, could have been cured by an amendment under s. 601, is tantamount to an acquittal and gives rise to a valid plea of autrefois acquit should the Crown relay the same charges: R. v. Moore (1988), 41 C.C.C. (3d) 289, [1988] 5 W.W.R. 1, [1988] 1 S.C.R. 1097, 65 C.R. (3d) 1 (4:3).

However, where the Crown is permitted by the trial Judge to withdraw the charges following a plea of not guilty, the plea of autrefois acquit is not available in answer to a subsequent identical charge, at least where the withdrawal flowed from purely technical considerations before any evidence was adduced: R. v. Selhi (1985), 18 C.C.C. (3d) 131, 32 M.V.R. 299 (Sask. C.A.), affd (1990), 53 C.C.C. (3d) 576 (S.C.C.).

Nor is the plea available where the charge is quashed prior to plea for failure to comply with s. 581(3): R. v. Pretty (1989), 47 C.C.C. (3d) 70 (B.C.C.A.); R. v. D. (A.) (1990), 60 C.C.C. (3d) 407, 75 O.R. (2d) 762 (C.A.).

The quashing of the order to stand trial and the setting aside of the indictment is not an acquittal which will support a plea of autrefois acquit: R. v. Gould, [1984] 5 W.W.R. 430 (Sask. C.A.).

Availability where earlier charge stayed – The plea is not available where the proceedings were stayed by the Crown part way through the first trial: R. v. Tateham (1982), 70 C.C.C. (2d) 565 (B.C.C.A.).

A foreign acquittal may be the basis for a plea of autrefois acquit provided that the accused was in jeopardy at the time of the earlier proceeding, which proceeding terminated in an acquittal or an order tantamount to an acquittal. Thus the dismissal of an indictment by a United States magistrate who had no jurisdiction to try the accused which was the equivalent of a stay of proceedings could not give rise to a plea of autrefois when the accused was subsequently charged with the same offence in Canada: R. v. Frisbee (1989), 48 C.C.C. (3d) 388 (B.C.C.A.), leave to appeal to S.C.C. refused 50 C.C.C. (3d) vi.

Availability where no evidence offered on previous trial – On a trial before a provincial court judge, once the accused has been arraigned and pleaded to the charge he has been “given in charge” and placed in jeopardy and if the Crown, because of a refusal to grant an adjournment by the Court, elects then not to call any evidence, the disposition of the charge by dismissal will give rise to a successful plea of autrefois acquit to a subsequent identical charge. There is no requirement of a trial “on the merits” of the first charge. Generally the only requirements are that the previous dismissal must have been made by a Court of competent jurisdiction whose proceedings were free from jurisdictional error and which rendered judgment on the charge: R. v. Riddle, supra.

Requirement of identity of charges [Also see notes under s. 609] – Assuming that the plea of autrefois acquit was available to an accused on the basis of his acquittal of the same offence in the United States, the plea was not made out in this case. The accused must show that: (1), the matter is the same, in whole or in part and (2), that the new count is the same as at the first trial or be implicitly included in that of the first trial, either in law or on account of the evidence presented if it had been legally possible at that time to make the necessary amendments. If the differences between the charges at the first and second trials are such that it must be concluded that the charges are different in nature, the plea is not appropriate. However, the mere availability of a defence in the foreign jurisdiction which is not available in Canada would not prevent the principle of autrefois acquit from applying. In this case, however, the Canadian charges were limited to events which occurred in Canada and the conduct referred to in the charges was different: R. v. Van Rassel (1990), 53 C.C.C. (3d) 353, [1990] 1 S.C.R. 225 (7:0).

To maintain the plea of autrefois acquit the accused must prove that he was acquitted previously for the same offence before a court having proper jurisdiction: R. v. Suleyman Sanver (1973), 12 C.C.C. (2d) 105, 28 C.R.N.S.10 (N.B.S.C.App.Div.).

In R. v. Ko and Yip (1977), 36 C.C.C. (2d) 32, 38 C.R.N.S. 243 (B.C.C.A.), it was held that the trial Judge erred in rejecting a plea of autrefois convict where the second trial took place on an identical indictment charging the offence of trafficking narcotics. Substantially the same evidence was led at both trials although the Crown stated in his opening at the first trial that it only involved the delivery of a sample of the larger quantity of narcotics which was to be the subject of the second trial. It was held that while these two transactions could constitute two separate offences justifying two convictions this could only be done if the Crown alleged in the indictment or in particulars properly given, the acts alleged so that the two acts could be isolated. The mere accusation by the Crown that the first trial was limited to the sample would not suffice.

In determining the validity of a plea of autrefois acquit the true test is whether the offence charged is substantially identical to the offence of which the accused was previously acquitted. This may be compared with the common law defence of res judicata where the onus is upon the accused to show that in the former proceedings there was a determination of a question of fact in favour of the accused which is vital to the present offence: R. v. Feeley, McDermott and Wright, [1963] 1 C.C.C.254, 38 C.R.321 (Ont. C.A.). Affirmed as to the first issue (5:0) and as to the second issue (3:2), [1963] 3 C.C.C.201, 40 C.R.261 (S.C.C.).

Summary conviction proceedings – The procedure in s. 808 does not supplant the common law right to raise the special plea of autrefois acquit in summary conviction proceedings: R. v. Riddle (1979), 48 C.C.C. (2d) 365, [1980] 1 W.W.R. 592 (S.C.C.) (7:0).

New trial – On a new trial ordered by the Court of Appeal the accused may be permitted to enter one of the special pleas: R. v. Moore (1980), 52 C.C.C. (2d) 203, [1980] 4 W.W.R. 511 (B.C.C.A.).

EVIDENCE OF IDENTITY OF CHARGES.

608. Where an issue on a plea of autrefois acquit or autrefois convict is tried, the evidence and adjudication and the notes of the judge and official stenographer on the former trial and the record transmitted to the court pursuant to section 551 on the charge that is pending before that court are admissible in evidence to prove or to disprove the identity of the charges. R.S., c. C-34, s. 536.

CROSS-REFERENCES

Other provisions respecting the plea of autrefois are set out in ss. 607, 609 and 610. Thus, see the notes following s. 607.

SYNOPSIS

This section makes the record of the proceedings at the earlier trial, including the judge's notes, admissible in the determination of a plea of autrefois.

ANNOTATIONS

In R. v. Gee (1973), 14 C.C.C. (2d) 538 (Ont. C.A.) a Crown appeal was allowed where the trial Judge allowed the plea of autrefois convict after simply comparing the information on the first trial with the indictment presented on the second trial. It was held that the trial Judge erred in allowing the plea without receiving evidence pursuant to this section on the question whether the second charge and the charge on which the accused was convicted were found in the same transaction.

WHAT DETERMINES IDENTITY / Allowance of special plea in part.

609. (1) Where an issue on a plea of autrefois acquit or autrefois convict to a count is tried and it appears

- (a) that the matter on which the accused was given in charge on the former trial is the same in whole or in part as that on which it is proposed to give him in charge, and
- (b) that on the former trial, if all proper amendments had been made that might then have been made, he might have been convicted of all the offences of which he may be convicted on the count to which the plea of autrefois acquit or autrefois convict is pleaded, the judge shall give judgment discharging the accused in respect of that count.

(2) The following provisions apply where an issue on a plea of autrefois acquit or autrefois convict is tried:

- (a) where it appears that the accused might on the former trial have been convicted of an offence of which he may be convicted on the count in issue, the judge shall direct that the accused shall not be found guilty of any offence of which he might have been convicted on the former trial, and
- (b) where it appears that the accused may be convicted on the count in issue of an offence of which he could not have been convicted on the former trial, the accused shall plead guilty or not guilty with respect to that offence. R.S., c. C-34, s. 537.

CROSS-REFERENCES

Other provisions respecting the plea of autrefois are found in ss. 607, 608 and 610. Section 601 defines the circumstances in which an indictment may be amended. Sections 660 to 662 define cases in which one offence is included in another. Also see notes following s. 11(h) which defines a limited constitutional right against double jeopardy. For notes on res judicata and issue estoppel, see the notes following s. 613. Also see s. 12 which provides that where an act or omission is an offence under more than one act of Parliament unless a contrary intention appears, the person, although subject to proceedings under any of those acts, is not liable to be punished more than once for the same offence.

SYNOPSIS

This section establishes what is required to successfully advance a plea of autrefois.

An accused will be discharged if it is shown that: (a) the earlier trial was on a charge which was, in whole or in part, the same as the later one; and (b) he or she was in jeopardy of being convicted at the earlier trial of the offence now before the court.

ANNOTATIONS

On the second trial (this time for wounding), following an acquittal of attempted murder, the trial judge refused the special plea of autrefois acquit. In affirming this decision it was held in R. v. Rinnie, [1970] 3 C.C.C.218, 9 C.R.N.S.81 (Alta.S.C.App.Div.), that an included offence, which can only be found by definition of the crime, or by statutory prescription, or by the inclusion of apt words of description cognate to the offence, may be pleaded to by this special plea where there has been an acquittal of the principal offence. Because of the manner in which the indictment was worded on the first trial, however, wounding was not an included offence. Furthermore, an amendment to that indictment could only have been made under s. 601 and that section did not apply to the first trial as the indictment was not defective nor was there a variance between the indictment and the evidence adduced. An amendment to include a charge of wounding would have constituted the adding of a fresh count in the indictment rather than the curing of a defect.

In R. v. Plank (1986), 28 C.C.C. (3d) 386, 40 M.V.R. 298 (Ont. C.A.), it was held that the accused could rely on the plea of autrefois acquit to a charge of care or control of a motor vehicle while his blood alcohol level exceeded .08 as a result of his earlier acquittal of the driving offence. The judge at the first trial had properly refused to amend the information to charge the separate care or control offence. While the judge erred in failing to go on to consider whether the accused should be convicted of that offence pursuant to s. 662 as an included offence, since the accused was acquitted, that acquittal stood as a final disposition of both offences.

CIRCUMSTANCES OF AGGRAVATION / Effect of previous charge of murder or manslaughter / Previous charges of first degree murder / Effect of previous charge of infanticide or manslaughter.

610. (1) Where an indictment charges substantially the same offence as that charged in an indictment on which an accused was previously convicted or acquitted, but adds a statement of intention or circumstances of aggravation tending, if proved, to increase the punishment, the previous conviction or acquittal bars the subsequent indictment.

(2) A conviction or an acquittal on an indictment for murder bars a subsequent indictment for the same homicide charging it as manslaughter or infanticide, and a conviction or acquittal on an indictment for manslaughter or infanticide bars a subsequent indictment for the same homicide charging it as murder.

(3) A conviction or an acquittal on an indictment for first degree murder bars a subsequent indictment for the same homicide charging it as second degree murder, and a conviction or acquittal on an indictment for second degree murder bars a subsequent indictment for the same homicide charging it as first degree murder.

(4) A conviction or an acquittal on an indictment for infanticide bars a subsequent indictment for the same homicide charging it as manslaughter, and a conviction or acquittal on an indictment for manslaughter bars a subsequent indictment for the same homicide charging it as infanticide. R.S., c. C-34, s. 538; 1973-74, c. 38, s. 5; 1974-75-76, c. 105, s. 9.

CROSS-REFERENCES

Sections 607 to 609 also set out the circumstances in which the plea of autrefois is available and thus see notes under those sections for other cross-references.

SYNOPSIS

A plea of autrefois is available where the subsequent charge merely adds a statement of intention or circumstances of aggravation to the earlier charge (subsec. (1)).

A conviction or acquittal on a homicide related charge (i.e., murder, manslaughter or infanticide) bars further proceedings on a subsequent homicide related charge (subsecs. (2), (3) and (4)).

ANNOTATIONS

In R. v. Hemmingway, Ewert and Benford (1971), 5 C.C.C. (2d) 127 (B.C. Co. Ct.) the plea of autrefois convict for one accused was allowed to a charge of possession of narcotics for the purpose of trafficking, the accused having been previously convicted of simple possession. The accused was found on a boat in which there were quantities of narcotics, as well he had narcotics on his person. On the plea of guilty to the simple possession charge, no evidence was led as to the quantities found on the boat. It was held that to distinguish between the materials found on the accused's person and the materials found in the boat would be an unreal distinction. There was one possession of the prohibited substances at a specific time and place.

LIBEL, PLEA OF JUSTIFICATION / Where more than one sense alleged / Plea in writing / Reply.

611. (1) An accused who is charged with publishing a defamatory libel may plead that the defamatory matter published by him was true, and that it was for the public benefit that the matter should have been published in the manner in which and at the time when it was published.

(2) A plea that is made under subsection (1) may justify the defamatory matter in any sense in which it is specified in the count, or in the sense that the defamatory matter bears without being specified, or separate pleas justifying the defamatory matter in each sense may be pleaded separately to each count as if two libels had been charged in separate counts.

(3) A plea that is made under subsection (1) shall be in writing, and shall set out the particular facts by reason of which it is alleged to have been for the public good that the matter should have been published.

(4) The prosecutor may in his reply deny generally the truth of a plea that is made under this section. R.S., c. C-34, s. 539.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The offence of defamatory libel and procedure respecting the trial of that offence is set out in ss. 297 to 317. As to circumstances in which the plea of justification is necessary, see s. 612. Also note ss. 728 and 729 respecting the awarding of costs in libel cases.

SYNOPSIS

This section sets out the procedure with respect to a plea of justification on a charge of defamatory libel.

A plea of justification shall be in writing. The accused may plead that the matter published was true and that its publication was for the public benefit. The prosecutor is entitled to deny the truth of such a plea.

---

PLEA OF JUSTIFICATION NECESSARY / Not guilty, in addition / Effect of plea on punishment.

612. (1) The truth of the matters charged in an alleged libel shall not be inquired into in the absence of a plea of justification under section 611 unless the accused is charged with publishing the libel knowing it to be false, in which case evidence of the truth may be given to negative the allegation that the accused knew that the libel was false.

(2) The accused may, in addition to a plea that is made under section 611, plead not guilty and the pleas shall be inquired into together.

(3) Where a plea of justification is pleaded and the accused is convicted, the court may, in pronouncing sentence, consider whether the guilt of the accused is aggravated or mitigated by the plea. R.S., c. C-34, s. 540.

CROSS-REFERENCES

Provision for the plea that the defamatory matter published was true and that it was for the public benefit is set out in s. 611. The offence of defamatory libel and procedure for trial of the offence is generally set out in ss. 297 to 317. Also note ss. 728 and 729 respecting awarding of costs in libel cases.

SYNOPSIS

Unless an accused is charged with publishing a libel knowing it to be false, the truth of the alleged libel shall not be an issue, except when there has been a plea of justification.

On a charge of knowingly publishing false information, evidence as to the truth of the statements may be given to negative the allegation that the accused knew that the libel was false (subsec. (1)).

In addition to justification, a plea of not guilty may be entered (subsec. (2)).

The fact that the accused pleaded justification may be considered on the question of sentence (subsec. (3)).

PLEA OF NOT GUILTY.

613. Any ground of defence for which a special plea is not provided by this Act may be relied on under the plea of not guilty. R.S., c. C-34, s. 541.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The pleas which are permitted are defined in ss. 606 to 612. Most defences including the insanity defence are not specially pleaded but are simply raised under the plea of not guilty.

ANNOTATIONS

Res judicata* [Kienapple rule] – In Kienapple v. The Queen (1974), 15 C.C.C. (2d) 524, 26 C.R.N.S. 1 (5:4) (S.C.C.), Laskin, J., for the majority stated that:

... the term res judicata best expresses the theory of precluding multiple convictions for the same delict, although the matter is the basis of two separate offences. ... Where there has been a previous conviction of an accused, whether in a former trial or on one count of a multicount indictment, issue estoppel is obviously an inappropriate term to urge against a further conviction of another offence. So, too, would be autrefois convict in its strict connotation; hence the utility of res judicata.

The proper procedure where a case calls for the application of the rule precluding multiple convictions is for the trial judge to enter a conviction for the more serious charge and enter a conditional stay with respect to the alternative charge. This stay is conditional on the final disposition of the charge of which the accused has been convicted. If the accused's appeal from conviction arising from the same delict is eventually dismissed or the accused does not appeal within the specified time then the conditional stay becomes a permanent stay and is tantamount to a verdict of acquittal. If, however, the accused's appeal from conviction is successful, the conditional stay dissolves and the appellate court, while allowing the appeal, can make an order remitting to the trial judge the count which was conditionally stayed by reason of the application of the rule against multiple convictions, notwithstanding that no appeal was taken by the Crown from the conditionally stayed count: R. v. P.(D.W.) (1989), 49 C.C.C. (3d) 417, 70 C.R. (3d) 315, [1989] 5 W.W.R. 97 (S.C.C.) (5:0).

In R. v. Loyer and Blouin (1978), 40 C.C.C. (2d) 291, 85 D.L.R. (3d) 101, [1978] 2 S.C.R. 631 (9:0) the Court considered the proper application of the principle laid down in Kienapple v. The Queen, supra, and held, inter alia, that if the accused pleads guilty to the less serious charge the plea is held in abeyance pending the trial on the more serious charge.

In R. v. Prince (1986), 30 C.C.C. (3d) 35, 54 C.R. (3d) 97, [1986] 2 S.C.R. 480 (7:0), the court considered at length the application of the rule in Kienapple v. The Queen, supra. That judgment may be summarized as follows: The rule against multiple convictions applies only where there is a sufficient factual nexus between the charges and a legal nexus between the offences themselves. The requirement of a factual nexus will be satisfied usually if the same act of the accused grounds each of the charges. Subject to a clearly expressed Parliamentary intention to the contrary, the sufficient nexus between the offences will be satisfied if there is no additional and distinguishing element that goes to guilt contained in the offence for which a conviction is sought to be precluded by the rule against multiple convictions. As a corollary, where the offences are of unequal gravity the rule may bar a conviction for a lesser offence for which a conviction has been registered, provided that there are no distinct additional elements in the lesser offence.

There are at least three ways in which sufficient correspondence between elements can be found. First, an element may be a particularization of another element. Second, there may be more than one method, embodied in more than one offence, to prove a single delict. Third, Parliament, in effect, may deem a particular element to be satisfied by proof of a different nature, not necessarily because logic compels that conclusion, but because of social policy or inherent difficulties of proof. However, in applying these criteria, it is important not to frustrate the intent of Parliament or to lose sight of the overarching question whether the same cause, matter or delict underlies both charges. Thus, there exist offences aimed at a particular evil which, in certain circumstances, contain as an element the commission of some other offence directed toward an entirely different wrong and in which case the Kienapple case would have no application.

The requirement of sufficient proximity between the offences will be satisfied only if there is no additional and distinguishing element contained in the offence for which a conviction is sought to be precluded by this principle. Thus conviction of an accused for both break and enter and commit robbery and attempted murder was not barred by the rule in Kienapple: Wigman v. The Queen (1987), 33 C.C.C. (3d) 97, 56 C.R. (3d) 289, [1987] 1 S.C.R. 246 (6:0).

The doctrine precluding multiple convictions for the same cause or matter does not preclude an accused's conviction for conspiracy to traffic in narcotics and trafficking in narcotics although the latter transaction was one of several overt acts relied upon by the Crown to prove the conspiracy: Sheppe v. The Queen (1980), 51 C.C.C. (2d) 481, [1980] 2 S.C.R. 22, 15 C.R. (3d) 381, [1980] 5 W.W.R. 528 (7:0).

Issue estoppel – In Gushue v. The Queen (1980), 50 C.C.C. (2d) 417, [1980] 1 S.C.R. 798, 16 C.R. (3d) 39 (7:0) the accused had previously been acquitted of murder which had occurred in the course of a robbery. The accused testified that he did not shoot the deceased. He later confessed to the killing and was charged with robbery and perjury; and later, under s. 136, for giving contradictory evidence as the result of an admission under oath at the preliminary hearing. The Court held that issue estoppel is available in criminal proceedings in Canada (unlike in Britain: D.P.P. v. Humphreys, [1976] 2 All E.R. 497 (H.L.)) but the doctrine did not apply in this case. As to the s. 124 charge and the perjury charge it was held that unless the subsequent prosecution is an attempt by the Crown to retry the accused on the original charge then the preferable policy is to exclude issue estoppel. That was not the case here since, inter alia, the Crown could rely on the accused's own statements made subsequent to the acquittal. As to the robbery charge the Court held that only if a finding in the accused's favour on the relevant issue at the first trial was the only rational explanation of the jury's verdict can issue estoppel avail. In this case the Court from examining the charge to the jury considered that a finding that the accused did not participate in the robbery was not necessary for the acquittal on the murder charge.

In the subsequent case Grdic v. The Queen (1985), 19 C.C.C. (3d) 289, 46 C.R. (3d) 1, [1985] 4 W.W.R. 437 (S.C.C.) (5:4) the Court upheld the defence of issue estoppel to a perjury charge arising out of the accused's testimony at his own trial on a motor vehicle offence of which he was acquitted. An acquittal even if only by reason of the trier of fact having a reasonable doubt is equivalent to a finding of innocence, and any issue the resolution of which had to be in favour of the accused as a prerequisite to the acquittal is irrevocably deemed to have been found conclusively in his favour. While fraud, including perjury, is an exception to the application of issue estoppel, the Crown is not entitled to merely relitigate the issues at the first trial and therefore a subsequent perjury charge must be founded on additional evidence. This additional evidence must, however, be evidence which was not available to the Crown at the first trial using reasonable diligence. In this case, the accused had relied on the defence of alibi at the first trial and was acquitted. On the perjury charge the Crown called the same evidence and several other police officers to establish that the accused was driving the vehicle at the time of the motor vehicle offence. This evidence was available at the first trial by exercise of reasonable diligence and could have been called at the first trial in rebuttal.

In R. v. Wright, [1965] 3 C.C.C. 160, 50 D.L.R. (2d) 498 (Ont. C.A.) the accused had previously been acquitted of conspiracy to commit bribery and convicted of conspiracy to effect an unlawful purpose. It was held that the combined effect of these verdicts was to create an estoppel against the Crown with respect to charges for the substantive offences of bribery. In this case it was admitted by the Crown that there was only one conspiracy. As the jury found this was not a conspiracy to commit bribery but was a conspiracy to effect an unlawful purpose all the elements of the charges in the substantive counts were res judicata.

In R. v. Quinn (1905), 10 C.C.C. 412, 11 O.R. 242 (C.A.) the defence of res judicata was allowed to a charge of perjury following the accused's acquittal on a charge of personation. In that case the accused allegedly impersonated another at a polling station which gave rise to the personation charge and also at the same time swore an oath of identity, giving rise to the perjury charge. The majority held that while autrefois acquit was not available the common law defence of res judicata was a bar to conviction on the second charge. In this case the main issue was identity but the acquittal in the first case established that it was not the accused who had committed the personation and this had become res judicata as between the Crown and the accused. The issue of identity having been determined adversely to the Crown by the decision in the first case, while that decision stood it was not open to the Crown to have it tried a second time.

An acquittal on a charge of perjury did not give rise to issue estoppel to a charge of attempting to obstruct justice contrary to s. 139 although the giving of false evidence was common to both charges. The jury could well have acquitted on the perjury charge, although they found that the accused's testimony was false, because of the absence of corroboration which is required as a matter of law (s. 133) for a conviction for perjury, but not attempting to obstruct justice: R. v. Moore (1980), 52 C.C.C. (2d) 203, [1980] 4 W.W.R. 511 (B.C.C.A.).

In R. v. Carlson, [1970] 5 C.C.C. 147, [1970] 3 O.R. 213 (H.C.J.) the defence of res judicata was allowed on a charge of murder where the accused had previously been acquitted of another charge of murder. Both killings had taken place at the same time and place. There were only two witnesses to the killings, the accused and the principal Crown witness. The core of both trials was whether the jury believed the Crown witness as to the same facts. Where the jury had returned a verdict of not guilty on the first trial it was not open to the jury at the second trial to arrive at a different verdict on exactly the same issue, except for the identity of the victim.

A verdict in earlier proceedings gives rise to a plea of issue estoppel in subsequent proceedings if a necessary element of the offence tried first is also a necessary element of the offence that is the subject-matter of the subsequent proceedings and if it appears from the record or is explained by proper evidence that such necessary element was resolved in the first proceedings on a point of law or fact such as identification that was fundamental to its resolution: R. v. Casson (1976), 30 C.C.C. (2d) 506, [1976] 4 W.W.R. 561 (Alta. S.C. App. Div.). In this case a conviction for "over 80" was upheld despite an acquittal for impaired driving. The only issue determined in the accused's favour on the first trial was that of impairment. The situation would have been different had the trial Judge on the first trial found that the accused had consumed no alcohol.

Interlocutory rulings – The doctrine of res judicata does not operate so as to preclude the Crown from relitigating the admissibility of a confession held inadmissible in a previous trial of the accused on another charge, or ruled inadmissible at a preliminary inquiry: Duhamel v. The Queen (1984), 15 C.C.C. (3d) 491, [1985] 2 W.W.R. 251, 43 C.R. (3d) 1, [1984] 2 S.C.R. 555 (5:0).

Availability at preliminary inquiry – The defence of res judicata and the special pleas of autrefois are not available at the preliminary hearing stage: Schmidt v. The Queen (1984), 10 C.C.C. (3d) 564, 44 O.R. (2d) 777 (C.A.), affd on other grounds 33 C.C.C. (3d) 193, 58 C.R. (3d) 1, [1987] 1 S.C.R. 500.

Corporations

APPEARANCE BY ATTORNEY.

620. Every corporation against which an indictment is found shall appear and plead by counsel or agent. R.S., c. C-34, s. 548.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term “counsel” is defined in s. 2. Pursuant to s. 621, where an indictment has been found against a corporation, the clerk of the court is to cause notice of the indictment to be served on the corporation. Service on a corporation is effected pursuant to s. 703.2. Punishment of a corporation is by way of a fine pursuant to s. 719. Enforcement of fines on corporations is provided for in s. 720. The corporation also appears by counsel or agent at a preliminary inquiry pursuant to s. 538 and for trial by provincial court judge pursuant to s. 556 and indictable matters similarly with respect to summary conviction proceedings, see s. 800(3). Where the corporation fails to appear then the procedure is as set out in s. 622. Where the corporation appears and pleads to the indictment or a plea of not guilty is entered then the court shall proceed with the trial of an indictment pursuant to s. 623.

NOTICE TO CORPORATION / Contents of notice.

621. (1) The clerk of the court shall, where an indictment is found against a corporation, cause a notice of the indictment to be served upon the corporation.

(2) A notice of an indictment referred to in subsection (1) shall set out the nature and purport of the indictment and advise that, unless the corporation appears and pleads within seven days after service of the notice, a plea of not guilty will be entered for the accused by the court, and that the trial of the indictment will be proceeded with as though the corporation had appeared and pleaded. R.S., c. C-34, s. 549.

CROSS-REFERENCES

A corporation appears by counsel or agent pursuant to s. 620. Procedure where the corporation does not appear pursuant to the notice referred to in this section is set out in s. 622. Where the corporation appears and pleads or a plea of not guilty is entered pursuant to s. 622 then the trial proceeds as directed by s. 623. Upon conviction, the corporation is fined in accordance with s. 719. Service upon a corporation is effected pursuant to s. 703.2.

PROCEDURE ON DEFAULT OF APPEARANCE.

622. Where a corporation does not appear in the court in which an indictment is found and plead within the time specified in the notice referred to in section 621, the presiding judge may, on proof by affidavit of service of the notice, order the clerk of the court to enter a plea of not guilty on behalf of the corporation, and the plea has the same force and effect as if the corporation had appeared by its counsel or agent and pleaded that plea. R.S., c. C-34, s. 550.

CROSS-REFERENCES

A corporation appears and pleads by counsel or agent pursuant to s. 620. Service on a corporation is effected in accordance with s. 703.2. By virtue of s. 623, where a plea of not guilty is entered pursuant to this section, the court shall proceed with the trial. Upon conviction, a corporation is fined in accordance with the provisions of s. 719, which fine may be enforced pursuant to s. 720.

SYNOPSIS

This section provides that where a corporation being prosecuted on indictment fails to appear and plead within seven days of the service of the notice referred to in s. 621, on proof of service, a plea of not guilty will be entered on the corporation's behalf and the trial will proceed as if the corporation had appeared and pleaded.

---

TRIAL OF CORPORATION.

623. Where a corporation appears and pleads to an indictment or a plea of not guilty is entered by order of the court pursuant to section 622, the court shall proceed with the trial of the indictment and, where the corporation is convicted, section 719 applies. R.S., c. C-34, s. 551.

NOTE: Amended 1995, c. 22, s. 10 (to come into force by order of the Governor in Council) by replacing the reference to s. 719 with s. 735.

CROSS-REFERENCES

A corporation appears by counsel or agent by virtue of s. 620. After an indictment has been found against a corporation, the clerk of the court must cause a notice of indictment to be served on the corporation. Section 719 provides that a corporation is punished by way of a fine which may be in force pursuant to s. 720. Note s. 665(4) which provides that where the trial proceeds pursuant to this section but the corporation has not appeared or pleaded then the court may, whether or not the corporation was notified that a greater punishment would be sought by reason of a previous conviction, make inquiries and hear evidence with respect to previous convictions of the corporation and, if any such conviction is proved, may impose a greater punishment by reason thereof. Service on a corporation is effected in accordance with s. 703.2.

SYNOPSIS

This section notes that s. 719 applies to the trial of a corporation, regardless of whether the corporation appears and pleads or a plea is entered under s. 622. Section 719 provides for a fine in lieu of imprisonment for a corporation, with no maximum, except where otherwise provided, where the conviction is for an indictable offence.

Record of Proceedings

---

HOW RECORDED / Record of proceedings.

624. (1) It is sufficient, in making up the record of a conviction or acquittal on an indictment, to copy the indictment and the plea that was pleaded, without a formal caption or heading.

(2) The court shall keep a record of every arraignment and of proceedings subsequent to arraignment. R.S., c. C-34, s. 552.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term "indictment" is defined in s. 2. Note s. 667 which sets out the procedure for proving a previous conviction through a certificate of that conviction. Pursuant to s. 625, where it is necessary to draw up a formal record of proceedings in which the indictment has been amended, the record shall be drawn up in the form in which the indictment remained after the amendment without reference to the fact that the indictment was amended. The power to amend is found in s. 601.

SYNOPSIS

The formal record of a conviction or acquittal may be made by copying the indictment and plea and the same need not have a formal heading (subsec. (1)). A record is required to be kept of the arraignment and all subsequent proceedings (subsec. (2)).

---

FORM OF RECORD IN CASE OF AMENDMENT.

625. Where it is necessary to draw up a formal record in proceedings in which the indictment has been amended, the record shall be drawn up in the form in which the indictment remained after the amendment, without reference to the fact that the indictment was amended. R.S., c. C-34, s. 553.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term “indictment” is defined in s. 2. Provision for amendment of an indictment is made in ss. 590, 591 and, in particular, s. 601.

SYNOPSIS

This section provides that, if the indictment is amended, the formal record shall reflect only the amended version, and not the fact that there was an amendment.

---

Pre-hearing Conference

---

PRE-HEARING CONFERENCE / Mandatory pre-trial hearing for jury trials.

625.1. (1) Subject to subsection (2), on application by the prosecutor or the accused or on its own motion, the court before which, or the judge, provincial court judge or justice before whom, any proceedings are to be held may, with the consent of the prosecutor and the accused, order that a conference between the prosecutor and the accused or counsel for the accused, to be presided over by the court, judge, provincial court judge or justice, be held prior to the proceedings to consider such matters as will promote a fair and expeditious hearing.

(2) In any case to be tried with a jury, a judge of the court before which the accused is to be tried shall, prior to the trial, order that a conference between the prosecutor and the accused or counsel for the accused, to be presided over by a judge of that court, be held in accordance with the rules of court made under section 482 to consider such matters as will promote a fair and expeditious trial. R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 127.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms “provincial court judge”, “justice”, “prosecutor” are defined in s. 2. The rule making power referred to in this section is found in s. 482(3)(c).

SYNOPSIS

To facilitate the expeditious hearing of trials, a judge, with the consent of the parties, may order a pre-trial conference. Either the Crown, the defence or the judge may initiate the motion for such a meeting. Conferences are mandatory for all jury trials.

Courts have the authority to promulgate rules in this regard.

Juries

---

QUALIFICATION OF JURORS / No disqualification based on sex.

626. (1) A person who is qualified as a juror according to, and summoned as a juror in accordance with, the laws of a province is qualified to serve as a juror in criminal proceedings in that province.

(2) Notwithstanding any law of a province referred to in subsection (1), no person may be disqualified, exempted or excused from serving as a juror in criminal proceedings on the grounds of his or her sex. R.S., c. C-34, s. 554; 1972, c. 13, s. 46; R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 128.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The procedure for selecting a jury is found in ss. 629 to 644. Note s. 530 which provides for an order that the accused be tried by a jury which speaks the official language of the accused or speaks both official languages.

Note s. 670 which provides that judgment shall not be stayed or reversed after verdict on an indictment by reason of any irregularity in the summoning or empanelling of the jury or for the reason that a person who served on the jury was not returned as a juror by a sheriff or other officer. Under s. 671, no omission to observe the directions contained in any Act with respect to the qualification, the preparation of the jurors book, the selecting of jury lists or the drafting of panels from the jury lists is a ground for impeaching or quashing a verdict rendered in criminal proceedings.

SYNOPSIS

This section states that jurors in criminal proceedings are qualified if they are qualified and summoned as jurors under the laws of the relevant province. No person may be disqualified, exempted or excused as a juror on the grounds of gender.

ANNOTATIONS

None of ss. 15, 25 nor 27 of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, which refer respectively to equality and aboriginal rights and Canada's multicultural heritage, entitle an accused to a jury composed entirely or proportionately of persons belonging to the same race as the accused, in this case, native Indians: R. v. Kent, Sinclair and Gode (1986), 27 C.C.C. (3d) 405 (Man. C.A.).

While the exclusion of non-citizen permanent residents from the jury panel pursuant to provincial legislation may violate ss. 11(f) and 15 of the Charter, this violation was a reasonable limit under s. 1 of the Charter. The judicial function exercised by jurors is a public one and is part of the function of government in the country. The limit on the right to a representative jury arising out of the requirement of Canadian citizenship is therefore a reasonable one which can be demonstrably justified in a free and democratic society. Further, the provisions of provincial legislation making certain persons ineligible by reason of their occupation or the occupation of their spouse, an occupation related to the administration of justice, are not violations of the Charter. Even if exclusion from juries of persons engaged in law enforcement and lawyers and law students and the spouses of persons engaged in those occupations constitutes a limit on the right to a representative jury as guaranteed by the Charter, it is a reasonable limit. The exclusion of certain legally qualified medical practitioners and veterinarian surgeons in active practice and coroners is not a violation of the accused's rights. The requirement that juries be representative does not mean that the panels and the roles from which the panels are chosen must mirror exactly the makeup of the community. Physicians, veterinarians and coroners are declared ineligible because the uninterrupted performance of their work is considered to be in the public interest. The exclusion of these persons does not materially reduce the representatives of jury panels: R. v. Church of Scientology of Toronto (1992), 74 C.C.C. (3d) 327, 9 C.B.R. (2d) 232 (Ont. Ct. (Gen. Div.)).

CHALLENGING THE JURY PANEL / In writing / Form.

629. (1) The accused or the prosecutor may challenge the jury panel only on the ground of partiality, fraud or wilful misconduct on the part of the sheriff or other officer by whom the panel was returned.

(2) A challenge under subsection (1) shall be in writing and shall state that the person who returned the panel was partial or fraudulent or that he wilfully misconducted himself, as the case may be.

(3) A challenge under this section may be in Form 40. R.S., c. C-34, s. 558; R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 130.

CROSS-REFERENCES

This section sets out what is commonly referred to as the challenge to the array. The challenge is to be tried by the trial judge pursuant to s. 630. Procedure for challenging individual jurors is set out in ss. 631 to 641. Note s. 670 which provides that judgment shall not be stayed or reversed after verdict on an indictment by reason of any irregularity in the summoning or empanelling of the jury or for the reason that a person who served on the jury was not returned as a juror by a sheriff or other officer. Under s. 671, no omission to observe directions contained in any Act with respect to the qualification, selection, balloting or distribution of jurors, the preparation of the jurors book, the selecting of jury lists or the drafting of panels from the jury lists is a ground for impeaching or quashing a verdict rendered in criminal proceedings.

SYNOPSIS

Either the Crown or the accused can challenge the entire jury panel, otherwise known as the array, on the grounds that improper procedures were employed by the sheriff in preparing the jury list. Challenges must be in writing and allege either partiality, fraud or wilful misconduct (e.g., the deliberate exclusion of persons of a particular race or ethnic background).

ANNOTATIONS

In R. v. Diabo (1974), 27 C.C.C. (2d) 411, 30 C.R.N.S. 75 (Que. C.A.) it was held that a challenge to the array by an accused treaty Indian, based on the absence of persons from his reservation on the jury panel, was properly dismissed. The accused argued that the Jury Act (Que.) was inoperative by reason of the Canadian Bill of Rights prohibition of discrimination on the basis of race. Under the Jury Act only persons on the valuation role are eligible for jury duty and there are no valuation roles on the reservations. It was held that assuming the Jury Act was subject to the supervision of the Bill of Rights by virtue of its incorporation by reference in s. 626(1), the Act was not inoperative as the exclusion of Indians arose on the basis of geography not race.

In a similar case, R. v. Laforte (1975), 25 C.C.C. (2d) 75, 62 D.L.R. (3d) 86 (Man. C.A.), a challenge based on the small number of women and band Indians was held to have been properly dismissed there being no evidence of misconduct by the Sheriff in returning the panel.

When evidence came to light in the course of a trial of two native Indians that there was a policy of the sheriff to exclude Indians from all jury panels then the matter should have been investigated. Such deliberate exclusion would amount to partiality on the part of the sheriff within the meaning of this section. The trial judge not having investigated the matter, the appeal by the accused was allowed and a new trial ordered. The privative provisions of ss. 670 and 671 could not apply to preclude a new trial where there has been a failure to observe a fundamental principle of jury selection: R. v. Butler (1984), 63 C.C.C. (3d) 243, 3 C.R. (4th) 174 (B.C.C.A.).

In the absence of evidence to the contrary the doctrine of omnia praesumuntur applies to a statutory official such as the Sheriff in the performance of his statutory duties. The mere fact that there were no black persons on the panel summoned for a trial of two black accused on a charge of rape was not proof of partiality on the part of the Sheriff and the challenge was therefore dismissed: R. v. Bradley and Martin (No. 1) (1973), 23 C.R.N.S. 33 (Ont. H.C.J.). It was also held that the absence of black jurors in this case did not offend the Canadian Bill of Rights: R. v. Bradley and Martin (No. 2) (1973), 23 C.R.N.S. 39 (Ont. H.C.J.).

TRYING GROUND OF CHALLENGE.

630. Where a challenge is made under section 629, the judge shall determine whether the alleged ground of challenge is true or not, and where he is satisfied that the alleged ground of challenge is true, he shall direct a new panel to be returned. R.S., c. C-34, s. 559.

CROSS-REFERENCES

This section deals with trial of what is commonly referred to as a challenge to the array. The grounds upon which the jury panel may be challenged are set out in s. 629. Note, however, the saving provisions in ss. 670 to 672.

SYNOPSIS

This section provides that where a challenge to the jury panel is made under s. 629, the issue will be determined by the trial judge who shall, if he upholds the challenge, direct a new empanement.

Empanelling Jury

NAMES OF JURORS ON CARDS / To be placed in box / To be drawn by clerk of court / Juror to be sworn / Drawing additional names if necessary.

631. (1) The name of each juror on a panel of jurors that has been returned, his number on the panel and his address shall be written on a separate card, and all the cards shall, as far as possible, be of equal size.

(2) The sheriff or other officer who returns the panel shall deliver the cards referred to in subsection (1) to the clerk of the court who shall cause them to be placed together in a box to be provided for the purpose and to be thoroughly shaken together.

(3) Where

(a) the array of jurors is not challenged, or

(b) the array of jurors is challenged but the judge does not direct a new panel to be returned, the clerk of the court shall, in open court, draw out the cards referred to in subsection (1), one after another, and shall call out the name and number on each card as it is drawn, until the number of persons who have answered to their names is, in the opinion of the judge, sufficient to provide a full jury after allowing for orders to excuse, challenges and directions to stand by.

(4) The clerk of the court shall swear each member of the jury in the order in which the names of the jurors were drawn.

(5) Where the number of persons who answer to their names under subsection (3) is not sufficient to provide a full jury, the clerk of the court shall proceed in accordance with subsections (3) and (4) until twelve jurors are sworn. R.S. c. C-34, s. 560; R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 131; 1992, c. 41, s. 1.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term “clerk of the court” is defined in s. 2. The challenge to array referred to in this section is dealt with under ss. 629 and 630. Sections 632 to 642 set out the procedure for jury selection. The number of peremptory challenges which an accused may exercise, that is a challenge where the accused is not required to provide a reason, is set out in s. 633. The prosecutor may peremptorily challenge four jurors pursuant to s. 634(1) but may stand aside up to 48 jurors unless the presiding judge for special cause permits further stand asides. Challenge for cause is dealt with in accordance with ss. 638 to 641. Section 642 provides a procedure for summoning further jurors where the panel has been exhausted. Note ss. 670 to 672 which set out saving provisions respecting defects in the jury selection procedure; also consider the application of s. 686(1)(b)(iv). Note also s. 643 which provides that no omission to follow the directions of this section affects the validity of a proceeding.

SYNOPSIS

This section sets out the general procedure followed in a Jury.

Each juror’s name, number and address will be on a card in a box. The clerk of the court will then proceed as follows: (1) cards will be selected at random; (2) the name and number of each juror selected will be called out; (3) when the judge is satisfied that sufficient members of the panel have been called forward, the clerk will go through the names in the order that the cards were selected; (4) as each juror steps forward the parties will declare any challenges or, in the case of the Crown, whether it wishes to “stand aside” a person; (5) if both parties are content then the juror will be sworn and take a seat in the jury box; (6) if the initial number of persons is not sufficient to provide a full jury, the process will be repeated as many times as is necessary.

ANNOTATIONS

Subsec. (3) – The Judge should not depart from the procedure set out in this subsection by, for example, directing the clerk to only draw four cards at a time: R. v. Alward (1976), 32 C.C.C. (2d) 416, 73 D.L.R. (3d) 290 (N.B.S.C. App. Div.).

The practice whereby the judge addresses a few preliminary questions to the jury panel is not a substitute for a challenge for cause and the procedure laid down in s. 640(2) which requires the determination as to partiality to be made by two triers, not the trial judge: R. v. Guerin and Pimpare (1984), 13 C.C.C. (3d) 231 (Que. C.A.).

EXCUSING JURORS.

632. The judge may, at any time before the commencement of a trial, order that any juror be excused from jury service, whether or not the juror has been called pursuant to subsection 631(3) or any challenge has been made in relation to the juror, for reasons of

- (a) personal interest in the matter to be tried;
- (b) relationship with the judge, prosecutor, accused, counsel for the accused or a prospective witness; or
- (c) personal hardship or any other reasonable cause that, in the opinion of the judge, warrants that the juror be excused. R.S., c. C-34, s. 561; 1992, c. 41, s. 2.

CROSS-REFERENCES

Section 631 sets out the procedure for selecting the potential jury members. The number and order of challenges is prescribed by ss. 634 and 635 respectively. In addition to the power in the judge in this section to excuse jurors, s. 633 gives the judge the power [which formerly resided in the Crown] to stand jurors aside. Once the accused has been given in charge to the jury then the procedure for discharge of jurors is governed by s. 644. As to the procedure for replacement of jurors prior to commencement of the trial, see the notes under s. 644.

SYNOPSIS

This section codifies a practice which had developed at common law of permitting the judge to excuse potential jurors by reason of manifest bias or personal hardship. The practice at common law, which will no doubt be continued, was for the judge, prior to the commencement of jury selection, to direct a question or questions to the panel as a whole as to whether they had any connection to the parties.

ANNOTATIONS

The pre-screening procedure in which the trial judge directs questions to the jury panel to deal with cases of obvious partiality, as where the juror is related to the accused or a witness, is part of the trial and must be done in the presence of the accused: R. v. Barrow (1987), 38 C.C.C. (3d) 193, [1987] 2 S.C.R. 694, 45 D.L.R. (4th) 487 (5:2).

As this initial procedure goes only to such clear-cut cases of partiality, the consent of counsel is and can be presumed. Once out of obvious situations of non-indifference, the consent can no longer be presumed and the procedure must conform to that set out in the Criminal Code, including the procedure for challenge for cause. The trial judge has no right to take over the challenge process by deciding controversial questions of partiality. If there exist legitimate grounds for a challenge for cause, outside of the obvious cases, it must proceed in accordance with the Code: R. v. Sherratt (1991), 63 C.C.C. (3d) 193, [1991] 1 S.C.R. 509, 3 C.R. (4th) 129 (5:0), approving R. v. Guérin and Pimparé (1984), 13 C.C.C. (3d) 231 (Que. C.A.).

This provision does not allow the judge to delegate the power to excuse jurors. Furthermore, potential jurors should not be excused in private as the accused and the public must be able to know the reasons for any decision to excuse. Consequently, the trial judge erred when he asked the sheriff to pre-screen additional jurors in the absence of the accused when the jury panel had been exhausted: R. v. Mid Valley Tractor Sales Ltd. (1995), 101 C.C.C. (3d) 253 (N.B.C.A.).

STAND BY.

633. The judge may direct a juror whose name has been called pursuant to subsection 631(3) to stand by for reasons of personal hardship or any other reasonable cause. R.S., c. C-34, s. 562; 1974-75-76, c. 105, s. 10; 1992, c. 41, s. 2.

CROSS-REFERENCES

This provision is in addition to the power in the judge under s. 632 to excuse jurors. If after the panel is exhausted but a full jury has not been sworn, then jurors who have been ordered to stand by under this section are called back in accordance with the procedure set out in s. 641.

PEREMPTORY CHALLENGES / Maximum number / Where there are multiple counts / Where there are joint trials.

634. (1) A juror may be challenged peremptorily whether or not the juror has been challenged for cause pursuant to section 638.

(2) Subject to subsections (3) and (4), the prosecutor and the accused are each entitled to

- (a) twenty peremptory challenges, where the accused is charged with high treason or first degree murder;
- (b) twelve peremptory challenges, where the accused is charged with an offence, other than an offence mentioned in paragraph (a), for which the accused may be sentenced to imprisonment for a term exceeding five years; or
- (c) four peremptory challenges, where the accused is charged with an offence that is not referred to in paragraph (a) or (b).

(3) Where two or more counts in an indictment are to be tried together, the prosecutor and the accused are each entitled only to the number of peremptory challenges provided in respect of the count for which the greatest number of peremptory challenges is available.

- (4) Where two or more accused are to be tried together,
- (a) each accused is entitled to the number of peremptory challenges to which the accused would be entitled if tried alone; and
  - (b) the prosecutor is entitled to the total number of peremptory challenges available to all the accused. R.S., c. C-34, s. 563; 1992, c. 41, s. 2.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The order of challenges is set out in s. 635. The procedure for challenge for cause is governed by ss. 638 to 640. For jurors who have been ordered to stand by under s. 633, see s. 641. The procedure for selecting talesmen is set out in s. 642. Jurors may be excused by the trial judge in accordance with s. 632. Section 631 sets out the procedure for drawing the names of potential jurors.

SYNOPSIS

This section prescribes the number of peremptory challenges (i.e. challenges for which no reason need be given) for both the accused and the prosecutor. The number of challenges for the accused depends on the offence. Where the accused is charged with a number of offences, then the accused is only entitled to the number of challenges for the one offence which carries the largest number of challenges. The number of challenges for the prosecutor depends on the offence with which the accused is charged and the number of accused. Thus, for example, if two accused were charged with forgery and fraud under $1000 [maximum penalties 14 years and 2 years respectively] each accused would be entitled to 12 challenges and the prosecutor would be entitled to 24 challenges.

635. [Repealed. R.S.C. 1985, c. 2 (1st Supp.), s. 2.] (old provision)

ORDER OF CHALLENGES / Where there are joint trials.

635. (1) The accused shall be called on before the prosecutor is called on to declare whether the accused challenges the first juror, for cause or peremptorily, and thereafter the prosecutor and the accused shall be called on alternately, in respect of each of the remaining jurors, to first make such a declaration.

(2) Subsection (1) applies where two or more accused are to be tried together, but all of the accused shall exercise the challenges of the defence in turn, in the order in which their names appear in the indictment or in any other order agreed on by them,

- (a) in respect of the first juror, before the prosecutor; and
- (b) in respect of each of the remaining jurors, either before or after the prosecutor, in accordance with subsection (1). 1992, c. 41, s. 2.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The number of peremptory challenges is governed by s. 634. Procedure for challenge for cause is set out in ss. 638 to 640. Section 641 governs procedure for calling back jurors who have been stood by under s. 633.

SYNOPSIS

This section in effect prescribes that the accused and the prosecutor shall alternate in the exercise of challenges. Where there are two or more accused, then all of the accused will challenge at the same time. For example, the order of challenges will proceed as follows: Juror #1–Accused “A”, Accused “B”, Prosecutor; Juror #2–Prosecutor, Accused “A”, Accused “B”, etc. As to who of the accused must go first, this section provides that the accused will go in the order of the names as set out in the indictment or some other order as may be decided amongst the accused.

ANNOTATIONS

Where it is the accused who seeks to challenge jurors for cause, then he may be called upon to declare the challenge for cause first with respect to each juror. The Crown and defence would, however, alternate peremptory challenges: R. v. Aguilera (1993), 87 C.C.C. (3d) 474 (Ont. Ct. (Gen. Div.)).

636. [Repealed. 1992, c. 41, s. 2.]

637. [Repealed. 1992, c. 41, s. 2.]

CHALLENGE FOR CAUSE / No other ground / Coming into force / Idem.

638. (1) A prosecutor or an accused is entitled to any number of challenges on the ground that

- (a) the name of a juror does not appear on the panel, but no misnomer or misdescription is a ground of challenge where it appears to the court that the description given on the panel sufficiently designates the person referred to;
- (b) a juror is not indifferent between the Queen and the accused;
- (c) a juror has been convicted of an offence for which he was sentenced to death or to a term of imprisonment exceeding twelve months;
- (d) a juror is an alien;
- (e) a juror is physically unable to perform properly the duties of a juror; or

Editor's Note: Former subsection 567(1) [now subsection 638(1)] amended by 1977-78, c. 36, s. 5 by striking out "or" at the end of para. (d), adding "or" at the end of para. (e) and by adding the following new para. (f), which was to come into force in any province on a day fixed by proclamation; from June 20, 1985 by virtue of 1985 c. 19, s. 188 [now R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 188], para. ((f) is to come into force in any province in respect of summary conviction offences or indictable offences on a day fixed by proclamation declaring those sections in force in that province with respect to those offences.

- (f) a juror does not speak the official language of Canada that is the language of the accused or the official language of Canada in which the accused can best give testimony or both official languages of Canada, where the accused is required by reason of an order under section 530 to be tried before a judge and jury who speak the official language of Canada that is the language of the accused or the official language of Canada in which the accused can best give testimony or who speak both official languages of Canada, as the case may be.

Editor's Note: This paragraph proclaimed in force in New Brunswick, Yukon Territory and Northwest Territories, May 1, 1979; in Ontario, December 31, 1979; in Manitoba, July 1, 1982; in force in all other provinces with respect to summary conviction offences or indictable offences effective January 1, 1990.

(2) No challenge for cause shall be allowed on a ground not mentioned in subsection (1).

(3) Paragraph (1)(f) shall come into force in any of the Provinces of Quebec, Nova Scotia, British Columbia, Prince Edward Island, Saskatchewan, Alberta and Newfoundland, in respect of

- (a) offences punishable on summary conviction, or
- (b) indictable offences.

only on a day to be fixed in a proclamation declaring that paragraph to be in force in that Province with respect to those offences.

(4) Notwithstanding any other provision in this section, paragraph 638(1)(f) shall come into force on January 1, 1990

- (a) in respect of offences punishable on summary conviction, in any province in which that paragraph is not in force in respect of offences punishable on summary conviction immediately prior to that date; and
- (b) in respect of indictable offences, in any province in which that paragraph is not in force in respect of indictable offences immediately prior to that date. R.S., c. C-34, s. 567; 1977-78, c. 36, ss. 5, 6; R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 132; c. 31 (4th Supp.), s. 96.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms “prosecutor” and “Attorney General” are defined in s. 2. Section 639 provides that the judge may require that the challenge be put in writing and that such challenge may be in Form 41. Under s. 639(3), a challenge may be denied by the other party to the proceedings on the grounds that it is not true. Where the ground of the challenge is that the name of the juror does not appear on the panel, the issue is to be tried by the judge pursuant to s. 640. Any other ground of challenge for cause is tried in accordance with s. 640(2) by the two jurors who were last sworn or, if no jurors have been sworn, two persons present whom the court may appoint for the purpose. Procedure for trial of the issue is then as set out in s. 640(3) and (4). Procedure for challenge to the array is set out in ss. 629 and 630, for peremptory challenges by the accused in s. 633 and for peremptory challenge and stand aside by the prosecutor in s. 634. Note the saving provisions respecting jury selection in ss. 670 to 672.

SYNOPSIS

This section specifies the bases upon which individual jurors may be challenged for cause. The grounds for such a challenge are that: (a) the juror’s name does not appear on the list; (b) the juror is not unbiased; (c) the juror has previously been sentenced to death or to more than 12 months in prison; (d) the juror is an alien; (e) the juror is physically unable to properly carry out his or her duties; and (f) in certain provinces, the juror is not proficient in the official language of the accused (see s. 530).

ANNOTATIONS

In R. v. Hubbert (1975), 29 C.C.C. (2d) 279, 31 C.R.N.S. 27 (5:0) (Ont. C.A.) the Court considered at length the scope of the challenge for cause and the procedure to be followed. It was held that the presumption is that a juror not disqualified by statute will perform his duties in accordance with his oath. Accordingly, the purpose of a challenge of a prospective juror for cause is to eliminate from the jury those persons who come within the categories listed therein, not to find out what type of person the prospective juror is or to aid counsel in deciding whether to exercise his peremptory challenge. The trial Judge has a wide discretion in controlling the challenge process, to prevent its abuse, to ensure it is fair to the prospective juror as well as the accused and to provide that the trial is not unnecessarily prolonged by suspect challenges for cause. Possible grounds for a challenge for cause on the ground that a juror is not “indifferent between the Queen and the accused” would include prior association with the accused, direct connection with the prosecution and pre-trial publicity surrounding the case. As to the latter ground, in an extreme case the publication of the facts of a case can give rise to the degree of partiality that should lead to the right to challenge for cause, but the mere fact that the prospective juror has prior information about the case or even that he holds a tentative opinion about it does not render him partial.

Where counsel seeks to challenge for cause the challenge need not be in writing though in certain circumstances, as where the challenge may cause embarrassment to the prospective juror, it may be desirable and the trial Judge may require it.

Although the challenge itself may be simply in the words of subsec. (1) and Form 41 and need not be particularized, counsel must have a reason for the challenge, and the trial Judge must be made aware of it so that he may properly control the trial of the truth of the challenge. If counsel refuses to state the reason then the trial Judge may refuse to permit the trial of the issue. Where the challenge is taken under subsec. (1)(b) and the basis for the alleged non-indifference appears "far-fetched" the Judge may in his discretion require further elucidation or the tendering of evidence before permitting the trial of the issue. The other party may deny the challenge, in which case the issue is tried, admit the challenge, in which case the juror is excused, or make submissions that the ground for the challenge is not in law a valid ground of challenge for cause. For example, a challenge on the basis that the prospective juror and a prospective witness are of the same racial origin would not in law be a proper challenge.

On the trial of the issue the party challenging for cause may call the prospective juror as a witness without having to establish first through other evidence a prima facie case as to the truth of the challenge. The questioning of the juror is not strictly characterized as either direct or cross-examination, but it must be relevant, succinct and fair. The other party may then question the witness, or call his own witness and the challenging party may with leave call other reply evidence. The Judge in his discretion may allow counsel to address the jurors and may himself "charge" them in terms he considers sufficient. If the challenge is not found to be true either party may exercise the further right of peremptory challenge and the Crown may stand the juror aside.

An appeal by the accused to the Supreme Court of Canada was dismissed, 33 C.C.C. (2d) 207n, [1977] 2 S.C.R. 267, in brief oral reasons. However, the Court stated the procedures outlined by the Court of Appeal provides a useful guide for the trial Judges.

As the trial judge must be able to retain a reasonable degree of control over the challenge for cause procedure, there is some burden placed upon the challenger to ensure that sufficient information is provided to the trial judge so that the trial of the issue is contained within permissible bounds. There must, therefore, be an "air of reality" to the ground for the challenge. There must exist a realistic potential for the existence of partiality, on a ground sufficiently articulated in the application, before the challenger should be allowed to proceed. The right to challenge for cause is, however, an important one designed to ensure a fair trial and is not limited to extraordinary or exceptional cases. In cases of pre-trial publicity, the question is whether the particular publicity and notoriety of the accused could potentially have the effect of destroying the prospective juror's indifference: R. v. Sherratt (1991), 63 C.C.C. (3d) 193, [1991] 1 S.C.R. 509, 3 C.R. (4th) 129 (5:0).

In R. v. Zundel (1987), 31 C.C.C. (3d) 97, 58 O.R. (2d) 129 (C.A.), leave to appeal to S.C.C. refused 61 O.R. (2d) 588, the court considered the issue of challenge for cause in a case where there had been extensive pre-trial publicity, much of it adverse to the accused. The court held that the trial judge erred in failing to permit challenge for cause and ought to have advised defence counsel that while the questions which he proposed to ask were improper, some could be rephrased so as to be the basis for a proper challenge for cause. Further, there is no prerequisite to challenge for cause on the grounds of pre-trial publicity that there had been a particular notorious episode and the fact that the accused's own conduct attracted notoriety is not sufficient to disallow the challenged. The issue is whether the particular publicity and notoriety of the accused could potentially have the effect of destroying the prospective jurors' indifference between the Crown and the accused. Whether or not there is then any evidentiary connection between the publicity and the particular juror's lack of indifference is for the triers, not the judge. There is a denial of a fundamental right to a fair trial where the accused is not allowed to challenge any number of jurors for cause when the grounds of challenge are properly specified in accordance with this section.

Once the trial judge has ruled that the challenge may proceed, he still has a discretion whether and to what extent he will allow questioning of prospective jurors on the voir dire: R. v. Pirozzi (1987), 34 C.C.C. (3d) 376 (Ont. C.A.).

In view of the documented extent and intensity of racist beliefs in Canada and particularly in Metropolitan Toronto, the accused should have been permitted to ask prospective jurors whether their ability to judge the evidence in the case without partiality would be affected by the fact that the accused was black and the deceased was white. There was a realistic potential for existence of partiality. The inter-racial nature of the violence involved and the fact that the crime occurred in the course of a black accused's involvement in a criminal drug transaction combined to provide circumstances in which it was essential to the conduct of a fair trial that counsel be permitted to put the question: R. v. Parks (1993), 84 C.C.C. (3d) 353, 24 C.R. (4th) 81, 15 O.R. (3d) 324 (C.A.), leave to appeal to S.C.C. refused 87 C.C.C. (3d) vi, 28 C.R. (4th) 403n. Similarly: R. v. Willis (1994), 90 C.C.C. (3d) 350 (Ont. C.A.), leave to appeal to S.C.C. refused 87 C.C.C. (3d) vi, 28 C.R. (4th) 403n.

On the other hand, it was held in R. v. Williams (1994), 90 C.C.C. (3d) 194, 30 C.R. (4th) 277 (B.C.S.C.) that an accused was not entitled to challenge for cause merely because he was a native and notwithstanding evidence of widespread bias and prejudice in Canadian society toward native people. That evidence did not displace the presumption that jurors can be relied upon to do their duty and decide the case without regard to their personal bias and prejudices.

The trial judge properly rejected an application to question each juror as to whether their ability to judge the accused without bias, prejudice or partiality would be affected by the fact that the accused was selling cocaine on the day of the killing. Before counsel can ask questions of a juror as part of the challenge process, counsel must articulate to the trial judge sufficient particularity of the ground to show the existence of a realistic potential for the existence of partiality against the accused: R. v. Cameron (1995), 96 C.C.C. (3d) 346, 22 O.R. (3d) 65, 80 O.A.C. 58 (C.A.).

CHALLENGE IN WRITING / Form / Denial.

639. (1) Where a challenge is made on a ground mentioned in section 638, the court may, in its discretion, require the party that challenges to put the challenge in writing.

(2) A challenge may be in Form 41.

(3) A challenge may be denied by the other party to the proceedings on the ground that it is not true. R.S., c. C-34, s. 568.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The challenge for cause is tried in accordance with s. 640.

SYNOPSIS

This section provides that challenges for cause may be required by the court to be in writing and may be in Form 41. The other party is free to argue that the grounds given for the challenge are untrue.

OBJECTION THAT NAME NOT ON PANEL / Other grounds / If challenge not sustained, or if sustained / Disagreement of triers.

640. (1) Where the ground of a challenge is that the name of a juror does not appear on the panel, the issue shall be tried by the judge on the voir dire by the inspection of the panel, and such other evidence that the judge thinks fit to receive.

(2) Where the ground of a challenge is one not mentioned in subsection (1), the two jurors who were last sworn, or if no jurors have then been sworn, two persons present whom the court may appoint for the purpose, shall be sworn to determine whether the ground of challenge is true.

(3) Where the finding, pursuant to subsection (1) or (2) is that the ground of challenge is not true, the juror shall be sworn, but if the finding is that the ground of challenge is true, the juror shall not be sworn.

(4) Where, after what the court considers to be a reasonable time, the two persons who are sworn to determine whether the ground of challenge is true are unable to agree, the court may discharge them from giving a verdict and may direct two other persons to be sworn to determine whether the ground of challenge is true. R.S., c. C-34, s. 569.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The grounds for challenge for cause are set out in s. 638. Pursuant to s. 639, the judge may require that the challenge be in writing and may be in Form 41. Under s. 639(3), a challenge may be denied by the other party in the proceedings on the ground that it is not true. Procedure for challenge to array is set out in ss. 629 and 630. Peremptory challenges for the accused are set out in s. 633. Peremptory challenge and stand asides for the prosecutor are set out in s. 634. Note ss. 670 to 672 setting out certain saving provisions with respect to jury selection.

SYNOPSIS

This section sets out the procedures for dealing with challenges for cause (see s. 638).

A challenge based on the fact that the juror's name is not on the list is heard and determined by the trial judge (subsec. (1)).

Other challenges for cause are determined in a mini-trial. The issue will be tried by the last two jurors who have been sworn. If no jurors have been selected the judge will appoint two persons for this purpose (subsec. (2)).

If the two appointed persons are unable to agree on a decision within a reasonable time the judge may discharge them and appoint two new persons to act (subsec. (4)).

It should be noted that if a challenge for cause does not succeed a prospective juror may still be peremptorily challenged.

ANNOTATIONS

The proper procedure under subsec. (2) is that the two persons appointed by the court try the challenge for cause with respect to the first two jurors. It is only after two jurors have been sworn that they replace the appointed triers. Further, by virtue of subsec. (4), where the triers are unable to agree they are to be discharged and two other triers selected. It is not proper for the judge to simply excuse the juror when the triers are unable to agree: R. v. Brigham (1988), 44 C.C.C. (3d) 379 (Que. C.A.).

There is no requirement that the first two triers should initially be questioned to determine their impartiality: R. v. English (1993), 84 C.C.C. (3d) 511, 111 Nfld. & P.E.I.R. 323 (Nfld. C.A.), leave to appeal to S.C.C. refused 87 C.C.C. (3d) vi, 120 Nfld. & P.E.I.R. 180n.

Once his challenge for cause is lost the challenger may still then exercise one of his remaining peremptory challenges against a prospective juror: Cloutier v. The Queen (1979), 48 C.C.C. (2d) 1, [1979] 2 S.C.R. 709, 12 C.R. (3d) 10.

CALLING JURORS WHO HAVE STOOD BY / Other jurors becoming available.

641. (1) Where a full jury has not been sworn and no names remain to be called, the names of those who have been directed to stand by shall be called again in the order in which their names were drawn and they shall be sworn, unless excused by the judge or challenged by the accused or the prosecutor.

(2) Where, before a juror is sworn pursuant to subsection (1), other jurors in the panel become available, the prosecutor may require the names of those jurors to be put into and drawn from the box in accordance with section 631, and those jurors shall be challenged, directed to stand by, excused or sworn, as the case may be, before the names of the jurors who were originally directed to stand by are called again. R.S., c. C-34, s. 570; 1992, c. 41, s. 3.

CROSS-REFERENCES

Jurors may be ordered to stand by for reasons of personal hardship or other reasonable cause by the judge under s. 633. Once the panel has been exhausted but a full jury has not been selected, then these jurors are subject to selection. They may, however, be excused by the judge under s. 632 and are subject to peremptory challenge in accordance with ss. 634 and 635 or challenge for cause in accordance with ss. 638 to 640. If after the stand by jurors have been exhausted and a full jury has not been selected, then talesmen may be obtained in accordance with s. 642.

SYNOPSIS

Under subsection (1), jurors who have been stood by under s. 633 are dealt with in the same manner as the other members of the panel except that the juror cannot be stood aside again. However, if prior to a previously stood by juror being sworn other members of the panel become available, then the prosecutor may ask that their names be drawn before the jurors who have been stood aside.

ANNOTATIONS

After a number of stand asides resulting in the exhaustion of the whole panel and with one jury vacancy remaining, instead of following the predecessor to this section, the court incorrectly proceeded under s. 642(1) with the result that it was held that the appellant was not tried by a lawfully constituted jury; the curative provision, s. 643, could not be applied to such a defect because the procedure constituted an omission to follow the procedure in s. 642 which authorizes the addition of talesmen only where a full jury cannot be provided in spite of compliance with the provisions of this Part, including s. 641: R. v. James, [1969] 1 C.C.C. 278, 64 W.W.R. 659 (B.C.C.A.).

SUMMONING OTHER JURORS WHEN PANEL EXHAUSTED / Orally / Adding names to panel.

642. (1) Where a full jury cannot be provided notwithstanding that the relevant provisions of this Part have been complied with, the court may, at the request of the prosecutor, order the sheriff or other proper officer forthwith to summon as many persons, whether qualified jurors or not, as the court directs for the purpose of providing a full jury.

(2) Jurors may be summoned under subsection (1) by word of mouth, if necessary.

(3) The names of the persons who are summoned under this section shall be added to the general panel for the purposes of the trial, and the same proceedings shall be taken with respect to calling and challenging those persons, excusing them and directing them to stand by as are provided in this Part with respect to the persons named in the original panel. R.S., c. C-34, s. 571; 1992, c. 41, s. 4.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term “prosecutor” is defined in s. 2. This section sets out a procedure for the summoning of talesmen where the jury panel has been exhausted.

SYNOPSIS

If the original panel has been exhausted and a full jury has not been selected the trial judge may, at the request of the Crown, direct the sheriff to summons other persons (known as “talesmen”) for jury service. In carrying out this order the sheriff may notify prospective jurors by word of mouth (e.g., by simply going out onto the streets adjacent to the court-house). Persons summoned in this fashion are added to the list and thereafter are dealt with in the normal way.

ANNOTATIONS

Subsection (1) requires that where the judge orders a tales he shall specify the number of persons the sheriff is to summon. Where that number has been exhausted and a full jury not yet selected, then before ordering that a further number of jurors be summoned the talesman added to the panel and directed by the Crown to stand by must be called again and sworn unless challenged: R. v. Rowbotham (1988), 41 C.C.C. (3d) 1, 63 C.R. (3d) 113, 25 O.A.C. 321 (C.A.).

WHO SHALL BE JURY / Same jury may try another issue by consent / Sections directory.

643. (1) The twelve jurors whose names are drawn and who are sworn in accordance with this Part shall be the jury to try the issues of the indictment, and the names of the jurors so drawn and sworn shall be kept apart until the jury gives its verdict or until it is discharged, whereupon the names shall be returned to the box as often as occasion arises, as long as an issue remains to be tried before a jury.

(2) The court may try an issue with the same jury in whole or in part that previously tried or was drawn to try another issue, without the jurors being sworn again, but if the prosecutor or the accused objects to any of the jurors or the court excuses any of the jurors, the court shall order those persons to withdraw and shall direct that the required number of names to make up a full jury be drawn and, subject to the provisions of this Part relating to challenges, orders to excuse and directions to stand by, the persons whose names are drawn shall be sworn.

(3) Failure to comply with the directions of this section or section 631, 635 or 641 does not affect the validity of a proceeding. R.S., c. C-34, s. 572; 1992, c. 41, s. 5.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms "prosecutor" and "indictment" are defined in s. 2. Sections 670 to 672 set out other saving provisions with respect to jury selection and other defects in the jury process. Also consider the application of s. 686(1)(b)(iv). A juror may be discharged pursuant to s. 644. Ordinarily jurors are not required to be sequestered until time for them to retire to consider their verdict pursuant to s. 647.

SYNOPSIS

A jury panel or list is often prepared for use in a number of trials. Local practice governs whether a juror will be available for service on more than one trial.

Subsection (1) provides that once a trial has concluded the members of the jury shall again be available to try other cases.

Subsection (2) permits the court, with the consent of the parties, to try another matter with all or some of the jurors who have already been sworn. In practice this provision is not utilized.

Subsection (3) provides that certain irregularities in the selection process will not affect the validity of the proceedings.

ANNOTATIONS

Subsec. (3) – This provision and the predecessor of s. 686(1)(b)(iii) were applied where, through inadvertence, the balance of the jury was selected from persons originally stood aside despite the fact there remained a member of the panel who had not yet been called: R. v. McLachlan (1923), 41 C.C.C. 249, 56 N.S.R. 413 (S.C.). Leave to appeal to P.C. 42 C.C.C. 249, [1924] 1 D.L.R. 1109.

Also see: R. v. James, [1969] 1 C.C.C. 278, 64 W.W.R. 659 (B.C.C.A.) noted under s. 641.

This subsection applies only to irregularities and has no application where the error is such that the accused has been deprived of a statutory right, or where the error deprived the accused of the right to a trial by a jury lawfully constituted. Thus it could not apply to a case where the trial judge, instead of following the procedure prescribed in s. 642 for summoning of talesmen, purported to continuously expand the jury panel by adding members with the result that those potential jurors who were directed by the Crown to stand by were never called again to be sworn, unless challenged: R. v. Rowbotham (1988), 41 C.C.C. (3d) 1, 63 C.R. (3d) 113, 25 O.A.C. 321 (Ont. C.A.).

DISCHARGE OF JUROR / Trial may continue.

644. (1) Where in the course of a trial the judge is satisfied that a juror should not, by reason of illness or other reasonable cause, continue to act, the judge may discharge the juror.

(2) Where in the course of a trial a member of the jury dies or is discharged pursuant to subsection (1), the jury shall, unless the judge otherwise directs and if the number of jurors is not reduced below ten, be deemed to remain properly constituted for all purposes of the trial and the trial shall proceed and a verdict may be given accordingly. R.S., c. C-34, s. 573; 1972, c. 13, s. 47; 1980-81-82-83, c. 47, s. 53.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The procedure for jury selection is set out in ss. 626 to 643. Ordinarily jurors are permitted to separate pursuant to s. 647.

SYNOPSIS

Subsection (1) permits a trial judge to discharge a juror who by reason of illness or other reasonable cause (e.g., lack of impartiality) is unable to continue to act.

A trial must commence with 12 jurors. However, a verdict can be rendered by as few as 10 (subsec. (2)). Less than this will result in a mistrial.

ANNOTATIONS

Grounds for discharge of juror – Where it appears that a juror might not be manifestly impartial there may be a cause for his discharge: R. v. Tsoumas (1973), 11 C.C.C. (2d) 344 (Ont. C.A.).

“Other reasonable cause” means any cause that the trial Judge deems reasonable to ensure a competent and impartial jury: R. v. Holcomb (1973), 12 C.C.C. (2d) 417 (N.B.S.C.App.Div.), affd 15 C.C.C. (2d) 239 (7:0) (S.C.C.).

It is not ground for discharge of a juror that he was previously convicted of a Crown option offence and fined. Although by virtue of provincial legislation, applicable to the proceedings under s. 626, such a person was not qualified to serve on the jury, the presence of such a person would not affect the validity of the verdict and such a record is not even grounds for a challenge for cause under s. 638(1)(c): R. v. Lessard (No. 2) (1986), 33 C.C.C. (3d) 561 (Que. S.C.).

In an unusual case, it was held that the trial judge erred in discharging a juror in the middle of their deliberations because the juror, according to the foreman, professed to have psychic powers and special gifts and would not deal with the arguments or discussions over the evidence. The juror denied the statements and her denial could not be rejected without some inquiry in which the accused had a vital interest and in which he had a right to participate by cross-examination and making representations. A suggestion that a juror had a special gift in assessing evidence was far from establishing cause for depriving the accused of his prima facie right to a verdict of 12 of his peers: R. v. Sophonow (No. 2) (1986), 25 C.C.C. (3d) 415 50 C.R. (3d) 193, [1986] 2 W.W.R. 481 (Man. C.A.), leave to appeal to S.C.C. refused C.C.C. loc. cit.

There would be serious consequences for the jury system if an accused were entitled to a mistrial as of right whenever there was an attempt to bribe a member of the jury. The test to be applied in determining whether or not the trial judge should continue the trial is whether there was a real danger that the accused's position had been prejudiced in the circumstances. The trial judge is in the best position to assess the impact on the jury of the bribery attempt. The judge will take into account the general atmosphere in which the trial took place, the specific circumstances of the case, what the judge had observed during the stages of the trial and the reactions of the members of the jury at the time of his comments on the incident. The judge is also in the best position to find a solution to neutralize the effect of the incident: R. v. Lessard (1992), 74 C.C.C. (3d) 552, [1992] R.J.Q. 1205 (C.A.).

Procedure – Where circumstances arise during the course of a trial requiring resort to this section the course to be followed lies in the discretion of the trial Judge after consideration of counsel's statements and any evidence there may be, and an appellate Court will not lightly interfere with the exercise of this discretion. The course of action, for example, whether or not to give an explanation for the discharge to the remaining jurors, must have regard for the fundamental necessity to avoid any significant risk of his decision resulting in a trial which is unfair or prejudicial to the accused or to the Crown: R. v. MacKay (1980), 53 C.C.C. (2d) 366, [1980] 6 W.W.R. 108 (B.C.C.A.).

Excusing a juror for reasons of illness or hardship cannot reasonably be said to have a bearing on the substantive conduct of the trial or on guilt or innocence of the accused which is fundamental and thus constitutes part of the trial so as to trigger the accused's right to be present as provided for in s. 650. Thus, neither a report by the sheriff to the trial judge nor the call to the judge by the juror's physician constituted part of the trial which required the presence of the accused. Nevertheless, due to the importance of the step in discharging the juror, it would be preferable for a trial judge to advise counsel, in court and in the presence of the accused, of the nature of the health or hardship problem and to invite counsel to make submissions: R. v. Chambers (1990), 59 C.C.C. (3d) 321, 80 C.R. (3d) 235, [1990] 2 S.C.R. 1293 (6:1).

Normally an inquiry into whether or not a juror should continue should take place in open court. The normal rules of the adversarial system, however, do not apply and counsel have no right to put questions directly to the juror. Counsel may suggest questions which the judge may put to the juror and then make submissions on the issue: R. v. Hanna (1993), 80 C.C.C. (3d) 289, 45 W.A.C. 42 (B.C.C.A.), leave to appeal to S.C.C. refused 91 C.C.C. (3d) vi.

The Judge has no power under this section to discharge a juror and commence the trial with less than 12 jurors where the accused has not yet been given in charge of the jury: Basarabas v. The Queen; Spek v. The Queen (1982), 2 C.C.C. (3d) 257, 31 C.R. (3d) 193, [1982] 2 S.C.R. 730 (7:0).

Where the accused have pleaded not guilty, the jury empanelled, and the accused placed in charge of the jury, then the proceedings have reached the stage of being "in the course of a trial" and a juror may be discharged under this section and the trial continued with 11 jurors: R. v. Andrews, Farrant and Kerr (1984), 13 C.C.C. (3d) 207, 41 C.R. (3d) 82 (B.C.C.A.); R. v. Richardson (1987), 39 C.C.C. (3d) 262 (N.S.C.A.); R. v. Varcoe (unreported, February 2, 1996, Ont. C.A.) [096/043/014-24 pp.].

The Court has the power, aside from this section, to discharge a juror prior to the selection of a complete jury and replace that juror where it is in the general interest of the administration of justice: R. v. Parker et al. (1981), 62 C.C.C. (2d) 161, 23 C.R. (3d) 282 (Ont. H.C.J.).

Until the trial has begun, this section does not apply and jurors can be replaced simply and easily in order to maintain a full jury. In this case, 12 members of the jury had been selected and the case adjourned to the following day. At that time, one of the jurors did not appear. The accused had not yet been put in the charge of the jury. Accordingly, it was open to the trial judge to order a number of the members of the full panel, who had not previously been either challenged or stood aside, to reattend so that a replacement juror could be chosen: R. v. Mohamed (1991), 64 C.C.C. (3d) 1 (B.C.C.A.).

Constitutional considerations – The right to a jury trial as guaranteed by s. 11(f) of the Charter is not the right as envisaged at common law or at the time of Confederation, namely a jury composed of 12 men. Thus, this section, which permits the trial judge to discharge up to two jurors, does not violate s. 11(f): R. v. Genest (1990), 61 C.C.C. (3d) 251, [1990] R.J.Q. 2387 (C.A.).

Trial

TRIAL CONTINUOUS / Adjournment / Formal adjournment unnecessary / Questions reserved for decision / Questions reserved for decision in a trial with a jury.

645. (1) The trial of an accused shall proceed continuously subject to adjournment by the court.

(2) The judge may adjourn the trial from time to time in the same sittings.

(3) No formal adjournment of trial or entry thereof is required.

(4) The judge, in any case tried without a jury, may reserve his final decision on any question raised at the trial, and his decision, when given, shall be deemed to have been given at the trial.

(5) In any case to be tried with a jury, the judge before whom an accused is or is to be tried has jurisdiction, before any juror on a panel of jurors is called pursuant to subsection 631(3) and in the absence of any such juror, to deal with any matter that would ordinarily or necessarily be dealt with in the absence of the jury after it has been sworn. R.S., c. C-34, s. 574; R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 133.

CROSS-REFERENCES

Under s. 474, the trial may be adjourned where panel of jurors was not summoned for the sittings of the court. Under s. 475, the trial may proceed in the absence of the accused where the accused has absconded in the course of the trial. Discharge of jurors is governed by s. 644. Jurors are ordinarily permitted to separate by virtue of s. 647 until they have retired to consider their verdict. It is an offence under s. 648 to publish information regarding any portion of the trial at which the jury is not present where the jury has not been sequestered. Under s. 650, the accused is to be present during the whole of his trial subject to certain narrow exceptions in s. 650(2). The order of jury addresses is set out in s. 651. In s. 652, the court may order that a view be taken outside the courtroom. Where the jury is unable to agree on its verdict then, pursuant to s. 653, the jury may be discharged. Pursuant to s. 654, the taking of the verdict of a jury and any proceeding incidental thereto is not invalid by reason only that it is done on a Sunday or on a holiday.

SYNOPSIS

This section provides that, subject to adjournments being granted from time to time, a trial shall proceed continuously.

In non-jury trials subsec. (4) permits a judge to reserve final judgment on a point. When reasons are delivered they are deemed to have been given at trial. In other words, the judge can decide a matter during the course of the trial with “reasons to follow”.

Subsection (5) allows the trial judge to deal with questions that would ordinarily be dealt with in the absence of the jury, before the jury is empanelled (e.g., a voir dire with respect to the admissibility of evidence). This facilitates the calling of evidence in a more orderly and continuous manner as the jury will not have to be excused to enable such matters to be decided.

ANNOTATIONS

When trial commences – The course of a trial commences when the members of the jury are sworn and the accused is given in charge of the jury: R. v. Emkeit and twelve others (1971), 3 C.C.C. (2d) 309, 14 C.R.N.S. 290 (Alta.S.C.App.Div.).

Adjournment [Also see notes under ss. 571 and 650] – Absent unconstitutional conduct, there will be no loss of jurisdiction when a trial court, acting on an indictment, fails to proceed at the time set for trial: Re Franklin and The Queen (1985), 18 C.C.C. (3d) 97, 45 C.R. (3d) 90, [1985] 1 S.C.R. 293 (7:0).

Chambers discussions – In R. v. Johnson (1977), 35 C.C.C. (2d) 439, 2 B.C.L.R. 193 (C.A.) the Court stated that the practice of counsel discussing certain aspects of the case in the Judge's Chambers during a jury trial should be discouraged. There may be exceptions but, if so, the substance of the discussion in Chambers should be reviewed in open Court and recorded and the assent of counsel should also appear on the record.

In R. v. Roy (1976), 32 C.C.C. (2d) 97 (Ont. C.A.) a conviction by a Judge alone was set aside where part way through the case the trial Judge invited counsel into his Chambers and suggested a range of sentence should the accused plead guilty to a lesser offence, an offer which the accused declined. A Judge sitting without a jury cannot initiate such discussions after having heard the evidence and still preserve the appearance of impartiality.

Grounds for declaring mistrial [Also see notes under s. 653] – In R. v. Browning (1976), 34 C.C.C. (2d) 200 (Ont. C.A.) it was held that the trial Judge did not err in failing to declare a mistrial where the Crown in cross-examination of a defence witness referred to an unproved threat by the accused on the deceased. The trial Judge had immediately told the jury that there was no evidence of such a threat.

The ruling of the trial Judge on such matters as to whether or not to declare a mistrial where police are seen talking to a Crown witness at a break, before the completion of his evidence, are within the trial Judge's discretion and are not subject to review by way of a prerogative writ: Re Stewart and Dalton and The Queen (1977), 36 C.C.C. (2d) 5 (Ont. C.A.).

Duty of trial judge to give reasons – While reasons are desirable, in the absence of a statutory or common law rule, they are not required and their absence does not raise a question of law, but an appellate Court may review the whole record to determine whether the trial Judge erred in a matter that could reasonably have affected his verdict: MacDonald v. The Queen (1976), 29 C.C.C. (2d) 257, 68 D.L.R. (3d) 649 (9:0) (S.C.C.). Also see: R. v. Burns, [1994] 1 S.C.R. 656, 89 C.C.C. (3d) 193, 29 C.R. (4th) 113 sub nom. R. v. B. (R.H.).

In R. v. Stewart (1976), 31 C.C.C. (2d) 497, [1977] 2 S.C.R. 748, 71 D.L.R. (3d) 449 (6:3) a Crown appeal from an acquittal by a Judge alone on a charge of murder was allowed where the Judge in his reasons, inter alia, failed to consider the large body of incriminating evidence and misdirected himself as to the manner in which the evidence was to be treated.

Where the record including the reasons for judgment discloses a lack of appreciation of relevant evidence and moreover, the complete disregard of such evidence then the appellate Court may intervene: Harper v. The Queen (1982), 65 C.C.C. (2d) 193, 40 N.R. 255 (S.C.C.) (6:1).

Following delivery of oral reasons the trial judge may not amend those reasons except to edit for punctuation and grammatical errors: R. v. Bowles and Danylak (1985), 21 C.C.C. (3d) 540 (Alta. C.A.).

Pre-trial motions [subsec. (5)] – Subject to s. 669.2, the judge hearing motions under this subsection is seized with the trial: R. v. Curtis (1991), 66 C.C.C. (3d) 156 (Ont. Ct. (Gen. Div.)).

Other notes – Even where there is no jury the evidence on a voir dire, unless so specifically consented to by the parties, is not a part of the trial evidence: R. v. Gauthier (1975), 27 C.C.C. (2d) 14, 33 C.R.N.S. 46 (6:2) (S.C.C.).

At least in the absence of objection by counsel the trial judge may permit jurors to take notes during the testimony. He also has a discretion to permit jurors to put questions to witnesses following conclusion of the witness' testimony: R. v. Andrade (1985), 18 C.C.C. (3d) 41 (Ont. C.A.).

TAKING EVIDENCE.

646. On the trial of an accused for an indictable offence, the evidence of the witnesses for the prosecutor and the accused and the addresses of the prosecutor and the accused or counsel for the accused by way of summing up shall be taken in accordance with the provisions of Part XVIII relating to the taking of evidence at preliminary inquiries. R.S., c. C-34, s. 575.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The section of Part XVIII referred to in this section is s. 540. In addition to the Canada Evidence Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. C-5, provisions of the Criminal Code itself deal with the admissibility of evidence. For example, s. 655 provides that counsel for an accused may admit any fact alleged against him for the purpose of dispensing with proof thereof. Section 657.1 provides a simple method for proof of ownership and value of property with respect to certain property offences. Proof of age where material may be proved under s. 658. Section 667 provides a means of proving previous convictions. Sections 709 to 714 provide for the taking of evidence on commission. Section 715 permits evidence taken on a previous proceeding, such as the preliminary inquiry, to be admitted. Under s. 715.1, in some circumstances a videotape in which the complainant describes the acts complained of may be admitted on the trial of certain sexual offences. For other notes respecting trial of sexual offences, see the notes after the offence charged or the notes under s. 150.1.

SYNOPSIS

This section states that the evidence of the witnesses for the prosecution and the defence and the addresses of the prosecution and the defence must be recorded in a trial by indictment in the same way in which they are recorded on a preliminary inquiry.

ANNOTATIONS

The provisions of this section are mandatory and the failure to record addresses by counsel will result in a new trial: R. v. Robillard, [1969] 4 C.C.C. 120, [1968] Que. Q.B. 255n (Que. C.A.).

SEPARATION OF JURORS / Keeping in charge / Non-compliance with subsection (2) / Empanelling new jury in certain cases / Refreshment and accommodation.

647. (1) The judge may, at any time before the jury retires to consider its verdict, permit the members of the jury to separate.

(2) Where permission to separate under subsection (1) cannot be given or is not given, the jury shall be kept under the charge of an officer of the court as the judge directs, and that officer shall prevent the jurors from communicating with anyone other than himself or another member of the jury without leave of the judge.

(3) Failure to comply with subsection (2) does not affect the validity of the proceedings.

(4) Where the fact that there has been a failure to comply with this section or section 648 is discovered before the verdict of the jury is returned, the judge may, if he considers that the failure to comply might lead to a miscarriage of justice, discharge the jury and

- (a) direct that the accused be tried with a new jury during the same session or sittings of the court; or
- (b) postpone the trial on such terms as justice may require.

(5) The judge shall direct the sheriff to provide the jurors who are sworn with suitable and sufficient refreshment, food and lodging while they are together until they have given their verdict. R.S., c. C-34, s. 576; 1972, c. 13, s. 48.

CROSS-REFERENCES

It is an offence under s. 648 to publish any information regarding any portion of the trial at which the jury is not present where the jury has not been sequestered, before the jury retires to consider its verdict. It is also an offence subject to limited exceptions for any member of the jury to disclose information relating to the proceedings of the jury when it was absent from the courtroom pursuant to s. 649. Under s. 652, the judge may order that a view be taken of any place, thing or person in accordance with s. 652. Where the jury is unable to agree on its verdict then the jury may be discharged under s. 653. A juror may be discharged in accordance with the provisions of s. 644.

SYNOPSIS

This section deals with the sequestering of the jury. Once they begin their deliberations the jurors will be in the charge of a court officer and will not be permitted to communicate with outside persons. Before this time the trial judge has a discretion to allow them to separate (subsecs. (1), (2)).

Where a failure to comply with the provisions of this section or that dealing with publication bans (see s. 648) is discovered before a verdict is returned, the trial judge can discharge the jury or postpone the trial and make such order as may be required (subsec. (4)). Subsection (5) provides for the food and lodging of the jurors.

ANNOTATIONS

Grounds for sequestration of jury – The decision of the trial Judge refusing to sequester the jury is discretionary and does not involve a question of law alone which the accused may appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada: Demeter and The Queen (1977), 34 C.C.C. (2d) 137, 75 D.L.R. (3d) 251 (9:0) (S.C.C.).

The fact that inflammatory newspaper articles are circulated in the district where the accused is to be tried does not afford grounds for setting aside the conviction if there is nothing in the record or the evidence to show that the members of the jury had any knowledge of the contents of such articles or that they did not give a free unbiased verdict: Koufis v. The King (1941), 76 C.C.C. 161, [1941] S.C.R. 481, [1941] 3 D.L.R. 657.

Proceedings concerning jury – Where there has been a potentially prejudicial communication to a juror the trial Judge should conduct an inquiry himself by personally examining the juror to determine whether the communication has affected the impartiality of the juror. This function cannot be delegated to some other official such as the sheriff. As well, counsel should be informed of the incident so that they can participate in the inquiry: R. v. Hertrich, Stewart and Skinner (1982), 67 C.C.C. (2d) 510, 137 D.L.R. (3d) 400 (Ont. C.A.), leave to appeal to S.C.C. refused 45 N.R. 629n. [Also see note of this case under s. 650, infra.]

In view of the importance of the step of excusing a juror, even on account of illness, it would be preferable for the trial judge to advise counsel, in court and in the presence of the accused, of the nature of the health or hardship problem and to invite counsel to make submissions if they wish to: R. v. Chambers, [1990] 6 W.W.R. 554 (S.C.C.).

Subsection (5) cannot reasonably be interpreted as permitting an unsworn constable to take a sequestered juror to a hotel bar for several drinks: R. v. Cameron (1991), 64 C.C.C. (3d) 96, 2 O.R. (3d) 633, 44 O.A.C. 278 (C.A.).

The duty of the sworn constables is to provide contact between a sequestered jury and the outside world and to make certain that no unauthorized persons have contact with the jury. It was unacceptable to allow unsworn constables and a police officer who was a relative of the deceased in a murder case, to dine with the jury which had been sequestered for their deliberations. It was also improper to allow an unsworn constable to take a sequestered jury to a hotel bar for several drinks. These incidents were so blatantly irregular that a new trial must be ordered, even in the absence of proof by the accused of actual prejudice: R. v. Cameron, supra.

Giving jury excerpts from Criminal Code and other written instructions – In R. v. Schimanowsky (1973), 15 C.C.C. (2d) 82, 25 C.R.N.S. 332 (Sask. C.A.) the Court disapproved the practice of giving the jury copies of the sections of the Criminal Code for their study and consideration during their deliberations. Folld R. v. Crothers (1978), 43 C.C.C. (2d) 27 (Sask. C.A.).

In R. v. Tennant and Naccarato (1975), 23 C.C.C. (2d) 80, 31 C.R.N.S. 1 (Ont. C.A.) it was held that where the jury requests portions of the Criminal Code it is within the Judge's discretion whether to accede to the request, a discretion which must be exercised with great care. If the Judge accedes to the request he should carefully instruct the jury of the limited use they may make of the copies, i.e., to help them remember the elements of the offence, and they are not to engage in their own interpretation of the sections but must take the law from the trial Judge.

The right of the trial judge to give the jury sections of the Criminal Code does not depend on a request from the jury and, depending on the circumstances, the trial judge may exercise his discretion and provide copies for use by the jury during their deliberations: R. v. Tuckey, Baynham and Walsh (1985), 20 C.C.C. (3d) 502, 46 C.R. (3d) 97 (Ont. C.A.).

It was held in R. v. Stanford (1975), 27 C.C.C. (2d) 520 (5:0) (Que. C.A.) that it is not only permissible but prudent for the Judge to give the jury portions of the Criminal Code where in his opinion such a procedure is necessary in order for the jury to properly follow his directions. In this case the jury had in fact been given an annotated copy of the Code but this was held to be an irregularity which did not lead to any prejudice. Crete, J.A., in a separate concurring opinion held that the practice of giving the jury copies of the Criminal Code should not be followed but in this case no substantial wrong was occasioned.

In R. v. Vawryk and Appleyard (1979), 46 C.C.C. (2d) 290, [1979] 3 W.W.R. 50 (Man. C.A.) (3:2) the majority of the Court held that where stringent safeguards are followed it might not be improper to give the jury typed portions of the Criminal Code but it was improper to direct the jury to the effect that they could decide what the provisions mean.

However, in the subsequent case of R. v. Decloedt and Widenmaier (1986), 28 C.C.C. (3d) 7 (Man. C.A.), one member of the court was of the view that the practice of giving the jury portions of the Criminal Code was to be discouraged.

The giving to the jury of memoranda containing portions of the Judge's charge, the evidence, or the Criminal Code is a dangerous procedure and should be adopted only in special circumstances and with great care: R. v. Wong (1978), 41 C.C.C. (2d) 196, [1978] 4 W.W.R. 468 (B.C.C.A.).

Procedure in answering jury questions generally – Where the trial Judge receives a question from the jury he should read it in open Court in the presence of the parties and give counsel an opportunity to make submissions in open Court before answering the question for the jury in open Court in the presence of the parties: R. v. Dunbar and Logan (1982), 68 C.C.C. (2d) 13, 28 C.R. (3d) 324 (Ont. C.A.). Folld: R. v. Hay (1982), 70 C.C.C. (2d) 286, 30 C.R. (3d) 37 (Sask. C.A.); R. v. Parnell (1983), 9 C.C.C. (3d) 353 (Ont. C.A.), leave to appeal to S.C.C. refused C.C.C. loc. cit.

Questions from the jury require careful consideration and must be clearly, correctly and comprehensively answered. The question presented by the jury gives the clearest possible indication of the particular problem that the jury is confronting and upon which it seeks further instructions. Even where the question relates to a matter that has been carefully reviewed in the main charge, it still must be answered in a complete, accurate and careful manner. The longer the delay between the question and the charge, the more important it will be that the recharge is correct and comprehensive. As a general rule, an error in the recharge on the question presented will not be saved by a correct charge which was given earlier: R. v. S.(W.D.), [1994] 3 S.C.R. 521, 93 C.C.C. (3d) 1, 34 C.R. (4th) 1.

It is open to the jury to withdraw a question and the trial judge may take the jury's verdict without having answered the question: R. v. Sit (1989), 47 C.C.C. (3d) 44, 31 O.A.C. 21 (C.A.).

Where the jury's question is unclear, the trial judge must take steps to clarify it, if necessary by questioning the jury to ascertain the nature of the difficulty. To avoid disclosure of the jury's deliberations, it may be necessary for the trial judge to ask leading questions: R. v. Mohamed (1991), 64 C.C.C. (3d) 1 (B.C.C.A.).

Once the jury has begun to deliberate, the Crown should not be permitted to adduce further evidence, even in answer to a question from the jury: R. v. Templeman (1994), 88 C.C.C. (3d) 254, 65 W.A.C. 76 (B.C.C.A.).

Right of jury to have evidence read back – A jury is entitled to have read to them excerpts of evidence upon which their recollection is not clear: R. v. Mace (1975), 25 C.C.C. (2d) 121 (Ont. C.A.).

While the jury is entitled to have read to them excerpts of the testimony in order to clarify the evidence on any point, it is not wrong for the trial judge to inform the jury that it was not possible to accede to their request to provide them with a transcript of the entire evidence. The judge should, however, remind the jury of their right to have portions of the evidence read back by the reporter or to have the matter clarified by the judge by reference to his notes: R. v. Andrade (1985), 18 C.C.C. (3d) 41 (Ont. C.A.).

The trial judge is required to assist the jury where they express concern about an area of the evidence and it is important that the jury not be misled as to the availability of that assistance in the form of reference to the trial judge's notes or the notes of the court reporter: R. v. Corriveau (1985), 19 C.C.C. (3d) 238 (Ont. C.A.).

Where the jury requests that the evidence of a witness be read back, it is incumbent upon the trial judge not to permit the jury to hear a part only of the evidence without also hearing those portions of the evidence of the witness which qualify the part read: Olbey v. The Queen (1979), 50 C.C.C. (2d) 257, 14 C.R. (3d) 44 (S.C.C.) (6:1) approving authorities such as R. v. Stewart and Johnson, [1969] 2 C.C.C. 244, 5 C.R.N.S. 75 (B.C.C.A.); R. v. Wydryk and Wilkie (1971), 5 C.C.C. (2d) 473, 17 C.R.N.S. 336 (B.C.C.A.) and R. v. Bell, Christiansen, Coolen and MacDonald (1973), 14 C.C.C. (2d) 225, 28 C.R.N.S. 55 (S.C. App. Div.).

Length of deliberations – Save in exceptional circumstances the jury should not be permitted to deliberate into the early morning hours and where such circumstances exist they should be fully set out on the record: R. v. Kulak (1979), 46 C.C.C. (2d) 30, 7 C.R. (3d) 304 (Ont. C.A.); R. v. Robertson (1979), 50 C.C.C. (2d) 127 (Ont. C.A.); R. v. Martin (1980), 53 C.C.C. (2d) 250 (Ont. C.A.); R. v. Owen (1983), 4 C.C.C. (3d) 538, 56 N.S.R. (2d) 541 (S.C. App. Div.); R. v. Mohamed (1991), 64 C.C.C. (3d) 1 (B.C.C.A.).

Effect of unauthorized publication or communication with jury [Also see notes under s. 649] – The Appeal Court will not interfere with the Judge's discretion under this subsection refusing a mistrial unless he has acted on a wrong principle: R. v. Demeter (1975), 25 C.C.C. (2d) 417, 10 O.R. (2d) 321 (C.A.).

Not every communication by a witness with a member of a jury will result in a mistrial. When such communication has taken place, but it is clear after inquiry that there is no real prejudice to the accused or the Crown, then a trial judge has the discretion to continue with the trial. Where the communication takes place after the jury has been sequestered to consider their verdict, there is a presumption of prejudice. However, where the communication takes place prior to the deliberations and thus the extent of the prejudice to the accused can be determined on a voir dire of the jurors and the offending witness, there is no such presumption: R. v. Horne (1987), 35 C.C.C. (3d) 427, 78 A.R. 144 (C.A.), leave to appeal to S.C.C. refused 36 C.C.C. (3d) vi.

RESTRICTION ON PUBLICATION / Offence / Definition of “newspaper”.

648. (1) Where permission to separate is given to members of a jury under subsection 647(1), no information regarding any portion of the trial at which the jury is not present shall be published, after the permission is granted, in any newspaper or broadcast before the jury retires to consider its verdict.

(2) Every one who fails to comply with subsection (1) is guilty of an offence punishable on summary conviction.

(3) In this section, “newspaper” has the same meaning as in section 297. 1972, c. 13, s. 49.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The offence under subsection (2) is tried in accordance with Part XXVII by a summary conviction court defined in s. 785.

SYNOPSIS

Unless the jurors have been sequestered it is an offence, punishable on summary conviction, to publish any part of the trial that was heard in their absence.

ANNOTATIONS

A violation of this section must be shown to have resulted in a miscarriage of justice before an appellate Court will interfere with the jury’s verdict: R. v. Demeter (1975) 25 C.C.C. (2d) 417 at p. 448, 10 O.R. (2d) 321 at p. 352 (5:0) (Ont. C.A.).

It was doubtful whether an incident which occurred between the accused and a member of the public, after the jury had left the courtroom, during a break in the proceedings could constitute “any portion of the trial” so as to invoke the prohibition against publication in this section: R. v. Dobson (1985), 19 C.C.C. (3d) 93 (Ont. C.A.).

While the ban on publication imposed by this section lapses once the jury has retired to begin its deliberations the trial judge, who was a superior court judge, had power to ban publication of evidence admitted on a voir dire in the course of controlling the proceedings in his court. Thus in an extortion case an order was justified in the public interest prohibiting publication of evidence which would identify persons involved with the accused, persons who might be potential blackmail victims or persons who were simply accidentally involved: Toronto Sun Publishing Corp. v. A.-G. Alta., [1985] 6 W.W.R. 36 (Alta. C.A.).

DISCLOSURE OF JURY PROCEEDINGS.

649. Every member of a jury who, except for the purposes of

(a) an investigation of an alleged offence under subsection 139(2) in relation to a juror, or

(b) giving evidence in criminal proceedings in relation to such an offence, discloses any information relating to the proceedings of the jury when it was absent from the courtroom that was not subsequently disclosed in open court is guilty of an offence punishable on summary conviction. 1972, c. 13, s. 49.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The offence under this section is tried in accordance with Part XXVII by summary conviction court defined in s. 785. The limitation period is as set out in s. 786(2) and the penalty is as set out in s. 787(1).

SYNOPSIS

It is an offence, punishable on summary conviction, for a juror to disclose matters which arose in the jury room when the same were not disclosed in open court (e.g., what was discussed during the jury's deliberations). An exception exists where the disclosure is made for the purpose of an investigation into, or criminal proceedings on, a charge of obstructing justice (see s. 139(2)).

ANNOTATIONS

Evidence either from a juror or from a third party as to alleged impropriety during the jury's deliberations is inadmissible in an appellate court: R. v. Perras (1974), 18 C.C.C. (2d) 47, 48 D.L.R. (3d) 145 (5:0) (Sask.C.A.).

The slightest communication with jurors about the case they are trying has always been prohibited. Thus it constituted contempt of Court for the accused, a member of a firm of lawyers one of whom was defending a case, to attempt to elicit from a juror discharged under s. 644 what the other jurors thought of the case: R. v. Papineau (1980), 58 C.C.C. (2d) 72, 16 C.R. (3d) 56 sub nom. Re Papineau; R. v. Varin (Que. S.C.).

In an unusual case, R. v. Zacharias (1987), 39 C.C.C. (3d) 280, 19 B.C.L.R. (2d) 379 (C.A.), the court, while confirming the general rule that a jury verdict cannot be impeached by the testimony of jurors, admitted such evidence on appeal where it had been disclosed in the course of an investigation permitted by para. (a). The court noted that while questions about the jury's deliberations, as opposed to those about an allegation of an attempt by third parties to improperly influence jurors, were not authorized by the para. (a) exception, the jurors would have believed that they were entitled to answer the questions which had been put by representatives of the Attorney-General. In the result it was disclosed that some jurors changed their vote to guilty because of a misunderstanding as to when a mistrial would be declared if the jury was unable to agree on a verdict.

ACCUSED TO BE PRESENT / Video links / Exceptions / To make defence.

650. (1) Subject to subsections (1.1) and (2), an accused other than a corporation shall be present in court during the whole of the accused's trial.

(1.1) Where the court so orders, and where the prosecutor and the accused so agree, the accused may appear by counsel or by closed-circuit television or any other means that allow the court and the accused to engage in simultaneous visual and oral communication, for any part of the trial other than a part in which the evidence of a witness is taken.

(2) The court may

- (a) cause the accused to be removed and to be kept out of court, where he misconducts himself by interrupting the proceedings so that to continue the proceedings in his presence would not be feasible;
- (b) permit the accused to be out of court during the whole or any part of his trial on such conditions as the court considers proper; or
- (c) cause the accused to be removed and to be kept out of court during the trial of an issue as to whether the accused is unfit to stand trial, where it is satisfied that failure to do so might have an adverse effect on the mental condition of the accused.

(3) An accused is entitled, after the close of the case for the prosecution, to make full answer and defence personally or by counsel. R.S., c. C-34, s. 577; 1972, c. 13, s. 50; 1991, c. 43, s. 9; 1994, c. 44, s. 61.

CROSS-REFERENCES

A corporation appears by counsel or agent pursuant to s. 620. Sections 622 and 623 provide for trial of a corporation which does not appear by counsel or agent. Note s. 475 which provides that the trial may proceed in the absence of the accused where the accused has absconded in the course of the trial. Also note s. 486(2.1) which provides that in the case of trial of certain sexual offences specified therein, the judge may order that the complainant testify outside the courtroom or behind a screen or other device that would allow the complainant not to see the accused.

SYNOPSIS

Unless the court orders otherwise an accused, other than a corporation, is required to be present throughout the trial. If the trial judge considers it proper the accused may be permitted to be absent (e.g., during lengthy submissions on the admissibility of evidence) (subsec. (2)(b)).

An accused who interrupts the proceedings and interferes with the conduct of the trial may be removed from the court-room (subsec. (2)(a)). As well, a fitness hearing may be held in the absence of the accused if the judge feels that the accused's mental health might be adversely affected by his or her presence (subsec. (2)(c)).

Subsection (3) is a codification of the accused's right to make "full answer and defence" at the close of the Crown's case.

Provision is also made in subsec. (1.1) for appearance by counsel or through closed-circuit television or similar means.

ANNOTATIONS

Right of accused to be present [subsec. (1)] – Without the authority of his client, counsel cannot, even with permission from the Court, proceed in his absence: R. v. Page, [1969] 1 C.C.C. 90, 64 W.W.R. 637 (B.C.C.A.).

The right of an accused to be present in court during the whole of his trial as provided by this subsection includes the right to have direct knowledge of anything that transpires in the course of the trial which could involve his vital interests. This would include not only proceedings which are part of the normal trial process for determining the guilt or innocence of the accused but also proceedings conducted by the judge during the trial for the purpose of investigating matters which have occurred outside the trial but which may affect its fairness. If on the facts of a particular case the trial judge receives a communication from a juror and is uncertain whether the accused's vital interests are involved, the judge may, in the absence of the accused, investigate the matter. This would include the questioning of jurors and if the judge determines that the vital interests of the accused are not in issue that ends the matter, subject to a record being kept of the proceedings in order to determine whether the trial judge erred as regards there being uncertainty of what was in issue at the outset and as regards his final determination of the matter. However, at the moment that it appears that the accused's vital interests are in issue, as where it is an issue as to the partiality of one of the jurors, then the matter must be determined in the presence of the accused: Vezina v. The Queen; Cote v. The Queen (1986), 23 C.C.C. (3d) 481 (S.C.C.) (7:0).

It is not everything that occurs during a trial that is part of the trial for the purposes of this section. Thus, things may occur which cannot reasonably be considered part of the trial for the purposes of the principle because they cannot reasonably be said to have a bearing on the substantive conduct of the trial, or the issue of guilt or innocence. However, an accused is entitled to be present at his trial not only so that he can hear the case made out against him, and having heard it, have the opportunity of answering it, but also because his presence at all stages of his trial affords him the opportunity of acquiring first-hand knowledge of the proceedings leading to the eventual result of the trial. Thus, an accused was entitled to be present during an inquiry conducted by the trial judge concerning certain anonymous telephone calls made to members of the jury: R. v. Hertzrich, Stewart and Skinner (1982), 67 C.C.C. (2d) 510, 137 D.L.R. (3d) 400 (Ont. C.A.), leave to appeal to S.C.C. refused 45 N.R. 629n. Similarly: R. v. Fenton (1984), 11 C.C.C. (3d) 109 (B.C.C.A.).

This subsection is to be given expansive interpretation. The examination following arraignment of potential jurors by the trial judge to determine claims for exemptions on grounds including partiality is part of the trial at which the accused is entitled to be present: R. v. Barrow (1987), 38 C.C.C. (3d) 193, [1987] 2 S.C.R. 694, 61 C.R. (3d) 305, (5:2).

Where there has been non-compliance with subsec. (1) in that the accused has been improperly excluded from the trial the conviction cannot stand. The error being fundamental and going to the Court's jurisdiction the provision in s. 686(1)(b)(iii) cannot be applied: Meunier v. The Queen (1965), 48 C.R. 14, [1966] Que. Q.B. 94n., (C.A.), affd [1966] S.C.R. 399, 50 C.R. 75 (5:0); R. v. Grimba, supra. [However, see cases noted under s. 686(1)(b)(iv), infra.]

Discussion outside presence of accused [Also see notes under s. 647] – Communications between a sheriff's officer and the trial judge and then between the judge and a juror's doctor concerning the juror's illness are not part of trial and therefore the accused's rights were not violated although he was absent during those discussions: R. v. Chambers, [1990] 6 W.W.R. 554 (S.C.C.).

An accused is not present within the meaning of this section where the proceedings although conducted in court take place out of earshot of the accused and his counsel: R. v. Barrow, supra.

Removal of accused [subsec. (2)] – A trial Judge's belief that the accused might tailor his evidence if he heard the argument as to the admissibility of a portion of his testimony is not an adequate basis for his exclusion from the court-room and if something transpires which is part of the trial, during the time when the accused is improperly excluded then this subsection has been contravened and the conviction must be quashed. Matters such as the adducing of evidence, presentation of argument, ruling on evidentiary points and addresses to the jury all constitute part of the trial, or advance the case, and if the accused is improperly excluded during those parts of the trial, then this subsection has been contravened: R. v. Grimba (1980), 56 C.C.C. (2d) 570, 30 O.R. (2d) 545 (C.A.). Similarly, R. v. Dunbar and Logan (1982), 68 C.C.C. (2d) 13, 28 C.R. (3d) 324, 138 D.L.R. (3d) 221 (Ont. C.A.).

Where it becomes necessary to remove the accused under para. (a) and the accused is unrepresented by counsel then there is an obligation on the trial judge to cross-examine the Crown witnesses in an attempt to assist him: R. v. Pawliw (1985), 23 C.C.C. (3d) 14 (B.C.S.C.).

Paragraph (a) of subsec. (2) is not an unconstitutional infringement of the legal rights guaranteed by the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms: R. v. Pawliw, supra.

The accused's absence from court initially because of his refusal to attend court and subsequently pursuant to subsec. (2)(c), while his fitness to stand trial is determined, cannot vitiate his subsequent plea of guilty: R. v. Lefebvre (1989), 71 C.R. (3d) 213 (Que. C.A.), leave to appeal to S.C.C. refused November 23, 1989.

Subsection (2)(b) involves an element of waiver by the accused, and for there to be a waiver, the accused must be fully aware of his right to present in court and freely give up his right without pressure of any kind, including the pressure of custodial expediency: R. v. Fecteau, supra.

The accused may be permitted to be absent for the arraignment and plea: R. v. Butler (1993), 81 C.C.C. (3d) 248, 21 C.R. (4th) 27, 86 Man. R. (2d) 50 (Q.B.).

Right to interpreter – When an accused is deprived of his interpreter for the Judge's charge he in effect is denied the right to be present at his trial: R. v. Reale (1973), 13 C.C.C. (2d) 345, [1973] 3 O.R. 905 (C.A.). Affd (7:2) (1975), 22 C.C.C. (2d) 571, 58 D.L.R. (3d) 560 (S.C.C.).

However, accidental contravention of the right to an interpreter during the sentence proceedings does not vitiate the conviction itself following a trial which is otherwise untainted by jurisdictional error: R. v. Petrovic (1984), 13 C.C.C. (3d) 416, 41 C.R. (3d) 275, 10 D.L.R. (4th) 697 (Ont. C.A.), leave to appeal to S.C.C. refused January 31, 1985.

As a general rule, s. 14 of the Charter requires that the court appoint an interpreter when it becomes apparent to the judge that an accused is, for language reasons, having difficulty expressing himself or understanding the proceedings and that the assistance of an interpreter would be helpful; or the accused or counsel for the accused requests the services of an interpreter and the judge is of the opinion that the request is justified. There is, however, no requirement that the courts inform all accused appearing before them of the existence of the right to interpreter assistance. Where the accused at trial claims the Charter right to an interpreter, assistance should not be denied unless there is cogent and compelling evidence that the accused's request is not made in good faith but rather for an oblique motive. The quality of interpretation must be high but the standard is not one of perfection. The interpretation of the proceedings should be continuous, precise, impartial, competent and contemporaneous. Summaries of the testimony are unlikely to meet the general standard of interpretation required: R. v. Tran, [1994] 2 S.C.R. 951, 92 C.C.C. (3d) 218, 32 C.R. (4th) 34. [Also see notes of this case under s. 14 of the Charter of Rights, infra]

Crown's discretion to call witnesses – Unless some oblique motive is shown, Crown counsel's discretion to determine who shall be called as witnesses shall not be interfered with. Furthermore, he is not obliged to call for cross-examination by the accused all persons who may be able to offer some evidence in relation to the charge: Lemay v. The King (1951), 102 C.C.C.1, 14 C.R.89 (S.C.C.).

While there is no absolute duty on the prosecution to call witnesses whose evidence may be adverse to the prosecution or supportive of the defence, Crown counsel is under a duty to be fair and advise counsel for the accused in a timely manner of the existence of witnesses which would demonstrate the accused's innocence: Re Cunliffe and Law Society of British Columbia; Re Bledsoe and Law Society of British Columbia (1984), 13 C.C.C. (3d) 560, 40 C.R. (3d) 67, [1984] 4 W.W.R. 451 (B.C.C.A.).

Directed verdict – In Vander-Beek and Albright v. The Queen (1970), 2 C.C.C. (2d) 45, 12 C.R.N.S.168 (S.C.C.), at trial the motion of the two appellants for dismissal at the conclusion of the Crown's case on the ground that there was no evidence upon which they could be convicted was dismissed, and their immediately succeeding motion that they be acquitted on the ground that there was insufficient evidence for conviction was reserved by the Judge until he heard all of the evidence. Their counsel took no further part in the evidence, even when the third accused testified to raise a reasonable doubt on his part at the expense of his other two co-accused. The trial judge acquitted the third accused on his evidence and excluding his evidence as against the two co-accused, acquitted them. It was held (9:0), that the case was not concluded until all of the evidence was in and that all testimony heard was evidence for or against each accused. Further, per Laskin, J., the accused's closing of his case at the conclusion of the Crown's case does not allow a co-accused to separate his trial from the joint trial.

The application for a directed verdict must be determined before the accused is called upon to elect whether or not he intends to call evidence: R. v. Boissonneault (1986), 29 C.C.C. (3d) 345 (Ont. C.A.).

In Mezzo v. The Queen (1986), 27 C.C.C. (3d) 97, 52 C.R. (3d) 113, [1986] 1 S.C.R. 802 (7:2), the majority of the court reaffirmed its adherence to the statement of the test set out in United States of America v. Sheppard (1976), 30 C.C.C. (2d) 424, 70 D.L.R. (3d) 136, [1977] 2 S.C.R. 1067, 34 C.R.N.S. 207 [noted under s. 548] for determining whether the evidence is sufficient to justify the trial judge putting the case to the jury. That test, whether there is any evidence upon which a reasonable jury, properly instructed, could return a verdict of guilty, employs as the measure of the sufficiency the concept of a prima facie case, that is, a case containing evidence on all essential points of a charge which, if believed by the trier of fact and unanswered, would warrant a conviction. Questions of credibility and the quality, in the sense of the weight to be attached to the evidence, are for the jury to decide after appropriate directions from the trial judge.

If there is admissible evidence, whether direct or circumstantial, which if believed by a properly instructed jury acting reasonably would justify a conviction, then the case must be left to the jury. The trial judge on an application for a directed verdict is not entitled to weigh the evidence, test its quality or reliability, or draw inferences of fact from that evidence: R. v. Monteleone (1987), 35 C.C.C. (3d) 193, 59 C.R. (3d) 97, [1987] 2 S.C.R. 154 (7:0).

On a trial by judge and jury, where the trial judge rules that there is no evidence upon which a jury properly instructed may convict and so allows an application for a directed verdict of acquittal, then the trial judge should withdraw the case from the jury and enter the verdict of acquittal: R. v. Rowbotham, [1994] 2 S.C.R. 463, 90 C.C.C. (3d) 449, 30 C.R. (4th) 141.

Right to make full answer and defence generally – The seating and location of the accused is within the sole discretion of the trial judge and his decision refusing to permit the accused to sit outside the prisoner's dock will not be interfered with on appeal unless the decision manifestly precluded the accused from making full answer and defence: R. v. Faid (1981), 61 C.C.C. (2d) 28, [1981] 5 W.W.R. 349 (Alta. C.A.), revd on other grounds 2 C.C.C. (3d) 513, 33 C.R. (3d) 1, [1983] 1 S.C.R. 265.

In R. v. Lovie (1995), 100 C.C.C. (3d) 68, 24 O.R. (3d) 836, 83 O.A.C. 208 (C.A.), the accused refused to return to the witness-stand to complete his cross-examination. After several adjournments to permit examinations by psychiatrists, the trial judge rejected an application for a mistrial when the accused still refused to return to the witness-stand. In the circumstances, the trial judge could direct the jury that if they found the refusal was deliberate, or was based on symptoms of mental disorder that were simulated, the jury was entitled to consider that circumstance not only in assessing what weight they should give to the accused's testimony-in-chief, but they could also use it in assessing the accused's reliability as a witness. His refusal to complete the cross-examination could not, however, be considered evidence of consciousness of guilt.

Right to counsel – Where there is a conflict of interest between two accused the same counsel should not act for both, even at separate trials for the same offence: R. v. Depatie (1970), 2 C.C.C. (2d) 339, [1971] 1 O.R. 698 (C.A.).

A trial judge's order refusing to allow defence counsel to withdraw was, in its peculiar circumstances of delaying manoeuvres and the equivocal discharge, upheld: R. v. Spataro (1972), 7 C.C.C. (2d) 1, 26 D.L.R. (3d) 625 (3:2) (S.C.C.).

An accused has the right to make full answer and defence personally, and counsel cannot be forced upon an unwilling accused. Where an accused wishes to discharge counsel part way through his trial he must be permitted to do so: R. v. Bowles and Danylak (1985), 21 C.C.C. (3d) 540 (Alta. C.A.).

In R. v. Barrette (1976), 29 C.C.C. (2d) 189, 33 C.R.N.S. 377 (S.C.C.) the accused's case was called for trial some five months after that date was set on consent. His counsel improperly was not present and he was forced on and gave evidence. It was held (6:3) that even though the accused was treated with consideration by the Crown, the trial judge erred in visiting upon the accused the sins of his counsel's non-appearance and the congested court system particularly where the accused himself was without fault. While a decision for adjournment is in the judge's discretion, it is a judicial discretion which may be reviewed on appeal if it is based on reasons which are not well-founded in law. Accordingly, where it cannot be said on a review of the proceedings that the accused had a fair trial his conviction should be quashed and a new trial ordered.

An accused is entitled to an adjournment when, on the date set for trial, his counsel fails to appear, unless, on the facts of the specific case, the trial judge can reasonably infer that the failure was a deliberate tactic to which the accused was a party: R. v. Bruneau, [1983] 5 W.W.R. 89, 26 Alta. L.R. (2d) 117, 44 A.R. 289 (C.A.).

Representation of the accused by counsel is generally essential to a fair trial. Where the accused desires to be defended by counsel then, unless the accused has deliberately failed to retain counsel or has discharged counsel with the intent of delaying the process of the court, the court should afford the accused a reasonable opportunity to retain counsel: R. v. Smith (1989), 52 C.C.C. (3d) 90, 35 O.A.C. 301 (C.A.).

Where following the withdrawal of his counsel the accused was given over a month and a half and two adjournments in order to obtain a new lawyer, and on the date set for trial on the last occasion the court was satisfied that the accused had not retained a lawyer and was attempting to delay the trial, there was no error in refusing a further request for an adjournment: R. v. Manhas (1978), 17 C.R. (3d) 331 (B.C.C.A.), affd [1980] 1 S.C.R. 591, 17 C.R. (3d) 348n (7:0).

While the Constitution has not expressly constitutionalized the right of an indigent accused to be provided with counsel, in cases not falling within the provincial legal aid plans, ss. 7 and 11(d) of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, which guarantee an accused a fair trial in accordance with the principles of fundamental justice, require funded counsel to be provided if the accused wishes counsel, but cannot pay a lawyer, and representation of the accused by counsel is essential to a fair trial. Where a trial judge is confronted with a case where legal aid has been refused to an indigent accused in circumstances where representation by counsel is essential, then the judge may stay the proceedings until the necessary funding of counsel is available. An accused, however, who has the means to pay the costs of her defence but refuses to retain counsel may properly be considered to have chosen to defend herself and there would be no breach of the Charter if the trial proceeded without counsel being appointed: R. v. Rowbotham (1988), 41 C.C.C. (3d) 1, 63 C.R. (3d) 113 (Ont. C.A.).

An accused, entitled to receive the assistance of counsel in order to make full answer and defence, is entitled to effective assistance and it is generally recognized that a lawyer representing more than one accused in a joint criminal trial is potentially in a position of conflict such that he will not be able to provide effective assistance. In a case of joint representation of conflicting interests, defence counsel's basic duty of undivided loyalty and effective assistance is jeopardized and his performance may be adversely affected since he may refrain from doing certain things for one client by reason of his concern that his action might adversely affect his other client: R. v. Silvini (1991), 68 C.C.C. (3d) 251, 5 O.R. (3d) 545 (C.A.).

A provincial court judge has the power to appoint counsel in an appropriate case: Re White and The Queen (1976), 32 C.C.C. (2d) 478, 73 D.L.R. (3d) 275 (Alta. S.C.T.D.).

In principle, the accused's trial counsel is a compellable witness but it would only be in extraordinary circumstances that Crown counsel should, without prior warning, call defence counsel, with the result that counsel would be forced out of the case. Thus, in R. v. St. Laurent (1984), 11 C.C.C. (3d) 74, 38 C.R. (3d) 94, 7 D.L.R. (4th) 661 (Que. C.A.), a new trial was ordered where Crown counsel had insisted on calling defence counsel although it was totally unnecessary. In the circumstances justice was not seen to be done by the accused.

Although the accused had discharged his counsel and attempted to cross-examine the Crown witnesses himself, he should have been permitted to have his former counsel re-enter the case and complete cross-examination when the accused found he was unable to properly conduct the case: R. v. Long (1983), 9 C.C.C. (3d) 229 (Que. C.A.).

Assistance to unrepresented accused – Where an accused is not represented by counsel the extent to which the trial Judge intervenes on his behalf is a matter of the Judge's discretion. He is under no obligation to cross-examine on the accused's behalf: R. v. Thorpe (1976), 32 C.C.C. (2d) 46 (Man. C.A.).

However, in R. v. Huebschwerlen, [1965] 3 C.C.C. 212, 45 C.R. 393 (Y.T.C.A.) it was held that where an unrepresented accused has shown a total incapacity to effectively cross-examine any witness a duty was imposed on the trial Judge to take up the cross-examination and pursue the lines of defence indicated by the accused.

Consistent with his duty to ensure that an unrepresented accused has a fair trial, the judge is required within reason to provide assistance to him, to aid him in the proper conduct of his defence, and to guide him throughout the trial in such a way that his defence is brought out with its full force and effect. The judge is not, however, required to become the accused's advocate and, for example, search through the preliminary inquiry transcript for inconsistencies in the evidence of the Crown witnesses. The judge, having explained to the accused how he could cross-examine on the preliminary inquiry transcript, was not obliged to go any further: R. v. McGibbon (1988), 45 C.C.C. (3d) 334, 31 O.A.C. 10 (C.A.).

Moreover, it is not open to the trial judge to conduct an extensive cross-examination of the Crown witnesses as would be expected from defence counsel and which goes beyond merely assisting the accused: R. v. Turlon (1989), 49 C.C.C. (3d) 186, 70 C.R. (3d) 376, 32 O.A.C. 396 (C.A.).

Accused's right to call witnesses – The accused has an absolute right to call any Crown witness, who has previously testified and been cross-examined by him, as a defence witness: R. v. Cook (1960), 127 C.C.C. 287, 33 C.R. 126 (3:2) (Alta. S.C. App. Div.).

A trial judge should not make any order as to the sequence of the defence witnesses and where he indicated that if the accused did not precede his witnesses he would not consider his evidence too strongly a new trial was ordered: R. v. Smuk (1971), 3 C.C.C. (2d) 457, 15 C.R.N.S. 218 (B.C.C.A.). Nor can he simply direct the order in which the accused will testify: R. v. Angelantoni (1975), 28 C.C.C. (2d) 179, 31 C.R.N.S. 342 (Ont. C.A.).

In an earlier case, R. v. Archer (1972), 26 C.R.N.S. 225 (Ont. C.A.) the Court held that the trial Judge did not err in requiring the defence to call the accused first when the defence raised was alibi as it was to the accused's benefit that he do so.

In R. v. Sparre (1977), 37 C.C.C. (2d) 495 (Ont. Co. Ct.) the trial Judge considered R. v. Archer, supra, and held that no special rule applies where the defence is alibi and that defence counsel may call witnesses in any order that counsel sees fit and the accused need not be called first.

Right to make submissions – The failure of the trial Judge to invite an unrepresented accused to make submissions at the close of the evidence constitutes a deprivation of the right to make full answer and defence and will result in the conviction being set aside: Aucoin v. The Queen, [1979] 1 S.C.R. 554; R. v. Gronka (1979), 45 C.C.C. (2d) 573 (Ont. C.A.).

Surrebuttal evidence – Where the Crown in rebuttal led evidence raising a new issue for the first time at trial, the defence was permitted to call a witness in counter-rebuttal: R. v. Morgentaler (No. 3) (1973), 14 C.C.C. (2d) 453, 42 D.L.R. (3d) 441 (Que.Q.B.).

It is open to a Court to grant leave to the accused to call evidence in surrebuttal to reply evidence: R. v. Demeter (1975), 25 C.C.C. (2d) 417 at p. 473, 10 O.R. (2d) 321 at p. 377 (Ont. C.A.) (5:0).

Subsection (3), which gives the accused the right "after the close of the case for the prosecution" to make full answer and defence, must apply to evidence given by way of rebuttal as well as to that given during the Crown's case-in-chief. Accordingly, it was held in R. v. Ewert (1989), 52 C.C.C. (3d) 280 (B.C.C.A.), that the rules regarding the permissible scope of surrebuttal must be applied liberally in favour of the accused where the accused relied on the defence of insanity and evidence to rebut that defence was first given by the Crown in rebuttal.

Reopening the case – The fundamental principle, in determining whether the Crown should be permitted to reopen its case, is whether the accused will suffer prejudice in his defence and this will depend on the stage at which the application is made and the nature of the evidence to be called. Before the Crown has closed its case, the trial judge has considerable latitude to permit the Crown to recall a witness to correct earlier testimony. Once the Crown actually closes its case, the trial judge's discretion will be narrow with reopening being permitted to correct some oversight or inadvertent omission, provided that justice requires it and there will be no prejudice to the defence. Where the Crown has closed its case and the defence has started to answer the case, then the trial judge's discretion is very restricted and it will only be in the narrowest of circumstances that the Crown will be permitted to reopen its case: R. v. P. (M.B.), [1994] 1 S.C.R. 555, 89 C.C.C. (3d) 289, 29 C.R. (4th) 209.

Where during his address to the jury counsel for the accused, who had called no evidence, argued that the Crown had failed to prove the identity of the accused as the person referred to by the same name in the evidence of a Crown witness read in at trial, the trial judge had a discretion where the interest of justice so required and the accused was not in danger of being taken by surprise, to allow the Crown to reopen its case for the purpose of formal identification, an inference that the jury would have been entitled to assume in any event: R. v. Robillard (1975), 24 C.C.C. (2d) 36, 30 C.R.N.S. 351 (Que. C.A.) (2:1), affd 41 C.C.C. (2d) 1, 85 D.L.R. (3d) 449, [1978] 2 S.C.R. 728 (9:0).

A Judge sitting without a jury is not functus officio following a finding of guilt until he has imposed sentence or otherwise finally disposed of the case. Accordingly, he may in his discretion, following a finding of guilt, vacate that finding, reopen the case, and permit the accused to tender further evidence. However, this power should be exercised only in exceptional circumstances and where its exercise is clearly called for. It should be noted, however, that a Judge has no power to reopen a case following an acquittal since the proceeding has been terminated by such a verdict. Further, when sitting with a jury, under no circumstances has a Judge power to set aside the jury's verdict: R. v. Lessard (1976), 30 C.C.C. (2d) 70, 33 C.R.N.S. 16 (Ont. C.A.).

A judge does, however, have power to reopen an acquittal where the acquittal was not on the merits but solely on the basis of application of the rule against multiple convictions as set out in Kienapple v. The Queen (1974), 15 C.C.C. (2d) 524, 26 C.R.N.S. 1, [1975] 1 S.C.R. 729; R. v. Schmidt, Able and Medeiros (1982), 66 C.C.C. (2d) 366, 35 O.R. (2d) 784 (C.A.), leave to appeal to S.C.C. refused C.C.C. loc. cit., 42 N.R. 179n.

When faced with an application to reopen the defence case, the trial judge should first determine whether the proposed evidence is relevant to a material issue in the case. The trial judge must then consider the potential prejudice to the other parties should the judge permit the reopening of the evidence and the effect of reopening the evidence on the orderly and expeditious conduct of the trial: R. v. Hayward (1993), 86 C.C.C. (3d) 193, 67 O.A.C. 379 (C.A.).

Disclosure to defence – At least in the case of indictable offences, the Crown is required to produce to the defence all relevant information whether or not the Crown intends to introduce it into evidence and whether it is inculpatory or exculpatory. The Crown does have a discretion to withhold information and as to the timing of the disclosure where necessary to protect the identity of an informer or a continuing investigation. A discretion must also be exercised with respect to the relevance of information. The exercise of this discretion is reviewable by the trial judge who will be guided by the general principle that information ought not to be withheld if there is a reasonable possibility that the withholding of information will impair the right of the accused to make full answer and defence, unless the non-disclosure is justified by the law of privilege. Even then, the trial judge might conclude that the recognition of an existing privilege does not constitute a reasonable limit on the constitutional right to make full answer and defence and thus require disclosure in spite of the law of privilege. Initial disclosure should occur before the accused is called upon to elect the mode of trial or to plead. The obligation to disclose will be triggered by a request by or on behalf of the accused. In the case of an unrepresented accused, the trial judge should not take a plea unless satisfied that the accused has been informed of his right to disclosure: R. v. Stinchcombe, [1991] 3 S.C.R. 326, 68 C.C.C. (3d) 1, 9 C.R. (4th) 277 (7:0).

Where the Crown disputes the existence of material which the defence alleges is relevant, the defence must establish a basis which could enable the presiding judge to conclude that there is in existence further material which is potentially relevant. Relevance in this context means that there is a reasonable possibility of being useful to the accused in making full answer and defence. The existence of the disputed material must be sufficiently identified to reveal its nature and enable the judge to determine that it may meet the test for requiring disclosure as set out in R. v. Stinchcombe, [1991] 3 S.C.R. 326, 68 C.C.C. (3d) 1, 9 C.R. (4th) 277. In most cases, this preliminary issue can be determined on the basis of submissions. If the defence meets this preliminary test, then the Crown must justify a continuing refusal to disclose and is entitled to call relevant evidence on the issue: R. v. Chaplin, [1995] 1 S.C.R. 727, 96 C.C.C. (3d) 225, 36 C.R. (4th) 201.

There is no absolute right to have originals of documents or tape recordings produced. If the Crown has the originals, it should either produce them or allow them to be inspected. If, however, the originals are not available and if they have been in the Crown's possession then it should explain their absence. If the explanation is satisfactory, the Crown has discharged its obligations unless the conduct which resulted in the absence or loss of the original is itself such that it may warrant a remedy under the Charter: R. v. Stinchcombe, [1995] 1 S.C.R. 754, 96 C.C.C. (3d) 318, 38 C.R. (4th) 42.

The disclosure requirements upon the Crown do not put a duty on the Crown to obtain the prison records of a Crown witness. This was an ordinary criminal prosecution being conducted by a prosecutor in the department of the provincial Attorney General. The federal penitentiary authorities were strangers to the proceedings and there could not be any onus on the Crown to seek out such material which had nothing to do with the crime or the matters at issue in the case, but, at most, might bear on the credibility of a prospective Crown witness: R. v. Gingras (1992), 71 C.C.C. (3d) 53, 120 A.R. 300 (C.A.).

The manner of disclosure must be regarded as one of reviewable discretion on the part of Crown counsel. It ought, generally, to be accomplished by the delivery of photostatic copies of the materials required to be disclosed. In a case where there is reason not to make provision of photostatic copies, then defence counsel should be given the opportunity to make detailed notes. The duty rests upon Crown counsel to obtain from the police all material that should be properly disclosed to defence counsel. Where there is failure on the part of the Crown to make full disclosure, the proper remedy at trial is to order disclosure and not a stay of proceedings. It is generally only where the accused cannot receive a fair trial due to non-disclosure that a stay of proceedings should be ordered: R. v. V. (W.J.) (1992), 72 C.C.C. (3d) 97 (Nfld. C.A.).

Disclosure by Crown counsel is a primary basis upon which defence counsel must determine how the defence will be conducted and, in particular, whether or not the Crown's case will be made out. While there will always be cases where counsel may be taken by surprise in a criminal trial by some change or variation in the expected evidence, this surprise should not be caused by Crown counsel deliberately choosing not to carry out an undertaking to make prior to trial: R. v. Mitchell (1989), 70 C.R. (3d) 71, 33 O.A.C. 360 (C.A.).

The Crown is under a duty at common law to disclose to the defence all material evidence whether favourable to the accused or not. Failure to disclose may constitute grounds for appeal where it results in an unfair trial. Thus, on a charge of sexual assault, a new trial was ordered where the prosecution failed to disclose to the defence the existence of a witness who had questioned the complainant about sexual abuse. The complainant had denied being abused and, had the defence been aware of the statement, it might have been used to support the defence that the evidence of the complainant was fabricated: R. v. C. (M.H.) (1991), 63 C.C.C. (3d) 385 (S.C.C.) (5:0).

The Crown was required to disclose evidence in its possession which could rebut evidence of good character which the accused proposed to call. That evidence could reasonably be used by the accused in advancing a defence and in making a decision which could affect the conduct of the defence, such as whether or not to call evidence: R. v. Hutter (1993), 86 C.C.C. (3d) 81, 16 O.R. (3d) 145, 18 C.R.R. 225 (C.A.), leave to appeal to S.C.C. refused 87 C.C.C. (3d) vi, 72 O.A.C. 140n, 20 C.R.R. (2d) 192n.

Counsel for the accused is required to bring any lack of disclosure to the attention of the trial judge at the earliest opportunity. At least in the case of a trial by judge alone includes a lack of disclosure which comes to counsel's attention after conviction and before sentence. During this period, the trial judge is still seized of the trial and would have the discretion to reopen the trial proceedings or to order a mistrial: R. v. McAnespie, [1993] 4 S.C.R. 501, 86 C.C.C. (3d) 191n, 68 O.A.C. 185.

The principles of fundamental justice as guaranteed by the Charter reflect and accommodate the nature of the common law doctrine of abuse of process. Issues relating to disclosure by the Crown would normally fall within ss. 7 and 11(d) of the Charter. Therefore, a challenge based on non-disclosure will generally require a showing of actual prejudice to the ability to make full answer and defence. The accused must establish that the impugned non-disclosure has, on the balance of probabilities, prejudiced or had an adverse effect on the accused's ability to make full answer and defence. Such a determination requires a reasonable inquiry into the materiality of the non-disclosed information. The propriety of the Crown's conduct or intention are not necessarily relevant to whether or not the accused's right to a fair trial has been infringed. Once a violation is made out, the remedy will typically be a disclosure order and an adjournment. There may be some extreme cases, however, where the prejudice to the accused's ability to make full answer and defence or to the integrity of the justice system is irremediable. In those clearest of cases, a stay of proceedings will be appropriate. Other remedies would include permitting the defence to recall certain witnesses for examination or cross-examination, adjournments to permit the defence to subpoena additional witnesses or even, in extreme cases, declaring a mistrial. When considering the appropriate remedy, the court should consider whether the Crown's breach of its disclosure obligations has also violated fundamental principles underlying the community's sense of decency and fair play, and thereby caused prejudice to the integrity of the judicial system. For these purposes, among the most relevant considerations are the conduct and intention of the Crown. However, a demonstration of mala fides on the part of the Crown is not a necessary precondition to a finding of flagrant and intentional Crown misconduct which might lead to a stay of proceedings: R. v. O'Connor (1995), 103 C.C.C. (3d) 1, 44 C.R. (4th) 1, [1996] 2 W.W.R. 153 (S.C.C.) (5:3).

Therapeutic records in the possession of the Crown must be disclosed to the defence. Concerns relating to privacy or privilege disappear where the documents have fallen into the possession of the Crown and the Crown's well-established duty to disclose all information is not affected by the confidential nature of the therapeutic records. While the mere existence of therapeutic records is insufficient to establish the relevance of those records to the defence, the relevance of such records must be presumed where they are in the possession of the Crown. If the Crown found that they contained no relevant material, then the Crown would retain the opportunity to prove the irrelevance of the records on an application for disclosure by the defence. In cases involving the production of information which is in the hands of a third party, the court is concerned with the competing claims of a constitutional right to privacy in the information on the one hand and the right to full answer and defence on the other. Where the defence seeks production and disclosure of records in the possession of a third party, a two-stage procedure is involved. At the first stage in the production procedure, the onus is on the accused to satisfy the judge that the information is likely to be relevant. This is not an evidential burden requiring evidence and a voir dire in every case. To initiate the production procedure, the accused must bring a formal, written application supported by an affidavit setting out the specific grounds for production. A notice must be given to third parties in possession of the documents as well as to those persons who have a privacy interest in the records. The accused must also ensure that the custodian and the records are subpoenaed to ensure their attendance in the court. The initial application for disclosure should be made to the judge seized of the trial, but may be brought prior to the empanelling of the jury, at the same time that other motions are heard. In the context of production, the test of likely relevance requires that the judge be satisfied that there is a reasonable possibility that the information is logically probative to an issue at trial or the competence of a witness to testify. The issues at trial include not only the matters in issue in the case but also evidence relating to the credibility of witnesses and to the reliability of other evidence in the case. This burden on the accused should not be interpreted as an onerous one and it cannot be assumed that private therapeutic or counselling records are irrelevant to full answer and defence. Such records may be relevant in sexual assault cases because they contain information concerning the unfolding of events underlying the criminal complaint; they may reveal the use of a therapy which influenced the complainant's memory of the alleged offence or they may contain information that bears on the complainant's credibility including testimonial factors such as the quality of the complainant's perception of events at the time of the offence and her memory since. At the second stage, after the records have been produced to the court, the judge should examine the records to determine whether, and to what extent, they should be produced to the accused. In making this determination, the judge must examine and weigh the salutary and deleterious effects of a production order and determine whether a non-production order would constitute a reasonable limit on the ability of the accused to make full answer and defence. In some cases, it may be possible for the presiding judge to provide a judicial summary of the records to counsel, to enable them to assist in determining whether the material should be produced. In balancing the competing rights in question, the judge should consider the following factors: (1) the extent to which the record is necessary for the accused to make full answer and defence; (2) the probative value of the record in question; (3) the nature and extent of the reasonable expectation of privacy vested in that record; (4) whether production of the record would be premised upon any discriminatory belief or bias and (5) the potential prejudice to the complainant's dignity, privacy or security of the person that would be occasioned by a production of the record in question: R. v. O'Connor, supra.

Intervention by trial judge — While examination and cross-examination of witnesses are primarily the responsibility of counsel, the judge is not required to remain silent and may question witnesses to clear up ambiguities, explore some matter which the answers of a witness have left vague and he may put questions which should have been put to bring out some relevant matter, but which have been omitted. Generally speaking, the questions by the judge should be put after counsel has completed his examination, and the witnesses should not be cross-examined by the judge during their examination-in-chief. The judge also has a duty to intervene to clear the innocent. He has the duty to ensure that the accused is afforded the right to make full answer and defence, but he has the right and the duty to prevent the trial from being unnecessarily protracted by questions directed to irrelevant matters. This power must however be exercised with caution so as to leave unfettered the right of an accused to subject any witness' testimony to the test of cross-examination. The judge must not improperly curtail cross-examination that is relevant to the issues or the credibility of witnesses, but he has power to protect a witness from harassment by questions that are repetitious or are irrelevant: R. v. Valley (1986), 26 C.C.C. (3d) 207 (Ont. C.A.).

The trial judge may not question the accused or his witnesses to such an extent or in such a manner that he conveys the impression of placing his authority on the side of the prosecution or the impression of disbelief of the defence evidence: Brouillard v. The Queen (1985), 17 C.C.C. (3d) 193, 16 D.L.R. (4th) 447, [1985] 1 S.C.R. 39.

Mere discourtesy to counsel by the trial judge is not itself ground for quashing a conviction. Where, however, the trial judge suggests that counsel is acting in a professionally unethical manner for the purpose of misleading the jury, the integrity and good faith of the defence may be denigrated and the appearance of an unfair trial created: R. v. Turkiewicz, Barrow and MacNamara (1979), 50 C.C.C. (2d) 406, 103 D.L.R. (3d) 332, 26 O.R. (2d) 570 (Ont. C.A.).

SUMMING UP BY PROSECUTOR / Summing up by accused / Accused's right of reply / Prosecutor's right of reply where more than one accused.

651. (1) Where an accused, or any one of several accused being tried together, is defended by counsel, the counsel shall, at the end of the case for the prosecution, declare whether or not he intends to adduce evidence on behalf of the accused for whom he appears and if he does not announce his intention to adduce evidence, the prosecutor may address the jury by way of summing up.

(2) Counsel for the accused or the accused, where he is not defended by counsel, is entitled, if he thinks fit, to open the case for the defence, and after the conclusion of that opening to examine such witnesses as he thinks fit, and when all the evidence is concluded to sum up the evidence.

(3) Where no witnesses are examined for an accused, he or his counsel is entitled to address the jury last, but otherwise counsel for the prosecution is entitled to address the jury last.

(4) Where two or more accused are tried jointly and witnesses are examined for any of them, all the accused or their respective counsel are required to address the jury before it is addressed by the prosecutor. R.S., c. C-34, s. 578.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term "prosecutor" is defined in s. 2. For notes on the accused's right to counsel and the duty of the prosecution to call witnesses, see the notes following s. 650.

SYNOPSIS

This section contains the rules relating to the order of jury addresses.

By reason of subssecs. (1) and (3), if no defence evidence is called, the prosecutor shall address the jury first.

An accused who wishes to call evidence is entitled to make an opening statement to the jury (subsec. (2)).

Where an accused (or at least one of several accused) elects to call evidence, the Crown will address the jury last (subsec. (4)).

ANNOTATIONS

Opening addresses – The question whether defence counsel may make an opening statement immediately after Crown counsel's opening has been considered in a number of recent cases. The most restrictive view was taken in R. v. Vitale (1987), 40 C.C.C. (3d) 267 (Ont. Dist.Ct.), where it was held that defence counsel's only right to make an opening statement was as provided in this section, at the conclusion of the Crown's case if counsel intends to call evidence for the defence. In R. v. Edwards (1986), 2 W.C.B. (2d) 220 (Ont. H.C.J.), it was held that this section did not preclude defence counsel making an opening after Crown counsel's opening referring to the evidence counsel intended to call, provided that counsel undertook to call evidence. The most expansive view was taken in R. v. Barrow (1989), 48 C.C.C. (3d) 308, 91 N.S.R. (2d) 176 (S.C.), where it was held that counsel could make an opening statement after Crown counsel's opening whether or not counsel had decided to call evidence. If the defence does not intend to call evidence or is unwilling to declare his intention at that time then counsel can tell the jury what evidence he expects to elicit in cross-examination of the Crown witnesses.

Right to testify – The right to call witnesses and testify is not absolute. In exceptional cases where, despite efforts by the trial judge to avoid the inevitable, an accused still persists in disruptive conduct and abuse of his rights, then he can lose the right to testify and call witnesses: R. v. Fabrikant (1995), 97 C.C.C. (3d) 544, 39 C.R. (4th) 1, 67 Q.A.C. 268 (C.A.), leave to appeal to S.C.C. refused 98 C.C.C. (3d) vi.

Order of closing addresses – The order of addresses as prescribed by subsec. (3) does not offend the fundamental justice and fair hearing guarantees in ss. 7 and 11(d) of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms: R. v. Tzimopoulos (1986), 29 C.C.C. (3d) 304, 54 C.R. (3d) 1 (Ont. C.A.); R. v. Hutchinson (1995), 99 C.C.C. (3d) 88, 141 N.S.R. (2d) 258 (C.A.); R. v. Kerr (1995), 38 C.R. (4th) 58 (B.C.S.C.).

Where the defence only succeeded in laying a bare foundation for expert medical evidence, which after a voir dire was ruled inadmissible, defence counsel was entitled to address the jury last: R. v. Hawke (1975), 22 C.C.C. (2d) 19, 29 C.R.N.S. 1 (Ont. C.A.).

The trial judge, having found that the prosecutor's decision not to call certain evidence was proper, should not have called that evidence himself simply to maintain the tactical advantage the defence enjoys of being able to address the jury last where it does not call evidence: R. v. Finta (1992), 73 C.C.C. (3d) 65, 92 D.L.R. (4th) 1, 53 O.A.C. 1 (C.A.).

Content of closing addresses – Where Crown counsel addressed the jury on extraneous prejudicial matters not found in the evidence a new trial was ordered: Pisani v. The Queen (1970), 1 C.C.C. (2d) 477, 15 D.L.R. (3d) 1 (S.C.C.).

It was held in R. v. Bengert et al. (No. 5) (1980), 53 C.C.C. (2d) 481, 15 C.R. (3d) 114 (B.C.C.A.) leave to appeal to S.C.C. refused 53 C.C.C. (2d) 481n that Crown counsel was properly permitted to give the members of the jury a typed chronology of dates and events to follow during his address after a lengthy and complicated conspiracy trial, and to take this chronology with them into the jury room during deliberations.

While counsel is obligated to comment only on admissible evidence, this responsibility must not be inverted to encourage jurors to make findings in conflict with undisputed facts which did not reach their attention simply because of trial safeguards: R. v. Clarke (1981), 63 C.C.C. (2d) 224, [1981] 6 W.W.R. 417 (Alta. C.A.), leave to appeal to S.C.C. refused C.C.C. loc. cit., 34 A.R. 270n.

Comments by Crown counsel, which were extremely disparaging of a defence expert who was called to support an insanity defence, were sufficiently prejudicial as to impose a legal duty on the trial judge to comment and thus ensure that the position of the defence was fairly put to the jury. The failure of the trial judge to comment constituted an incorrect decision on a question of law and in this case the proviso in s. 686(1)(b)(iii) could not be applied: R. v. Romeo (1991), 62 C.C.C. (3d) 1, 119 N.R. 309 (S.C.C.) (6:1).

VIEW / Directions to prevent communication / Who shall attend.

652. (1) The judge may, where it appears to be in the interests of justice, at any time after the jury has been sworn and before it gives its verdict, direct the jury to have a view of any place, thing or person, and shall give directions respecting the manner in which, and the persons by whom, the place, thing or person shall be shown to the jury, and may for that purpose adjourn the trial.

(2) Where a view is ordered under subsection (1), the judge shall give any directions that he considers necessary for the purpose of preventing undue communication by any person with members of the jury, but failure to comply with any directions given under this subsection does not affect the validity of the proceedings.

(3) Where a view is ordered under subsection (1) the accused and the judge shall attend. R.S., c. C-34, s. 579.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The accused's right to be present during his trial as guaranteed by s. 650 extends to the taking of a view.

SYNOPSIS

Subsection (1) enables the trial judge to give directions with respect to the jury leaving the court-room for the purpose of viewing any place, person or thing (e.g., the scene of the alleged offence).

A failure to comply with any of the judge's directions relating to communications with the jury does not affect (automatically) the validity of the proceedings (subsec. (2)).

The judge and accused shall also attend the view (subsec. (3)).

ANNOTATIONS

A view of the occurrence is an extension of the trial and if the accused was absent at that time his conviction must be quashed: R. v. Tanguay And Pilon (1971), 15 C.R.N.S.21 (Que.C.A.).

However, this section must be read with s. 650 and the Judge has the same power to permit the accused to be absent from the view as from any other part of the trial: R. v. Auger (1982), 4 C.C.C. (3d) 282 (Que. C.A.), leave to appeal to S.C.C. refused C.C.C. loc. cit., 48 N.R. 319n.

Mere failure on the part of the accused or his counsel to object to the accused being kept handcuffed in a sheriff's vehicle so that he was not present while the Judge conducted the view does not constitute an express waiver of the provisions of subsec. (3). Where something occurred to advance the case such as the hearing of the submissions as to the manner in which the view should be conducted the accused's conviction must be quashed: R. v. Gavin (1983), 10 C.C.C. (3d) 92 (B.C.C.A.).

By virtue of s. 572 this section applies to non-jury cases and a provincial court judge has power to take a view: R. v. Prentice, [1965] 4 C.C.C. 118, 47 C.R. 231, 52 W.W.R. 126 (B.C.C.A.).

DISAGREEMENT OF JURY / Discretion not reviewable.

653. (1) Where the judge is satisfied that the jury is unable to agree on its verdict and that further detention of the jury would be useless, he may in his discretion discharge that jury and direct a new jury to be empanelled during the sittings of the court, or may adjourn the trial on such terms as justice may require.

(2) A discretion that is exercised under subsection (1) by a judge is not reviewable. R.S., c. C-34, s. 580.

CROSS-REFERENCES

Section 672 preserves the common law power of the court with respect to trials by jury and would permit the discharge of a jury for reasons other than the jury's inability to reach a verdict. Although the jury may be given permission to separate pursuant to s. 647 once they have retired to consider their verdict they must be sequestered. Section 644 provides for the discharge of a juror for cause. Under s. 654, the taking of the verdict of a jury and any proceeding incidental thereto is not invalid by reason only that it is done on a Sunday or on a holiday.

SYNOPSIS

If the trial judge is of the opinion that the jurors are unable to reach a unanimous verdict

(i.e., the jury is “hung”) he or she can declare a mistrial and discharge the jury or, alternatively, adjourn the trial. Where a mistrial occurs there will be a new trial (subsec. (1)).

The exercise of the discretion in this regard is not subject to an appeal (subsec. (2)).

ANNOTATIONS

Direction on right to disagree – A trial judge is not obliged to tell the jury that they may disagree, and accordingly a direction that the verdict returned must be unanimous is not improper, this is particularly so where the trial judge then continued on to tell the jury that they will be “attempting to reach a verdict”: Harrison v. The Queen (1974), 18 C.C.C. (2d) 129, 27 C.R.N.S. 294 (6:3) (S.C.C.).

Where a member of the jury might have reasonably concluded from the Judge's charge that they cannot disagree a new trial will be ordered: R. v. Davidson (1975), 24 C.C.C. (2d) 161 (Ont. C.A.).

In R. v. Wedge and Three Others (1973), 14 C.C.C. (2d) 490, 25 C.R.N.S. 209 (Man. C.A.) the Court did not find that a particular direction had the effect of leaving the jury with the impression that they must agree. However, the Court suggested that the following direction be given: “To render a verdict, you must be unanimous. This does not mean that you must bring in a verdict, juries cannot always agree, but if you do bring in a verdict, it must be the verdict of all of you.”

Exhortation to reach verdict – In R. v. Palmer, [1970] 3 C.C.C. 402, 9 C.R.N.S. 342 (B.C.C.A.) it was held that the trial judge's exhortation for unanimity must be examined very carefully, particularly where it is followed shortly by a guilty verdict. The Court adopted with approval the general principles stated by Lord Denning in his address in Shoukatallie v. The Queen, [1962] A.C. 81, at pp. 90-1, [1961] 3 All E.R. 996 (P.C.).

In exhorting a jury to endeavour to reach a verdict the trial Judge must avoid language that is coercive and which constitutes an interference with the jury's right to deliberate uninfluenced by extraneous pressures and which may convey to a juror that despite his genuine doubts he is entitled to give way and agree with the majority: R. v. Littlejohn and Tirabasso (1978), 41 C.C.C. (2d) 161 (Ont. C.A.).

While it is quite proper for a trial judge to exhort a jury to attempt to reach a verdict, the exhortation must not be given in such a way as to tempt a juror to abandon an honestly-held view of the evidence in favour of extraneous concerns. Where a jury indicates that it is deadlocked, there is a very delicate situation and no member of the jury should be encouraged to avoid the oath which is solely to bring in an honest verdict according to the evidence. The trial judge gave an improper exhortation where he used words capable of inducing sympathy for the accused and his wife and, thus, encouraging a decision on grounds other than the evidence. The words used by the trial judge might also be viewed as a vote by the trial judge for the accused. References to the cost and inconvenience to the community should also be avoided: R. v. Alkerton (1992), 72 C.C.C. (3d) 184 (Ont. C.A.).

A trial judge ought not to offer his or her opinion on the facts to a deadlocked jury, in the course of an exhortation, except to the extent that the jury has indicated the need for assistance on some particular point. The purpose of the exhortation is to impress on the jury the need to listen to each other and consider each other's views in order to avoid a disagreement, but is not to suggest to the jury that one view of the evidence may be preferable to another, or that a particular inference should be drawn: R. v. Sims (1992), 75 C.C.C. (3d) 278, [1992] 2 S.C.R. 858, 15 C.R. (4th) 279.

Polling jury – There is no legal requirement that the jury be polled after it has rendered its verdict but a request to poll is usually granted where doubt as to unanimity appears to exist: Laforet v. The Queen (1979), 50 C.C.C. (2d) 1, 105 D.L.R. (3d) 1 (S.C.C.) (5:2).

Ambiguous verdict – On the return of the jury, if a clear and unambiguous verdict is given, it is the duty of the trial judge to accept the verdict and, in accordance with the practice of his court, cause it to become a part of the record of the court. Where the verdict is one of acquittal, the prisoner is entitled to an immediate discharge unless subject to continued lawful detention for some other reason. Where, however, there is ambiguity in the verdict or where there is reason to doubt that the verdict is unanimous, the trial judge should inquire into the matter to ascertain the true position and where necessary he should give such further directions as may be required and allow further deliberation by the jury to satisfy himself that any verdict given will indeed be unanimous, complete and expressive of the actual findings of the jury. The judge has a discretion in such a case to accept a substituted or second verdict for the first one returned. This discretion, however, is one which must be exercised during the course of the trial in the presence of the accused and his counsel, and prior to the dissolution of the court by the discharge of the jury. It will be too late to make inquiries relating to the true nature of the verdict when the jury is discharged and the court created for the trial of the accused has dissolved. Once the accused and the jury have been discharged the court is wholly functus: Head v. The Queen (1986), 30 C.C.C. (3d) 481, 55 C.R. (3d) 1, [1986] 2 S.C.R. 684 (7:0).

Upon receipt of a verdict of “guilty with a plea of leniency on account of conflicting evidence” the trial Judge acted correctly by recharging on the doctrine of reasonable doubt and sending the jury out to reconsider its verdict: R. v. Goforth (1974), 19 C.C.C. (2d) 88, [1974] 6 W.W.R. 119 (2:1) (Sask.C.A.).

Use of “verdict sheet” – There is no objection to use of a “verdict sheet” which sets out the different verdicts available. The sheet must not, however, require the jury to give particulars as to the offences of which they found the accused guilty, as in the case of sexual assault causing bodily harm, of what the assault consisted. Members of the jury must be unanimous in their verdict but may arrive at their verdict for different reasons and on separate evidential bases: R. v. Tuckey, Baynham and Walsh (1985), 20 C.C.C. (3d) 502, 46 C.R. (3d) 97 (Ont. C.A.).

Constitutional considerations respecting mistrial – After a mistrial the judge may adjourn the case to the next jury sittings. Where the jurors are unable to agree and the jury is discharged the accused has not been “finally acquitted” within the meaning of s. 11(h) of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms so as to prevent his retrial on the same offence: R. v. Misra (1985), 18 C.C.C. (3d) 134, 44 C.R. (3d) 179 (Sask. Q.B.).

While a third trial (after juries were unable to agree on two prior occasions) may stretch the limits of the community’s sense of fair play it does not of itself exceed them so as to constitute an abuse of process: R. v. Keyowski (1988), 40 C.C.C. (3d) 481, [1988] 4 W.W.R. 97, [1988] 1 S.C.R. 657, 62 C.R. (3d) 349 (7:0).

At common law, the power of the trial judge to discharge the jury is discretionary and whether his discretion to discharge the jury was exercised properly or improperly was not subject to review, and the improper exercise of his discretion in discharging the jury did not bar a second trial. However, notwithstanding these common law limitations, the propriety of a decision to declare a mistrial is subject to scrutiny under the Charter of Rights and Freedom where a second trial, after the improper termination of the first trial, would contravene the principles of fundamental justice as guaranteed under s. 7 of the Charter. For example, if upon a breakdown of the Crown’s case, a judge were to declare a mistrial in order to give the prosecution an opportunity to strengthen its case against the accused by attempting to find additional witnesses thereby depriving the accused of an acquittal where the Crown’s initial preparation had been negligent, a second trial in those circumstances would contravene the principles of fundamental justice: R. v. D. (T.C.) (1987), 38 C.C.C. (3d) 434, 61 C.R. (3d) 168 (Ont. C.A.).

PROCEEDING ON SUNDAY, ETC., NOT INVALID.

654. The taking of the verdict of a jury and any proceeding incidental thereto is not invalid by reason only that it is done on Sunday or on a holiday. R.S., c. C-34, s. 581.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term "holiday" is defined in s. 35 of the Interpretation Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. I-21. Where the jury is unable to agree on its verdict then it may be discharged pursuant to s. 653.

ANNOTATIONS

In Kinch v. The Queen (1961), 131 C.C.C.342, it was held that Easter Monday, although included in the definition of "holiday" in the Interpretation Acts of Canada and of P.E.I. is not dies non juridicus. A plea, conviction and sentence are not invalid because they took place on that day. Ex p. Cormier (1907), 12 C.C.C.339, followed.

The jury being permitted to continue its deliberations on Sunday is also entitled to be assisted by having evidence read back. The whole of this process is incidental to the taking of the verdict: R. v. Baillie (1991), 66 C.C.C. (3d) 274 (B.C.C.A.).

Evidence on Trial

ADMISSIONS AT TRIAL.

655. Where an accused is on trial for an indictable offence, he or his counsel may admit any fact alleged against him for the purpose of dispensing with proof thereof. R.S., c. C-34, s. 582.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term "counsel" is defined in s. 2.

ANNOTATIONS

Admissions – In Castellani v. The Queen, [1970] 4 C.C.C. 287, 9 C.R.N.S. 111 (9:0) (S.C.C.), the purpose of this section was said to be to eliminate the necessity of proof by the Crown of any fact it desires to prove that the accused is prepared to admit and accordingly the accused cannot admit a fact until it is alleged against him by the Crown.

An agreed statement of facts should only be used where the facts are clearly agreed upon and if it becomes apparent during his testimony that the accused's evidence conflicts with the agreed statement of facts the trial Judge should require the Crown to call evidence on the points in issue: R. v. Coburn (1982), 66 C.C.C. (2d) 463, 27 C.R. (3d) 259 (Ont. C.A.).

A justice presiding at a preliminary hearing may admit a statement of facts agreed to by the Crown and defence. This statement constitutes evidence upon which the justice may base a decision as to order to stand trial: Re Ulrich and The Queen (1977), 38 C.C.C. (2d) 1, [1978] 1 W.W.R. 422 (Alta. S.C.T.D.).

Necessity of voir dire to determine voluntariness of confession – It was held in R. v. Dietrich (1970), 1 C.C.C. (2d) 49, 11 C.R.N.S. 22 (Ont. C.A.) that while this section was probably not authority for permitting the accused to waive a voir dire as to the voluntariness of a confession, such a right exists apart from any provision of the Criminal Code.

This approach was approved in Park v. The Queen (1981), 59 C.C.C. (2d) 385, 21 C.R. (3d) 182, [1981] 2 S.C.R. 64 (9:0) where the Court held that no particular words or formula need be uttered by defence counsel to express the waiver and admission. All that is necessary is that the trial Judge be satisfied that counsel understands the matter and has made an informed decision to waive the voir dire. It is sufficient for counsel to indicate that no objection is taken to admission of the statement without a voir dire, or that voluntariness is not in issue.

In Powell v. The Queen (1976), 28 C.C.C. (2d) 148, 66 D.L.R. (3d) 443, [1977] 1 S.C.R. 362 (9:0) the Court held that a voir dire as to the admissibility of a confession is required even on a trial by a Judge alone.

In Erven v. The Queen (1978), 44 C.C.C. (2d) 76, 92 D.L.R. (3d) 507, 6 C.R. (3d) 97

(S.C.C.) (6:3) Dickson, J., for the plurality held that there is no exception from the rule requiring the holding of a voir dire on the basis that the statement is “obviously volunteered” to the person in authority.

EVIDENCE OF STEALING ORES OR MINERALS.

656. In any proceeding in respect of theft of ores or minerals, the possession, contrary to any law in that behalf, of smelted gold or silver, gold-bearing quartz, or unsmelted or unmanufactured gold or silver, by an operator, workman or labourer actively engaged in or on a mine, is, in the absence of any evidence to the contrary, proof that the gold, silver or quartz was stolen by him. R.S., c. C-34, s. 583.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The general theft offence is defined in s. 322. Note, however, the exemption in s. 333 for the taking of specimens for the purpose of exploration or scientific investigation. Other offences in relation to minerals and mines are found in ss. 394 and 396.

SYNOPSIS

This section establishes a presumption in trials for theft of precious minerals. Unlawful possession of gold, silver or gold- or silver-bearing material by a person actively employed in a mine is rebuttable proof that such person stole the material.

USE IN EVIDENCE OF STATEMENT BY ACCUSED.

657. A statement made by an accused under subsection 541(3) and purporting to be signed by the justice before whom it was made may be given in evidence against the accused at his or her trial without proof of the signature of the justice, unless it is proved that the justice by whom the statement purports to be signed did not sign it. R.S., c. C-34, s. 584; 1994, c. 44, s. 62.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term “justice” is defined in s. 2. Section 541(2) refers to the statement made by an accused after he was warned at the conclusion of the evidence adduced by the prosecutor at his preliminary inquiry. It may be that this section must now be read in light of s. 13 of the Charter.

SYNOPSIS

A statement made by an accused at a preliminary inquiry (see s. 541) may be tendered in evidence by the Crown at trial if signed by the justice of the peace or provincial court judge before whom it was made. The signature need not be proved, but it may be proved to be false.

PROOF OF OWNERSHIP AND VALUE OF PROPERTY / Statements to be made / Notice of intention to produce affidavit or solemn declaration / Attendance for examination.

657.1. (1) In any proceedings, an affidavit or a solemn declaration of a person who claims to be the lawful owner of, or the person lawfully entitled to possession of, property that was the subject-matter of the offence, or any other person who has specialized knowledge of the property or of that type of property, containing the statements referred to in subsection (2), shall be admissible in evidence and, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, is evidence of the statements contained in the affidavit or solemn declaration without proof of the signature of the person appearing to have signed the affidavit or solemn declaration.

(2) For the purposes of subsection (1), a person shall state in an affidavit or a solemn declaration

- (a) that the person is the lawful owner of, or is lawfully entitled to possession of, the property, or otherwise has specialized knowledge of the property or of property of the same type as the property;
  - (b) the value of the property;
  - (c) in the case of a person who is the lawful owner of or is lawfully entitled to possession of the property, that the person has been deprived of the property by fraudulent means or otherwise without the lawful consent of the person; and
  - (d) any facts within the personal knowledge of the person relied on to justify the statements referred to in paragraphs (a) to (c).
- (3) Unless the court orders otherwise, no affidavit or solemn declaration shall be received in evidence pursuant to subsection (1) unless the prosecutor has, before the trial or other proceeding, given to the accused a copy of the affidavit or solemn declaration and reasonable notice of intention to produce it in evidence.
- (4) Notwithstanding subsection (1), the court may require the person who appears to have signed an affidavit or solemn declaration referred to in that subsection to appear before it for examination or cross-examination in respect of the issue of proof of any of the statements contained in the affidavit or solemn declaration. R.S.C. 1985, c. 23 (4th Supp.), s. 3.

CROSS-REFERENCES

Note s. 4(6) which provides for proof of service by way of affidavit or solemn declaration. Also note s. 491.2 which provides for the admissibility of photographic evidence of property that would otherwise be required to be produced for the purposes of a preliminary inquiry, trial or other proceedings.

SYNOPSIS

The purpose of this section is to obviate the need for the Crown to call viva voce evidence to prove ownership and value of property.

Proof of such matters may be given by way of affidavit or declaration wherein the affiant/declarant states: (a) that he or she is the lawful owner of the property or the person entitled to possession; (b) the value of the property; and (c) how the person was deprived of the property (subsec. (2)).

The Crown must give the accused a copy of the document and reasonable notice of its intention to tender it. The court can order the affiant/declarant to attend for cross-examination (subsecs. (3), (4)).

Children and Young Persons

TESTIMONY AS TO DATE OF BIRTH / Testimony of a parent / Proof of age / Other evidence / Inference from appearance.

658. (1) In any proceedings to which this Act applies, the testimony of a person as to the date of his or her birth is admissible as evidence of that date.
- (2) In any proceedings to which this Act applies, the testimony of a parent as to the age of a person of whom he or she is a parent is admissible as evidence of the age of that person.
- (3) In any proceedings to which this Act applies,
- (a) a birth or baptismal certificate or a copy of such a certificate purporting to be certified under the hand of the person in whose custody the certificate is held is evidence of the age of that person; and
  - (b) an entry or record of an incorporated society or its officers who have had the control or care of a child or young person at or about the time the child or young person was brought to Canada is evidence of the age of the child or young person if the entry or record was made before the time when the offence is alleged to have been committed.

(4) In the absence of any certificate, copy, entry or record mentioned in subsection (3), or in corroboration of any such certificate, copy, entry or record, a jury, judge, justice or provincial court judge, as the case may be, may receive and act on any other information relating to age that they consider reliable.

(5) In the absence of other evidence, or by way of corroboration of other evidence, a jury, judge, justice or provincial court judge, as the case may be, may infer the age of a child or young person from his or her appearance. R.S., c. C-34, s. 585; 1994, c. 44, s. 64.

CROSS-REFERENCES

Age is determined in accordance with s. 30 of the Interpretation Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. I-21. As to the taking of evidence of children, see s. 16 of the Canada Evidence Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. C-5.

SYNOPSIS

This section deals with some of the methods by which the age of a person may be proven and most conveniently allows the witness to testify to his or her own age, although technically that evidence would be hearsay.

Where an incorporated society was involved in the child's immigration to Canada and had custody or care of the child, a record of the society made before the commission of the alleged offence is receivable as to the child's age (subsec. (2)(b)).

In the absence of any other evidence, either direct or corroborative, the court may infer the age of a child from his or her appearance (subsec. (5)).

CHILDREN'S EVIDENCE.

659. Any requirement whereby it is mandatory for a court to give the jury a warning about convicting an accused on the evidence of a child is abrogated. 1993, c. 45, s. 9.

SYNOPSIS

Prior to recent decisions of the Supreme Court of Canada [see notes under s. 150.1] there was some common law authority requiring the trial judge to warn the jury as to the danger of convicting the accused on the evidence of a child. Any such mandatory rules are now abrogated.

FULL OFFENCE CHARGED, ATTEMPT PROVED.

660. Where the complete commission of an offence charged is not proved but the evidence establishes an attempt to commit the offence, the accused may be convicted of the attempt. R.S., c. C-34, s. 587.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The definition of attempt is found in s. 24. For most offences, the attempt to commit an offence is punished in accordance with s. 463. However, attempted murder, for example, is punished under s. 239. Section 661 provides for the case where an attempt to commit an offence is charged by the evidence discloses the commission of the complete offence. With respect to other included offences, see s. 662.

SYNOPSIS

This section provides that in a trial for a complete offence, proof only of an attempt can result in a conviction for an attempt.

ATTEMPT CHARGED, FULL OFFENCE PROVED / Conviction a bar.

661. (1) Where an attempt to commit an offence is charged but the evidence establishes the commission of the complete offence, the accused is not entitled to be acquitted, but the jury may convict him of the attempt unless the judge presiding at the trial, in his discretion, discharges the jury from giving a verdict and directs that the accused be indicted for the complete offence.

(2) An accused who is convicted under this section is not liable to be tried again for the offence that he was charged with attempting to commit. R.S., c. C-34, s. 588.

CROSS-REFERENCES

Attempt to commit an offence is defined in s. 24. The general provisions respecting the pleas of autrefois convict are found in ss. 607 to 610.

SYNOPSIS

Where the accused has been charged with an attempt, but the Crown proves the full offence, the trial judge can direct that there be a trial for the full offence or record the conviction for the attempt (subsec. (1)).

If the accused is convicted of an attempt he or she cannot subsequently be charged with the full offence (subsec. (2)).

ANNOTATIONS

This section also applies to a judge or provincial court judge sitting without a jury: R. v. Doiron (1960), 129 C.C.C.283, 34 C.R.188 (B.C.C.A.).

---

OFFENCE CHARGED, PART ONLY PROVED / First degree murder charged / Conviction for infanticide or manslaughter on charge of murder / Conviction for concealing body of child where murder or infanticide charged / Conviction for dangerous driving where manslaughter charged / Conviction for break and enter with intent.

662. (1) A count in an indictment is divisible and where the commission of the offence charged, as described in the enactment creating it or as charged in the count, includes the commission of another offence, whether punishable by indictment or on summary conviction, the accused may be convicted

- (a) of an offence so included that is proved, notwithstanding that the whole offence that is charged is not proved; or
- (b) of an attempt to commit an offence so included.

(2) For greater certainty and without limiting the generality of subsection (1), where a count charges first degree murder and the evidence does not prove first degree murder but proves second degree murder or an attempt to commit second degree murder, the jury may find the accused not guilty of first degree murder but guilty of second degree murder or an attempt to commit second degree murder, as the case may be.

(3) Subject to subsection (4), where a count charges murder and the evidence proves manslaughter or infanticide but does not prove murder, the jury may find the accused not guilty of murder but guilty of manslaughter or infanticide, but shall not on that count find the accused guilty of any other offence.

(4) Where a count charges the murder of a child or infanticide and the evidence proves the commission of an offence under section 243 but does not prove murder or infanticide, the jury may find the accused not guilty of murder or infanticide, as the case may be, but guilty of an offence under section 243.

(5) For greater certainty, where a count charges an offence under section 220, 221 or 236 arising out of the operation of a motor vehicle or the navigation or operation of a vessel or aircraft, and the evidence does not prove such offence but does prove an offence under section 249, the accused may be convicted of an offence under section 249.

(6) Where a count charges an offence under paragraph 348(1)(b) and the evidence does not prove such offence but does prove an offence under paragraph 348(1)(a), the accused may be convicted of an offence under paragraph 348(1)(a). R.S., c. C-34, s. 589; 1973-74, c. 38, s. 6; 1974-75-76, c. 105, s. 11; R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 134.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term “indictment” is defined in s. 2. The offence of murder is defined in ss. 229 and 231. The offence of infanticide is defined in s. 233, although see s. 663 which enacts special rules where an accused is charged with infanticide but the evidence does not prove that offence.

SYNOPSIS

This section deals with situations where an accused may be convicted on less than the full offence charged. Subsection (1) provides that if the full offence is not proven the accused may still be found guilty of a lesser included offence or an attempt to commit the full offence.

For greater certainty murder is partially dealt with in subsec. (2). An accused charged with first degree murder may be convicted of second degree murder or an attempt to commit second degree murder.

Subsection (3) provides that on a charge of murder the accused may be convicted of manslaughter or infanticide. Where the victim is a child, and the charge is murder or infanticide, it is open to the trier of fact to convict of the offence of concealing the body of a child (see s. 243) (subsec. (4)).

For greater certainty, subsec. (5) provides that where the charge is criminal negligence causing death (see s. 220), criminal negligence causing bodily harm (see s. 221) or manslaughter (see s. 236) arising out of the operation of a motor vehicle, vessel or aircraft, the accused may be convicted of dangerous operation of a motor vehicle, etc. (see s. 249).

By reason of subsec. (6) it is open to convict a person of breaking and entering with intent to commit an indictable offence (see s. 348(1)(a)) on a charge of breaking and entering and committing an indictable offence (see s. 348(1)(a)).

ANNOTATIONS

Definition of included offence – Where all the elements of an included offence are contained in the count in the indictment charging the greater offence, and the included offence is a part of the same transaction as the alleged greater offence, then a conviction may be found for the included offence: R. v. Ovcarić (1973), 11 C.C.C. (2d) 565, 22 C.R.N.S. 26 (Ont. C.A.).

An included offence is one that an accused committed in the commission of the offence charged: R. v. Foote (1974), 16 C.C.C. (2d) 44 (N.B.S.C.App.Div.).

It was held in R. v. McDowell (1976), 32 C.C.C. (2d) 309, [1977] 1 W.W.R. 97 (Alta. S.C. App. Div.) that there are three ways in which an offence may be included in another:

1. Where the Code prescribes that certain offences are included offences such as in subsecs. (2) to (6) of this section.
2. Where the description of the offence as described in the enactment creating it includes the commission of that other offence as provided by this subsection.
3. Where the description of the offence as charged in the count includes the commission of another offence.

To come within the words "as described in the enactment creating it" the lesser offence must be included in the offence charged as described in the enactment, albeit not in all the subsections and it is sufficient if the other offence is included in the enactment creating it. Thus on a charge that the accused "did commit robbery" common assault is an included offence since it is a lesser offence in at least one, albeit not all, the descriptions of the offence of robbery under s. 343: Luckett v. The Queen (1980), 50 C.C.C. (2d) 489, 105 D.L.R. (3d) 577, [1980] 1 S.C.R. 1140 (7:0).

It was held in Fergusson v. The Queen (1961), 132 C.C.C. 112, [1962] S.C.R. 229, 36 C.R. 271 that:

The count must therefore include but not necessarily mention the commission of another offence, but the latter must be a lesser offence than the offence charged. The expression "lesser offence" is a "part of an offence" which is charged, and it must necessarily include some elements of the "major offence", but be lacking in some of the essentials, without which the major offence would be incomplete. . .

In R. v. Simpson (No. 2) (1981), 58 C.C.C. (2d) 122, 20 C.R. (3d) 36 (Ont. C.A.) the Court considered Luckett v. The Queen, supra, but held that a charge in an indictment simply that the accused "did attempt to cause the death of [the victim] and did thereby attempt to commit murder, contrary to s. 222" did not include the offences of causing bodily harm with intent to wound, assault causing bodily harm or unlawfully causing bodily harm. Such an indictment does not charge any of these offences as included offences and s. 222 [now s. 239] either alone or read with ss. 24, 222, 229 or 230 does not describe the various ways in which attempted murder can be committed so as to include these ways as included offences within the meaning of this subsection.

For an offence to be included by the addition of apt words of description to the principal charge the charge must be so worded that the accused is afforded reasonable notice of the offence or offences alleged to be included in the principal offence charged. Moreover, the offence must be one which is properly included in the count: R. v. Harmer and Miller (1976), 33 C.C.C. (2d) 17, 75 D.L.R. (3d) 20 (Ont. C.A.). In this case on a charge of robbery in that the accused did steal and at the same time used violence which caused bodily harm to the victim the offence of assault causing bodily harm was an included offence.

Application of provision – In Rickard v. The Queen (1970), 1 C.C.C. (2d) 153, 12 C.R.N.S.172 (S.C.C.), both the majority and the minority held that subsec. (5) is also applicable to proceedings by way of summary conviction.

Duty to direct jury on included offences – In R. v. Longson (1976), 31 C.C.C. (2d) 421, [1976] 6 W.W.R. 534 (B.C.C.A.) it was held that where there is evidence upon which a jury could convict of an included offence the Judge is under a duty to properly instruct the jury on that included offence. A conviction for attempted murder was set aside and a new trial ordered where the Judge failed to instruct the jury on the included offences of discharging a firearm with intent to wound or endanger life contrary to s. 244(a) and (b) and dangerous use of a firearm contrary to the former s. 86 (b). In this case the indictment charged that the accused “did attempt to murder [the victim] by discharging a firearm at him”.

A trial Judge does not have an untrammelled discretion to decide whether or not to charge the jury on included offences. He must be governed by the issues raised in the evidence: Smith v. The Queen (1978), 43 C.C.C. (2d) 417, 91 D.L.R. (3d) 1, [1979] 1 S.C.R. 215 (9:0).

Included offences in murder case – The mere verdict of “guilty of manslaughter” is not in accordance with subsec. (2): R. v. Vincent (1957), 119 C.C.C. 188, [1957] O.W.N. 577 (C.A.).

It would appear that the accused may properly apply at the close of the Crown’s case for a directed verdict of acquittal on the charge of first degree murder, where for example there is no evidence of planning and deliberation, with the case then proceeding on the charge of second degree murder: Titus v. The Queen (1983), 2 C.C.C. (3d) 321, 144 D.L.R. (3d) 577 (S.C.C.) (7:0); R. v. Talbot (No. 3) (1977), 38 C.C.C. (2d) 562 (Ont. H.C.J.). Contra: R. v. Andrews, Elton and Van Amerongen (1979), 8 C.R. (3d) 1 (B.C.C.A.).

The words of subsec. (3) are clear and unambiguous and on a trial on a charge of murder the Court may not return a verdict such as assault causing bodily harm: R. v. Chichak (1978), 38 C.C.C. (2d) 489 (Alta. S.C. App. Div.). Contra, R. v. Sandhu et al. (1973), 29 C.R.N.S. 126, [1975] 1 W.W.R. 204 (B.C.S.C.).

NO ACQUITTAL UNLESS ACT OR OMISSION NOT WILFUL.

663. Where a female person is charged with infanticide and the evidence establishes that she caused the death of her child but does not establish that, at the time of the act or omission by which she caused the death of the child,

- (a) she was not fully recovered from the effects of giving birth to the child or from the effect of lactation consequent on the birth of the child, and
- (b) the balance of her mind was, at that time, disturbed by reason of the effect of giving birth to the child or of the effect of lactation consequent on the birth of the child, she may be convicted unless the evidence establishes that the act or omission was not wilful. R.S., c. C-34, s. 590.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The offence of infanticide is defined in s. 233 and punished pursuant to s. 237. As to cause of death, see the notes under s. 233.

SYNOPSIS

This section states that a female accused may be convicted of infanticide (see s. 233) if the evidence establishes that she caused the death of her child and if both elements of the defence outlined in s. 233 are not made out. The accused must not have recovered from the effects of giving birth or consequent lactation, and must have been of disturbed mind due to these effects at the time the infant was killed. However, it is still a defence that the killing was not wilful. In effect, the section prevents acquittal of the accused of infanticide, because she had a greater mens rea than that prescribed by s. 233.

---

Previous Convictions

---

NO REFERENCE TO PREVIOUS CONVICTION.

664. No indictment in respect of an offence for which, by reason of previous convictions, a greater punishment may be imposed shall contain any reference to previous convictions. R.S., c. C-34, s. 591.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term "indictment" is defined in s. 2. Section 665 sets out the procedure where an accused is convicted of an offence for which a greater punishment may be imposed by reason of previous convictions. Section 667 provides a method of proving the prior conviction.

SYNOPSIS

Certain offences (such as impaired operation, s. 255) carry a greater minimum or maximum penalty, if the accused has previously been convicted of the same (or sometimes a related) offence. This section provides, however, that there shall be no reference to such previous convictions in the information or indictment.

PREVIOUS CONVICTION / Procedure / Where hearing ex parte / Corporations / Section does not apply.

665. (1) Subject to subsections (3) and (4), where an accused or a defendant is convicted of an offence for which a greater punishment may be imposed by reason of previous convictions, no greater punishment shall be imposed on him by reason thereof unless the prosecutor satisfies the court that the accused or defendant, before making his plea, was notified that a greater punishment would be sought by reason thereof.

(2) Where an accused or a defendant is convicted of an offence for which a greater punishment may be imposed by reason of previous convictions, the court shall, on application by the prosecutor and on being satisfied that the accused or defendant was notified in accordance with subsection (1), ask the accused or defendant whether he was previously convicted and, if he does not admit that he was previously convicted, evidence of previous convictions may be adduced.

(3) Where a summary conviction court holds a trial pursuant to subsection 803(2) and convicts the defendant, the court may, whether or not the defendant was notified that a greater punishment would be sought by reason of a previous conviction, make inquiries and hear evidence with respect to previous convictions of the defendant and if any such conviction is proved may impose a greater punishment by reason thereof.

(4) Where, pursuant to section 623, the court proceeds with the trial of a corporation that has not appeared and pleaded and convicts the corporation, the court may, whether or not the corporation was notified that a greater punishment would be sought by reason of a previous conviction, make inquiries and hear evidence with respect to previous convictions of the corporation and if any such conviction is proved may impose a greater punishment by reason thereof.

(5) This section does not apply to a person referred to in paragraph 742(a.1). R.S., c. C-34, s. 592; R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 135.

NOTE: Section 665 repealed 1995, c. 22, s. 3 (to come into force by order of the Governor in Council).

CROSS-REFERENCES

Section 667 provides a method of proof of a prior conviction. The reference in subsec. (5) to s. 742(a.1) is to an accused convicted of second degree murder where he has previously been convicted of culpable homicide that is murder. Section 742 sets the period of parole ineligibility for such person at 25 years. The reference in subsec. (3) to s. 803(2) is to the case where the defendant has been tried ex parte on a summary conviction offence. Reference in subsec. (4) to s. 623 is to the trial of a corporation which has failed to appear by counsel or agent.

SYNOPSIS

This section deals with the procedures to be followed where the Crown seeks a higher range of sentence by reason of the accused's previous criminal record.

Except where a trial has proceeded ex parte (see subsecs. (3), (4)), no greater punishment can be imposed unless the Crown proves that it notified the accused of its intention to seek an increased sentence before the accused entered a plea (subsec. (1)). This is commonly referred to as giving notice of greater punishment.

If, having been duly notified, the accused does not admit the earlier convictions proof of the same may be given (subsec. (2)).

Notice is not required in cases where the sentence for second degree murder is increased as a result of an earlier murder conviction (see s. 742(a.1)).

ANNOTATIONS

Editor's Note: Some of the following cases were decided in relation to former s. 740(1), now repealed. Those decisions are applicable to cases falling under this section which now applies to indictable and summary conviction proceedings.

Procedure – The failure to carry out the requirements of this section in the order set out therein does not affect the validity of the sentence: R. v. Langlois (1991), 67 C.C.C. (3d) 375, 35 M.V.R. (2d) 71 (B.C.S.C.).

When notice required – This section also applies where the Crown seeks the longer fire-arms prohibition provided for in s. 100(1)(b) by reason of the accused's prior conviction for an offence involving violence: R. v. Jobb (1988), 43 C.C.C. (3d) 476, [1988] 6 W.W.R. 268 (Sask. C.A.).

Sufficiency of notice – Since subsec. (1) does not specify written notice, verbal notice may be given: R. v. Bolley, [1966] 3 C.C.C. 57, 47 C.R. 247 sub nom. R. ex rel. Perry v. Bolley (B.C.S.C.); R. v. Collini (1979), 3 M.V.R. 218 (Ont. H.C.J.).

The accused is not entitled to "reasonable" notice of the Crown's intention to seek a higher penalty and thus notification the morning of the accused's trial is scheduled to commence is sufficient. If the accused has been prejudiced by the short notice he may apply for an adjournment: R. v. Boufford (1988), 46 C.C.C. (3d) 116, 13 M.V.R. (2d) 89 (Ont. Dist. Ct.).

As long as the error in it did not mislead or prejudice the defendant, a notice reasonably identifying the previous conviction and the Crown's intention is sufficient: R. v. Reid, [1970] 5 C.C.C. 368, 12 C.R.N.S. 112 (B.C.C.A.).

In R. v. Thunderblanket (1979), 2 Sask. R. 199, 5 M.V.R. 84 (C.A.), the Court held that a notice is valid although given to the accused prior to the charge being laid.

A notice to the effect that the Crown would seek a greater punishment by reason of a previous conviction or convictions without specifying the previous convictions intended to be proved is sufficient compliance with this section: R. v. Pidlubny (1973), 10 C.C.C. (2d) 178, 20 C.R.N.S. 310 (Ont. C.A.).

The notice of intent to seek greater punishment need not refer specifically to the offence for which the greater punishment would be sought: R. v. Duncan (1982), 1 C.C.C. (3d) 444, [1983] 1 W.W.R. 574 (B.C.C.A.).

Similarly, a notice which referred to the accused as having been convicted of "offence(s)" is sufficient. There is no requirement that the notice specify the number of convictions or whether the Crown intends to proceed by way of a second or third conviction: R. v. Monk (1981), 62 C.C.C. (2d) 6, 24 C.R. (3d) 183 (Ont. C.A.).

A notice which inaccurately refers to the accused as having been charged with several drinking and driving offences could not have prejudiced or misled the accused. Further, a notice need not specifically identify the offence with which the accused was charged, nor the alleged previous offences. Finally, the prosecution at the time of serving the notice need not have a reasonable belief that the accused has previous convictions: R. v. Kelly (1986), 40 M.V.R. 50 (N.B.Q.B.).

A notice which merely indicates that if he has previously been convicted the accused "may" receive a greater punishment does not comply with this section: R. v. Riley (1982), 69 C.C.C. (2d) 245, 38 O.R. (2d) 174 (H.C.J.).

There is no requirement that the nature or character of the greater punishment being sought be set out in the notice. Thus it is not necessary to set out that a jail term will be sought: R. v. Bear (1979), 47 C.C.C. (2d) 462, 2 Sask. R. 191 (C.A.).

This section and s. 667 constitute a complete code of procedure by which a greater punishment may be sought and there is no requirement that s. 28 of the Canada Evidence Act be complied with: R. v. Jonasson (1980), 56 C.C.C. (2d) 121, 5 Sask. R. 154 (C.A.).

Sufficiency of service of notice – The notice must be given to the accused personally and service of the notice on a member of the accused's family is not sufficient: R. v. Boileau; R. v. Lepine (1979), 50 C.C.C. (2d) 189 (Que. S.C.).

In R. v. Godon (1984), 12 C.C.C. (3d) 446, 33 Sask. R. 180 (C.A.) the court distinguished R. v. Boileau; R. v. Lepine, supra, and held that service on the accused's mother was sufficient as she had appeared as agent for the accused pursuant to s. 800(2).

However, it was held in R. v. Fowler (1982), 2 C.C.C. (3d) 227, 18 M.V.R. 101 (N.S.S.C. App. Div.) that this section does not require personal service and service on the accused's counsel was sufficient. Similarly: R. v. Simms (1986), 31 C.C.C. (3d) 350, 64 Nfld. & P.E.I.R. 360 (Nfld. C.A.).

Effect of failure to give notice – The trial judge is entitled to take into account the accused's previous record in determining the appropriate sentence even if notice has not been given pursuant to this section. The giving or not giving of notice merely fixes the bottom limit to the judge's power to sentence for an offence such as "over 80" which, as a result of s. 255, has a different minimum depending on the number of prior convictions. However, failure to give notice does not require that the accused be treated as a first offender: R. v. Norris (1988), 41 C.C.C. (3d) 441, 63 C.R. (3d) 200, [1988] 4 W.W.R. 63 (N.W.T.C.A.).

EVIDENCE OF CHARACTER.

666. Where, at a trial, the accused adduces evidence of his good character, the prosecutor may, in answer thereto, before a verdict is returned, adduce evidence of the previous conviction of the accused for any offences, including any previous conviction by reason of which a greater punishment may be imposed. R.S., c. C-34, s. 593.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term "prosecutor" is defined in s. 2. Also note s. 12 of the Canada Evidence Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. C-5 which permits cross-examination of an accused on a prior criminal record. Section 667 provides a method of proof of a prior conviction.

SYNOPSIS

This section permits the Crown to lead evidence as part of its case of the accused's criminal record where the accused has put his or her character in issue without.

ANNOTATIONS

The evidence of good character is not some personal attributes of the accused brought out on cross-examination of a Crown witness but is an expression of the accused's reputation in the community: R. v. Demyen (No. 2) (1976), 31 C.C.C. (2d) 383, [1976] 5 W.W.R. 324 (Sask. C.A.).

This section lets in only evidence of previous convictions and does not deal with previous misconduct not resulting in convictions. Further, the evidence of good character must be adduced at trial and does not include a statement to the police: R. v. Drysdale, [1969] 2 C.C.C. 141, 66 W.W.R. 664 (Man. C.A.).

Whenever the accused puts his character in issue, it is open to the Crown to prove his bad character, i.e., that his general reputation or moral disposition is bad. Resort to this section is not the only method open to the Crown to prove the accused's bad character but was enacted rather to avoid the rule that bad character cannot generally be proven by specific acts of misconduct. Where an accused in examination-in-chief testified that he had never been convicted nor arrested he put his character in issue: Morris v. The Queen (1978), 43 C.C.C. (2d) 129, 91 D.L.R. (3d) 161, [1979] 1 S.C.R. 405 (5:4).

An accused does not put his character in issue merely by denying his guilt and repudiating the allegations against him, nor by giving an explanation of matters which are essential to his defence. However, he may not, without putting his character in issue, assert expressly or implicitly that he would not have done the acts alleged against him because he is a person of good character. Thus an accused may during his own testimony put his character in issue. It is not merely by adducing evidence of general reputation that he does so. Evidence of good character may be rebutted by the Crown by extrinsic evidence of bad reputation, extrinsic evidence of similar facts and cross-examination of the accused as to specific past acts of disreputable conduct, subject to a possible discretion in the trial Judge to exclude cross-examination on acts which did not result in a conviction, were of little probative value or remote in time, and gravely prejudicial: R. v. McNamara et al. (No. 1) (1981), 56 C.C.C. (2d) 193 (Ont. C.A.), at pp. 342-54.

This section permits the Crown to lead evidence of convictions registered either before or after the incident giving rise to the charge upon which the accused is being tried provided that convictions after the incident relate to offences which are so closely related in time to the charge as to show his disposition at that time: R. v. Close (1982), 68 C.C.C. (2d) 105, 137 D.L.R. (3d) 655 (Ont. C.A.).

PROOF OF PREVIOUS CONVICTION / Idem / Proof of identity / Attendance and right to cross-examine / Notice of intention to produce certificate / Definition of "fingerprint examiner".

667. (1) In any proceedings,

- (a) a certificate setting out with reasonable particularity the conviction, discharge under section 736 or the conviction and sentence in Canada of an offender signed by
  - (i) the person who made the conviction or order for the discharge,
  - (ii) the clerk of the court in which the conviction or order for the discharge was made, or
  - (iii) a fingerprint examiner, is, on proof that the accused or defendant is the offender referred to in the certificate, evidence that the accused or defendant was so convicted, so discharged or so convicted and sentenced without proof of the signature or the official character of the person appearing to have signed the certificate;

NOTE: Subsection (1)(a) amended 1995, c. 22, s. 10 (to come into force by order of the Governor in Council) by replacing the reference to s. 736 with s. 730.

- (b) evidence that the fingerprints of the accused or defendant are the same as the fingerprints of the offender whose fingerprints are reproduced in or attached to a certificate issued under subparagraph (a)(iii) is, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, proof that the accused or defendant is the offender referred to in that certificate;
- (c) a certificate of a fingerprint examiner stating that he has compared the fingerprints reproduced in or attached to that certificate with the fingerprints reproduced in or attached to a certificate issued under subparagraph (a)(iii) and that they are those of the same person is evidence of the statements contained in the certificate without proof of the signature or the official character of the person appearing to have signed the certificate; and

(d) a certificate under subparagraph (a)(iii) may be in Form 44, and a certificate under paragraph (c) may be in Form 45.

(2) In any proceedings, a copy of the summary conviction or discharge under section 736 in Canada of an offender, signed by the person who made the conviction or order for the discharge or by the clerk of the court in which the conviction or order for the discharge was made, is, on proof that the accused or defendant is the offender referred to in the copy of the summary conviction, evidence of the conviction or discharge under section 736 of the accused or defendant, without proof of the signature or the official character of the person appearing to have signed it.

NOTE: Subsection (2) amended 1995, c. 22, s. 10 (to come into force by order of the Governor in Council) by replacing the references to s. 736 with s. 730.

(2.1) In any summary conviction proceedings, where the name of a defendant is similar to the name of an offender referred to in a certificate made under subparagraph (1)(a)(i) or (ii) in respect of a summary conviction or referred to in a copy of a summary conviction mentioned in subsection (2), that similarity of name is, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, evidence that the defendant is the offender referred to in the certificate or the copy of the summary conviction.

(3) An accused against whom a certificate issued under subparagraph (1)(a)(iii) or paragraph (1)(c) is produced may, with leave of the court, require the attendance of the person who signed the certificate for the purposes of cross-examination.

(4) No certificate issued under subparagraph (1)(a)(iii) or paragraph (1)(c) shall be received in evidence unless the party intending to produce it has given to the accused reasonable notice of his intention together with a copy of the certificate.

(5) In this section, "fingerprint examiner" means a person designated as such for the purposes of this section by the Solicitor General of Canada. R.S., c. C-34, s. 594; 1972, c. 13, s. 51; R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 136.

CROSS-REFERENCES

This section does not displace other means of proving previous convictions either by application of the common law or provisions of the Canada Evidence Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. C-5. Note s. 665 which requires that where an accused is convicted of an offence for which a greater punishment may be imposed by reason of previous convictions, no greater punishment shall be imposed on him by reason thereof unless the prosecutor has given notice of intention to seek the greater punishment. Such notice is not, however, required in the case of an accused convicted of second degree murder who has previously been convicted of culpable homicide that is murder and who is sentenced in accordance with s. 742(a.1). Note s. 841(3) which provides that any pre-printed portions of forms must be in both official languages.

SYNOPSIS

This section deals with the methods available to prove a previous conviction.

Subsection (1)(a) provides for the issuance and admissibility of a certificate of conviction which may be signed by a judge, clerk of the court or a "fingerprint examiner" designated by the Solicitor General of Canada. In the absence of evidence to the contrary, evidence that the fingerprints of the accused are the same as those which form part of that certificate is evidence that the accused is the person referred to in the certificate (subsec. (1)(b)). A "fingerprint examiner" may also issue a certificate which links fingerprints attached to that certificate to those in the certificate of conviction (subsec. (1)(c)). The signature and official character of the person signing any of the above mentioned certificates is presumed and need not be proven (subsec. (1)(a), (c)).

With respect to summary conviction proceedings a copy of the summary conviction or discharge signed by either the judge or clerk of the court may be used to prove that the accused has previously been convicted. The signature and official character of the person signing the document need not be proven (subsec. (2)).

In summary conviction proceedings similarity of name will be sufficient, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, to connect the accused to a judge's or clerk's certificate, or to the copy of a summary conviction (subsec. (2.1)). (Note: In many cases a person convicted of a summary conviction offence will not have been fingerprinted in connection with that matter.)

The court may grant leave to require the "fingerprint examiner" to attend for cross-examination (subsec. (3)).

The Crown must give an accused reasonable notice of its intention to produce the certificate of a "fingerprint examiner" together with a copy of the certificate (subsec. (4)).

ANNOTATIONS

Proof of previous conviction – Since subsec. (1)(c) provides a convenient shortcut for the Crown its provisions must be strictly followed and accordingly a certificate referring to the section's previous number prior to the coming into force of R.S.C.1970, with no S.C. 1953-54 reference is inadmissible: R. v. Gordon (1972), 8 C.C.C. (2d) 132 (B.C.C.A.).

In view of the definition of "clerk of the court" in s. 2, there is no requirement that the person performing the duties of a clerk of the court has been appointed as such under the provincial legislation for that person to sign a copy of the summary conviction under subsec. (2): R. v. Hughes (1981), 60 C.C.C. (2d) 16, 31 Nfld. & P.E.I.R. 349 (P.E.I.S.C. in banco).

Circumstances in which accused liable to greater penalty – In the absence of explicit and unqualified language to the contrary the increased penalty for a subsequent offence may only be imposed where there was a prior conviction at the time the subsequent offence was committed. Thus the accused was not liable to the increased minimum penalty prescribed by s. 85(1)(d) in the case of a "second or subsequent offence" of using a firearm while committing an indictable offence where all offences were committed prior to the first conviction: R. v. Cheetham (1980), 53 C.C.C. (2d) 109, 17 C.R. (3d) 1 (Ont. C.A.), leave to appeal to S.C.C. refused 33 N.R. 539n. Folld: R. v. Oswald (1981), 57 C.C.C. (2d) 484 (B.C.C.A.).

The same principle was applied in R. v. Negridge (1980), 54 C.C.C. (2d) 304, 17 C.R. (3d) 14 (Ont. C.A.) a case involving the drinking and driving provisions.

Similarly, the accused was not liable to the increased penalty for a third offence under s. 236(1)(c) [now s. 255(1)(a)(iii)] where his two prior convictions for the offences contrary to ss. 234 [now 253] and 235 [now 254] were registered on the same day. In such circumstances he has had only one "warning" and is therefore only liable to be sentenced for a second offence under s. 236(1)(b) [now s. 255(1)(a)(ii)]: R. v. Skolnick (1982), 68 C.C.C. (2d) 385, 29 C.R. (3d) 143, [1982] 2 S.C.R. 47 (9:0).

A copy of a previous conviction certified in accordance with this section is admissible without compliance with the notice provisions of s. 28 of the Canada Evidence Act: R. v. Jonasson (1980), 56 C.C.C. (2d) 121, 5 Sask. R. 154 (C.A.).

Since proof of prior convictions is part of the sentencing hearing, the common law rule which permits the admission of evidence, even hearsay evidence, which is credible and trustworthy at a sentence hearing applies. Thus an extract of a provincial driving record although hearsay would be admissible. However, if the accuracy of the certificate is seriously put in issue, then it would be incumbent upon the Crown to call whoever signed the certificate and make him available for cross-examination: R. v. Albright (1987), 37 C.C.C. (3d) 105, 60 C.R. (3d) 97, [1987] 2 S.C.R. 383 (5:0).

An admission by the accused during his testimony in the trial proper, as to his prior criminal record is proof of that record for the purposes of sentencing: R. v. Protz (1984), 13 C.C.C. (3d) 107, [1984] 5 W.W.R. 263, 27 M.V.R. 85 (Sask. C.A.).

Proof of previous conviction must establish that the conviction was in Canada: R. v. Marois, [1969] 4 C.C.C. 208, [1968] Que.Q.B. 797n, (Que. C.A.).

It is the number of previous convictions, and not the number of times that s. 665 has been resorted to by the Crown that will determine the minimum penalty: R. v. Bohnet (1976), 31 C.C.C. (2d) 253. [1976] 6 W.W.R. 176 (N.W.T.C.A.).

Sentence

ACCUSED FOUND GUILTY MAY SPEAK TO SENTENCE.

668. Where a jury finds an accused guilty, or where an accused pleads guilty, the judge presiding at the trial shall ask the accused whether he has anything to say before sentence is passed on him, but an omission to comply with this section does not affect the validity of the proceedings. R.S., c. C-34, s. 595.

NOTE: Section 668 repealed (with heading) by 1995, c. 22, s. 4 (to come into force by order of the Governor in Council).

CROSS-REFERENCES

Provision for taking a guilty plea is set out in s. 606. Imposition of sentence is generally in accordance with the provisions of Part XXIII. However, special provision is made for sentencing in case of dangerous offenders pursuant to the provisions of Part XXIV.

ANNOTATIONS

The deliberate refusal of a trial judge to comply with this section constitutes a violation of the accused's rights under s. 7 of the Charter. While the error does not invalidate the earlier proceedings leading to conviction, it is not a sufficient remedy on appeal to merely give the accused an opportunity to make the submissions that he would have made before the trial judge. Rather, the appellate court should reduce the length of what otherwise was a fit sentence: R. v. Dennison (1990), 60 C.C.C. (3d) 342, 80 C.R. (3d) 78 (N.B.C.A.).

SENTENCE JUSTIFIED BY ANY COUNT.

669. Where one sentence is passed on a verdict of guilty on two or more counts of an indictment, the sentence is good if any of the counts would have justified the sentence. R.S., c. C-34, s. 596.

NOTE: Section 669 repealed by 1995, c. 22, s. 4 (to come into force by order of the Governor in Council).

CROSS-REFERENCES

Provisions respecting imposition of sentence are found in Part XXIII or exceptionally in the case of dangerous offenders in Part XXIV. Notwithstanding the provisions of this section, it is the general practice to impose sentence in respect of each count upon which the accused has been found guilty.

ANNOTATIONS

Although the imposition of a single sentence for two offences is permitted by this section it is preferable that one sentence be imposed for each conviction and the sentences may, of course, be made concurrent: R. v. Thorpe (1976), 32 C.C.C. (2d) 46 (Man. C.A.).

This section does not authorize the imposition of concurrent fines. A separate fine must be imposed with respect to each count: R. v. Stubel (1990), 25 M.V.R. (2d) 118 (Alta. C.A.).

Jurisdiction

JURISDICTION / Adjournment.

669.1 (1) Where any judge, court or provincial court judge by whom or which the plea of the accused or defendant to an offence was taken has not commenced to hear evidence, any judge, court or provincial court judge having jurisdiction to try the accused or defendant has jurisdiction for the purpose of the hearing and adjudication.

(2) Any court, judge or provincial court judge having jurisdiction to try an accused or a defendant, or any clerk or other proper officer of the court, or in the case of an offence punishable on summary conviction, any justice, may, at any time before or after the plea of the accused or defendant is taken, adjourn the proceedings. R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 137.

CROSS-REFERENCES

Where the trial has actually commenced with the taking of evidence but the judge has been unable to continue, see s. 669.2.

SYNOPSIS

Provided that no evidence has been called the judge before whom the accused has entered a plea is not “seized” of the matter and, therefore, another member of that court has jurisdiction to hear and decide the case (e.g., where the first judge is unavailable due to illness) (subsec. (1)).

Adjournments may be granted not only by a judge but also by the court clerk or other proper officer. Justices of the peace may adjourn summary conviction proceedings (subsec. (2)).

ANNOTATIONS

This section does not apply so as to give a judge other than the trial judge jurisdiction to hear a pre-trial application for an order allowing a defence expert access to the breathalyzer machine and to analyze samples of the accused’s breath: R. v. Delaney (1989), 48 C.C.C. (3d) 276, 89 N.S.R. (2d) 253, 13 M.V.R. (2d) 1 (C.A.).

This section applies to proceedings on a guilty plea. However, the judge has “commenced to hear evidence” when she hears the Crown’s version of the facts prior to deciding whether or not to accept the plea and thus, absent the circumstances set out in s. 669.2, the judge who took the plea and heard the evidence must also impose the sentence: R. v. Cataract (1994), 93 C.C.C. (3d) 483, 35 C.R. (4th) 186 sub nom., Saskatchewan (Attorney General) v. Saskatchewan (Provincial Court Judge), 81 W.A.C. 196 (Sask. C.A.).

CONTINUATION OF PROCEEDINGS / Where adjudication is made / Where no adjudication is made / Where no adjudication is made – jury trials / Where trial continued.

669.2 (1) Subject to this section, where an accused or a defendant is being tried by

(a) a judge or provincial court judge,

(b) a justice or other person who is, or is a member of, a summary conviction court, or

(c) a court composed of a judge and jury, as the case may be, and the judge, provincial court judge, justice or other person dies or is for any reason unable to continue, the proceedings may be continued before another judge, provincial court judge, justice or other person, as the case may be, who has jurisdiction to try the accused or defendant.

(2) Where a verdict was rendered by a jury or an adjudication was made by a judge, provincial court judge, justice or other person before whom the trial was commenced, the judge, provincial court judge, justice or other person before whom the proceedings are continued shall, without further election by an accused, impose the punishment or make the order that is authorized by law in the circumstances.

(3) Subject to subsections (4) and (5), where the trial was commenced but no adjudication was made or verdict rendered, the judge, provincial court judge, justice or other person before whom the proceedings are continued shall, without further election by an accused, commence the trial again as if no evidence had been taken.

(4) Where a trial that is before a court composed of a judge and a jury was commenced but no adjudication was made or verdict rendered, the judge before whom the proceedings are continued may, without further election by an accused,

(a) continue the trial; or

(b) commence the trial again as if no evidence had been taken.

(5) Where a trial is continued under paragraph (4)(a), any evidence that was adduced before a judge referred to in paragraph (1)(c) is deemed to have been adduced before the judge before whom the trial is continued but, where the prosecutor and the accused so agree, any part of that evidence may be adduced again before the judge before whom the trial is continued. R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 137; 1994, c. 44, s. 65.

CROSS-REFERENCES

Where the plea has been taken from the accused but the judge has not commenced to hear evidence than the provisions of s. 669.1 apply. As regards the preliminary inquiry, see s. 547.1

SYNOPSIS

This section deals with the continuation of proceedings where the trial judge dies or for any reason is unable to carry on with the proceedings.

Where a verdict has been rendered by a jury, or a finding of guilt has been made by a judge sitting alone, another judge may continue the proceedings and impose sentence (subsec. (2)).

If the trial has commenced but a verdict or decision has not yet been rendered, another judge may recommence the trial, without further election by the accused, as if no evidence had been taken (subsec. (3)). In essence, the original proceedings will be considered a mistrial. However, if the trial was a jury trial, the judge has the discretion to simply continue the trial.

ANNOTATIONS

Editor's Note: Some of the decisions noted below, although decided under the predecessor legislation, were felt to be relevant to these provisions.

Unless the situation falls precisely within one of the enumerated instances a judge has no jurisdiction after the commencement of trial to waive jurisdiction to another judge: Re Ramsey and The Queen (1972), 8 C.C.C. (2d) 188, 4 N.B.R. (2d) 809 (N.B.C.A.).

In the absence of provincial legislation, there being nothing in the Code covering the issue, once he has resigned, a County Court Judge has no power to impose sentence on an accused against whom a conviction was entered by his predecessor in office: Ritcey et al. v. The Queen (1980), 50 C.C.C. (2d) 481 (S.C.C.) (7:0).

Procedure – It was held, prior to the addition of subsecs. (4) and (5), that where subsec. (3) applies then, in the case of a jury trial, a new jury must be selected. Parliament could not have intended that the same jury would be required to rehear the same witnesses: R. v. Pasini (1991), 63 C.C.C. (3d) 436, 4 C.R. (4th) 188, [1991] R.J.Q. 669 (C.A.), affd 71 C.C.C. (3d) 573n (S.C.C.) (7:0).

Jurisdiction to declare mistrial [Also see notes under s. 653] – It would offend the principles of fundamental justice for a judge upon breakdown of the Crown’s case to declare a mistrial in order to give the prosecution an opportunity to strengthen its case against the accused by endeavouring to find additional evidence thereby depriving the accused of an acquittal: R. v. D.(T.C.) (1987), 38 C.C.C. (3d) 434 (Ont. C.A.).

A Judge sitting without a jury has jurisdiction to declare a mistrial. The power of a Judge to disqualify himself for good and sufficient reason is one which exists aside from this section: R. v. Bucholz (1976), 32 C.C.C. (2d) 331 (Ont. C.A.); Re The Queen and Jassman (1975), 27 C.C.C. (2d) 271 (B.C.S.C.). In both these cases the Courts refused to follow the case of Re McRitchie and The Queen (1974), 23 C.C.C. (2d) 255, [1975] 2 W.W.R. 383 (B.C.S.C.) which held that a Judge sitting alone has no power to declare a mistrial.

A provincial court judge who has made a finding of guilt still has power to declare a mistrial prior to imposition of sentence where he feels he must disqualify himself as where the police sent the judge certain information about the accused which was not disclosed to the defence and considered prejudicial: Re R. and Bertucci (1984), 11 C.C.C. (3d) 83, [1984] 2 W.W.R. 459 (Sask. C.A.).

JURISDICTION WHEN APPOINTMENT TO ANOTHER COURT.

669.3. Where a court composed of a judge and a jury, a judge or a provincial court judge is conducting a trial and the judge or provincial court judge is appointed to another court, he or she continues to have jurisdiction in respect of the trial until its completion. 1994, c. 44, s. 66.

SYNOPSIS

This section confirms the jurisdiction of a judge who has been appointed to another court to complete any trial that the judge was presiding over.

---

Formal Defects in Jury Process

---

JUDGMENT NOT TO BE STAYED ON CERTAIN GROUNDS.

670. Judgment shall not be stayed or reversed after verdict on an indictment
 (a) by reason of any irregularity in the summoning or empanelling of the jury; or
 (b) for the reason that a person who served on the jury was not returned as a juror by a sheriff or other officer. R.S., c. C-34, s. 598.

CROSS-REFERENCES

This section is one of several saving provisions respecting jury proceedings and thus, also see ss. 643(3), 671 and 672 and also consider the application of s. 686(1)(b)(iv).

SYNOPSIS

This section provides that formal defects in jury proceedings on indictment shall not be grounds for overturning or staying judgment. The “formal defects” identified in this section are irregularities in summoning or empanelling the jury and the presence on the jury of a person not returned by an appropriate officer.

ANNOTATIONS

Paragraph (a) of this section applies only to irregularities and has no application where the error is such that the accused has been deprived of a statutory right, or to an error depriving an accused of the right to a trial by a jury lawfully constituted. Thus it could not apply to a case where the trial judge, instead of following the procedure prescribed in s. 642 for summoning of talesmen, purported to continuously expand the jury panel by adding additional members with the result that these potential jurors who were directed by the Crown to stand by were never called again to be sworn, unless challenged: R. v. Rowbotham (1988), 41 C.C.C. (3d) 1, 63 C.R. (3d) 112 (Ont. C.A.).

DIRECTIONS RESPECTING JURY OR JURORS DIRECTORY.

671. No omission to observe the directions contained in any Act with respect to the qualification, selection, balloting or distribution of jurors, the preparation of the jurors' book, the selecting of jury lists, or the drafting of panels from the jury lists, is a ground for impeaching or quashing a verdict rendered in criminal proceedings. R.S., c. C-34, s. 599.

CROSS-REFERENCES

See the notes following s. 670, supra.

SYNOPSIS

This section provides that a failure to observe statutory procedural directions regarding juries is not grounds for quashing a jury's verdict.

ANNOTATIONS

The presence of an exempt person on a jury is not a ground for disturbing its legal verdict: R. v. Rushton (1974), 20 C.C.C. (2d) 297, 28 C.R.N.S. 120 (Ont. C.A.).

This section was applied where the jury panel was selected from the municipal electoral list and not the provincial electoral list as required by the Jury Act, R.S.N.B. 1973, c. J-3. The qualifications for both lists were the same: R. v. Arseneau (1977), 36 C.C.C. (2d) 65, 17 N.B.R. (2d) 292 (S.C. App. Div.) applying Reference re Regina v. Coffin (1956), 114 C.C.C. 1, 33 C.R. 1, [1956] S.C.R. 191.

SAVING POWERS OF COURT.

672. Nothing in this Act alters, abridges or affects any power or authority that a court or judge had immediately before April 1, 1955, or any practice or form that existed immediately before April 1, 1955, with respect to trials by jury, jury process, juries or jurors, except where the power or authority, practice or form is expressly altered by or is inconsistent with this Act. R.S., c. C-34, s. 600.

CROSS-REFERENCES

Also note s. 8 which preserves the criminal law of England that was in force in the province immediately before April 1, 1955, except as altered, varied, modified or affected by this Act or an Act of Parliament. Section 8(3) also preserves common law justifications, excuses and defences. The common law authority of the court to punish for contempt of court is preserved by s. 9.

SYNOPSIS

This section preserves powers held by judges prior to April 1, 1955, with respect to juries, except as altered by or inconsistent with the current Criminal Code.

ANNOTATIONS

This section preserves the common law power of a court to arrest judgment and discharge the accused, as where following verdict and the discharge of the jury the trial judge discovers that the accused was found guilty of an offence not known to law at the time of the incident. In this case, through an error in the drafting of the indictment, the accused was found guilty of dangerous driving causing death arising out of an incident prior to the enactment of that offence in December, 1985: R. v. Jacobson (1988), 46 C.C.C. (3d) 50, [1989] 1 W.W.R. 541, 11 M.V.R. (2d) 194 (Sask. C.A.).

Part XX.1 / MENTAL DISORDER

Transitional provision

Note: 1991, c. 43, s. 10 in force, except subsec. (8), provides as follows with the unproclaimed text of subsec. (8) printed in lightface italics:

10. (1) Any order for the detention of an accused or accused person made under section 614, 615 or 617 of the Criminal Code or section 200 or 201 of the National Defence Act, as those sections read immediately before the coming into force of section 3 or 18 of this Act, shall continue in force until the coming into force of section 672.64 of the Criminal Code, subject to any order made by a court or Review Board under section 672.54 of the Criminal Code.

(2) The Review Board of a province shall, within twelve months after the coming into force of this section, review the case of every person detained in custody in the province by virtue of an order of detention referred to in subsection (1).

(3) Sections 672.5 to 672.85 of the Criminal Code apply, with such modifications as the circumstances require, to a review under subsection (2) as if

(a) the review were a review of a disposition conducted pursuant to section 672.81 of that Act;

(b) the warrant issued by the lieutenant governor pursuant to which the person is being detained in custody were a disposition made under section 672.54 of that Act;

(c) there were included in the definition “designated offence” in subsection 672.64(1) of that Act a reference to any offence under any Act of Parliament, as that Act read at the time of the commission of the alleged offence for which the person is in custody, involving violence or a threat of violence to a person or danger to the safety or security of the public, including, without limiting the generality of the foregoing, a reference to the following sections of the Criminal Code, as those sections read immediately before January 4, 1983, namely,

(i) section 144 (rape),

(ii) section 145 (attempt to commit rape),

(iii) section 149 (indecent assault on female),

(iv) section 156 (indecent assault on male),

(v) section 245 (common assault),

(vi) section 246 (assault with intent); and

(d) there were included in the offences mentioned in paragraph 672.64(3)(a) a reference to any of the following offences under any Act of Parliament, as that Act read at the time of the commission of the alleged offence for which the person is in custody, namely,

(i) murder punishable by death or punishable by imprisonment for life, capital murder, non-capital murder and any offence of murder, however it had been described or classified by the provisions of the Criminal Code that were in force at that time, and

(ii) any other offence under any Act of Parliament for which a minimum punishment of imprisonment for life had been prescribed by law.

(4) The Attorney General of Canada shall appoint a Commissioner from among the judges of superior courts of criminal jurisdiction to review and determine, before the coming into force of section 672.64 of the Criminal Code, whether any person detained in custody by virtue of an order of detention described in subsection (1) would have been a dangerous mentally disordered accused under section 672.65 of the Criminal Code, if that section were in force at the time the order of detention was made.

(5) Where an order of detention referred to in subsection (1) was issued against a person found not guilty by reason of insanity of an offence that is a designated offence as defined in subsection 672.64(1) of the Criminal Code or that is included as a designated offence under paragraph (3)(c), the Attorney General of the province where the order was made, or of the province where the person is detained in custody, may apply to the Commissioner for review and determination of whether the person would be a dangerous mentally disordered accused.

(6) Sections 672.65 and 672.66 of the Criminal Code apply to an application made under subsection (5) with such modifications as the circumstances require, and

(a) in addition to the evidence described in paragraph 672.65(3)(a), the Commissioner shall consider any relevant evidence subsequent to the detention of the person in respect of whom the application is made; and

(b) where the Commissioner determines that the person would be a dangerous mentally disordered accused, the Commissioner may make an order that the person be detained in custody for a maximum of life.

(7) An order made by the Commissioner in respect of an application under this section shall have effect on the coming into force of section 672.64 of the Criminal Code and be subject to the rights of appeal described in sections 672.79 and 672.8 as if the order were an order of a court under section 672.65 of that Act.

(8) Where, before the coming into force of section 5 of this Act, a person has committed an offence but a sentence has not been imposed on that person for that offence, that person may be detained in accordance with section 736.11 of the Criminal Code, as enacted by section 6 of this Act.

Interpretation

---

DEFINITIONS / "Accused" / "Assessment" / "Chairperson" / "Court" / "Disposition" / "Dual status offender" / "Hospital" / "Medical practitioner" / "Party" / "Placement decision" / "Prescribed" / "Review Board" / "Verdict of not criminally responsible on account of mental disorder".

672.1. In this Part,

"accused" includes a defendant in summary conviction proceedings and an accused in respect of whom a verdict of not criminally responsible on account of mental disorder has been rendered;

"assessment" means an assessment by a medical practitioner of the mental condition of the accused pursuant to an assessment order made under section 672.11, and any incidental observation or examination of the accused;

"chairperson" includes any alternate that the chairperson of a Review Board may designate to act on the chairperson's behalf;

"court" includes a summary conviction court as defined in section 785, a judge, a justice and a judge of the court of appeal as defined in section 673;

"disposition" means an order made by a court or Review Board under section 672.54 or an order made by a court under section 672.58;

"dual status offender" means an offender who is subject to a sentence of imprisonment in respect of one offence and a custodial disposition under paragraph 672.54(c) in respect of another offence;

"hospital" means a place in a province that is designated by the Minister of Health for the province for the custody, treatment or assessment of an accused in respect of whom an assessment order, a disposition or a placement decision is made.

“medical practitioner” means a person who is entitled to practise medicine by the laws of a province;

“party” in relation to proceedings of a court or Review Board to make or review a disposition, means

- (a) the accused,
- (b) the person in charge of the hospital where the accused is detained or is to attend pursuant to an assessment order or a disposition,
- (c) an Attorney General designated by the court or Review Board under subsection 672.5(3),
- (d) any interested person designated by the court or Review Board under subsection 672.5(4), or
- (e) where the disposition is to be made by a court, the prosecutor of the charge against the accused;

“placement decision” means a decision by a Review Board under subsection 672.68(2) as to the place of custody of a dual status offender;

“prescribed” means prescribed by regulations made by the Governor in Council under section 672.95;

“Review Board” means the Review Board established or designated for a province pursuant to subsection 672.38(1); “verdict of not criminally responsible on account of mental disorder” means a verdict that the accused committed the act or made the omission that formed the basis of the offence with which the accused is charged but is not criminally responsible on account of mental disorder. 1991, c. 43, s. 4.

CROSS-REFERENCES

Reference should be had to the specific provisions of Part XX.1 of the Criminal Code. In particular, “electro-convulsive therapy” is defined in s. 672.61(2); “psychosurgery” is defined in s. 672.61(2); “protected statement” is defined in s. 672.21; and “Minister” is defined in s. 672.68(1).

Reference should also be made to s. 2 of the Criminal Code which includes definitions of “mental disorder” and “unfit to stand trial”.

Assessment Orders

ASSESSMENT ORDER.

672.11. A court having jurisdiction over an accused in respect of an offence may order an assessment of the mental condition of the accused, if it has reasonable grounds to believe that such evidence is necessary to determine

- (a) whether the accused is unfit to stand trial;
- (b) whether the accused was, at the time of the commission of the alleged offence, suffering from a mental disorder so as to be exempt from criminal responsibility by virtue of subsection 16(1);
- (c) whether the balance of the mind of the accused was disturbed at the time of commission of the alleged offence, where the accused is a female person charged with an offence arising out of the death of her newly-born child;
- (d) the appropriate disposition to be made, where a verdict of not criminally responsible on account of mental disorder or unfit to stand trial has been rendered in respect of the accused; or
- (e) whether an order should be made under subsection 736.11(1) to detain the accused in a treatment facility, where the accused has been convicted of the offence. 1991, c. 43, s. 4.

NOTE: Paragraph (e) amended 1995, c. 22, s. 10 (to come into force by order of the Governor in Council) by replacing the reference to s. 736.11(1) with s. 747.1(1).

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms “accused”, “assessment” and “verdict of not criminally responsible on account of insanity” are defined in s. 672.1. The terms “newly-born child”, “unfit to stand trial” and “mental disorder” are defined in s. 2. Paragraph (c) refers to the offence of infanticide, thus see s. 233. For further cross-references respecting the making of assessment orders, see the references under s. 672.12.

SYNOPSIS

The court is afforded a broad discretion to require an assessment of the accused’s mental condition where the court has jurisdiction over the accused in the course of a preliminary hearing, indictable trial, indictable appeal, summary conviction trial and summary conviction appeal.

An assessment order may be issued to determine: (1) fitness to stand trial; (2) exemption from criminal responsibility as a result of mental disorder; (3) mental condition with respect to infanticide; (4) the appropriate disposition where the accused is found unfit to stand trial or not criminally responsible on account of mental disorder; and (5) whether an order pursuant to s. 736.11(1) detaining the accused in a treatment facility subsequent to conviction is necessary.

Unlike the previous Criminal Code provisions, s. 672.11 does not require medical evidence in order to support the assessment order. An assessment order may be issued simply if the court has “reasonable ground to believe such evidence is necessary” to determine the aforementioned issues. Therefor, while medical evidence may be adduced, it would appear that the observations of the accused’s behavior by lay witnesses or the court would be sufficient to constitute reasonable grounds to require an assessment order.

ANNOTATIONS

This provision exhaustively sets out the circumstances in which a judge may make an assessment order. Inasmuch as s. 736.11 has not been proclaimed in force, the judge has no power to make an assessment order for the purposes of psychiatric assessment prior to sentencing. However, the judge may, in a proper case, resort to provincial legislation which permits a remand to a psychiatric facility to obtain a report as to the accused’s mental condition: R. v. Snow (1992), 76 C.C.C. (3d) 43, 10 O.R. (3d) 109 (Gen. Div.).

WHERE COURT MAY ORDER ASSESSMENT / Limitation on prosecutor’s application for assessment fitness / Limitation on prosecutor’s application for assessment.

672.12. (1) The court may make an assessment order at any stage of proceedings against the accused of its own motion, on application of the accused or, subject to subsections (2) and (3), on application of the prosecutor.

(2) Where the prosecutor applies for an assessment in order to determine whether the accused is unfit to stand trial for an offence that is prosecuted by way of summary conviction, the court may only order the assessment if

- (a) the accused raised the issue of fitness; or
- (b) the prosecutor satisfies the court that there are reasonable grounds to doubt that the accused is fit to stand trial.

(3) Where the prosecutor applies for an assessment in order to determine whether the accused was suffering from a mental disorder at the time of the offence so as to be exempt from criminal responsibility, the court may only order the assessment if

- (a) the accused puts his or her mental capacity for criminal intent into issue; or
- (b) the prosecutor satisfies the court that there are reasonable grounds to doubt that the accused is criminally responsible for the alleged offence, on account of mental disorder. 1991, c. 43, s. 4.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms “accused”, “assessment”, “court” and “verdict of not criminally responsible on account of insanity” are defined in s. 672.1. The term “prosecutor” is defined in ss. 2 and 785; and “unfit to stand trial” and “mental disorder” are defined in s. 2. The assessment order is in Form 48, see s. 672.13. As to grounds for making the order, see s. 672.11 and for the length of time that order may be in force, see ss. 672.14 and 672.15. The assessment order may require that the accused also be detained pursuant to s. 672.16 in which case the accused is not eligible for bail, s. 672.17. The court has power to vary the terms of the detention or interim release order under s. 672.18 but no assessment order may direct that the accused submit to treatment, s. 672.19. The order may require that a report be submitted, s. 672.2. Statements made by accused for the purposes of preparation of an assessment report are admissible in limited circumstances referred to in s. 672.21.

SYNOPSIS

The court may make an assessment order at any stage of the proceedings either on its own motion or on the application of the accused or the prosecutor.

The provision restricts, however, the availability of the application to the Crown in the context of summary conviction proceedings. In a summary conviction offence, the prosecutor may not make an application for an assessment order relating to the issue of fitness unless the accused has raised the issue of fitness or the prosecutor establishes that there are reasonable grounds to doubt the accused’s fitness. There are no similar restrictions on the Crown raising the issue of fitness in the context of an indictable offence.

Where the issue of the accused’s exemption from criminal responsibility as a result of a mental disorder is raised either in the context of a summary or indictable offence, the Crown may raise the issue only if the accused puts their mental capacity for criminal intent into issue or reasonable grounds to question the accused’s responsibility as a result of a mental disorder are established.

CONTENTS OF ASSESSMENT ORDER / Form.

672.13. (1) An assessment order must specify

- (a) the service that or the person who is to make the assessment, or the hospital where it is to be made;
- (b) whether the accused is to be detained in custody while the order is in force; and
- (c) the period that the order is to be in force, including the time required for the assessment and for the accused to travel to and from the place where the assessment is to be made.

(2) An assessment order may be in Form 48. 1991, c. 43, s. 4.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms “accused”, “assessment” and “hospital” are defined in s. 672.1. The length of time that an assessment order may be in force is governed by ss. 672.14 and 672.15. For further cross-references respecting the making of assessment orders, see the references under s. 672.12.

SYNOPSIS

The assessment order must specify the service or person who is to make the assessment or the hospital in which the assessment is to be conducted, whether the assessment is to be conducted in custody and the period of the order. An assessment order may be in the prescribed Form 48 which also provides the assessment officer with the reason for the assessment.

GENERAL RULE FOR PERIOD / Exception in fitness cases / Exception for compelling circumstances.

672.14. (1) An assessment order shall not be in force for more than thirty days.

(2) No assessment order to determine whether the accused is unfit to stand trial shall be in force for more than five days, excluding holidays and the time required for the accused to travel to and from the place where the assessment is to be made, unless the accused and the prosecutor agree to a longer period not exceeding thirty days.

(3) Notwithstanding subsections (1) and (2), a court may make an assessment order that remains in force for sixty days where the court is satisfied that compelling circumstances exist that warrant it. 1991, c. 43, s. 4.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms "accused", "assessment" and "hospital" are defined in s. 672.1. An assessment order may be extended pursuant to s. 672.14. For further cross-references respecting the making of assessment orders, see the references under s. 672.12.

SYNOPSIS

This provision provides a 30-day limitation for assessment orders despite the purpose of the assessment except in the case of a fitness assessment which is limited to five days. Notwithstanding these time limitations, however, the court does have the discretion to issue an assessment order for a period of not more than 60 days where the court is satisfied that "compelling circumstances" exist to do so.

EXTENSIONS / Maximum duration of extensions.

672.15. (1) Subject to subsection (2), a court may extend an assessment order, of its own motion or on the application of the accused or the prosecutor made during or after the period that the order is in force, for any further period that is required, in its opinion, to complete the assessment of the accused.

(2) No extension of an assessment order shall exceed thirty days, and the period of the initial order together with all extensions shall not exceed sixty days. 1991, c. 43, s. 4.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms "accused" and "assessment" are defined in s. 672.1. The term "prosecutor" is defined in s. 2. The limitations on the length of time for the initial order are set out in s. 672.14. For further cross-references respecting the making of assessment orders, see the references under s. 672.12.

SYNOPSIS

A court has the discretion to extend an assessment order either of its own motion or on the application of the accused or the prosecutor at any time during the force of the assessment order for a period of not more than 30 days at a time. In addition, the provision limits the extensions such that the period of the initial order together with all the extensions shall not exceed 60 days.

PRESUMPTION AGAINST CUSTODY / Report of medical practitioner / Presumption of custody in certain circumstances.

672.16. (1) Subject to subsection (3), an accused shall not be detained in custody pursuant to an assessment order unless

(a) the court is satisfied that on the evidence custody is necessary to assess the accused, or that on the evidence of a medical practitioner custody is desirable to assess the accused and the accused consents to custody;

- (b) custody of the accused is required in respect of any other matter or by virtue of any other provision of this Act; or
  - (c) the prosecutor, having been given a reasonable opportunity to do so, shows that detention of the accused in custody is justified on either of the grounds set out in subsection 515(10).
- (2) For the purposes of paragraph (1)(a), where the prosecutor and the accused agree, the evidence of a medical practitioner may be received in the form of a report in writing.
- (3) An accused who is charged with an offence described in any of paragraphs 515(6)(a) to (d) in the circumstances described in that paragraph, or an offence described in subsection 522(2), shall be detained in custody pursuant to an assessment order, unless the accused shows that custody is not justified under the terms of that paragraph or subsection. 1991, c. 43, s. 4.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms “accused” and “assessment” are defined in s. 672.1. The term “prosecutor” is defined in s. 2. Section 672.17 provides that during the time that the assessment order is in force no application may be made for interim release or detention in respect of the offence for which the order is made. However, provision is made to vary the terms of the detention or release order under s. 672.18. For further cross-references respecting the making of assessment orders, see the references under s. 672.12.

SYNOPSIS

An assessment order is presumed to be conducted out of custody unless custody is necessary or custody is desirable in view of the evidence of a medical practitioner and the accused consents to custody. In addition, an in-custody assessment will be conducted where the accused is required to be in custody in respect of any other matter or by virtue of any other provision of the Act or where the prosecutor shows that the detention of the accused is just on either the primary or secondary grounds set out in s. 515(10).

There is presumption of in-custody assessment, however, where the accused is charged with an offence described in any of s. 515(6)(a) to (d) or 552(2). In these circumstances, the accused must bear the burden of proof that an in-custody assessment is not just under the terms of that paragraph or subsection.

ASSESSMENT ORDER TAKES PRECEDENCE OVER BAIL HEARING.

672.17. During the period that an assessment order of an accused charged with an offence is in force, no order for the interim release or detention of the accused may be made by virtue of Part XVI or section 679 in respect of that offence or an included offence. 1991, c. 43, s. 4.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms “accused” and “assessment” are defined in s. 672.1. Provision for detention of an accused for the purposes of making the detention order is in s. 672.16 and to vary the terms of release or custody, see s. 672.18. For further cross-references respecting the making of assessment orders, see the references under s. 672.12.

SYNOPSIS

An assessment order takes priority over an interim release order and consequently, no interim release order or detention order may be issued during the period of the assessment order.

APPLICATION TO VARY ASSESSMENT ORDER.

672.18. Where at any time while an assessment order made by a court is in force the prosecutor or an accused shows cause, the court may vary the terms of the order respecting the interim release or detention of the accused in such manner as it considers appropriate in the circumstances. 1991, c. 43, s. 4.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms "accused" and "assessment" are defined in s. 672.1. "Prosecutor" is defined in s. 2. Provision for detention of an accused for the purposes of making the detention order is in s. 672.16 and for limitation on application for interim release or detention during the currency of the order, see s. 672.17. For further cross-references respecting the making of assessment orders see the references under s. 672.12.

SYNOPSIS

Notwithstanding s. 672.17, this provision authorizes the variation of an interim release order while an assessment order is in force.

---

NO TREATMENT ORDER ON ASSESSMENT.

672.19. No assessment order may direct that psychiatric or any other treatment of the accused be carried out, or direct the accused to submit to such treatment. 1991, c. 43, s. 4.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms "accused" and "assessment" are defined in s. 672.1. For further cross-references respecting the making of assessment orders, see the references under s. 672.12.

SYNOPSIS

Under this section, the scope of the assessment order is limited to examination and cannot direct treatment or that the accused submit to such treatment subject to the provisions of s. 672.58 which allow a treatment order to issue for a period of not more than 60 days where forced treatment will render the accused fit to stand trial.

---

Assessment Reports

---

ASSESSMENT REPORT / Assessment report to be filed with court / Court to send assessment report to Review Board / Copies of reports to accused and prosecutor.

672.2. (1) An assessment order may require the person who makes the assessment to submit in writing an assessment report on the mental condition of the accused.

(2) An assessment report shall be filed with the court that ordered it, within the period fixed by the court.

(3) The court shall send to the Review Board without delay a copy of any report filed with it pursuant to subsection (2), to assist in determining the appropriate disposition to be made in respect of the accused.

(4) Subject to subsection 672.51(3), copies of any report filed with a court pursuant to subsection (2) shall be provided without delay to the prosecutor, the accused and any counsel representing the accused. 1991, c. 43, s. 4.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms "accused", "assessment" and "Review Board" are defined in s. 672.1. "Prosecutor" is defined in s. 2. A limitation on the use of statements made by an accused in the course of preparation of the assessment report is set out in s. 672.21. For further cross-references respecting the making of assessment orders, see the references under s. 672.12.

SYNOPSIS

The court may require a written assessment report within a time period fixed by the court. Where such a report is received, a copy shall be provided to the prosecutor, the accused, any counsel to the accused and a copy shall also be forwarded to the Review Board to assist in the determination of the disposition relating to the accused.

It is important to note, however, that this provision is subject to the restrictions imposed in the disclosure of disposition information contained in s. 672.51. An assessment report may be withheld from the accused where its disclosure would endanger the safety of another person or would seriously impair the treatment or recovery of the accused.

Protected Statements

DEFINITION OF “PROTECTED STATEMENT” / Protected statements not admissible against accused / Exceptions.

672.21. (1) In this section, “protected statement” means a statement made by the accused during the course and for the purposes of an assessment or treatment directed by a disposition, to the person specified in the assessment order or the disposition, or to anyone acting under that person’s direction.

(2) No protected statement or reference to a protected statement made by an accused is admissible in evidence, without the consent of the accused, in any proceeding before a court, tribunal, body or person with jurisdiction to compel the production of evidence.

(3) Notwithstanding subsection (2), evidence of a protected statement is admissible for the purpose of

- (a) determining whether the accused is unfit to stand trial;
- (b) making a disposition or placement decision respecting the accused;
- (c) finding whether the accused is a dangerous mentally disordered accused under section 672.65;
- (d) determining whether the balance of the mind of the accused was disturbed at the time of commission of the alleged offence, where the accused is a female person charged with an offence arising out of the death of her newly-born child;
- (e) determining whether the accused was, at the time of the commission of an alleged offence, suffering from automatism or a mental disorder so as to be exempt from criminal responsibility by virtue of subsection 16(1), if the accused puts his or her mental capacity for criminal intent into issue, or if the prosecutor raises the issue after verdict;
- (f) challenging the credibility of an accused in any proceeding where the testimony of the accused is inconsistent in a material particular with a protected statement that the accused made previously; or
- (g) establishing the perjury of an accused who is charged with perjury in respect of a statement made in any proceeding. 1991, c. 43, s. 4.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms “accused”, “assessment” and “verdict of not criminally responsible on account of insanity” are defined in s. 672.1. The terms “newly-born child”, “prosecutor”, “unfit to stand trial” and “mental disorder” are defined in s. 2. Subsection (3)(d) refers to the offence of infanticide, thus see s. 233.

SYNOPSIS

This provision, in effect, establishes a narrow patient-doctor privilege in criminal law. The statutory privilege, however, applies only to "protected statements" which are defined as: (1) statements made by the accused in the course and for the purpose of an assessment or treatment directed by a disposition; and (2) statements must be made to a person specified in the assessment order or the disposition or to anyone acting under that persons's direction. Statements not made pursuant to compliance with a disposition or assessment order, therefore, do not fall within the scope of "protected statements" as defined by this privilege. It is important to note that this provision does not erode the solicitor-client privilege which attaches to assessments or examinations conducted independent of the court by a solicitor's agent.

In addition, the privilege is circumscribed in subsection (3) which mandates the admission of the evidence of a protected statement the following purposes: (1) to determine fitness; (2) at a determination of a disposition or placement decision; (3) to determine whether the accused is a dangerous mentally disordered person; (4) to determine whether the accused was disturbed where the offence is infanticide; (5) at a trial to determine if the accused is suffering from automatism or a mental disorder where the issue is raised either by the accused or by the prosecutor subsequent to the rendering of the verdict; (6) for the limited purpose of an inconsistent statement in a material issue; or (7) to establish a charge of perjury.

Fitness to Stand Trial

---

PRESUMPTION OF FITNESS.

672.22. An accused is presumed fit to stand trial unless the court is satisfied on the balance of probabilities that the accused is unfit to stand trial. 1991, c. 43, s. 4.

CROSS-REFERENCES

References should be made to s. 2 of the Criminal Code which defines "unfit to stand trial" and s. 672.1 which defines "accused". For further cross-references in respect of fitness to stand trial, see the references under s. 672.23.

SYNOPSIS

This provision entrenches a general presumption of fitness unless the court is satisfied on the balance of probabilities that the accused is unfit to stand trial.

COURT MAY DIRECT ISSUE TO BE TRIED / Burden of proof.

672.23. (1) Where the court has reasonable grounds, at any stage of the proceedings before a verdict is rendered, to believe that the accused is unfit to stand trial, the court may direct, of its own motion or on application of the accused or the prosecutor, that the issue of fitness of the accused be tried.

(2) An accused or a prosecutor who makes an application under subsection (1) has the burden of proof that the accused is unfit to stand trial. 1991, c. 43, s. 4.

CROSS-REFERENCES

To assist in the determination of the fitness issue, the court may make an assessment order which can include preparation of an assessment report. Thus, see ss. 672.11 to 672.21. Note in particular that the limitation on use of statements made by the accused in the course of the assessment does not apply to proceedings to determine fitness. Section 672.24 provides for the appointment of counsel for the purposes of the fitness hearing. Section 672.25 allows the court to postpone the fitness hearing and if the accused is acquitted then the issue is never tried, s. 672.3. Section 672.26 governs the procedure where the accused is to be tried by jury. Otherwise, pursuant to s. 672.27, the issue is tried by the “court” defined in s. 672.1 and, in particular, may be tried at the preliminary inquiry stage. The terms “unfit to stand trial” and “prosecutor” are defined in s. 2. If the accused is found to be fit to stand trial, then the trial proceeds in accordance with s. 672.28, although, under s. 672.29 provision may be made to permit the accused to remain in custody in a hospital where there is reason to believe that the accused may otherwise become unfit. If the accused is found unfit, then the proceedings are conducted in accordance with ss. 672.31 to 672.33. Note, in particular, provision for review every two years of the sufficiency of the evidence to put the accused on trial. While the accused is unfit, his or her case is reviewed by the Review Board, defined in s. 672.1 in accordance with ss. 672.38 to 672.53. Note, however, that the court which found the accused unfit may hold a disposition hearing itself in accordance with s. 672.45 and may also vacate any interim release or detention order in accordance with s. 672.46.

SYNOPSIS

The court may order the trial of the issue of fitness at any stage in the proceedings provided it is before a verdict is rendered either on its own motion or on the application of the accused or prosecutor. The court must be satisfied that there are reasonable grounds to believe that the issue of fitness should be tried and the party raising the issue of fitness bears the burden of proof in establishing there are reasonable grounds to try the issue.

ANNOTATIONS

Section 2 gives a statutory definition of “unfit to stand trial” in the following terms:

“unfit to stand trial” means unable on account of mental disorder to conduct a defence at any stage of the proceedings before a verdict is rendered or to instruct counsel to do so, and, in particular, unable on account of mental disorder to

- (a) understand the nature or object of the proceedings,
- (b) understand the possible consequences of the proceedings, or
- (c) communicate with counsel

The following cases were decided under the predecessor legislation [former s. 615] which, however, did not contain a statutory definition of unfitness. Nevertheless, it is suggested that many of the following cases will be applicable to the interpretation of this section.

Procedure on fitness hearing – The trial judge has a discretion as to whether or not he will submit the issue of the accused’s capacity to instruct counsel to the jury and furthermore, where there was no evidence to support such a request his refusal was justified: R. v. Wolfson, [1965] 3 C.C.C. 304, 46 C.R. 8 (Alta. S.C. App. Div.). See also R. v. Kolbe (1974), 27 C.R.N.S. 1, [1974] 4 W.W.R. 579 (Alta. S.C. App. Div.), where approval was given to the trial judge’s discretionary refusal when the issue was first raised after the accused had given evidence.

The predecessor to this section was held to envisage a two-stage process. The first stage is for the judge alone to decide whether there is sufficient reason to doubt that the accused is, on account of insanity, capable of conducting his defence. The second stage, which is only pursued if the first stage is answered affirmatively, is for the jury to determine whether the accused is fit to stand trial. In the first stage, it is not for the judge to determine any conflict of evidence. There is, however, a discretionary element and where the trial judge, who had the advantage of hearing the expert witnesses and observing the accused, determined that there was nothing in the evidence to support a finding that the accused was incapable of conducting his defence, then the appellate court will not interfere: R. v. McLeod, Pinnock and Farquharson (1983), 6 C.C.C. (3d) 29, 66 N.R. 309 (Ont. C.A.), affd as to Farquharson 27 C.C.C. (3d) 383n, [1986] 1 S.C.R. 703n, 66 N.R. 308.

The term “may”, as used in former s. 615(1) was held to intend to confer authority, rather than to vest in the trial judge a discretion. Where a doubt as to fitness arises, the accused has a statutory right to have the issue directed. A statement by counsel as to the fitness of the accused is entitled to very serious consideration. There is a discretion only in the limited sense that a court is not bound to try the issue where there is no real basis for the request and under subsec. (5)(a), the judge is expressly permitted to postpone the trial of the issue up to the opening of the case for the defence where it arises in the course of the Crown's case: R. v. Steele (1991), 63 C.C.C. (3d) 149, 4 C.R. (4th) 53, 36 Q.A.C. 47 (C.A.).

In the first stage of the inquiry, where the judge must determine whether or not there is sufficient reason to doubt that the accused is, on account of insanity, capable of conducting his defence and therefore, whether he should direct an inquiry into the accused's fitness to stand trial, the judge may act on the material placed before him by Crown and defence or direct that a further assessment of the accused be made. It may in some cases be necessary to hear psychiatrists and other witnesses: R. v. McIlvride (1986), 29 C.C.C. (3d) 348 (B.C.C.A.).

The trial of the issue as to whether the accused is fit to stand trial is a separate issue prior to trial, and accordingly, without the consent of the accused, medical evidence given in that prior proceeding cannot be automatically considered at trial without the doctor being recalled: R. v. Curran (1974), 21 C.C.C. (2d) 23, 9 N.B.R. (2d) 683 (C.A.).

Test for fitness to stand trial – The test of whether an accused is fit to stand trial is not whether or not he is able to act in his own best interests. The fact that the accused is emotionally unwilling to accept a defence of insanity and therefore refused to allow his counsel to advance this defence did not render him unfit. Reference Re: R. v. Gorecki (No. 1) (1976), 32 C.C.C. (2d) 129, 14 O.R. (2d) 212 (C.A.).

The test to be applied is one of limited cognitive ability, whether the accused understands the nature and object of the proceedings, understands the possible consequences, and can recount to counsel the necessary facts relating to the offence in such a way that counsel can then properly present a defence. It is not necessary that the accused be able to meet some higher test of analytic capacity or capacity to make rational decisions beneficial to himself: R. v. Taylor (1992), 77 C.C.C. (3d) 551, 17 C.R. (4th) 371, 11 O.R. (3d) 323 (C.A.).

An accused is incapable of conducting his defence if he cannot distinguish between available pleas; does not understand the nature or purpose of the proceedings, including the respective roles of the judge, jury and counsel; is unable to communicate with counsel rationally or make critical decisions on counsel's advice; or is unable to take the stand to testify if necessary: R. v. Steele, supra.

COUNSEL.

672.24. Where the court has reasonable grounds to believe that an accused is unfit to stand trial and the accused is not represented by counsel, the court shall order that the accused be represented by counsel. 1991, c. 43, s. 4.

CROSS-REFERENCES

For further cross-references respecting fitness to stand trial, see references under s. 672.23.

SYNOPSIS

Unlike the previous provision which afforded the court some discretion in the appointment of counsel, under the new provisions, where the issue of fitness arises with respect to an unrepresented accused, the court must appoint counsel for the accused.

ANNOTATIONS

Note: The following case was decided under the predecessor legislation, s. 615.

It is not, in general, the duty of the trial judge to force counsel on an accused. Where, however, it was the Crown who was seeking to rely on the insanity defence and it was unclear that the accused understood the consequences if the Crown was successful, the trial judge must be extremely careful to ensure that an accused who may be mentally ill is not prejudiced in his defence. Where the psychiatric evidence adduced by the Crown raised a doubt that the accused was, on account of insanity, capable of conducting his defence then the judge must conduct an inquiry into fitness and if necessary appoint counsel: R. v. Fairholm (1990), 60 C.C.C. (3d) 289 (B.C.C.A.).

POSTPONING TRIAL OF ISSUE / Idem.

672.25. (1) The court shall postpone directing the trial of the issue of fitness of an accused in proceedings for an offence for which the accused may be prosecuted by indictment or that is punishable on summary conviction, until the prosecutor has elected to proceed by way of indictment or summary conviction.

(2) The court may postpone directing the trial of the issue of fitness of an accused

- (a) where the issue arises before the close of the case for the prosecution at a preliminary inquiry, until a time that is not later than the time the accused is called on to answer to the charge; or
- (b) where the issue arises before the close of the case for the prosecution at trial, until a time not later than the opening of the case for the defence or, on motion of the accused, any later time that the court may direct. 1991, c. 43, s. 4.

ANNOTATIONS

Although subsec. (2) implies that the trial of the issue can be held at any time prior to the opening of the defence, in exercising this discretion the judge must consider whether there is any dispute as to the Crown's ability to demonstrate that the accused committed the offence. If there is a dispute, the trial judge should not decide the question of fitness without being satisfied that the Crown is in a position to establish that the accused committed the acts alleged. The trial judge may thus proceed with the trial proper or at least require the Crown to demonstrate at the outset of the fitness hearing that it is in a position to establish that the accused committed the acts alleged: R. v. Taylor (1992), 77 C.C.C. (3d) 551, 17 C.R. (4th) 371, 11 O.R. (3d) 323 (C.A.).

TRIAL OF ISSUE BY JUDGE AND JURY.

672.26. Where an accused is tried or is to be tried before a court composed of a judge and jury,

- (a) if the judge directs that the issue of fitness of the accused be tried before the accused is given in charge to a jury for trial on the indictment, a jury composed of the number of jurors required in respect of the indictment in the province where the trial is to be held shall be sworn to try that issue and, with the consent of the accused, the issues to be tried on the indictment; and
- (b) if the judge directs that the issue of fitness of the accused be tried after the accused has been given in charge to a jury for trial on the indictment, the jury shall be sworn to try that issue in addition to the issues in respect of which it is already sworn. 1991, c. 43, s. 4.

TRIAL OF ISSUE BY COURT.

672.27. The court shall try the issue of fitness of an accused and render a verdict where the issue arises.

- (a) in respect of an accused who is tried or is to be tried before a court other than a court composed of a judge and jury; or
- (b) before a court at a preliminary inquiry or at any other stage of the proceedings. 1991, c. 43, s. 4.

PROCEEDING CONTINUES WHERE ACCUSED IS FIT.

672.28. Where the verdict on trial of the issue is that an accused is fit to stand trial, the arraignment, preliminary inquiry, trial or other stage of the proceeding shall continue as if the issue of fitness of the accused had never arisen. 1991, c. 43, s. 4.

WHERE CONTINUED DETENTION IN CUSTODY.

672.29. Where an accused is detained in custody on delivery of a verdict that the accused is fit to stand trial, the court may order the accused to be detained in a hospital until the completion of the trial, if the court has reasonable grounds to believe that the accused would become unfit to stand trial if released. 1991, c. 43, s. 4.

---

ACQUITTAL.

672.3. Where the court has postponed directing the trial of the issue of fitness of an accused pursuant to subsection 672.25(2) and the accused is discharged or acquitted before the issue is tried, it shall not be tried. 1991, c. 43, s. 4.

---

CROSS-REFERENCES

Reference should be made to subsection 672.25(2) which affords the judge the discretion to postpone the trial of the issue of fitness if the issue arises before the close of the prosecution's case at a preliminary inquiry or trial until the accused is called on to answer the charge, until the opening of the accused's case or on motion of the accused until any later time that the court may direct. For further cross-references respecting fitness to stand trial, see references under s. 672.23.

SYNOPSIS

The issue of fitness is not to be tried where it has been postponed pursuant to s. 672.25(2) and the accused is discharged at the preliminary hearing or acquitted before the opening of the defence's case or until any later time as the court may direct.

---

VERDICT OF UNFIT TO STAND TRIAL.

672.31. Where the verdict on trial of the issue is that an accused is unfit to stand trial, any plea that has been made shall be set aside and any jury shall be discharged. 1991, c. 43, s. 4.

---

CROSS-REFERENCES

Where the accused is found unfit, then the procedure to be followed is set out in s. 672.45 et seq. For further cross-references respecting fitness to stand trial, see references under s. 672.23.

SYNOPSIS

This section requires that where the verdict in a trial turns on the issue of fitness to stand trial, any plea by the accused must be struck and any jury which has been empanelled must be discharged.

SUBSEQUENT PROCEEDINGS / Burden of proof.

672.32. (1) A verdict of unfit to stand trial shall not prevent the accused from being tried subsequently where the accused becomes fit to stand trial.

(2) The burden of proof that the accused has subsequently become fit to stand trial is on the party who asserts it, and is discharged by proof on the balance of probabilities. 1991, c. 43, s. 4.

CROSS-REFERENCES

Although the accused is found fit, the court may order that he or she be detained in a hospital if there is reason to believe the accused may become unfit otherwise, s. 672.29.

For further cross-references respecting fitness to stand trial, see references under s. 672.23.

SYNOPSIS

An accused who subsequently becomes fit to stand trial must be tried provided that the party asserting fitness establishes fitness on the balance of probabilities.

PRIMA FACIE CASE TO BE MADE EVERY TWO YEARS / Court may order inquiry to be held / Burden of proof / Admissible evidence at an inquiry / Conduct of inquiry / Where prima facie case not made.

672.33. (1) The court that has jurisdiction in respect of the offence charged against an accused who is found unfit to stand trial shall hold an inquiry, not later than two years after the verdict is rendered and every two years thereafter until the accused is acquitted pursuant to subsection (6) or tried, to decide whether sufficient evidence can be adduced at that time to put the accused on trial.

(2) On application of the accused, the court may order an inquiry under this section to be held at any time if it is satisfied, on the basis of the application and any written material submitted by the accused, that there is reason to doubt that there is a prima facie case against the accused.

(3) At an inquiry under this section, the burden of proof that sufficient evidence can be adduced to put the accused on trial is on the prosecutor.

(4) In an inquiry under this section, the court shall admit as evidence

- (a) any affidavit containing evidence that would be admissible if given by the person making the affidavit as a witness in court; or
- (b) any certified copy of the oral testimony given at a previous inquiry or hearing held before a court in respect of the offence with which the accused is charged.

(5) The court may determine the manner in which an inquiry under this section is conducted and may follow the practices and procedures in respect of a preliminary inquiry under Part XVIII where it concludes that the interests of justice so require.

(6) Where, on the completion of an inquiry under this section, the court is satisfied that sufficient evidence cannot be adduced to put the accused on trial, the court shall acquit the accused. 1991, c. 43, s. 4.

CROSS-REFERENCES

Reference should be made to s. 2 of the Criminal Code which defines “unfit to stand trial” and s. 672.1 which defines “accused” and “Review Board”. While the accused is unfit, his or her case is reviewed by the Review Board in accordance with ss. 672.38 to 672.53.

For further cross-references in respect of fitness to stand trial, see the references under s. 672.23.

SYNOPSIS

This provision imposes a continuing obligation on the Crown, with respect to an unfit accused, to demonstrate its case every two years such that no individual declared unfit to stand trial may continue to be held where the Crown is unable to prove the charge against the accused if required to do so.

In addition, the accused may apply for a review of the case at any time pursuant to s. 672.33(2) provided it is established that there is reason to doubt that there is a prima facie case against the accused. In either case, the Crown bears the burden of establishing that a prima facie case still exists against the accused. If on completion of an inquiry under this section, the court is satisfied that a prima facie does not exist, the court shall acquit the accused.

The procedure prescribed by the provisions with respect to such an inquiry allows the court to consider evidence in the form of oral testimony at a previous hearing in respect of the same offence or affidavit evidence containing admissible evidence of a person who would be a witness in court. In addition, s. 672.33(5) also allows the procedure in respect of a preliminary inquiry under Part XVIII to be adopted where the court concludes that the interests of justice so require.

Verdict of Not Criminally Responsible on Account of Mental Disorder

VERDICT OF NOT CRIMINALLY RESPONSIBLE ON ACCOUNT OF MENTAL DISORDER.

672.34. Where the jury, or the judge or provincial court judge where there is no jury, finds that an accused committed the act or made the omission that formed the basis of the offence charged, but was at the time suffering from mental disorder so as to be exempt from criminal responsibility by virtue of subsection 16(1), the jury or the judge shall render a verdict that the accused committed the act or made the omission but is not criminally responsible on account of mental disorder. 1991, c. 43, s. 4.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term "mental disorder" is defined in s. 2 and "verdict of not criminally responsible on account of mental disorder" is defined in s. 672.1. Reference should be made to s. 16 which contains the defence of not criminally responsible on account of mental disorder.

Reference should also be made to s. 672.54(a) authorizing the court or Review Board to either discharge the accused absolutely subsequent to a finding of not criminally responsible on account of mental disorder or direct the accused to be detained where the accused is a significant threat to the safety of the public.

SYNOPSIS

This provision replaces the previous terminology of "not guilty by reason of insanity" with "not criminally responsible on account of mental disorder". The verdict is defined to mean that the person committed the act or omission but is not criminally responsible on account of mental disorder.

ANNOTATIONS

The following cases were decided under the predecessor legislation, s. 614 but may be of assistance in applying these new provisions.

It was held that former s. 614(1) was mandatory and a new trial was ordered on a Crown appeal where the trial judge failed to direct the jury that if they found the accused not guilty by reason of insanity they must so state in their verdict: R. v. Potvin (1971), 16 C.R.N.S. 233 (Que. C.A.).

In R. v. Conkie (1978), 39 C.C.C. (2d) 408, 3 C.R. (3d) 7 (Alta. S.C. App. Div.) the court considered whether the trial judge should inform the jury of the consequences of an insanity verdict. Leberman, J.A., was of the view that he should in certain circumstances where a possible misapprehension that the accused would go free if found not guilty by reason of insanity could affect the jury's verdict. Such a case would be where the evidence discloses the accused is a dangerous individual and defence counsel has not referred to this subsection in his jury address. Moir, J.A., considered that the judge was not required to so inform the jury, the practice in Alberta being that defence counsel could enforce the jury in his jury address. Haddad, J.A., while leaning to the view that the judge should inform the jury of the provisions of this subsection did not feel that in this case it was necessary to decide the issue.

EFFECT OF VERDICT OF NOT CRIMINALLY RESPONSIBLE ON ACCOUNT OF MENTAL DISORDER.

672.35. Where a verdict of not criminally responsible on account of mental disorder is rendered, the accused shall not be found guilty or convicted of the offence, but

- (a) the accused may plead autrefois acquit in respect of any subsequent charge relating to that offence;
- (b) any court may take the verdict into account in considering an application for judicial interim release or in considering what dispositions to make or sentence to impose for any other offence; and
- (c) the National Parole Board or any provincial parole board may take the verdict into account in considering an application by the accused for parole or pardon in respect of any other offence. 1991, c. 43, s. 4.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term “mental disorder” is defined in s. 2. The term “verdict of not criminally responsible on account of mental disorder” is defined in s. 672.1. Reference should also be made to s. 672.36 excluding the verdict of not criminally responsible on account of mental disorder from the meaning of a previous conviction for the purpose of any offence under any Act of Parliament for which an increased penalty is provided by reason of a previous conviction.

SYNOPSIS

Although the verdict of not criminally responsible on account of mental disorder is not a previous conviction for the purpose of any offence for which a greater punishment is provided by reason of previous convictions (see s. 672.36), the verdict may be used as a basis for the accused to plead autrefois acquit in respect of a subsequent charge relating to the offence, for the purpose of judicial interim release, disposition or sentence with respect to any other offence and by the National Parole Board or any provincial parole board for the purpose of considering an application for parole or pardon with respect to any other offence.

VERDICT NOT A PREVIOUS CONVICTION.

672.36. A verdict of not criminally responsible on account of mental disorder is not a previous conviction for the purposes of any offence under any Act of Parliament for which a greater punishment is provided by reason of previous convictions. 1991, c. 43, s. 4.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term “mental disorder” is defined in s. 2. The term “verdict of not criminally responsible on account of mental disorder” is defined in s. 672.1.

Reference should be made to s. 672.35 which states that a verdict of not criminally responsible on account of mental disorder may be relied on in the following circumstances: (1) by the accused to plead autrefois acquit [s. 672.35(a)]; (2) by the court in an application for judicial interim release [s. 672.35(b)]; (3) by the court in considering the sentence or disposition in another offence [s. 672.35(b)]; and (4) by the National Parole Board or any provincial parole board in considering an application for a parole or pardon in respect of any other offence [s. 672.35(c)].

SYNOPSIS

A finding of not criminally responsible on account of mental disorder cannot be used as a previous conviction in a subsequent proceeding under any federal act for which a greater punishment is provided by reason of previous convictions such as the offence of impaired driving.

DEFINITION OF "APPLICATION FOR FEDERAL EMPLOYMENT" / Application for federal employment / Punishment.

672.37. (1) In this section, "application for federal employment" means an application form relating to

- (a) employment in any department, as defined in section 2 of the Financial Administration Act;
- (b) employment by any Crown corporation as defined in subsection 83(1) of the Financial Administration Act;
- (c) enrollment in the Canadian Forces; or
- (d) employment in connection with the operation of any work, undertaking or business that is within the legislative authority of Parliament.

(2) No application for federal employment shall contain any question that requires the applicant to disclose any charge or finding that the applicant committed an offence that resulted in a finding or a verdict of not criminally responsible on account of mental disorder if the applicant was discharged absolutely or is no longer subject to any disposition in respect of that offence.

(3) Any person who uses or authorizes the use of an application for federal employment that contravenes subsection (2) is guilty of an offence punishable on summary conviction. 1991, c. 43, s. 4.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term "mental disorder" is defined in s. 2. The term "verdict of not criminally responsible on account of mental disorder" is defined in s. 672.1. Reference should be made to s. 2 of the Financial Administration Act defining "department" and s. 83(1) of the Act defining "Crown corporation".

SYNOPSIS

This provision creates the summary conviction offence of use or authorizing the use of an application for federal employment that contains a question requiring the applicant to disclose a charge or finding regarding the commission of an offence that resulted in a finding of not criminally responsible on account of mental disorder where the applicant was discharged or is not subject to any disposition.

An "application for federal employment" is defined as an application relating to employment in the following: any department as defined in s. 2 of the Financial Administration Act; any Crown corporation as defined in s. 83(1) of the Financial Administration Act; enrollment in the Canadian Forces or in the operation of any work, undertaking or business that is within the legislative authority of Parliament.

Review Boards

REVIEW BOARDS TO BE ESTABLISHED / Treated as provincial Board.

672.38. (1) A Review Board shall be established or designated for each province to make or review dispositions concerning any accused in respect of whom a verdict of not criminally responsible by reason of mental disorder or unfit to stand trial is rendered, and shall consist of not fewer than five members appointed by the lieutenant governor in council of the province.

(2) A Review Board shall be treated as having been established under the laws of the province. 1991, c. 43, s. 4.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms “unfit to stand trial” and “mental disorder” are defined in s. 2. The terms “accused”, “not criminally responsible on account of mental disorder”, “chairperson”, “medical practitioner” and “Review Board” are defined in s. 672.1.

The constitution of the Review Board is outlined in ss. 672.39 to 672.44. In particular, the board must have at least one member who is entitled to practise psychiatry in that province and where there is only one member qualified in psychiatry, the board must have another member entitled to practice medicine or psychology by virtue of s. 672.39. The chairperson of the board must be a judge or a person who is so qualified or has retired as a judge of the Federal Court or of a superior, district or county court [s. 672.4(1)]. Where the board is established prior to the coming into force of s. 672.4(1), the existing chairperson who is not a judge may continue to act until the end of his term if at least one other member of the board is a judge or person referred to in subsection (1) or a member of the bar of the province. Pursuant to s. 672.41, a quorum is constituted by a chairperson, a psychiatrist and any other member unless the board pre-existed the new provisions in which case the quorum may be composed of a chairperson, a psychiatrist and a member who is referred to in that subsection or a member of the bar. A decision of the majority is a decision of the Review Board [s. 672.42]. Pursuant to s. 672.43, the chairperson has all the powers of a commissioner conferred by ss. 4 and 5 of the Inquiries Act in disposition or review hearings held by the board. In addition, the Review Board is entitled to make rules relating to practice and procedure before the board, subject to the approval of the lieutenant governor in council of the province [s. 672.44].

As to disposition hearings before the Review Board, see ss. 672.46 to 672.49. As to the procedure on disposition hearings before the Review Board, see s. 672.5. As to the release of disposition information by the Review Board, see ss. 672.51 to 672.52. As to the power of the Review Board to make dispositions in relation to an accused, see ss. 672.54 to 672.57 and 672.63. As to appeals from a decision of the Review Board, see ss. 672.72 to 672.8 and as to the review of dispositions of a court or Review Board, see ss. 672.81 to 672.85.

SYNOPSIS

This provision requires the establishment of Review Boards by the province. In addition, subsec. (2) provides that the Review Board is treated as having been established under provincial law thus excluding the application of the Federal Court Act to the actions of the Review Board.

The Review Board must consist of at least five members who are appointed by the lieutenant governor in council of the province.

MEMBERS OF REVIEW BOARD.

672.39. A Review Board must have at least one member who is entitled under the laws of a province to practise psychiatry and, where only one member is so entitled at least one other member must have training and experience in the field of mental health, and be entitled under the laws of a province to practise medicine or psychology. 1991, c. 43, s. 4.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms “chairperson”, “medical practitioner” and “Review Board” are defined in s. 672.1. Reference should also be made to s. 672.4 which requires the chairperson of the Review Board to be a judge, or a person who is qualified or retired from judicial office. If the Review Board pre-exists the new provisions, however, the chairperson may continue to act until the end of his term provided that another member of the board is a judge, a person qualified for or retired from judicial office or a member of the bar.

For further cross-references respecting the Review Board, see references under s. 672.38.

SYNOPSIS

Section 672.39 prescribes the composition of the Review Board which must have at least one member of the board who is a psychiatrist. Where there is only one member trained in psychiatry, at least one other member of the Review Board must be trained in the practise of medicine or psychology.

---

CHAIRPERSON OF A REVIEW BOARD / Transitional.

672.4. (1) Subject to subsection (2), the chairperson of a Review Board shall be a judge of the Federal Court or of a superior, district or county court of a province, or a person who is qualified for appointment to, or has retired from, such a judicial office.

(2) Where the chairperson of a Review Board that was established before the coming into force of subsection (1) is not a judge or other person referred to therein, the chairperson may continue to act until the expiration of his or her term of office if at least one other member of the Review Board is a judge or other person referred to in subsection (1) or is a member of the bar of the province. 1991, c. 43, s. 4.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms "chairperson" and "Review Board" are defined in s. 672.1. For further cross-references respecting Review Boards, see references under s. 672.38.

SYNOPSIS

The chairperson of a Review Board must be a retiring, acting or qualified judge of the Federal Court or of a superior, district or county court of a province. Where, however, the Review Board pre-exists the new provisions, a chairperson who is not a judge may continue to act until the end of his term provided that at least one member of the Review Board is a judge or member of the bar of that province.

---

QUORUM OF REVIEW BOARD / Transitional.

672.41. (1) Subject to subsection (2), the quorum of a Review Board is constituted by the chairperson, a member who is entitled under the laws of a province to practise psychiatry, and any other member.

(2) Where the chairperson of a Review Board that was established before the coming into force of this section is not a judge or other person referred to in subsection 672.4(1), the quorum of the Review Board is constituted by the chairperson, a member who is entitled under the laws of a province to practise psychiatry, and a member who is a person referred to in that subsection or a member of the bar of the province. 1991, c. 43, s. 4.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term "Review Board" and "chairperson" are defined in s. 672.1. For further cross-references respecting Review Boards, see references under s. 672.38.

SYNOPSIS

A Review Board must have a quorum of three persons composed of the chairperson, a psychiatrist and any other member.

Where the Review Board pre-exists the new provisions, however, the quorum must be constituted of the chairperson, a psychiatrist and a judge or member of the bar of the province.

---

MAJORITY VOTE.

672.42. A decision of a majority of the members present and voting is a decision of a Review Board. 1991, c. 43, s. 4.

CROSS-REFERENCES

“Review Board” is defined in s. 672.1. For further cross-references respecting Review Boards, see references under s. 672.38.

SYNOPSIS

A decision of the majority governs the Review Board.

POWERS OF REVIEW BOARDS.

672.43. At a hearing held by a Review Board to make a disposition or review a disposition in respect of an accused, the chairperson has all the powers that are conferred by sections 4 and 5 of the Inquiries Act on persons appointed as commissioners under Part I of that Act. 1991, c. 43, s. 4.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms “accused”, “Review Board”, “chairperson” and “disposition” are defined in s. 672.1. In addition, reference should be made to ss. 4 and 5 of the Inquiries Act which outline the powers of a person appointed as a commissioner. For further cross-references respecting “Review Boards”, see references under s. 672.38.

SYNOPSIS

A chairperson of the Review Board has all the powers of a commissioner conferred by ss. 4 and 5 of the Inquiries Act.

RULES OF REVIEW BOARD / Application and publication of rules / Regulations.

672.44. (1) A Review Board may, subject to the approval of the lieutenant governor in council of the province, make rules providing for the practice and procedure before the Review Board.

(2) The rules made by a Review Board under subsection (1) apply to any proceeding within its jurisdiction, and shall be published in the Canada Gazette.

(3) Notwithstanding anything in this section, the Governor in Council may make regulations to provide for the practice and procedure before Review Boards, in particular to make the rules of Review Boards uniform, and all regulations made under this subsection prevail over any rules made under subsection (1). 1991, c. 43, s. 4.

CROSS-REFERENCES

“Review Board” is defined in s. 672.1. The procedures to be followed by a Review Board with respect to a disposition hearing are outlined in s. 672.5. With respect to procedures of the Review Board to be followed in the review of dispositions, see s. 672.83. For further cross-references respecting Review Boards, see references under s. 672.38.

SYNOPSIS

A Review Board has the authority to make rules as to the practice of the Review Board subject to the approval of the lieutenant governor. The Governor in Council, however, may also make rules for practice and procedure in order to make Review Board practices uniform. The Federal rules take precedence over any rules established by the provincial Review Board.

Disposition Hearings

HEARING TO BE HELD BY A COURT / Disposition to be made.

672.45. (1) Where a verdict of not criminally responsible on account of mental disorder or unfit to stand trial is rendered in respect of an accused, the court may of its own motion, and shall on application by the accused or the prosecutor, hold a disposition hearing.

(2) At a disposition hearing, the court shall make a disposition in respect of the accused, if it is satisfied that it can readily do so and that a disposition should be made without delay. 1991, c. 43, s. 4.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms "mental disorder", "prosecutor" and "unfit to stand trial" are defined in s. 2. The terms "accused", "court", "disposition" and "verdict of not criminally responsible on account of mental disorder" are defined in s. 672.1.

The court may choose not to exercise its discretion to hold a disposition hearing, in which case, a disposition hearing must be held by the Review Board within 45 days subsequent to the verdict unless there are exceptional circumstances warranting a court to extend the time limit. See s. 672.47(1) and (2). In addition, pursuant to s. 672.47(3), even if the court has rendered a disposition subsequent to a hearing, the Review Board must hold a review hearing not less than 90 days subsequent to the disposition. Where the court does not make a disposition, the accused's release or detention order continues in force until the Review Board renders a disposition [s. 672.46(1)]. It is important to note that, notwithstanding this subsection, a court may vary or vacate any order or detain the accused until the disposition hearing if the court considers it appropriate to do so. The procedures to be followed in a review hearing are set out in s. 672.5. See also s. 672.52 requiring a record of the proceedings of the hearing to be kept. Pursuant to s. 672.53, any procedural irregularity in a disposition hearing does not render the hearing a nullity unless the accused is caused substantial prejudice as a result of the irregularity. Pursuant to s. 672.48, where the Review Board either holds a disposition hearing or a review hearing and finds the accused fit to stand trial subsequent to a finding of unfitness, the board must order that the accused be sent to trial. The Review Board has the power to detain the accused pursuant to s. 672.49 subsequent to a finding of fitness if there are grounds to believe that, if the accused were released, he would subsequently become unfit. Reference should also be had to s. 672.51 which provides a definition for "disposition information" and under what circumstances this information may be released to the accused, a party or a non-party.

As to the power of the Review Board to make dispositions in relation to an accused, see ss. 672.54 to 672.57 and 672.63. As to appeals from a decision of the Review Board, see ss. 672.72 to 672.8 and as to the review of dispositions of a court or Review Board, see ss. 672.81 to 672.85.

SYNOPSIS

Subsequent to a finding of unfitness or not criminally responsible on account of mental disorder, the court has the discretion on its own motion to hold a disposition hearing. Where the application to hold a disposition hearing is brought by the accused or the prosecutor, however, the provision requires that the court hold a disposition hearing.

Section 672.45(2) establishes a test for the jurisdiction of the court in disposition hearings. The court is required to make a disposition only if it is satisfied that it can readily do so and that the disposition should be made without delay.

ANNOTATIONS

In R. v. Swain (1991), 63 C.C.C. (3d) 481, 5 C.R. (4th) 253, 125 N.R. 1 (S.C.C.) the court held that the predecessor legislation, which also provided for the confinement of persons found to be not guilty by reason of insanity, was a valid exercise of Parliament's criminal law power under s. 91(27) of the Constitution Act, 1867. There is no reason to believe that this legislation would not also be held to be valid criminal law. [The predecessor legislation was, however, held to violate ss. 7 and 9 of the Charter.]

STATUS QUO PENDING REVIEW BOARD HEARING / Variation of order.

672.46. (1) Where the court does not make a disposition in respect of the accused at a disposition hearing, any order for the interim release or detention of the accused or any appearance notice, promise to appear, summons, undertaking or recognizance in respect of the accused that is in force at the time the verdict of not criminally responsible on account of mental disorder or unfit to stand trial is rendered continues in force, subject to its terms, until the Review Board makes a disposition.

(2) Notwithstanding subsection (1), a court may, on cause being shown, vacate any order, appearance notice, promise to appear, summons, undertaking or recognizance referred to in that subsection and make any other order for the interim release or detention of the accused that the court considers to be appropriate in the circumstances, including an order directing that the accused be detained in custody in a hospital pending a disposition by the Review Board in respect of the accused. 1991, c. 43, s. 4.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms “accused”, “court” and “disposition” are defined in s. 672.1. Reference should also be made to Part XVI of the Criminal Code as to compelling the appearance of the accused by way of order for interim release, detention, appearance notice, promise to appear, summons or undertaking or recognizance. For further cross-references respecting disposition hearing, see references under s. 672.45.

SYNOPSIS

Where the court does not make a disposition, the accused’s release or detention order continues in force until the review board renders a disposition. [s. 672.46(1)].

Notwithstanding subsection (1), however, a court may vary or vacate any order or detain the accused until the disposition hearing if the court considers it appropriate to do so.

REVIEW BOARD TO MAKE DISPOSITION WHERE COURT DOES NOT / Extension of time for hearing / Where disposition made by court.

672.47. (1) Where a verdict of not criminally responsible on account of mental disorder or unfit to stand trial is rendered and the court makes no disposition in respect of an accused, the Review Board shall, as soon as is practicable but not later than forty-five days after the verdict was rendered, hold a hearing and make a disposition.

(2) Where the court is satisfied that there are exceptional circumstances that warrant it, the court may extend the time for holding a hearing under subsection (1) to a maximum of ninety days after the verdict was rendered.

(3) Where a court makes a disposition under section 672.54 other than an absolute discharge in respect of an accused, the Review Board shall hold a hearing on a day not later than the day on which the disposition ceases to be in force, and not later than ninety days after the disposition was made, and shall make a disposition in respect of the accused. 1991, c. 43, s. 4.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms “mental disorder”, “prosecutor” and “unfit to stand trial” are defined in s. 2. The terms “accused”, “court”, “disposition”, “Review Board” and “verdict of not criminally responsible on account of mental disorder” are defined in s. 672.1. A disposition other than an absolute discharge is an order discharging the accused with conditions or an order detaining the accused in custody in a hospital, see s. 672.54(b) and (c). As to the procedures to be followed at a disposition hearing before the Review Board, see s. 672.5. As to the review of dispositions made by the Review Board, see s. 672.81 requiring a review every 12 months. For further cross-references respecting disposition hearings, see references under s. 672.45.

SYNOPSIS

If the court does not exercise its discretion to make a disposition after the accused is found to be unfit or not criminally responsible on account of mental disorder pursuant to s. 672.4, the Review Board must hold a disposition hearing not later than 45 days subsequent to the verdict unless the court is satisfied that there are exceptional circumstances warranting an extension of the time period.

Where the court has made a disposition pursuant to s. 672.54 other than an absolute discharge, the Review Board must hold a hearing not later than the day on which the disposition expires and, in any event, not later than 90 days subsequent to the court disposition.

(3) The chairperson of a Review Board may, with the consent of the accused and the person in charge of the hospital where an accused is being detained, order that the accused be sent back to court for trial of the issue of whether the accused is unfit to stand trial, where the chairperson is of the opinion that

(a) the accused is fit to stand trial; and

(b) the Review Board will not hold a hearing to make or review a disposition in respect of the accused within a reasonable period. 1991, c. 43, s. 4.

CROSS-REFERENCES

Reference should be made to s. 2 of the Criminal Code which defines "unfit to stand trial" and to s. 672.1 which defines "accused", "chairperson", "court", "hospital" and "Review Board". If the accused is found to be fit to stand trial, then the trial proceeds in accordance with s. 672.28, although under s. 672.29, provision may be made to permit the accused to remain in custody in a hospital where there is reason to believe that the accused may otherwise become unfit. For further references as to the issue of fitness, see cross-references under s. 672.23 and for further cross-references respecting the disposition hearings, see s. 672.45.

SYNOPSIS

This provision requires the Review Board, during the course of the making or review of a disposition of unfitness where he is subsequently found fit, to send the accused back to trial. In addition, the chairperson may, with the consent of the accused and the person in charge of the hospital, dispense with the hearing and send the accused back to trial where the chairperson is of the opinion that the accused is presently fit to stand trial. For further cross-references respecting disposition hearings, see references under s. 672.44.

672.49. (1) In a disposition made pursuant to section 672.47 the Review Board or chairperson may require the accused to continue to be detained in a hospital until the court determines whether the accused is fit to stand trial, if the Review Board or chairperson has reasonable grounds to believe that the accused would become unfit to stand trial if released.

(2) The Review Board or chairperson shall send a copy of a disposition made pursuant to section 672.47 without delay to the court having jurisdiction over the accused and to the Attorney General of the province where the accused is to be tried. 1991, c. 43, s. 4.

CROSS-REFERENCES

Section 2 of the Criminal Code defines “unfit to stand trial”. The terms “accused”, “chairperson”, “disposition”, “hospital” and “Review Board” are defined in s. 672.1. See also s. 672.29 which accords the court the same power to detain the accused where the release of the accused could render the accused unfit. Further cross-references respecting disposition hearings may be found in references under s. 672.45.

SYNOPSIS

The Review Board or the chairperson has the discretion to detain the accused until the court determines the issue of fitness if there are reasonable grounds to believe that the accused would become unfit if released.

Subsection (2) provides for notice requiring the Review Board or chairperson to send a copy of the disposition to the court having jurisdiction over the accused and the Attorney General of the province in which the accused is to be tried.

- (b) cause the accused to be removed and barred from re-entry for the whole or any part of the hearing
  - (i) where the accused interrupts the hearing so that to continue in the presence of the accused would not be feasible,
  - (ii) on being satisfied that failure to do so would likely endanger the life or safety of another person or would seriously impair the treatment or recovery of the accused, or
  - (iii) in order to hear, in the absence of the accused, evidence, oral or written submissions, or the cross-examination of any witness concerning whether grounds exist for removing the accused pursuant to subparagraph (ii).

(11) Any party may adduce evidence, make oral or written submissions, call witnesses and cross-examine any witness called by any other party and, on application, cross-examine any person who made an assessment report that was submitted to the court or Review Board in writing.

(12) A party may not compel the attendance of witnesses, but may request the court or the chairperson of the Review Board to do so. 1991, c. 43, s. 4.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term "unfit to stand trial" is defined in s. 2 of the Criminal Code. The terms "accused", "court", "disposition", "party" and "Review Board" are defined in s. 672.1.

Pursuant to s. 672.84, the Review Board shall hold a review hearing under s. 672.81 or 672.82 in accordance with the procedures described in s. 672.5. Where the court is exercising its review power pursuant to s. 672.33 to determine whether there is sufficient evidence to put the accused on trial after a verdict of unfit to stand trial has been rendered, the court does not follow the procedures outlined in s. 672.5 but, pursuant to s. 672.33 (5), the court may determine the manner in which the inquiry is conducted and has the discretion to incorporate the procedures in respect of a preliminary inquiry under Part XVIII. Reference should be made to s. 672.51(8) regulating the disclosure of "disposition information" obtained at disposition hearings during which the accused was excluded from the proceedings. Disposition information is defined in s. 672.51. In particular, note that no information may be disclosed to either the accused or a non-party where the accused has been excluded from the proceedings pursuant to s. 672.5(10)(b)(ii) or (iii). For further cross-references respecting disposition hearings, see references under s. 672.45.

SYNOPSIS

This section sets out the procedures to be followed at disposition hearings by courts and review boards. The court or Review Board may designate, as a party on an application, the Attorney General of the province where the disposition was made or, where the accused is transferred from another province, the Attorney General of the province from which the accused is transferred. In addition, the court or Review Board has the power to designate any person as a party if they have a substantial interest in protecting the interests of the accused, provided that it is satisfied that it is just to so designate the party.

General notice provisions provide that notice of the hearing be given to the parties and the Attorney General of the province where the disposition is made or the Attorney General of the province from which the accused has been transferred whether or not the Attorney General has been made a party to the proceedings. The specific time period within which notice is to be provided is not specified in the section but is to be fixed by the rules of the court or Review Board [s. 672.5(5)]. The proceedings are conducted in an open forum subject to the right of the court or review board to exclude the public where it is in the best interests of the accused and not contrary to the public interest to do so [s. 672.5(6)].

The provisions allow for the hearings to be conducted in an informal manner [s. 672.5(2)]. A party is entitled to adduce evidence, make oral or written submissions, call and cross-examine witnesses and on application, cross-examine any person who made an assessment report which is submitted to the court or Review Board. However, no party has the authority to compel the attendance of any witness. The attendance of a witness may be compelled, only, by the court or chairperson of the Review Board on the request of a party [s. 672.5(11), (12)].

Section 672.5(7) creates the right of the accused or any other party to the proceedings to be represented by counsel. Where the accused is not represented, the court or Review Board must assign counsel to act for an accused who has been found unfit to stand trial or wherever the interests of justice so require.

The accused has the prima facie right to be present at a disposition hearing. The accused may be permitted to be absent on such conditions as the court or chairperson deems appropriate. The court or chairperson of the Review Board also has the authority to bar the accused from the hearing if the accused interrupts the hearing to the point that continuation is not feasible, where it is necessary so as not to endanger the life or safety of another person, where continued attendance would seriously impair the treatment or recovery of the accused or in order to hear evidence relating to the grounds for removing the accused pursuant to s. 672.5(10)(b)(ii).

ANNOTATIONS

Subsection (6) does not infringe ss. 7 and 15 of the Charter. It is appropriate that the board be required to take into account the public interest in determining whether or not to exclude the public: Blackman v. British Columbia (Review Board) (1995), 95 C.C.C. (3d) 412, 88 W.A.C. 170, 27 C.R.R. (2d) 106 (B.C.C.A.).

DEFINITION OF “DISPOSITION INFORMATION” / Disposition information to be made available to parties / Exception where disclosure dangerous to any person / Idem / Exception where disclosure unnecessary or prejudicial / Exclusion of certain persons from hearing / Prohibition of disclosure in certain cases / Idem / Information to be made available to specified persons / Disclosure for research or statistical purposes / Prohibition on publication / Powers of courts not limited.

672.51. (1) In this section, “disposition information” means all or part of an assessment report submitted to the court or Review Board and any other written information before the court or Review Board about the accused that is relevant to making a disposition.

(2) Subject to this section, all disposition information shall be made available for inspection by, and the court or Review Board shall provide a copy of it to, each party and any counsel representing the accused.

(3) The court or Review Board shall withhold some or all of the disposition information from an accused where it is satisfied, on the basis of that information and the evidence or report of the medical practitioner responsible for the assessment or treatment of the accused, that disclosure of the information would be likely to endanger the life or safety of another person or would seriously impair the treatment or recovery of the accused.

(4) Notwithstanding subsection (3), the court or Review Board may release some or all of the disposition information to an accused where the interests of justice make disclosure essential in its opinion.

(5) The court or Review Board shall withhold disposition information from a party other than the accused or an Attorney General, where disclosure to that party, in the opinion of the court or Review Board, is not necessary to the proceeding and may be prejudicial to the accused.

(6) A court or Review Board that withholds disposition information from the accused or any other party pursuant to subsection (3) or (5) shall exclude the accused or the other party, as the case may be, from the hearing during

(a) the oral presentation of that disposition information; or

(b) the questioning by the court or Review Board or the cross-examination of any person concerning that disposition information.

(7) No disposition information shall be made available for inspection or disclosed to any person who is not a party to the proceedings

(a) where the disposition information has been withheld from the accused or any other party pursuant to subsection (3) or (5); or

(b) where the court or Review Board is of the opinion that disclosure of the disposition information would be seriously prejudicial to the accused and that, in the circumstances, protection of the accused takes precedence over the public interest in disclosure.

(8) No part of the record of the proceedings in respect of which the accused was excluded pursuant to subparagraph 672.5(10)(b)(ii) or (iii) shall be made available for inspection to the accused or to any person who is not a party to the proceedings.

(9) Notwithstanding subsections (7) and (8), the court or Review Board may make any disposition information, or a copy of it, available on request to any person or member of a class of persons

(a) that has a valid interest in the information for research or statistical purposes, where the court or Review Board is satisfied that disclosure is in the public interest;

(b) that has a valid interest in the information for the purposes of the proper administration of justice; or

(c) that the accused requests or authorizes in writing to inspect it, where the court or Review Board is satisfied that the person will not disclose or give to the accused a copy of any disposition information withheld from the accused pursuant to subsection (3) or (5), or any part of the record of proceedings referred to in subsection (8), or that the reasons for withholding that information from the accused no longer exist.

(10) A person to whom the court or Review Board makes disposition information available under paragraph (9)(a) may disclose it for research or statistical purposes, but not in any form or manner that could reasonably be expected to identify any person to whom it relates.

(11) No person shall publish in any newspaper within the meaning of section 297 or broadcast

(a) any disposition information that is prohibited from being disclosed pursuant to subsection (7); or

(b) any part of the record of the proceedings in respect of which the accused was excluded pursuant to subparagraph 672.5(10)(b)(ii) or (iii).

(12) Except as otherwise provided in this section, nothing in this section limits the powers that a court may exercise apart from this section. 1991, c. 43, s. 4.

CROSS-REFERENCES

“Newspaper” is defined in s. 297. The terms “accused”, “court”, “disposition” and “Review Board” are defined in s. 672.1 of the Criminal Code. Pursuant to s. 672.5(10)(b)(ii) and (iii), an accused may be excluded from the court if failure to do so would endanger the life or safety of another person, impair the treatment or recovery of the accused or to hear submissions and witnesses as to the grounds which exist for removing the accused. Information obtained during these hearings may not be released to the accused. For further cross-references respecting disposition hearings, see references under s. 672.45.

SYNOPSIS

This provision sets out the circumstances in which “disposition information” may be disclosed to or withheld from parties to the disposition hearing as well as non-parties. Section 672.51(1) broadly defines “disposition information” to include all or part of any assessment and any other written information that is before the court or Review Board and is relevant to making a disposition.

The provision entrenches the general principle that any party or counsel representing the accused is entitled to a copy of all disposition information. Pursuant to s. 672.51(3), information may be withheld from the accused in one of two circumstances: (1) where disclosure would endanger the life or safety of another person; or (2) where disclosure would seriously impair either the treatment or recovery of the accused. The discretion to withhold disposition information, however, is subject to s. 672.51(4) which mandates the disclosure of the information notwithstanding subsec. (3) where the interests of justice make disclosure necessary. Nonetheless, evidence of proceedings pursuant to s. 672.5(10)(b)(ii) or (iii) relating to the exclusion of the accused from the hearing may not be disclosed to either the accused or any non-party.

Where disclosure is to a party who is not the accused or the Attorney General, the provision set out a different test. Pursuant to s. 672.51(5), disposition information may be withheld where disclosure is not necessary and would be prejudicial to the accused.

In determining the issue of disclosure, the court or review board must exclude either the accused or other party while hearing evidence relating to the disposition information in question.

A non-party is not entitled to any disposition information either where the disposition information has been withheld from the accused or another party, where the disclosure would be seriously prejudicial to the accused and in the circumstances, protection of the accused takes precedence over public interest in disclosure. No person is entitled to publish in any newspaper or broadcast any disposition information that is withheld or any part of the record of the proceedings in relation to the exclusion of the accused from the hearing pursuant to s. 672.5(10)(b)(ii) or (iii). Notwithstanding the general prohibition on disclosure of disposition information to non-parties, the court or Review Board has the discretion to disclose the information to persons performing research or statistical work where disclosure is in the public interest, to individuals having a valid interest in the information for the purpose of the proper administration of justice, and to persons authorized or requested by the accused to inspect the information where the court or Review Board is satisfied that the person will not disclose or give the accused a copy of the information withheld from the accused.

Pursuant to s. 672.51(12), the power of the court is not limited in the disclosure of information beyond the provisions of this section.

RECORD OF PROCEEDINGS / Transmittal of transcript to Review Board / Reasons for disposition and copies to be provided.

672.52. (1) The court or Review Board shall cause a record of the proceedings of its disposition hearings to be kept, and include in the record any assessment report submitted.

(2) Where a court makes a disposition, it shall send without delay a transcript of the disposition hearing, any document or information relating thereto in the possession of the court, and all exhibits filed with the court or copies of these exhibits, to the Review Board that has jurisdiction in respect of the matter.

(3) The court or Review Board shall state its reasons for making a disposition in the record of the proceedings, and shall provide every party with a copy of the disposition and those reasons. 1991, c. 43, s. 4.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms "court", "party" and "Review Board" are defined in s. 672.1. As to the material to be filed on appeal of a disposition or placement decision of the court or Review Board, see s. 672.73 requiring that an appeal is to be based on a transcript of proceedings. As to the review of dispositions by the Review Board, see ss. 672.81 to 672.85. For further references respecting disposition hearings, see references under s. 672.45.

SYNOPSIS

This provision establishes several requirements on the court or Review Board with respect to the preservation of a record for appeal purposes. Pursuant to subsec. (1), the court or Review Board must ensure that a record of the proceedings including any assessment report is kept. Where the court makes a disposition, a transcript of the hearing and any other relevant documentation including exhibits must be forwarded to the Review Board that has jurisdiction [s. 672.52(2)].

In addition, there is a requirement that the court or Review Board provide reasons for the disposition on the record and provide each party with a copy of those reasons [s. 672.52(3)].

PROCEEDINGS NOT INVALID.

672.53. Any procedural irregularity in relation to a disposition hearing does not affect the validity of the hearing unless it causes the accused substantial prejudice. 1991, c. 43, s. 4.

CROSS-REFERENCES

As to the procedures to be followed at a disposition hearing, see s. 672.5. For further cross-references respecting disposition hearings, see s. 672.45.

- (a) where a verdict of not criminally responsible on account of mental disorder has been rendered in respect of the accused and, in the opinion of the court or

- Review Board, the accused is not a significant threat to the safety of the public, by order, direct that the accused be discharged absolutely;
- (b) by order, direct that the accused be discharged subject to such conditions as the court or Review Board considers appropriate; or
- (c) by order, direct that the accused be detained in custody in a hospital, subject to such conditions as the court or Review Board considers appropriate. 1991, c. 43, s. 4.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms “mental disorder”, “prosecutor” and “unfit to stand trial” are defined in s. 2 of the Criminal Code. The terms “accused”, “court”, “disposition”, “hospital”, “Review Board” and “verdict of not criminally responsible on account of mental disorder” are defined in s. 672.1.

A disposition under s. 672.54 cannot include a requirement that the accused submit to treatment subject to s. 672.58 which allows the court to order that the accused submit to such treatment as is not excluded by s. 672.61 where doing so is likely to render the accused fit. See also ss. 672.59 and 672.6 which define the conditions under which such a disposition can be made. A disposition comes into force the day it is made or any later day that the court or Review Board specifies and shall remain in force until the day it expires. A court cannot order a disposition requiring the accused to be detained in custody or in a hospital pursuant to s. 672.54 for more than 90 days after which the Review Board must hold a hearing and make a disposition in respect of the accused by virtue of s. 672.47. Where the court chooses not to hold a disposition hearing, the Review Board must hold a hearing within 45 days subject to the court’s discretion to extend this time period for not more than 90 days (ss. 672.45 and 672.46). A disposition detaining the accused requires the Review Board to issue a warrant of committal which may be in Form 49 (s. 672.57). Reference should also be made to s. 672.56 which allows the Review Board to make a disposition which delegates a person in charge of the hospital authorized to increase or decrease the liberty of the accused. Where increased restrictions on the accused’s liberty exceed seven days, the Review Board must be notified and pursuant to s. 672.81(2)(b), the Review Board must hold a hearing to review the disposition of the accused.

As to appeals from a decision of the Review Board, see ss. 672.72 to 672.8 and as to the review of dispositions of a court or Review Board, see ss. 672.81 to 672.85. For further cross-references with respect to disposition hearings, see references under s. 672.45.

SYNOPSIS

This provision establishes both the test for a disposition and the forms of dispositions which may be issued by a court or Review Board.

In making a disposition, the court is required to operate on the principle that the least restrictive and onerous alternative to the accused should be pursued, having considered the following factors: (1) the need to protect the public; (2) mental condition of the accused; (3) reintegration of the accused into society; and (4) other needs of the accused.

The Review Board may either discharge the accused with respect to such conditions as are appropriate, detain the accused in a hospital or, where the verdict of not criminally responsible on account of mental disorder is rendered and the accused is not a significant threat to the safety of the public, discharge the accused absolutely. The court has similar powers, except that the detention order continues in force for no longer than 90 days [s. 672.55].

ANNOTATIONS

If, after considering the factors in this section, the Board is undecided on whether the accused is a significant threat, then it may properly decline to order an absolute discharge under para. (a), and it may proceed to decide what other disposition it should make. The accused is entitled to an absolute discharge only where the Board has made an affirmative finding that the accused is not a significant threat. Thus, if the Board were of the opinion that the accused, while not a significant threat if he continues his medication, may become a significant threat if he does not take his medication, then the Board cannot be said to have an affirmative opinion that the accused is not a significant threat. However, there is a distinction between a threat and a significant threat: Orlowski v. British Columbia (Attorney General); Alexander v. British Columbia (Attorney General); Humphreys v. British Columbia (Attorney General) (1992), 75 C.C.C. (3d) 138, 94 D.L.R. (4th) 541 (B.C.C.A.).

Except in cases where an adverse finding under para. (a) can be necessarily inferred from the reasons for disposition, the Board should make an express finding as to whether it is of the opinion that the accused is not a significant threat. This finding may merely be that the Board is not of the opinion that the accused is entitled to an absolute discharge but explanatory reasons should be given in almost all cases: Orlowski v. British Columbia (Attorney General); Alexander v. British Columbia (Attorney General); Humphreys v. British Columbia (Attorney General), supra.

Proceedings before the Board under this section are not adversarial nor penal in purpose or effect. The task of the Board is to balance the protection of society on the one hand and the right of the accused to his liberty, unless deprived of it in accordance with the principles of fundamental justice. There is no burden on the Crown or the hospital to prove beyond a reasonable doubt that the accused is not a significant risk to the public and s. 7 of the Charter does not require that the statutory scheme be interpreted so as to impose such a burden: Davidson v. British Columbia (Attorney General) (1994), 87 C.C.C. (3d) 269, 50 W.A.C. 111 (B.C.C.A.); similarly, Peckham v. Ontario (Attorney General), (1994) 93 C.C.C. (3d) 443, 34 C.R. (4th) 227, 19 O.R. (3d) 766 (C.A.), leave to appeal to S.C.C. refused 94 C.C.C. (3d) vi, 37 C.R. (4th) 399n.

It was not open to the Board to accept the recommendation of the hospital and order that the accused be released unconditionally where his basic condition was untreatable and it was clear that, since he had consistently refused treatment, the accused's problems remained unresolved. The accused was a nuisance and the administrators of the hospital sought to get rid of him either by proposing that he be sent to some other institution or that he be released unconditionally so that when he ran afoul of the law, as it was conceded that he would, he could be dealt with by the criminal justice system. The question the review board should have asked itself was how it could effectively supervise a reintegration of the accused into society when he wilfully refused to abide by the conditions of release that were imposed earlier. For the accused to be discharged absolutely, the Board had to form the opinion that the accused was not a significant threat to the safety of the public: R. v. Jones (1994), 87 C.C.C. (3d) 350, 27 C.R. (4th) 238, 17 O.R. (3d) 26 (C.A.).

In considering the "mental condition" of the accused, the Board is required to consider the accused's mental condition at the time of the hearing. There is nothing in this section suggesting that the Board must first decide whether the mental condition which first led to the finding that the accused is not criminally responsible still exists: Peckham v. Ontario (Attorney General) (1994), 93 C.C.C. (3d) 443, 34 C.R. (4th) 227, 19 O.R. (3d) 766, 74 O.A.C. 121 sub nom. R. v. Peckham (C.A.), leave to appeal to S.C.C. refused 94 C.C.C. (3d) vi, 37 C.R. (4th) 399n.

Only three dispositions are possible under this section, and consideration of the least onerous and least restrictive disposition is required only with respect to a determination as to whether the accused should be absolutely discharged, discharged subject to conditions, or detained in a hospital subject to conditions. Once that determination was made, it was not necessary that the Board, in imposing conditions, consider whether the type of hospital or the conditions contemplated would be the least onerous and least restrictive. However, once the Board determines the appropriate type of facility in which to detain an accused, it must make a disposition in conformity with that determination: Pinet v. Ontario (1995), 100 C.C.C. (3d) 343, 40 C.R. (4th) 113, 23 O.R. (3d) 97 (C.A.).

TREATMENT NOT A CONDITION / Effective period of disposition.

672.55. (1) No disposition made under section 672.54 shall direct that any psychiatric or other treatment of the accused be carried out or that the accused submit to such treatment.

(2) No disposition made under paragraph 672.54(c) by a court shall continue in force for more than ninety days after the day that it is made. 1991, c. 43, s. 4.

CROSS-REFERENCES

Pursuant to s. 672.58, the court can issue an order directing that the accused submit to treatment for a period of not more than 90 days, where a verdict of unfit to stand trial has been rendered and the treatment is rendered for the purpose of making the accused fit. Section 672.59 outlines the necessary evidence required to obtain a treatment order and s. 672.61 precludes the use of electro-convulsive therapy or psychosurgery as part of the treatment order. “Electro-convulsive therapy” and “psychosurgery” are defined in s. 672.61(2). The term “unfit to stand trial” is defined in s. 2 of the Criminal Code.

SYNOPSIS

The power of the court or Review Board cannot encompass an order for psychiatric or other treatment of the accused or an order requiring the accused to submit to such treatment. This provision also limits the period for which an accused may be detained in custody in a hospital, pursuant to a court ordered disposition, to a period not exceeding 90 days.

DELEGATED AUTHORITY TO VARY RESTRICTIONS ON LIBERTY OF ACCUSED / Notice to accused and Review Board of increase in restrictions.

672.56. (1) A Review Board that makes a disposition in respect of an accused under paragraph 672.54(b) or (c) may delegate to the person in charge of the hospital authority to direct that the restrictions on the liberty of the accused be increased or decreased within any limits and subject to any conditions set out in that disposition, and any direction so made is deemed for the purposes of this Act to be a disposition made by the Review Board.

(2) A person who increases the restrictions on the liberty of the accused significantly pursuant to authority delegated to the person by a Review Board shall

- (a) make a record of the increased restrictions on the file of the accused; and
- (b) give notice of the increase as soon as is practicable to the accused and, if the increased restrictions remain in force for a period exceeding seven days, to the Review Board. 1991, c. 43, s. 4.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms “accused”, “disposition”, “hospital” and “Review Board” are defined in s. 672.1. Where the Review Board receives notice of increased restrictions on the accused’s liberty for a period of more than seven days, s. 672.81(2)(a) requires the board to hold a hearing to review the disposition. For further cross-references as to dispositions, see references under s. 672.54.

SYNOPSIS

The Review Board may direct that the restrictions on the liberty of the accused be increased or decreased where the accused is discharged with conditions or detained in a hospital. Although the facility has the discretion to increase the restrictions on the accused’s liberty, these increased restrictions must be recorded and notice must be given to the accused. Where the restrictions remain in force for a period of more than seven days, notice must be provided to the Review Board which, by virtue of s. 672.81(2)(a), will be required to hold a review hearing.

WARRANT OF COMMITTAL.

672.57. Where the court or Review Board makes a disposition under paragraph 672.54(c), it shall issue a warrant of committal of the accused, which may be in Form 49. 1991, c. 43, s. 4.

CROSS-REFERENCES

For further references with respect to dispositions, see references under s. 672.54.

SYNOPSIS

This provision requires the issuance of a warrant of committal which may be in Form 49 where the accused is detained in custody by order of the Review Board in a hospital pursuant to s. 672.54(c).

TREATMENT DISPOSITION.

672.58. Where a verdict of unfit to stand trial is rendered and the court has not made a disposition under section 672.54 in respect of an accused, the court may, on application by the prosecutor, by order, direct that treatment of the accused be carried out for a specified period not exceeding sixty days, subject to such conditions as the court considers appropriate and, where the accused is not detained in custody, direct that the accused submit to that treatment by the person or at the hospital specified. 1991, c. 43, s. 4.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term "unfit to stand trial" and "prosecutor" are defined in s. 2 of the Criminal Code. The terms "accused", "court", "disposition" and "hospital" are defined in s. 672.1. A treatment order requires the consent of the person in charge of the hospital treating the accused and the person assigned to treat the accused but does not require the consent of the accused or a person authorized to consent to treatment on the accused's behalf (s. 672.62). The prosecutor must give the accused notice of the application and the accused must be allowed to adduce evidence challenging the application (s. 672.6). The test which must be met and the type of evidence adduced for the court to issue a treatment order is set out in s. 672.59 and requires a medical doctor to have assessed the accused and concluded that: (1) at the time of the assessment, the accused was unfit; (2) the medical or psychiatric treatment will render the accused fit within 60 days; (3) the risk of harm to the accused from the treatment is not disproportionate to the expected benefit; and (4) the treatment is the least restrictive and intrusive method available to render the accused fit to stand trial. The treatment order cannot include the performance of psychosurgery or electro-convulsive therapy which are defined in s. 672.61(2). For further references as to fitness to stand trial, see references under s. 672.23.

SYNOPSIS

Where the issue is the fitness of the accused, the prosecutor may apply to the court for an order directing that the accused submit to treatment for a period not exceeding 60 days whether the accused is or is not in custody. The application for a treatment order must be made subsequent to a verdict of unfit to stand trial but prior to the court making a disposition in the matter.

CRITERIA FOR DISPOSITION / Evidence required.

672.59. (1) No disposition may be made under section 672.58 unless the court is satisfied, on the basis of the testimony of a medical practitioner, that a specific treatment should be administered to the accused for the purpose of making the accused fit to stand trial.

(2) The testimony required by the court for the purposes of subsection (1) shall include a statement that the medical practitioner has made an assessment of the accused and is of the opinion, based on the grounds specified, that

- (a) the accused, at the time of the assessment, was unfit to stand trial;
- (b) the psychiatric treatment and any other related medical treatment specified by the medical practitioner will likely make the accused fit to stand trial within a period not exceeding sixty days and that without that treatment the accused is likely to remain unfit to stand trial;
- (c) the risk of harm to the accused from the psychiatric and other related medical treatment specified is not disproportionate to the benefit anticipated to be derived from it; and
- (d) the psychiatric and other related medical treatment specified is the least restrictive and least intrusive treatment that could, in the circumstances, be specified for the purpose referred to in subsection (1), considering the opinions referred to in paragraphs (b) and (c). 1991, c. 43, s. 4.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term “unfit to stand trial” and “prosecutor” are defined in s. 2 of the Criminal Code. The terms “accused”, “court”, “disposition” and “hospital” are defined in s. 672.1. The application must be brought by the prosecutor and served upon the accused and cannot extend for a period of more than 60 days, see s. 672.58 and 672.6. In addition, a treatment order cannot include electro-convulsive therapy or psychosurgery as defined in s. 672.61(2).

SYNOPSIS

The court may not make a treatment order unless it is satisfied on the basis of medical testimony that the treatment is required to render the accused fit to stand trial. The medical doctor must have assessed the accused and concluded that: (1) at the time of the assessment, the accused was unfit; (2) the medical or psychiatric treatment will render the accused fit within 60 days; (3) the risk of harm to the accused from the treatment is not disproportionate to the expected benefit; and (4) the treatment is the least restrictive and intrusive available to render the accused fit to stand trial.

NOTICE REQUIRED / Challenge by accused.

672.6. (1) The court shall not make a disposition under section 672.58 unless the prosecutor notifies the accused of the application, within the time and in the manner prescribed.

(2) On receiving the notice referred to in subsection (1), the accused may challenge the application and adduce evidence for that purpose. 1991, c. 43, s. 4.

CROSS-REFERENCES

As to the application for a treatment order, the prescribed requirements, see ss. 672.58 and 672.59. As to prohibited treatments, see s. 672.61. The court may not issue a treatment order without the consent of the person in charge of the hospital where the accused is to be treated and the person treating the accused, but the accused’s consent to treatment is not required. See s. 672.62.

SYNOPSIS

This provision requires that the accused be given notice by the prosecutor of the treatment application and allowed the opportunity to adduce evidence challenging the application.

EXCEPTION / Definitions / “electro-convulsive therapy” / “psychosurgery”.

672.61. (1) The court shall not direct, and no disposition made under section 672.58 shall include, the performance of psychosurgery or electro-convulsive therapy or any other prohibited treatment that is prescribed.

(2) In this section,

“electro-convulsive therapy” means a procedure for the treatment of certain mental disorders that induces, by electrical stimulation of the brain, a series of generalized convulsions;

“psychosurgery” means any procedure that by direct or indirect access to the brain removes, destroys or interrupts the continuity of histologically normal brain tissue, or inserts indwelling electrodes for pulsed electrical stimulation for the purpose of altering behaviour or treating psychiatric illness, but does not include neurological procedures used to diagnose or treat intractable physical pain, organic brain conditions, or epilepsy, where any of those conditions is clearly demonstrable. 1991, c. 43, s. 4.

CROSS-REFERENCES

As to the application for a treatment order and the prescribed requirements, see ss. 672.58 and 672.59. The court may not issue a treatment order without the consent of the person in charge of the hospital where the accused is to be treated and the person treating the accused, but the accused's consent to treatment is not required. See. s. 672.62.

SYNOPSIS

This provision outlines the boundaries of a treatment order. The order may not include psychosurgery or electro-convulsive therapy as defined in subsec. (2).

---

CONSENT OF HOSPITAL REQUIRED FOR TREATMENT / Consent of accused not required for treatment.

672.62. (1) No court shall make a disposition under section 672.58 without the consent of

- (a) the person in charge of the hospital where the accused is to be treated; or
- (b) the person to whom responsibility for the treatment of the accused is assigned by the court.

(2) The court may direct that treatment of an accused be carried out pursuant to a disposition made under section 672.58 without the consent of the accused or a person who, according to the laws of the province where the disposition is made, is authorized to consent for the accused. 1991, c. 43, s. 4.

CROSS-REFERENCES

Although the accused's consent is not required, the prosecutor is required to notify the accused of the application and the accused is entitled to challenge the application and adduce evidence to this effect (s. 672.6). Reference should be made to ss. 672.58 and 672.59 which set out the test required to obtain a treatment order. Section 672.61 defines the prohibited treatments of “electro-convulsive therapy” and “psychosurgery”.

SYNOPSIS

Treatment orders require the consent of the person in charge of the hospital treating the accused and the person assigned by the court who is responsible for the treatment.

In addition, subsec. (2) clarifies the power of the court to make a treatment order pursuant to s. 672.58 without the consent of the accused or a person authorized to consent to the treatment on behalf of the accused.

---

EFFECTIVE DATE OF DISPOSITION.

672.63. A disposition shall come into force on the day that it is made or on any later day that the court or Review Board specifies in it, and shall remain in force until the date of expiration that the disposition specifies or until the Review Board holds a hearing pursuant to section 672.47 or 672.81. 1991, c. 43, s. 4.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms “disposition” and “Review Board” are defined in s. 672.1. Where no disposition is made by the court, the Review Board must hold a disposition hearing not more than 45 days after the verdict, although the court can extend the time period to a maximum of 90 days. See s. 672.47(1) and (2). Pursuant to s. 672.47(3), a court ordered disposition made under s. 672.54 cannot remain in effect for more than 90 days after which the Review Board is required to hold a hearing to review the disposition. As to review hearings, see ss. 672.81 to 672.85.

SYNOPSIS

A disposition is effective as of the date it is made or any later day that the court or Review Board specifies. The disposition remains in force until the expiration of the order or until the Review Board holds a review hearing pursuant to s. 672.81.

Note: The unproclaimed text of ss. 672.64 to 672.66 is printed in lightface italics.

Capping of Dispositions

DEFINITIONS / “designated offence” / “cap” / Additional designated offences under the National Defence Act / Cap for various offences / Longest cap applies where two or more offences / Offence committed while subject to previous disposition.

672.64. (1) In this section, section 672.65, 672.79 and 672.8,

“designated offence” means an offence included in the schedule to this Part, an offence under the National Defence Act referred to in subsection (2), or any conspiracy or attempt to commit, being an accessory after the fact in relation to, or any counselling in relation to, such an offence;

“cap” means the maximum period during which an accused is subject to one or more dispositions in respect of an offence, beginning at the time when the verdict is rendered.

(2) An offence contrary to any of the following sections of the National Defence Act is a designated offence if it is committed in the circumstances described:

- (a) section 73 (offences by commanders when in action), where the accused person acted from cowardice;
- (b) section 74 (offences by any person in presence of enemy), 75 (offences related to security) or 76 (offences related to prisoners of war), where the accused person acted otherwise than traitorously;
- (c) section 77 (offences related to operations), where the accused person committed the offence on active service;
- (d) section 107 (wrongful acts in relation to aircraft or aircraft material) or 127 (injurious or destructive handling of dangerous substances), where the accused person acted wilfully;
- (e) section 130 (service trial of civil offences), where the civil offence is included in the schedule to this Part; and
- (f) section 132 (offences under law applicable outside Canada), where a court martial determines that the offence is substantially similar to an offence included in the schedule to this Part.

(3) Where a verdict of not criminally responsible on account of mental disorder or unfit to stand trial is rendered in respect of an accused, the cap is

- (a) life, where the offence is
  - (i) high treason under subsection 47(1) or first or second degree murder under section 229,
  - (ii) an offence under section 73 (offences by commanders when in action), section 74 (of- fences by any person in presence of enemy), section 75 (offences related to security) or section 76 (offences related to prisoners of war) of the National Defence Act, if the accused person acted traitorously, or first or second degree murder punishable under section 130 of that Act,

(iii) any other offence under any Act of Parliament for which a minimum punishment of imprisonment for life is provided by law;

(b) ten years, or the maximum period during which the accused is liable to imprisonment in respect of the offence, whichever is shorter, where the offence is a designated offence that is prosecuted by indictment; or

(c) two years, or the maximum period during which the accused is liable to imprisonment in respect of the offence, whichever is shorter, where the offence is an offence under this Act or any other Act of Parliament, other than an offence referred to in paragraph (a) or (b).

(4) Subject to subsection (5), where an accused is subject to a verdict in relation to two or more offences, even if they arise from the same transaction, the offence with the longest maximum period of imprisonment as a punishment shall be used to determine the cap that applies to the accused in respect of all the offences.

(5) Where a verdict of not criminally responsible on account of mental disorder or unfit to stand trial is rendered in respect of an accused who is subject to a disposition other than an absolute discharge in respect of a previous offence, the court may order that any disposition that it makes in respect of the offence be consecutive to the previous disposition, even if the duration of all the dispositions exceeds the cap for the offences determined pursuant to subsections (3) and (4).

Dangerous Mentally Disordered Accused

DEFINITION OF "SERIOUS PERSONAL INJURY OFFENCE" / Application for a finding that accused is a dangerous mentally disordered accused / Grounds for finding / Court may increase duration of disposition.

672.65. (1) In this section, "serious personal injury offence" means

(a) an offence or attempt to commit an offence mentioned in section 271 (sexual assault), 272 (sexual assault with a weapon, threats to a third party or causing bodily harm) or 273 (aggravated sexual assault); or

(b) any designated offence prosecuted by indictment involving

(i) the use or attempted use of violence against another person, or

(ii) conduct endangering or likely to endanger the life or safety of another person or inflicting or likely to inflict severe psychological damage on another person, and for which the accused is liable to imprisonment for ten years or more.

(2) Where a verdict of not criminally responsible on account of mental disorder is rendered in respect of an accused, the prosecutor may, before any disposition is made, apply to the court that rendered the verdict or to a superior court of criminal jurisdiction for a finding that the accused is a dangerous mentally disordered accused.

(3) On an application made under this section, the court may find the accused to be a dangerous mentally disordered accused where it is satisfied that

(a) the offence that resulted in the verdict is a serious personal injury offence described in paragraph (1)(b), and the accused constitutes a threat to the life, safety, physical or mental well-being of other persons on the basis of evidence establishing

(i) a pattern of repetitive behaviour by the accused, of which the offence that resulted in the verdict is a part, that shows a failure to exercise behavioural restraint and a likelihood that the accused will cause death or injury to other persons or inflict severe psychological damage on other persons, through failure in the future to exercise restraint,

- (ii) a pattern of persistent aggressive behaviour by the accused, of which the offence that resulted in the verdict is a part, or
- (iii) any behaviour by the accused, associate with the offence that resulted in the verdict, that is of such a brutal nature as to compel the conclusion that the behaviour of the accused in future is unlikely to be inhibited by normal standards of behavioural restraint; or
- (b) the offence that resulted in the verdict is a serious personal injury offence described in paragraph (1)(a), and the accused, by conduct in any sexual matter including the conduct in the commission of the offence that resulted in the verdict, has shown a failure to control sexual impulses and a likelihood that the accused will cause injury, pain or other harm to other persons through failure in the future to control such impulses.
- (4) Where the court finds the accused to be a dangerous mentally disordered accused under this section, it may increase the cap in respect of the offence to a maximum of life.

SECTIONS 754 TO 758 APPLY / Transmittal of transcript to Review Board.

672.66. (1) Sections 754 to 758 apply, with such modifications as the circumstances require, to an application under section 672.65 as if it were made under Part XXIV and the accused were an offender.

(2) Where a court makes a finding that the accused is a dangerous mentally disordered accused, it shall send without delay to the Review Board that has jurisdiction in respect of the matter a transcript of the hearing of the application, any document or information relating to it in the possession of the court, and all exhibits filed with the court or copies of them.

Dual Status Offenders

---

WHERE COURT IMPOSES A SENTENCE / Custodial disposition by court.

672.67. (1) Where a court imposes a sentence of imprisonment on an offender who is, or thereby becomes, a dual status offender, that sentence takes precedence over any prior custodial disposition, pending any placement decision by the Review Board.

(2) Where a court imposes a custodial disposition on an accused who is, or thereby becomes, a dual status offender, the disposition takes precedence over any prior sentence of imprisonment except a hospital order, as defined in section 736.1, pending any placement decision by the Review Board. 1991, c. 43, s. 4.

NOTE: Subsection (2) amended 1995, c. 22, s. 10 (to come into force by order of the Governor in Council) by replacing the reference to s. 736.1 with s. 747.

CROSS-REFERENCES

Section 672.1 defines “dual status offender”, “court”, “hospital”, “placement decision”, and “Review Board”. Note that, at this time, the provisions for making a hospital order are not yet in force.

SYNOPSIS

This section and the following provisions deal with so-called “dual status” offenders being prisoners who are or become subject to sentences of imprisonment as well as custodial dispositions under s. 672.54(c) [i.e. detention in a hospital upon a finding of unfitness or a verdict of not criminally responsible]. The effect of this section is that the last disposition be it a sentence of imprisonment or a custodial disposition takes precedence until the Review Board has the opportunity to make the appropriate placement decision under s. 672.68.

DEFINITION OF "MINISTER" / Placement decision by Review Board / Idem / Time for making placement decision / Effects of placement decision.

672.68. (1) In this section and in sections 672.69 and 672.7, "Minister" means the Solicitor General of Canada or the Minister responsible for correctional services of the province to which a dual status offender may be sent pursuant to a sentence of imprisonment.

(2) On application by the Minister or of its own motion, where the Review Board is of the opinion that the place of custody of a dual status offender pursuant to a sentence or custodial disposition made by the court is inappropriate to meet the mental health needs of the offender or to safeguard the well-being of other persons, the Review Board shall, after giving the offender and the Minister reasonable notice, decide whether to place the offender in custody in a hospital or in a prison.

(3) In making a placement decision, the Review Board shall take into consideration

- (a) the need to protect the public from dangerous persons;
- (b) the treatment needs of the offender and the availability of suitable treatment resources to address those needs;
- (c) whether the offender would consent to or is a suitable candidate for treatment;
- (d) any submissions made to the Review Board by the offender or any other party to the proceedings and any assessment report submitted in writing to the Review Board; and
- (e) any other factors that the Review Board considers relevant.

(4) The Review Board shall make its placement decision as soon as practicable but not later than thirty days after receiving an application from, or giving notice to, the Minister under subsection (2), unless the Review Board and the Minister agree to a longer period not exceeding sixty days.

(5) Where the offender is detained in a prison pursuant to the placement decision of the Review Board, the Minister is responsible for the supervision and control of the offender. 1991, c. 43, s. 4.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms "court", "disposition", "dual status offender" and "Review Board" are defined in s. 672.1. Reference should be made to s. 672.69 which authorizes the Review Board to conduct a review of the placement decision on application of the Minister, the dual status offender or on its own motion where there has been a change in circumstances. Note that, although the Minister is responsible for the supervision of the offender while he is detained in prison pursuant to the placement decision of the Review Board, s. 672.69(1) entitles the Review Board to access to any dual status offender for the purpose of conducting a review of the disposition. In addition, the Minister is automatically a party in any proceedings relating to the placement of a dual status offender. See s. 672.69(4).

SYNOPSIS

On application by the Minister or of its own motion, the Review Board has the discretion to make a placement decision where it is of the opinion that the sentence or custodial disposition will not protect the mental health needs of the offender or safeguard other persons. "Minister" is defined to mean any Solicitor General of Canada or the Minister responsible for correctional services in the province in which the dual status offender may be sent pursuant to a sentence of imprisonment [s. 672.68(1)].

The Review Board must consider the following factors in making a placement decision: (1) need to protect the public from dangerous persons; (2) treatment and availability of treatment to the offender; (3) consent of the offender to treatment; (4) whether the offender is a suitable candidate for treatment; (5) submissions by the offender; (6) submissions by other parties; (7) any written assessment report submitted to the board; (8) any other relevant factors. Notice must be provided to the offender and the Minister. The decision is to be rendered within 30 days after receiving the application, although this may be extended to a maximum of 60 days with the consent of the Review Board and the Minister. In addition, subsec. (5) clarifies that the Minister is responsible for the dual status offender while he is detained in prison pursuant to a Review Board placement decision.

MINISTER AND REVIEW BOARD ENTITLED TO ACCESS / Review of placement decisions / Idem / Minister shall be a party.

672.69. (1) The Minister and the Review Board are entitled to have access to any dual status offender in respect of whom a placement decision has been made, for the purpose of conducting a review of the sentence or disposition imposed.

(2) The Review Board shall hold a hearing as soon as is practicable to review a placement decision, on application by the Minister or the dual status offender who is the subject of the decision, where the Review Board is satisfied that a significant change in circumstances requires it.

(3) The Review Board may of its own motion hold a hearing to review a placement decision after giving the Minister and the dual status offender who is subject to it reasonable notice.

(4) The Minister shall be a party in any proceedings relating to the placement of a dual status offender. 1991, c. 43, s. 4.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms “dual status offender” and “Review Board” are defined in s. 672.1. “Minister” is defined in s. 672.68(1). Reference should be made to s. 672.68 as to the relevant considerations with respect to a placement decision. For further cross-references with respect to dual status offenders, see references under s. 672.68. Placement decisions are also appealable under s. 672.72 et seq.

SYNOPSIS

A placement decision may be reviewed on application by the Minister or the offender where the Review Board is satisfied that there has been a significant change in circumstances. In addition, the Review Board may choose to review the placement decision on its own motion provided that notice is given to the Minister and the dual status offender. Note that the Minister is automatically a party to any proceedings relating to the placement of a dual status offender. The Minister and the Review Board are entitled to access to the dual status offender in order to review the placement decision. The provision does not prescribe any substantive or procedural requirements for the exercise of the Review Board’s discretion apart from requiring that the review be conducted “as soon as practicable”.

NOTICE OF DISCHARGE / Warrant of committal.

672.7. (1) Where the Minister or the Review Board intends to discharge a dual status offender from custody, each shall give written notice to the other indicating the time, place and conditions of the discharge.

(2) A Review Board that makes a placement decision shall issue a warrant of committal of the accused, which may be in Form 50. 1991, c. 43, s. 4.
